BOMBAY:

HADOW versus HADOW.

The libel for divorce instituted in the Supreme Court by J. R. Hadow, Esq., against his wife, was decided on Tuesday last by sentence being pronounced against the impugnant. It is needless to publish the details of the case, as sufficient light is thrown upon it by the judgment as pronounced by the chief justice, who said that the Court had given to the case the greatest possible attention, and that it had caused them some degree of anxiety; for notwithstanding that the impugnant did not appear to oppose the application, still, before performing so solemn an act as that of pronouncing a sentence of divorce a mensa et thoro, it was indispensably necessary that the judges should be satisfied on the evidence that there could be no reasonable doubt that the act of adultery alleged in the libel had been committed. Their lordships particularly begged it to be understood that they would have been very far from satisfied with the evidence given by the witnesses principally examined,—the servants who had accompanied Mrs. Hadow to Poona and Mahabuleshwur,—had it not been confirmed, strongly confirmed, by the subsequent conduct of the impugnant.

Their lordships thought that it would be extremely dangerous to pronounce sentence of divorce upon such evidence as had come before the Court, unless circumstances subsequently occurred confirming them, and which, as would be presently shown, had occurred in the present instance. A great body of evidence in support of the promovent's case had been brought before the Court, and which God forbid that their lordships should doubt, simply because it was chiefly given by persons of very little weight, and moving in an humble sphere of life. Still a great part of it, as referring to the occurrences at Poona, only proved a degree of undue familiarity, which, however, no woman who had any regard for her husband's honour or her own reputation, would indulge in. But it would be difficult to say that every woman who permitted such familiarities would violate her marriage vow and commit adultery. There has been a strong body of evidence before the Court of a great variety of circumstances, no one of which would by itself bring conviction to the mind, of any criminal conduct; but when all were combined, and the subsequent conduct of the parties was taken into consideration, they clearly lead to the conclusion that adulterous intercourse had taken place. No great weight was to be attached to the fact of Captain Henry's frequent visits to Mrs. Hadow at Poona. No doubt it was wrong for a married woman, in the absence of her husband, to receive such frequent visits from a single gentleman. The conduct of the parties was very imprudent, still it was not right hastily to jump at the conclusion that adultery had been committed, and criminal intercourse taken place.

But when their lordships found that Captain Henry repeated his visits with greater frequency at Mahabuleshwur, and that he and Mrs. Hadow always retired after dinner to the sitting-room, and remained there for several hours without a light; that the ayah had observed almost invariably after those visits, and those visits only, certain indications which clearly denoted that sexual intercourse had taken place; when their lordships remembered the scene in Mrs. Hadow's bed-room the night before Mr. Hadow had arrived at the hills, when Mrs. Hadow was crying, and Capt. Henry caressing and comforting her;—when it was found that the day after the matter had exploded in Bombay, and Mrs. Hadow had been removed by her husband to a friend's house, she left that friend's house without intimating her intention to him, and had proceeded with Captain Henry to Bandora, accompanied it was true by another gentleman;—that during the time she was at Bandora, she was in the habit of receiving lengthy visits from Capt Henry,—and no one else;—late at night, surely it would be almost taking leave of our common sense to pronounce the conduct characterized by these circumstances as consistent with innocence. When the domestic estrangement between Mr. Hadow and his wife took place, if Captain Henry knew that it had arisen from her alleged familiarity with him, the natural and manly impulse of his heart should have been to hasten to protect and comfort her, and to afford her every assistance to remove the imputations cast upon her character; but common prudence would have dictated that he should have abstained from paying such visits unaccompanied by any other person. But the fact of those visits to Bandora alone, and Capt. Henry's protracted stay on those occasions to a late hour of the night, had the direct effect of confirming all the imputations alleged in the libel. Without treating the impugnant's own admissions as conclusive, their lordships, taking all the facts of the case into consideration, thought that adulterous intercourse was sufficiently proved, and consequently pronounced the sentence of divorce.

Our reason for not publishing a full report of the case was—1st, that sufficient light was thrown upon the case by the judgment given by Sir William Yardley; 2nd. we have no desire whatever to gratify the sort of curiosity which leads people to read with avidity the details of evidence adduced on trials of this kind; and 3rd. because very naturally, and very properly, Mr. Hadow's solicitor requested us not to publish the evidence. In a small community like this of Bombay, and under the existing circumstances of the case, we feel certain that all right-thinking men will agree that we only did what was correct and proper.—Telegraph and Courier, June 28.

The LONDON MAIL of May 24th arrived at Bombay, June 25th (per Semiramis). The LONDON MAIL of June 24th arrived at Aden (per Oriental) July 14th, en route to Madras, &c. H.C.'s sloop Elphinstone took the LONDON MAIL of June 24th on to Bombay.

GOVERNMENT RECORDS.—The scheme of opening the records of Government to the press at Bombay has not yet worked well. The Bombay Telegraph and Courier says, that no documents connected with the "punishment of public servants" are accessible, and these are what is especially required. That is, the public prefers scandal to information. We believe the hypothesis is incorrect, but in any case these are precisely the documents which will not be made public. We doubt whether it is expedient that they should be. In England, the heads of departments dismiss without apology, and it is questionable whether the state gains by compelling them to retain subordinates in whom they have lost all confidence. How long would a private office work if its head had no authority to dismiss his clerks.—Friend of India.

MR. CHARLES PRICE.—A native paper at Bombay announces that Mr. Charles Price, civil auditor, has been placed upon subsistence allowance. He had contracted debts to the amount of Rs. 1,80,000, and went through the Insolvent Court. He has therefore been suspended, pending the decision of the Court of Directors. It is impossible to form an opinion on the justice of his sentence from this statement. The man who goes through the Insolvent Court to escape the consequences of his own extravagance, and the man who is driven there because he is a shareholder in the Union Bank, do not occupy the same position.—Friend of India.

THE POST BETWEEN KURRACHEE AND BHAWULPORE, a distance of 549 miles, is now carried in about fifty hours. This is at the rate of more than ten miles an hour, and speaks well for the energy of Mr. Cautley, the postmaster of Scinde. A passenger dak has been established from Hyderabad to Kurrachee.

JUNCTION OF THE MEDITERRANEAN AND RED SEA.—A Captain Allen has proposed to join the Mediterranean and the Red Sea by a new route. It seems that between the Sea of Tiberias and the Dead Sea there exists a deep fissure, 650 feet below the level of the Mediterranean. Between the Mediterranean and the Sea of Tiberias a canal might be cut, and the waters of the Mediterranean "cascaded into the low country," thus creating another inland sea. There would remain only a strip of land between this lake and the Red Sea. General Sir R. Burgoyne is about to send an engineer to survey the latter. It is singular that this scheme, if carried out, will literally fulfil a prophecy hitherto regarded as impossible.

A COLLEGE OF ENGINEERS is to be opened immediately at Poona.

A POONA correspondent writes that the station is expected to be very gay this season. Every one is delighted, he adds, with the exit of Captain Gilley, the late military secretary, from the adjutant-general downward. He was haughty and overbearing on parade, and had the manners of a prize-fighter.—Telegraph and Courier.

DEATH OF LIEUT. W. CAMERON.—In almost every issue of our paper for some past, we have had to announce the death of either some officer of the army or member of the civil service. This morning it is our painful duty to note the death of Lieut. Wm. Cameron, of the artillery, who for the last three years held the situation of adjutant and quarter-master of the 2nd battalion of artillery in this garrison. The deceased officer went from Bombay a short time ago to take command of No. 2 light field battery at Sholapore. He arrived at that station on the morning of the 26th instant, was attacked with cholera about ten A.M., and died at nine o'clock in the evening. Lieutenant Cameron was much liked by every one here, and will no doubt be greatly regretted by his regiment.—Telegraph and Courier.

DEATHS IN THE MEDICAL SERVICE.—We regret to announce the death of Surgeon Malcolmson, of the 3rd Bombay light cavalry, which occurred at Nusseerabad, on the evening of the 16th July, of pneumonia. Dr. Malcolmson entered the service in 1828, and was when he died in expectation of seeing himself nominated to succeed Dr. Collier as staff surgeon of the Rajpootana field force. By this casualty Assistant Surgeon T. W. Ward will be promoted. The following is a list of the number of deaths amongst the surgeons of the Bombay army during the last eighteen months:—

1. Surgeon Elliot, died at Mandivi.
2. Surgeon Malcolmson, died at Nusseerabad.
3. Surgeon Ryan, died in England.
4. Surgeon Nicholson, died in Scinde.
5. Surgeon Grey, died in Bombay.
6. Surgeon Watkins, died in Bombay.
7. Surgeon Gillanders, died in Guzerat.
8. Surgeon Babington, died in Bombay.

THE REV. W. CLARKSON.—The Bombay Gazette pays a deserved tribute to the Rev. Wm. Clarkson, a missionary who has recently left that presidency for Europe. Fifteen years ago, he established himself at Surat, which he shortly quitted for the Mahe Caunta. In that district he has since remained, organizing a Christian community. His converts have been settled upon an estate purchased by subscription, and have been specially brought to the notice of the Government by the collector, as the most industrious and orderly of villagers. Among them Mr. Clarkson has laboured, unrelieved, without recreation, and almost without European society, for nearly fifteen years. His labour has been well rewarded, and he now quits India with his health destroyed, but also with the consciousness that his life has not been spent utterly in vain. Mr. Clarkson's knowledge of Guzerathi, the language in which he taught, is said to have been profound.

SIR HENRY LEEKE, commandant of the Indian navy, having been placed in the retired list as a rear-admiral, will consequently have to vacate his present appointment.

LIEUT. DAY, we hear, has finished the survey of the three villages in Salsette, required for water-works, and has gone to Poona, from whence he will send his report and plans of the survey to the committee appointed for the purpose.

THE "WILLIAM GIBSON," which left Bombay June 28th, returned to port from stress of weather alone, and not in consequence of having been leaky, as was erroneously reported. She sailed again on the following day.

MAJOR JACOB had returned to Jacobabad from his visit to the camp of Khilat. He met his Highness at Mustoong, about seventy miles north of Khilat. The major was much pleased with his visit and its results. He reports the country about Mustoong to be one of the finest parts of Beloochistan, and he met with no obstacles from mauraunders in the Bolan pass.

THE COMMERCIAL BANK OF INDIA has declared a dividend for the half year ending the 30th of June, at the rate of six per cent. per annum.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

LIEUT.-COLONEL HAVELOCK, C.B.

Head-Quarters, Mahabeshwur, June 5, 1854.—"After a service of seven years on the staff of this presidency as deputy adjutant-general of her Majesty's forces, Lieutenant-Colonel Havelock, C. B., has been transferred to the appointment of quarter-master general of the forces in India.

"The lieutenant-general commanding must wish the lieutenant-colonel joy not only on account of this mark of her Majesty's approbation of his conduct, but also in returning to that part of India which has been the scene of his gallant exploits.

"The opportunity afforded by Lieutenant-Colonel Havelock's departure for the Bengal Presidency enables the lieutenant-general commanding to express how highly he appreciates Colonel Havelock's ability as a staff-officer, and to tender his most sincere thanks for the zeal and punctuality with which all the important duties of the department of Queen's troops have been invariably discharged by him.

"In bidding Colonel Havelock farewell, the lieutenant-general commanding begs that he will accept the assurance of his warmest esteem and regard; and his lordship is convinced that the regret he feels in parting with Colonel Havelock will be fully shared in by every officer of the Bombay army who has enjoyed the happiness of his acquaintance.

"By Order of His Excellency. Lieut.-General the Right Hon. Lord Frederick FitzClarence, G. C. H., ("Signed), J. HENRY, Captain, Actg. Depy. Adjt. Gen. H.M.'s Forces, Bombay."

COURT MARTIAL.

LIEUTENANT ALBERT GEORGE THOMPSON, 15th N.I.

"Head Quarters, Poona, June 27, 1854.—At a European general court-martial, assembled at Bombay, on Thursday, June 15, 1854, and of which Major C.C. McIntyre, H.M.'s 78th Highlanders is president, Lieut. A. G. Thompson, 15th N.I., was tried on the following charges, viz. :—

First Charge.—For conduct highly insubordinate, insulting, and unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, at Mandavie, on or about Oct. 17, 1853, made use of the following language to Lieut. (now Capt.) Kane, his superior officer, when in command of the firing party at the funeral of the late Surg. Elliott, namely, "You, sir, are partly the cause of the doctor's death," or words to that effect.

Second Charge.—For having at Bombay, on or about March 1854, behaved in a scandalous, infamous manner, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having wilfully and knowingly given false testimony on oath, before a court-martial, on the trial of Lieut.-Col. Gidley, 22nd N.I., by stating that on the occasion of a nautch given by some of the officers of the 15th regiment, N.I., in the month of April 1853, Doctor Elliott and Ens. Loft and Hammond, who were there, were all "sober," whereas the contrary was the fact.

Finding.—Guilty of the first charge. Guilty of the second charge.

Sentence.—To be cashiered.

(Signed) C. C. MCINTYRE, Major,
 H.M.'s 78th Highlanders, and president.

(Signed) R. W. D. LEITH, Bt. Major,
 Offg. Judge-Advocate.

Approved and confirmed,
 (Signed) FREDERICK FITZCLARENCE, Lieut.-Genl.,
 Commander-in-Chief.

Head-quarters, Poona, June 26, 1854.

The name of Lieut. A. G. Thompson is to be struck off the strength of the army from the date of the publication of this order at Bombay, which is to be reported to the Adjt.-Genl. of the army. By order of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,

(Signed) J. HALE, Lieutenant Colonel,
 Actg. Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army.

IMPORTS (Bombay, June 30).—The interval since the last overland summary extends over so brief a space of time that there is little to be said in the way of business; indeed, as is usual at this season, when the rains have set in, transactions are of a very limited kind, and generally confined to local requirements. Some inquiry (assuming a speculative nature) for goods "to arrive" had existed. For immediate delivery dealers will not purchase, and prices cannot therefore be taken as any indication of the state of the market, prospects for which entirely depend upon the development of the monsoon, which burst in a mild form on the 7th current, and such has been its character up to within the last two days.

CENTRAL ASIA.

The following is a copy of a letter received by Dost Mahomed on the 8th of May, from his confidential agent at Herat. It gives a lively picture of the intrigues now going on in the courts of Central Asia. It will be observed that the writer does not mention the presence of any Russian ambassador at Teheran, and it was lately announced by the Bombay papers that that functionary had been withdrawn, whether temporarily or not it is hard to say:—

Here is the news from Teheran. Moolah Akbar, who was deputed hence to the court of Persia, on arriving in the neighbourhood of the capital, sent news of his approach. The minister at once sent a mehmander, two officers of rank, and fifty horse of the royal guard, to receive him with due honour. On his arrival, the mansion of Ishmael Khan-i-furrah Bashee was placed at his disposal and the other usual honours were shown. The next day the minister sent his Peshkhidmut, or confidential attendant, to inquire after the health of the envoy, and to promise him a speedy interview. Accordingly the next day the envoy waited on the minister and delivered his credentials, which were duly submitted to the king.

The minister then turned towards the envoy and complimented him on the prudence and address which had led him to be selected by the ruler of the Herat as his fitting representative at the court of Persia. He would recommend him therefore at once to confess that his master, the chief of Herat, was in the wrong in the dispute with Persia, when amicable arrangements could be easily made.

The envoy replied by complimenting the minister on his unrivalled fame as a diplomatist, but he could not admit that his master was at fault; on the contrary, he had done excellent service to the crown of Persia. If there were any enemies of that crown, they were among those who made the loudest professions of friendship. For his part he had come to Teheran to communicate to the king the secret wishes of his master at Herat, and to learn the real disposition of the Shah towards Herat.

The minister then asked the names of the professed friends who had injured the interests of the king. The envoy named among others, Kazeemdad Khan, Beglur Begee—and here the minister agreed with him. He then said that Kohundil Khan of Candabar was quite as bad as the Hazarah chief, at which the minister was much annoyed, and said that he would not believe any such story of a man who was equal in every way to the late Yar Mahomed of Herat. The envoy replied, "Yes in birth and rank as a Douranee, equal no doubt, but not in integrity of character, of which Kohundil Khan is utterly destitute. The duplicity and treachery of the Candahar chief were known to all. On the death of the late Yar Mahomed, he attempted to seize Herat, in spite of the entreaties of all the other chiefs; and in order to render Yar Mahomed's son unpopular, he denounced him and all the Persians as infidels. This was the man whom the court of Persia now believed in!

"You are right," interrupted the minister; "his treasonable correspondence was intercepted and submitted to the king."

The envoy then went on to denounce Kohundil still further, mentioning his correspondence with the English, which failing, he had had recourse to Persia; and his cruel treatment of the sons of the late Mahomed Raza Khan, whose eyes he had put out; conduct which still excited the abhorrence of all who had heard of it. His, the envoy's own master, on the other hand, had never, to this day, had anything to say to the English; he had rejected all their proposals, and was solely anxious to ally himself with Persia. When the chiefs of Candahar fled from that place on the approach of the English, and passed through Herat on their way to Persia, the Dooranee soldiers had earnestly besought his master to seize the chiefs and their families; but he rejected this advice, and his conduct had met with the approbation of the court of Persia.

But in return for such good conduct, no sooner was the death of Yar Mohammed proclaimed, than the chiefs of Candahar were the first to attack Herat and seize certain of its dependencies. But by the blessing of God, Kohundil Khan had been put utterly to shame, for not a single town between Farah and Bakwah remained in his hands, and by God's help he would soon be deprived of Farah too.

Thus did the envoy defend his master before the Persian minister, and your highness will see what a difference he made out between the conduct of Kohundil Khan of Candahar and Zaheer-oollah of Herat. "Yet," concluded the envoy, "behold the guilty is treated by the Persian court as a friend, and the friend as an enemy and traitor."

The minister received this statement graciously, and acknowledged that it was true. After this conversation the envoy was presented to the king. His majesty received him kindly, asked after the health of his master; whether he (the Herat chief) was fond of hunting, and what sort of shikar was procurable at Herat. He made minute inquiries regarding the Herat country, which the envoy replied to as far as his duty permitted. While breaking the seal of the letter from his master which the envoy had just presented to the king, his majesty remarked, "You may tell your master that I am much more favourably inclined towards him than ever—indeed I never bore him any ill-will. He was the first chief to tender his allegiance to me on the occasion of my coronation."

The Herat envoy then represented to his majesty the plunder of two Heratee caravans at Mulkhan; on which the king gave orders to Sooltan Alee Khan, son of Kohundil Khan, and then present at Teheran, to write to his father, informing him that if all the plundered property and all the Herat territory seized by the Candaharees is not at once restored to its rightful owners, he, the king of Persia, will direct the army of Khorasan to unite with the Herat forces to invade Candahar and expel the chiefs therefrom.

The Herat envoy then showed his majesty a Koran bearing the seal of your highness (Dost Mahomed) to a declaration of friendship with the Herat government. At this the king angrily remarked, that your highness had made similar engagements with the chiefs of Candahar, your highness's own brother. How then could your highness remain faithful to Zaheer-oolla of Herat?

The Herat envoy replied that the blame rested entirely with the Candahar chiefs, who had promised the ameer of Cabul that they would abstain from all encroachments on Herat, and would restore all the territory they had seized from that state. The breach of these engagements absolved the ameer from all pledges of amity with the Candahar chiefs. The envoy added that it was the ameer's intention to make open war on his brothers at Candahar, and to resist all their encroachments on Herat.

Thus closed the envoy's interview with the king. The next day the envoy was sent for to the house of Sahib-ooll-douhah, the minister's son, who told him that "the court of Teheran knows not what to think of your mission. You professedly come to tender on behalf of your master Zaheer-oollah, his acknowledgments of fealty to Persia; but the court has learned that you are secretly the bearer of letters and presents from your master to the British ambassador at this court."

The envoy confessed that he had brought the letters, on which the minister's son said, "If the Herat chief is faithful to Persia, what need has he of the friendship of the English?"

The envoy replied that the court of Persia had latterly been assisting the enemies of Herat, by appointing Askhur Khan Surteep to give aid to the Hazarahs, and by showering royal favour on the Candahar chiefs.

A conversation of two hours took place, which Sahib-ooll-Dowlah reported faithfully to his father the minister.

In the evening the minister sent for the envoy and gave him permission to deliver the letter and presents to the English ambassador. "But," said the minister, "I will then send for the English ambassador, and ask him in your presence if he is in private communication with the chief of Herat. I am sure that he will not dare to confess it openly, and thus you will know him to be a thief.

His only wish is to create a misunderstanding between the king and the chief of Herat. He will then turn round and endeavour to persuade the court that the present ruler of Herat is no more worthy of confidence than was his father Yar Mahomed, who murdered his master Kamran. Such language as this it would be very painful for the court to hear. It is evident that if the British minister is afraid to acknowledge that he is privately in communication with Herat, he has no means of affording aid to that country; but yet he carries on clandestinely a correspondence with your master, simply that he may poison the minds of this court against Herat. When he has done the mischief, he will laugh at your master's cost. For the last six months this English ambassador has been endeavouring to persuade this court to give up all claims on Herat on the receipt of 100,000 tomans paid down, and a perpetual tribute of 10,000 tomans annually. These offers I have always declined. The fact is, the English ambassador wants to see Herat released from dependency on Persia, and annexed by the chief of Candahar."

"But," said the envoy, "what motive could the English have for wishing to see Herat annexed to Candahar?"

"Because," replied the minister, "the British are anxious to put an end to all Persian interference in the affairs of Afghanistan. This end they would attain if they could get Herat permanently annexed to Candahar."

The envoy replied, "That it might be so, but yet the Herat chief had been repeatedly solicited by the British ambassador at Teheran to embrace the interests of the British on the receipt from them of a large yearly allowance. How then could the British wish to make Herat a dependency of Cabul?"

"All his offers and promises are deceitful," replied the minister, "your master will never get a single shabeeh (a coin of 10 to a rupee) out of him, for all his promises of large sums. He only wants to detach Herat from Persia, and after gaining his object, will leave your master to his fate. He will break all his engagements, and the Herat chief will gain nothing but the contempt of all good Mussulmans for attaching himself to the English instead of the Persians. Let Zaheer-oollah then carefully weigh his own interests before he prefers the promises of an English diplomatist to the real friendship of the King of Persia."

There then ensued a long debate between the prime minister and the Herat envoy, each accusing the court of the other of intrigue and unfriendly acts in former days. The envoy wound up the dispute by saying—"Let bygones be bygones, only induce the king to grant my master the provinces of Jam and Bakkur." The minister said that this would at once excite the jealousy of the English ambassador, who would probably write at once to Herat and endeavour to frighten Zaheer-oollah by assuring him that the king of Persia meant to seize the country. "But," said the minister, "if the ruler of Herat will openly testify his allegiance to Persia by sending 300 cavalry to join the army of Merve (or Merw) then the king of Persia would secure him in the possession of even larger provinces than those which he solicited. Let him do this service and he shall have all Khorassan. In the meantime advices shall be sent to the governor of Khorassan to report on the condition of the province solicited by the Herat chief."

The minister finally requested the envoy of Herat to write to his master as from the king, that there would be no bounds to the mutual affection between them, provided he, the chief of Herat, avoided entangling himself in the rotten meshes of an English alliance, and throwing himself into the flames of contention which raged between other states. The minister then called heaven to witness that the English were, of all nations, the most perfidious. That they would deceive Herat by magnificent promises, and then leave the chief to himself. This had been precisely their conduct in Turkey, where they had fomented the quarrel between Russia and Turkey, and then, when Turkey declared war against Russia, they had not raised a finger to assist her. Persia, on the other hand, would always be a true and efficient friend to Herat.

Thus ended the interview.

"In the evening," writes the envoy to his master, "I went clandestinely to visit Mr. Thomas, the British ambassador, and presented the letter from Herat. He accepted the letter, and read it, but he refused the present of horses. He acknowledged that he was secretly a sincere friend of Herat, but said that he did not like to profess his friendship openly. This is certainly a surprising kind of friendship, that a man conceals in his own breast, not daring to confess it openly. It is plain to me that there is nothing to be expected from the English ambassador, in spite of all his promises, but I am lost in speculation as to what can have happened to this English nation. I asked him plainly if he would enter into a treaty with Herat or not. He replied that 'he would write to his Government for instructions.' All this convinces me that the Persian minister was right in his estimate of the ambassador's character. His only object is to create a quarrel between Herat and Persia, and then leave us to our fate. The minister had told me that the English bide their time, and should that time come, they may enter into a treaty with Herat, but they will always disclaim any friendship for that country so long as they find it their interest to remain on good terms with Persia."

The envoy has further written to assure Zaheer-oollah that he is convinced of the sincere friendship entertained towards Herat by the Persian Court, and that he has every hope of obtaining a grant of the provinces solicited. "As to Mr. Thomas, if he be indeed an English ambassador, he is the strangest one I ever saw. He is like none of his predecessors, and is evidently now in great perplexity as to what to do. He is exceedingly sukhi (a tough customer) to deal with. He has, however, given leave to the moolla to write to his master at Herat that the English can never be the enemies of Herat, although they do not think it prudent at present to make known their goodwill."—Delhi Gazette.

CEYLON.

The LONDON MAIL of June 8th arrived at Point de Galle, July 6th (per Bentinet), and the Pottinger proceeded with the English Mails to Hong-Kong.

The rising of the rivers in Ceylon has been productive of much disaster. At Ratnapoora the water rose 43 feet, driving the native inhabitants for shelter to the tops of the trees. Mr. Gibson, the government agent had to escape from his house in a boat. The Gindara river had swept away its bridge, the storm destroying an hospital in Galle. The Culura river had also risen to an unprecedented height. In Colombo, the monsoon blew hard, though without doing damage to the shipping.

CHINA.

The LONDON MAIL of April 24th arrived at Hong-Kong, June 11th (per Singapore).

KWANG-TUNG.—The disturbances in Pwan-yu, bordering on Whampoa river, after considerable bloodshed, has been referred to the literati and elders of the district for adjustment. It originated in a dispute about a watercourse for supplying the paddy-fields. But a more serious affair has occurred at Shih-lung, a large market town and sugar mart some ten or fifteen miles to the eastward of Whampoa, and which has been plundered by a band of several thousand malcontents under three leaders—Ho of Shun-tah district, and Yuen and Chan of Tung-kwan. Having defeated the troops sent against them, killed the highest military officer on the station, and wounded the district magistrate, they burnt many houses, and pillaged the bankers' and pawnbrokers' shops; then growing bolder from success, proceeded to invest the district city of Tung-kwan, near the Bogue, to the relief of which 1,300 soldiers were despatched from Canton on the 14th inst. It is also said that, with increasing numbers, they now threaten to storm the Bogue forts, and afterwards march upon Canton,—but that, of course, must be mere bravado.

TESTIMONIAL TO MR. FENNELL, Clerk in charge of the Douro.—Among the passengers on board the ill-fated Douro at the time she was wrecked were several British natives of India, Parsees and Mahomedans. During the storm which preceded the wreck, they lost the poultry they had brought, and the means of cooking their food after their peculiar modes; but these misfortunes were as much as possible alleviated by the purser, Mr. Fennell, whose attention they, on leaving the wreck, acknowledged in the warmest terms, and as a more lasting testimonial than mere words, presented him with a beautifully chased silver cup, which is to bear the following inscription:—

"6th June, 1854.—Presented to Mr. A. M. Fennell, purser of the P. and O. steam ship Douro, as a slight acknowledgment of the attention and kindness shown to us during the past ten days we have lain wrecked in that vessel on the north shoal of the Paracels.

Pestonjee Rustonjee,	Ludhaboy Tarmahomed,
Shaik Meherally,	Cowasjee Eduljee,
Futtayally Shaik Adam,	Yacoub Thaver."

OFFICIAL NOTICES.—The last number of the Hongkong Government Gazette—besides "an ordinance to raise an additional police rate," increasing the assessment three per cent. for the next three months, with three per cent. on the following three months, if required—contains the appointments of Mr. C. B. Hillier, as provisional member of the Executive Council; and of Messrs. W. T. Bridges, W. H. Medhurst, R. C. Antrobus, John Dent, W. P. Livingston, R. S. Walker, W. Lamond, and C. F. Still, as justices of the peace for the colony.—China Mail, June 8.

THE LATE MR. GEORGE PERKINS.—After much trouble and great expense on the part of the friends of Mr. Perkins, the search for his murderers, in which Mr. Caldwell so materially assisted, has proved successful, and they are now in custody. The case is undergoing investigation before the magistrate, and we understand the testimony of the witnesses—the boatmen who took no share in the murder—is so conclusive against the owner of the boat and his wife, that they are almost certain to be convicted. Mr. Perkins is said to have been stabbed while asleep, and afterwards thrown overboard.—China Mail, June 8.

THE TRIAL of Chen Cheong-Tai and Chun Cheong-She, the boatmen and his wife, for the murder of Mr. Perkins, took place June 15, in the Supreme Court of Hong-Kong. The acting attorney-general, the Hon. W. T. Bridges, stated the case. The prisoners were found guilty of the murder, and sentenced to death; but the chief justice held out a hope that the female's life would be spared. "The prisoners," observes the Friend of China, "were undefended; had it been otherwise the verdict might have been different."

A NAUTICAL REMARK.—It is said that when Sir William Hoste heard of the attack on Mr. Balkeley Johnson's party above Canton, a short time ago, he coolly remarked, "it served them right, they had no business there."—Friend of China, June 14.

SPIRIT-RAPPING IN CHINA.—Dr. Macgowan has been lecturing and experimenting on "table moving and spiritual manifestations" in China. The Friend of China observes on this matter: "As things generally go by contraries in the far East, we find the phenomenon here to be reversed; or, in other words, Chinese tables instead of performing their peculiar function as among barbarians on their legs, whirl about on their heads, if the term be allowed, with the nether members pointing to the ceiling. The directions usually given, are to place a couple of chopsticks at right angles across a mortar, or bowl filled with water; and upon these, the table turned upside down. Four children are then called in, and to each a leg is assigned, on which one hand is gently laid, while the other seizes the free hand of a companion; thus forming a circle. Nothing now remains to be done, but the reading of an incantation by the 'medium' which may be thus rendered—

'Heaven! Entreat heaven for power;
Earth! Entreat earth for power;
Left green dragon! Turn to the left,
Right green dragon! Turn to the right,'

'If you fail, I'll call Yellow Ling Duke of Space, to bring his horsemanship to flog you till you scamper right and left.'

Soon the table begins to heave with emotion, and then becomes revolutionary, carrying the lads along with increasing velocity until whirled off the axis."

THE SHIP HURKARU DISMASTED.—We have been favoured with the following particulars of the typhoon experienced by the Hurkaru (arrived here on Sunday last under jury masts). The British ship Hurkaru, Captain Crowe bound to London with a full cargo of tea, left Hongkong on the 16th ultimo, and had fine weather until the 18th, on which day boarded the Dutch bark Johan Paul, then just escaped from the pirates.

CAPTAIN CROWE'S REMARKS ON THE TYPHOON.—The evening of Friday the 19th of May the weather looked very threatening, but nothing gave reason for suspecting the close vicinity of a typhoon. The clouds had a dirty red appearance, as if the sky had been daubed here and there with streaks of dirty red paint; but the quickly repeated flashes of lightning, and the distant moaning of the thunder, in the south-east quarter, were portentous of an approaching gale. The barometer did not give early indication of what was coming; only three-tenths of a fall appearing up to the time of the commencement of the gale; the fall then, however, was very rapid; and in all of a twenty years' experience (eleven in command), I never saw the mercury so low in the tube by an inch. During the lull, when we were in the vortex, the barometer, a standard one by Shephard of London, stood at 27.50', afterwards, whilst we were engaged about the wreck of the masts, it was reported to me as standing at 27 degrees, in fact altogether out of sight. The wind commenced at E.N.E. stood in that quarter twenty-four hours, (moderate in early part), veered to N.E., whence it continued steady till we cut away the masts—then it suddenly subsided into a calm, which continued for half an hour; then, without a moment's warning, it opened out at N.W. in a most frightful tornado—so violent that words cannot express its force, and so continuing for an hour, when it veered on to W., and gradually afterwards to S.W. and S., with continued violence. Rain throughout—very heavy. Had not the vessel been hove to on the port tack, as Horsburgh directs, when the wind shifted after the lull, the vessel must certainly have gone down stern foremost; as it was, the gust taking her over the stern, she came up to the wind, and so lay to in safety during the remainder of the cyclone.—Friend of China, June 14.

TRACKERS IN THE PUNJAB.—Some time in December last, a man residing in a camel hamlet (they are called Jokhs) on the southern borders of the Gogaira district, went for a supply of grain, &c. to a village in the district of Mooltan, from whence he was known by his friends to have gone in the direction of Jung. He stayed away longer than was expected, and they, becoming alarmed, went in search of him. The track of himself and camel was followed by them to a deserted well in the Bar, where they discovered the body in such a state of putridity as to lead to the conclusion that he had been murdered some time before. The police received intimation; a mohurir took up the pursuit with some trackers, and these were so diligent in their search, that notwithstanding the time that had elapsed and the extent of the pursuit, some fifty miles, and although they had first lost the track near Jung, on account of the hardness of the soil, they were enabled to follow up the traces of a third party, who had accompanied the murderers previous to the committal of the crime, but separated from them before it occurred. This man's track led to his apprehension, and he pointed out the two actual culprits, whose footmarks were, on their apprehension, found to correspond exactly with the tracks lost near Jung; the confession of their comrade, and the proofs adduced by the footprints, were so strong that they immediately not only admitted their guilt, but pointed out where the property was concealed, and gave information that led to the recovery of the camel at a distance of forty kos in the Shapoor district. They robbed the traveller of his goods and then murdered him, because he recognised them as former inhabitants of his hamlet. They have both been sentenced to the gallows, while the trackers have been liberally rewarded for the wonderful mode in which they found the criminals.—Lahore Chronicle.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, August 15, 1854.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERALSHIP OF INDIA.

LORD DALHOUSIE has consented to remain another twelvemonth in charge of the Government of India. This announcement will be received with the highest satisfaction by all those who take an interest in the welfare of that country, and are anxious that the power of England in the East should be distinguished by progression and beneficence. Among all the great statesmen who have contributed, during the last century, to build up that magnificent empire, and of whom their country has such just reason to be proud—Clive, Warren Hastings, Cornwallis, Wellesley, Lord Hastings, Bentinck, and Hardinge—there is no name more illustrious than that of Dalhousie. It is scarcely possible to refer to the success of his administration without incurring the suspicion of flattery, but the tribute we now offer is one of simple justice. No Governor-General has ever been able to achieve greater results, and under none has our Government proved a greater source of benefit to the vast population placed under our tutelage by the hand of Providence. We do not here allude so much to the extension of our dominions during his administration, though, even in this inferior consideration of its merits, it will not escape observation, that since the days of Clive, no other Governor-General has been instrumental in making so large an addition to our eastern territories. Before Lord Dalhousie quits India, he will have added nearly twenty millions of subjects to the Crown of Great Britain, and without incurring—except in the opinion of the most fastidious and sentimental of Indian patriots—the smallest charge of ambition or injustice. We refer more particularly to the great improvement which has been made in the institutions conferred on the people, and on which depends the question, whether the sovereignty of England in India shall be a blessing or a curse. It is no exaggeration to affirm, that more substantial progress has been made in this respect in the last seven years than in any corresponding period, with the exception, as some think of Lord William Bentinck's era; while, in the prosecution of public works of "imperial grandeur" and utility, no previous administration can exhibit any such achievements. The pacification and settlement of the Punjab in three years was of itself sufficient to constitute the glory of any single Indian vice-royalty, and it is justly considered as one of the greatest political miracles of the day; but to this has been added the establishment of three thousand miles of electric telegraph in less than a twelvemonth; and the progress which has been made in the construction of railways, in spite of the obstructions arising from a vicious and complicated system of management, is mainly to be attributed to his broad and manly views, and to the wisdom and vigour of his counsels. There is no department of the public service in India which has not received fresh energy and animation from his spirit, and abundant improvement from that extraordinary administrative talent for which he is so renowned. The best eulogy of his administration is to be found in a simple enumeration of the measures which he has devised and completed. At any time, a man of Lord Dalhousie's energy of character, and endowed with his capacity for combining the most comprehensive range of plan with the greatest minuteness of detail, would be an acquisition of no common value to any Government. To these qualifications he now adds the largest and most complete local experience, a thorough knowledge of the machinery of every department, and of the official staff through whom it is worked. He has acquired the confidence of the people over whom he rules, and of the subordinate functionaries whom he directs, and India is now to obtain the benefit of another year of his mature judgment, and his enlightened and magnificent despotism. The gratitude of India is due to the home authorities, for their endeavours to detain Lord Dalhousie another year at his post, and we congratulate the population of that empire on the success which has attended them.

EDUCATION IN INDIA.

NO. I.

AMONG the more important papers recently laid before the House of Commons is a copy of a despatch to India on the subject of education, dated the 19th of July last.

The object, we need not observe, is to promote education in India; but thereupon the question arises, What education? We can imagine a system of education established, which, to use a trite but expressive phrase, should be "a chip in porridge;" something which, while it did no harm, effected no good, and was never likely to accomplish either. We can imagine, again, a system compounded of good and evil, and not unlikely to produce results as mixed as itself. Once more, we can imagine a system purely mischievous; and knowing that systems of all kinds have been discussed, with reference to India, for twenty years past, it was not without apprehension that we entered on the examination of this despatch; nor was it without pleasure that, at a very early part of it, we met with the following straightforward avowal of the views of the home authorities on the subject:—

"Before proceeding further, we must emphatically declare that the education which we desire to see extended in India is that which has for its object the diffusion of the improved arts, science, philosophy, and literature of Europe; in short, of European knowledge.

"The systems of science and philosophy which form the learning of the East abound with grave errors, and eastern literature is at best very deficient as regards all modern discovery and improvements; Asiatic learning, therefore, however widely diffused, would but little advance our object. We do not wish to diminish the opportunities which are now afforded, in special institutions, for the study of Sanskrit, Arabic, and Persian literature, or for the cultivation of those languages which may be called the classical languages of India. An acquaintance with the works contained in them is valuable for historical and antiquarian purposes, and a knowledge of the languages themselves is required in the study of Hindoo and Mahomedan law, and is also of great importance for the critical cultivation and improvement of the vernacular languages of India."

This is a just view of the subject. Oriental learning ought to be cultivated by some; but to endeavour to enforce its study as the means of improving and elevating the people of India, would be nothing short of ridiculous. We speak not, of course, against the acquisition by Europeans of so much of the vernacular tongues as may be necessary to qualify them for their duties; we speak not against the devotion of years, or of a whole life, by a few Europeans, to the mastery of the ancient languages of Asia, a truly difficult study, and because difficult, one that can scarcely fail to strengthen the mind; though the history contained in those languages be fable, the poetry rubbish, and the mythology garbage. There is no danger that such students should ever be very numerous. Wealth rarely rewards their exertions; and though now and then a man makes it worth his while to dig in this usually unprofitable mine, his example is not likely to be widely pernicious. Sometimes, indeed, a man who can afford to be content with airy wages, and who, moreover, has no chance of gaining notoriety in any other line, may take to this, where a little knowledge goes a great way. In the more recondite eastern languages, one who can do anything beyond declining a noun or conjugating a verb looks upon himself as a prodigy, and is often regarded as a prodigy by others. If a man would gain credit cheaply, he should contrive to know a little of a study of which nobody else knows anything; then he may swagger with as much safety as satisfaction. This measure of knowledge, indeed, has not satisfied some German students, who, with the characteristic perseverance of their countrymen, have dived into the depths of eastern lore, and have brought up much treasure. The study of languages, of their origin and affinities, is an important aid to the study of man and his history: while, therefore, we should be sorry to see the study of the ancient languages of the East superseding those other studies by which the minds of youth are liberalized and enlarged, we should be no less concerned to see them totally neglected. But we must repeat, that the constitution of the Germanic mind seems peculiarly calculated to pursue this branch of knowledge with success. It is the custom of German scholars—not German students, so called, whose occupations are the consumption of beer and tobacco and the canonizing of popular cantatrici,—but German scholars, to consider nothing achieved while anything remains unsubdued.

But our present business is not with the studies of Europeans, but with those by which the Indian mind is to be trained to the highest point which it is capable of attaining. The question, by what means this is to be effected, is the subject of the following paragraph in the despatch:—

"We have received most satisfactory evidence of the high attainments in English literature and European science which have been acquired of late years by some of the natives of India. But this success has been confined to but a small number of persons; and we are desirous of extending far more widely the means of acquiring general European knowledge, of a less high order, but of such a character as may be practically useful to the people of India in their different spheres of life. To attain this end it is necessary, for the reasons which we have given above, that they should be made familiar with the works of European authors, and with the results of the thought and labour of Europeans on the subjects of every description upon which knowledge is to be imparted to them; and to extend the means of imparting this knowledge must be the object of any general system of education."

Now we believe that the attainments of the natives of India in "English literature and European science" have been vastly overrated. We suspect that few of them could write a sentence in English which would not excite laughter; and as to taste, it is quite certain that the study of English has not done for them that which the study of the classical languages and literature has done for us, nor even a tithe of it. In fact, native acquirements in English have enjoyed the fortune of all strange things—they have gained a reputation far beyond their deserts. Good-nature and wonder, to say nothing of popularity-hunting, have overcome discretion and all sound principles of judgment. Dr. Johnson's remark on female preaching is not inapplicable here:—"Sir, a woman preaching is like a dog walking on his hind legs; the thing is not done well, but you are surprised to find it done at all." In some branches of science it is possible that natives of India may have approached a little nearer to the European standard than in language and literature; but we do not think that the scientific men of France, or those who enjoy the academic groves of Cambridge, have as yet any cause to tremble. We wish success to the cause of Indian improvement most heartily,—so heartily that we cannot consent to impede its progress by flattering Indian students into the belief that they are already that which we most ardently hope they may in time become. On the question of diminishing the depth of the stream of knowledge and extending its surface, our opinion—as we shall shortly have occasion to explain—is not that avowed, or at least implied, in the passage last quoted.

The authors of the despatch proceed to speak of the medium through which knowledge is to be conveyed to the people of India, and the English language is held to be essential to those who aspire to a high order of education. It is thought, however, that the vernacular languages may in time become suitable media for the communication of much European knowledge. We do not dissent from this altogether, but the time must be very distant. Foreigners cannot translate so that natives can understand the translations. This is a fact admitted to a great extent with regard to the attempts at translating Mr. Macaulay's code. Some Indian missionaries have complained of the difficulty—of the almost impossibility of translating the Scriptures into the native tongues; and if all would honestly avow their convictions, the number of complaints would be much greater. The natives, having no ideas corresponding with the doctrines of revealed religion, or even with those of what among us is called natural religion, but which is no more natural than any other traditional system of belief, corrected, refined, and elevated by perpetual contact with a higher and better system, their languages have no terms for expressing such ideas. So must it be with regard to the sciences. The vernacular languages have no terms for conveying adequate knowledge of such matters, and words must be invented or compounded for the purpose. It is clear that this is not work for foreigners; and it is equally clear that no natives but such as are highly educated can safely undertake it. That familiarity with a language which is only to be acquired by early and constant use, must be associated with an accurate and extensive knowledge of English and its almost boundless stores. At the revival of learning in Europe, it was a great advantage that scholars and men of science had a common language—the Latin. For Indian literati, should such a body ever arise, the English language will be what the Latin was in Europe little more than a century ago. With regard to the preparation, by means of English studies, for the diffusion of sound knowledge through the vernacular, the view expressed in the despatch, as contained in the following passage, is correct.

"This [the communication of knowledge through the vernacular] can only be done effectually through the instrumentality of masters and professors, who may, by themselves knowing English, and thus having full access to the latest improvements in knowledge of every kind, impart to their fellow-countrymen, through the medium of their mother tongue, the information which they have thus obtained. At the same time, and as the importance of the vernacular languages becomes more appreciated, the vernacular literatures of India will be gradually enriched by translations of European books, or by the original compositions of men whose minds have been imbued with the spirit of European advancement, so that European knowledge may gradually be placed in this manner within the reach of all classes of the people."

Before passing to the means by which it is proposed to advance education in India, we beg to be allowed to pause a moment, for the purpose of divesting the education question of some embarrassments with which the injudicious advocates of education have encumbered it. From the days of Bell and Lancaster, who lowered the standard of education while they exaggerated its necessity, common sense has scarcely been allowed to say a word on the subject. It has been scoffed at, laughed at, ridiculed, denounced. When communicating to the labouring poor an education of a low character, and but little of it, became a stale subject, and mechanics' institutions came into temporary vogue, we were deafened with declamations on "the scientific education of the people." But mechanics' institutions went down, and "the arts" superseded science. This is the present rage. Dr. Birkbeck did not succeed in creating hosts of Galileos and Newtons, or even of Cavadishes, Davys, or Daltons: it remains to be seen whether Mr. Cole and his coadjutors will people our island with Raphaels, Michael Angelos, Claudes, and Titians; the Dutch masters, we suppose, will be deemed too vulgar for imitation. We do not object to any of these things, but to the quackery with which they are associated. We certainly do not object to the communication of the instruments and elements of knowledge to youth of all classes, even the humblest, and we only wish, with regard to the male sex at least, that instruction was carried something further, as it easily might be, within the time usually passed at school. We feel a glow of pride and delight when we hear or read of such men as Stevenson and Faraday, who have stormed the strongholds of science and its dependencies, and have successfully asserted their claims to high place therein. We sympathize with Wilkie and others like him, working their way, slowly but surely, by merit alone, and ultimately attaining universal recognition as chiefs in the arts to which their lives were devoted. But such instances are few, and ever must be few. You cannot manufacture such men to order,—and here occurs the question, What can education do? According to modern opinion, or professed opinion, it can do everything; it can indeed open the door to all languages and all science; but it is spoken of as the one want of man, which satisfied, he need desire nothing else. Above all things, it is recommended as a remedy for human depravity, a preventive of crime, a corrective of evil passions, and an incentive to all virtue. And this, be it observed, is contended for, not merely with regard to any particular mode of education specially framed with a view to such ends, but to all education, whatever its character. There are a number of children prowling the streets, the pests of society. Take them to school, teach them their A B C, or a little more if they choose to stop long enough to receive it, and, though you never mention a word on higher subjects, by the mere force of literature such as they are introduced to, they are to become perfect patterns of moral excellence. Here are a number of adults given to every evil course—pickpockets, burglars, murderers. Teach them mathematics and chemistry, and they will at once become admirable members of society. These are fashionable doctrines. Every evil is referred to the want of education, as in Swift's time every evil was ascribed to the "prejudice of education;" so that, as he affirms, if a man had an ugly nose, a "prejudice of education" was called in to account for it. The mention of Swift in connection with this subject naturally recalls to mind the profound speech of the alderman in the Tale of a Tub, in praise of beef. "Beef," said the sage magistrate, "is the king of meat; beef comprehends in it the quintessence of partridge, and quail, and venison, and pheasant, and plum-pudding, and custard." Now, with all due respect for this worshipful dictum, we will venture to affirm that beef is not partridge, nor quail, nor venison, nor pheasant, nor plum-pudding, nor custard. It is beef, and nothing else. But after making all necessary abatements from the dignity with which the alderman's imagination invested it, beef is an excellent thing, as all Englishmen know, and we ardently wish that all had as much of it as they could consume. So of education. Education is not meat, drink, and clothing, as some of its supporters would seem to believe; it is not morality or religion, as almost all appear to think. It is education, and education only; and thus stripped of its false trappings, it is a very good thing,—a thing worth any sacrifice to secure in a sound and healthy state. Among the most highly educated, there is an abundance of vicious characters; among those who have small pretensions to high education, many worthy and respectable persons. Merchants, manufacturers, railway directors, and members of Parliament, do not pick pockets in Cheapside, but they sometimes come before the public under very ugly circumstances. Education—mere education—that is, instruction in language and science, does not reform a man; neither does it make him wicked. His moral character is decided by other circumstances. It being the fashion to ascribe crime to the deficiency of literary cultivation, record is kept of the measure of education possessed by those whose conduct has rendered them amenable to the laws of their country; and the education-mongers think they have a triumph in the fact that most of those who at sessions and assizes stand at the bar of justice as accused persons, are totally or partially uneducated. Such criminals come from a class of society the members of which are for the most part uneducated, and they thus partake of the general deficiency. But does this prove that the want of education is the cause of their being criminals? Have you nothing to say for the pressure of want, for exposure to temptations from which those above them are exempt? It might as well be said that their guilt is caused by their deficiency in height of stature. Lay it down as a principle that men above six feet high are much less liable to commit crime than men below that standard; seek illustration from the criminal calendar, and you will find it. In no class or condition of society do men average six feet; consequently, the average height of criminals is below this. Here is your proof, what would you have more?

If from what we have said any one should be pleased to class us among the enemies of education, we denounce him as a libeller and a slanderer. We are of its warmest friends, but we will not support it upon false grounds. We hold that for every human being it is necessary to be able "to read, to write, and to count;" that wherever opportunity exists, education should be carried much farther; and that in every country pretending to civilization, adequate means should be provided for the cultivation of the higher branches of knowledge. To neglect them is treason to the human intellect. Is man endowed with powers which, if properly trained, will enable him to dive into the secrets of nature, to understand, in some degree at least, the constitution of the world in which he has his being, and even to pass beyond its limits and converse with "the stars in their courses,"—to trace the history of his own race in the records bequeathed to him of the past, to revel in the gorgeous visions of poetry, perhaps to add to its creations; to strengthen his mind by investigating the laws of evidence and the truths of "sublime geometry;" to cheer it with the outpourings of wit, and brace it by severe logic,—is the mind of man thus endowed, and shall he neglect the noble gifts which he has received, gifts which, duly cultivated, elevate humanity, so far as the intellect is concerned, almost above itself? We can imagine reasons innumerable for cultivating the intellect—we can conceive none for neglecting it. Literature and science are noble objects of ambition, though they have little or nothing to do with the improvement of the moral nature of man. They are glorious pursuits, though Lucretius and La Place were Atheists, and Bolingbroke and Byron profligates. We rejoice, therefore, at the recent movement for promoting them throughout British India, and we trust that it will be conducted judiciously and will advance triumphantly. But we must not be too sanguine. Shoals and quicksands are around. Empiricism will beset its course, and great caution will be necessary in the management of the noble vessel about to be launched. But preliminary matter has occupied us so long, that we have not space at present to enter into an examination of the proposed plan. We shall return to it at the earliest opportunity; but before closing these remarks, we may observe that it appears on the whole admirably adapted to its purpose.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE PUNJAB.

NO. V.

UNDER Runjeet Singh, as under all native rulers, the abstraction of money from the pockets of all who had the good fortune to possess any, was regarded as the chief end of government. Provision was made accordingly. "The whole country," say the framers of the report, "was threaded with a network of preventive lines. These lines were dotted with innumerable posts for the collection of every kind of tax, direct and indirect. At the same set of stations, excise and customs taxes, town duties, transit duties, capitation imposts, artisan fees, were all levied. The principle was to extract taxation from everything indiscriminately. Every doab being intersected by these lines, no article, home or foreign, could traverse the kingdom in its length or breadth, nor could enter any great market without paying duty a dozen times over." The reporters observe on this as follows:—"That such a multiform system of taxation did not harass the people, fetter trade, and produce oppression, can scarcely be supposed, but still commerce did somehow thrive, and a sturdy people grew and multiplied to a degree which, under such disadvantages, European political economists would hardly have thought possible." What "European political economists" might have thought possible we know not; perhaps they do not know either. Of late, some things have happened to astonish them tremendously. A few years ago, the object of their dread was "over-population." The people multiplied so fast that they predicted certain ruin therefrom, and seemed to expect that the time was approaching when, from the scarcity of food, men would be obliged to eat each other. This terrible catastrophe has, however, been averted. Nature has resources which political economists dream not of, and settles her own affairs without consulting them. So in the Punjab; the system that prevailed did not produce all the frightful effects which political economists might have anticipated; the people flourished in spite of it and in spite of them. Still it was a bad system, even though condemned by political economists; and its abolition was an important step in the way of improvement. Forty-eight articles were liable to custom, excise, town, or transit duties. They were dealt with in the manner following, as soon as the British had the power even of recommending any measure:—

"The British Resident, considering that the system had a tendency to annoy the people, to depress trade, and to impair the resources of agriculture, proposed to the durbar to remodel it. The reformation was planned on the principles that, while foreign and import trade was a fair object of taxation, internal trade should be set free; that the produce of the country should be sold in the country, without the imposition of duties; that the native-born subjects of the state should pursue their trades and professions without the exaction of imposts; that agricultural produce, which had already contributed to the land revenue, should, as much as possible, be exempt from further taxation; that those articles which were to remain dutiable should pay a consolidated tax on one line, and no other; that the whole country, instead of being cut up into endless fiscal divisions, should be encircled with a single line; that the salt revenue should be placed on a more certain basis.

"Duties were abolished on twenty-seven articles, chiefly the products of domestic industry, indigenous agriculture, or internal commerce. They were also reduced on nine articles, which were chiefly produced partly at home and partly abroad, and which were both imported or exported, and sometimes disposed of at or near the place of production. That portion of the duty which was retained fell mainly on importation. The only exportation restricted was that on the Indus frontier. All the interior lines were swept away, and the town and transit duties were abolished. The three grand frontier lines were kept up: one along the Indus, to intercept goods coming from the west; one along the Beas and the Sutlej, for goods, chiefly British, coming from the east; and the third running along the base of the Himalayan range, to meet the imports from Kashmere and Jummoo.

"The province of Mooltan was exempted from these arrangements, which might otherwise have interfered with existing pledges between Moolraj, the governor, and the council of regency. Thus remissions and reductions being taken together, taxes amounting to upwards of six lacs had been abandoned. To compensate in part for this deficit, three plans were adopted; namely, the imposition of one new duty, and the re-modelling of two existing duties. A moderate toll on ferries was to be introduced, and thus an extra lac was to be gained. The excise on drugs and spirituous liquors was to be improved by a system of licences, and was thus to produce nearly a lac, in addition to its former yield. The salt revenue was to be reformed. The old wasteful and uncertain system was to be discontinued. The long-pending demands were to be realized from lessees, and all the confused accounts were to be wound up and closed. A fixed duty of two rupees on the Punjabee maund was to be demanded from the merchants at the mines. But these duties were to be levied by a new contractor, who was to bear the cost of management and collection, and pay to the state an annual revenue of six lacs. Thus, on the former outturn of four lacs, an increase of two lacs was obtained."

This plan was adopted by the Lahore Council of Regency before the annexation. That event was the prelude to further reforms, which are enumerated.

"Such was the posture of fiscal affairs up to the date of annexation in 1849. From the foregoing sketch it will be seen, that on this occasion there were six descriptions of duty for the Board's consideration: first, the duties on the Indus; secondly, those on the Jummoo line; thirdly, those on the Beas line; fourthly, the unrepaid duties in the Mooltan provinces; fifthly, the duties recently imposed or remodelled by the advice of the Resident, viz., the excise on salt and spirits and the ferry tolls; and sixthly, there was the British customs line running through the Trans- and Cis-Sutlej states, taxing salt, cotton, and sugar on importation, and also sugar on exportation.

"It was considered that the Indus line was injurious to the commerce of the newly-organised territory, so far as it affected exports, and that the import duties levied on it were inconsiderable. The Jummoo line was by itself not worth keeping up, as it did not yield half a lac per annum. The Beas line had been established to intercept British goods which had already paid seaboard duties, and could not be fairly maintained now that the Punjab had been annexed to the Company's dominions. The British line of the Beas had now become a mere line for transit-duty, commercially dividing one part of the empire from the other. The Board, therefore, recommended the abolition of all the four lines. The Mooltan duties would of course be repealed, and no line would be established south of Mithunkote, as there was no object to be gained in restricting the imports from Sind. The ferry tolls and the spirit excise were to be retained on their former footing, but a further revision of the salt excise was contemplated. It was recommended that the Government should take into its own hands the management of the Cis-Indus mines; that a duty of two rupees the Company's maund, to cover everything, should be charged at the mine, and that after this payment the salt should pass free throughout the British dominions. Moreover, after a conference with the Agra Government, it was agreed that after the abolition of the Beas line (which reached to Kote Kapoora, south-east of Ferozepore), the north-west frontier line should be extended to the Sutlej, and carried down that river to Mooltan and Mithunkote, in order to exclude the untaxed salts of Rajpootana."

"One new tax was recommended, namely, the stamp-duty, to be fixed and realized, but at half rates, in the same manner as in our older provinces."

We purpose hereafter entering more at large into this part of the subject, but our space has so many claims upon it that, for the present, we are compelled to stop.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

FOR the first time for somewhere about half a century, the representatives of the British people have been entertained by an Indian budget. The interest excited thereby may be concluded to have been both intense and general, as not less than a dozen members—some say one or two more—attended to witness this "old friend with a new face." Mr. Hume was present, and he knows something of the subject; possibly two or three others might know something also; but there certainly were some to whom it was darkness itself. Sir Charles Wood did all that could be done to make it clear. Unlike most financiers, he made no attempt at mystification: his speech was singularly manly, straightforward, and honest. For this reason, as well as for the knowledge of Indian accounts which it displayed, it was highly creditable to him. His candour in rendering a just tribute to the officer of the East-India Company's establishment by whom the accounts had been prepared (Mr. Keith), deserves also to be noted. It is gratifying to be able to speak thus of the head of one of the great administrative authorities to whom our vast Indian empire is committed, and to feel that in thus speaking, we do not exceed the bounds of simple justice.

PUBLIC WORKS—LIEUT.-COLONEL CAUTLEY.

THE services of Colonel Cautley, under whom that gigantic undertaking, the Ganges Canal, has been conducted to its present point of progress, have been acknowledged by the Crown, as they deserved to be. He has been honoured with the Order of the Bath. Though a military man, he takes place among the civil members of that illustrious order, reference being had to the field in which his meritorious labours were performed. Those labours it would have been impossible to reward too highly. He ranks among the benefactors of India, and as long as the great work, which will be his best monument, shall endure, his name will be remembered with honour.

The progress of this magnificent undertaking, and the merits of the eminent person under whom it has been carried on, suggest to the mind the noble establishment at Roorkee as a nursery for engineering talent, and a repository whence the mechanical means and appliances for its exercise may be drawn. Such establishments as that at Roorkee, such works as the Ganges Canal, such men as Colonel Cautley, afford a ready and unimpeachable answer to the question sometimes put, with such an air of petty triumph,—What has England done for India?

INDIA MILITARY SERVICE—DIRECT APPOINTMENTS.

"SHARP is the word," in these times; and in deferential acknowledgment, it is presumed, of that subtle, imponderable fluid, called the "spirit of the age," some changes, and not unimportant ones, have been made in the rules applicable to the candidates for direct cadetships. Hitherto, a candidate who failed to pass an examination might present himself again and again, so long as he did not exceed the proper age; or he might pass piecemeal. If, to use Oxford slang, he could "shove through" one of the subjects of examination, his success in this was posted to the credit side of his account, he standing debtor only for the balance, which he might settle by instalments, at his convenience. The latter privilege is now to cease altogether, and the former is to be shaven down to extreme tenuity. A candidate failing to pass at his first examination will be allowed a second within six months, but, if not then qualified, there is to be no further locus penitentiae,—the nomination is to lapse. Those who have already been examined and rejected, will also be allowed another chance within six months; but it will be "ane mair and nae mair,"—if they fail, their appointments, or those which should have been their appointments, will have to look out for new tenants.

In our view, the new system is like most other things, a mixture of good and evil. To suffer a candidate to pass by bits and scraps we think wrong, but to blight a man's prospects for life because, in early youth, he has been somewhat idle, or somewhat stupid, is rather a hard measure of justice—or something else. The fashionable exercise of "coaching" will, we suppose, be called in "to make all safe;" and when, through this process, candidates are enabled to pass, one part of the world will exclaim, "How vastly we improve!"—another will ejaculate, "How amazingly we are gulled!"

THE MEDICAL SERVICE.

THE new code of regulations for the admission of candidates for the office of assistant-surgeon in the East-India Company's service is "out." It were useless to refer to it very particularly here, as it appears at length in our advertising columns. We shall only say that some of the requirements appear to us rather curious. It is supposed possible, as we gather from the document, to acquire a mastery in the treatment of insanity and ophthalmia (both of them of too common occurrence in India) within the short space of three months. "Attendance on a course of military surgery is" only "recommended." The modes of examination appear open to some remark. What is meant by "object examination" we do not engage to explain. We recollect an examination something of this kind recorded by our facetious cotemporary Punch, where a master exhibits an orange, and asks, among other questions, "Will oranges keep in this climate?" The answer of the boys, in chorus, is a very natural and a very honest one—"Not if we can get at them." One of the modes proposed is "practical examination at the bedside of the patient." How is this to be? Is there to be an hospital fitted up either in Cannon-row or Leadenhall-street, or are patients to be conveyed to one of those places in cabs or on litters for the use of the candidates? January, 1855, will answer this and many other questions. There is one significant and very discreet circumstance attending the promulgation of the code: its operation is limited to the examination to be holden in January next. What is to take place afterwards we are not advised, but medical "cram" is to have at least one opportunity for a display of its capabilities.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—In the sixteenth volume, part i., of the "Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society," lately issued, there appears an article under the following title: "On the Original Extension of the Sanskrit Language over certain Portions of Asia and Europe under the ancient Aryans (आर्य), Indians, or Hindús of India Proper. By A. Curzon, Esq."

The question of the origin and extension of the Sanskrit language, examined in this essay, has already undergone ample discussion by the learned, elaborate, and careful research of the late General Vans Kennedy, in his "Researches into the Origin and Affinity of the Principal Languages of Asia and Europe," 1828.

This work, it would seem, has not come under Mr. Curzon's eye; for although noticing most other orientalists of the present and former times, no reference whatever is made to the book, nor is the author's name mentioned, except incidentally at p. 179, as an authority for an observation relating to the antiquity of the Puráṇas.

It is not my intention to enter upon any inquiry into the opinions these two writers have expressed, or the probability of their respective hypotheses of the origin of Sanskrit. I am about to deal with what Mr. Curzon alleges as to the Persian being a "derivative" language, premising the following notice of the conclusion of his argument in favour of the view he takes on the subject of Sanskrit: "From these considerations it follows, that there is no sufficient foundation for the hypothesis that the ancient Aryans, Indians, or Hindús, entered India Proper from some external region. On the contrary, the facts above delineated point to the conclusion that the rise, progress, advance in the arts and civilization of this remarkable people are the growth of their own land;" and then proceeding to examine the correctness of his opinion as to Persian being a language derived from Sanskrit,—a task I am bound not to decline from what I have already said on the subject in a paper published in the "Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society" in July, 1853, under the name of "Brief Notices of Persian and of the Language called Zend."

Kennedy, in his table of the "Filiation of Languages" (Res. p. 221), puts down Persian as a "distinct language," or "without affinities," having, in several parts of his work, satisfactorily shown this by reference to facts, and conclusive arguments grounded on them. Mr. Curzon considers the Sanskrit, "principally from the nature and structure of the language itself, from its archaic forms, combined with the impress of an early civilization, and from its capability of restoring into intelligible meanness nearly the whole bulk of the radical words contained in the derivative languages of Persia, Greece, Rome, Central Europe, &c." (p. 178), to establish the fact of the Aryan race of India having attained to a high degree of civilization.

The above passage is only quoted in relation to what is there stated as to the derivation of Persian from Sanskrit; and I contrast with it the following extract (pp. 206-7) from the "Researches:"—

"But in Persian there is not the slightest appearance that its grammatical system was ever different from that which has prevailed during the last thousand years. * * * Its peculiar structure, therefore, deserves the attentive consideration of the philologist, because it differs entirely from that of all other languages. The characteristics by which it is principally distinguished consist in the nouns having no genders, in the substantives having only one case, in the adjectives being indeclinable, in the verbs being all conjugated according to one paradigm, and in four of their tenses being formed by particles; and particularly in the words of a most copious language being nearly all primitive, as it scarcely admits of the primitive being modified by means of increments, or of being confounded with particles." * * * "There exists not, therefore, the remotest similarity between the Persian and Sanskrit grammatical systems, for the Persian noun has but one case, and the verb, taking the second person singular of the imperative as the root, only three inflections, including the infinitive, and the personal terminations of the two tenses are precisely the same. Nor is there any further resemblance between the Sanskrit and Persian substantive verbs than in the third person singular of the present tense. The Persian, also, differs from the Sanskrit by forming several tenses, and a complete passive voice, by means of auxiliary verbs. There is, in fact, not the least identity between these two languages, except in the words which have passed from the one into the other; but these fully prove that, though the Persian is not derived from the Sanskrit, still the Persians must have had, at some remote period, a most intimate intercourse with a people who spoke that tongue."

Noticing the effects produced by foreign conquest on the language of a conquered nation, Mr. Curzon (p. 183) observes: "Several well-established historical events which have happened in succeeding times may be cited in support of the view I take of the spread of the Aryan tongue, based, as it is, on a law inherent in human nature, and prevailing in the histories of all nations,—the imposition of the language and institutions of the conquering race on the people conquered."

Now, in Persia, it is as certain that one of these things did happen as it is that the other did not. The ancient religion, laws, and government of the country fell under the conquering arms of the Arabs; but the original language of the people, in its structure, was not, by this event, affected in the least degree. It withstood the shock; admitting, gradually, Arabic words and terms first, as we see in the Persian translation of the "Tarikh-i-Tabari (A.H. 352, A.D. 963), and fifty years later, in the Shah Nama, in small numbers, but retaining, as it still retains, a form and character as dissimilar from that of the language of Arabia as human speech can well be; the reception of Arabic vocables in a greater or less number notwithstanding.

I have adhered strictly to my object, the elucidation of a mistaken opinion on the derivation of Persian; and conclude with observing, that according to Kennedy, there are 263 Sanskrit words in that language.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, AUGUST 4.

EDUCATION IN INDIA.

Lord Monteaule moved for a copy of a despatch to the Government of India on the subject of general education in that country.

Earl Granville said there would be no objection to produce the return moved for.

AUGUST 7.

INDIAN APPOINTMENTS, &c. BILL.

The royal assent was given by commission to this bill.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, AUGUST 7.

POSTAL COMMUNICATION BETWEEN THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE AND THE MAURITIUS.

In reply to Mr. Hume,

Mr. Wilson stated that a steamer had for the present been placed on the above station, in connection with the steamers engaged in the overland route to India.

AUGUST 8.

PROPERTY OF THE NAWAB OF SURAT.

Sir E. Perry asked the President of the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, whether, as the Privy Council had decided that the determination of the Governor of Bombay in Council, against the claim of the daughter and only surviving child of the late Nawab of Surat, to succeed to his private property, was an executive and not a judicial act, the Board would take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, whether the judgment of Mr. Frere, on which the decision of the Bombay Government had proceeded, was not a fit matter to be referred to the Privy Council for their opinion as to its soundness in point of law, and its conformity with the evidence in the case; and whether, if an Act of the legislature of India took away from any subject of her Majesty the right of appeal to any court of law or equity, there was any means by which such individual complaining of injustice could obtain redress?

Sir C. Wood said he was not aware that it was at all necessary that the opinion of the law officers of the Crown should be taken upon the question—even although one of them had not been engaged as counsel in the case to which the hon. and learned member had called the attention of the House. With respect to the second question, he had merely to observe that the legislature of India was competent to pass an Act for deciding the matter at issue, without an appeal, and he was not aware that there existed any right of appeal from its decision.

Sir E. Perry wished to know whether any instructions had been given to the Government of Bombay not to distribute the property in question until an opportunity had been afforded of applying to that House for redress?

Sir C. Wood stated that he was not aware that the property was being distributed.

Sir F. Kelly said he should propose to Parliament next session the consideration of the question, whether it was not expedient to introduce some changes into the law with reference to the subject under discussion. He wished to know whether it was the intention of the Government to allow the law to remain in its present position?

Sir C. Wood said the question was not one concerning the general state of the law in India. The Government of India had passed a special Act empowering the Government of Bombay to deal with the property of the late Nawab of Surat; and it certainly was competent for the Government of Bombay to take that course. There was no general law upon the subject to be repealed or altered.

Mr. Bright wished the right hon. gentleman the President of the Board would take into his consideration the question of the establishment in India of some tribunal before which cases such as that under their notice might be brought. The subject was one which deserved consideration, inasmuch as the present state of the law was productive of difficulty in a great number of instances.

INDIAN BUDGET.

The House resolved itself into a committee on the above subject, Mr. Thornely in the chair. The attendance of members throughout varied from eleven to fifteen, and at no time exceeded the latter number.

Sir C. Wood rose and said that he proposed on this occasion to follow the precedent of former years, although only two years short of half a century had elapsed since an Indian budget was presented to the House—he meant the precedent of moving resolutions on the subject of the finances of India. Those acquainted with the mode of proceeding formerly adopted, would be aware that many resolutions were then moved with reference to the condition of the East-India Company as a commercial body, which would be wholly inapplicable to the present time. The resolutions which he was now about to propose had reference to the revenue and expenditure; first of all, of the several presidencies; and secondly, of India generally, to the charges paid out of that revenue in this country, and to the ultimate surplus of the Indian Government after the payment of the whole of the charges borne by its revenue. He did not think when he came to turn his attention to the subject that the mode in which the accounts were hitherto rendered was calculated to afford all the information which was desirable; and he therefore directed that the accounts at present before the House should be framed very much on the model of the financial accounts of this country, so that they might give very full information with respect to the revenue, the expenditure, and the charges of the Indian government. They had been drawn up by Mr. Keith, a very intelligent officer attached to the staff of the East-India Company in the City, and they had since been submitted to the inspection of Mr. Anderson, a very intelligent officer of the Treasury, and lately a deputy-paymaster. He was anxious to be able to present at the same time accounts from India corresponding with the trade and navigation accounts furnished by the Board of Trade in this country. But he had found that it would be impossible for him to have furnished those latter accounts in a complete form in the present year, although he hoped to be able to produce them in future years. He should now proceed to speak to the resolutions. The first states the amount of the revenue of the presidency of Bengal, and of certain districts attached to it. The revenue of Bengal, during the year ending 30th April, 1852, amounted to 7,584,435*l.*; the local charges thereon amounted to 1,939,362*l.*; and the local surplus was, therefore, 5,658,073*l.* The revenue of the North-western Provinces during the same year amounted to 5,670,715*l.*; the local charges thereon amounted to 1,402,238*l.*; and the local surplus was, therefore, 4,268,477*l.* The military charges of Bengal and of the North-western Provinces—and, as might be expected, the military charges form by far the largest portion of the public expenditure in India,—the military charges of Bengal and of the North-western Provinces amounted during the year to 5,442,230*l.*, and the net revenue of Bengal and of the North-western Provinces amounted during the same year to 13,255,150*l.*, the charges on them, including the military charges, but exclusive of the debt, amounted to 8,770,330*l.*, leaving a surplus of 4,484,320*l.* The first, second, and third of these resolutions referred to Bengal and to the North-western Provinces. The fourth resolution applies to the presidency of Madras. The revenue of Madras during the same year amounted to 3,704,048*l.*; the charges thereon amounted to 3,204,293*l.*, leaving a surplus of 499,755*l.* The revenue of Bombay amounted during the same year to 2,868,298*l.*; the charges thereon amounted to 2,847,392*l.*, leaving a surplus of 20,906*l.* The total net revenue of the several presidencies amounted to 19,827,496*l.*; the total charges thereon, exclusive of the debt, amounted to 14,822,495*l.*; leaving a total surplus, available for the debt and for home charges, of 5,005,001*l.* The interest upon the debt, payable in India, and exclusive of the local and temporary debts, in that year, amounted to 1,967,359*l.*, and the charges defrayed in England amounted to 2,506,377*l.*; making a total of 4,473,736*l.*, and leaving in that year, 1851-52, a surplus of income and expenditure in India to the amount of 531,265*l.* That statement he was happy to think a satisfactory statement. During the two years preceding the year 1851-52, there had also been a surplus in India, although not so large as that of the year in question. In the year 1849-50 there had been a surplus of 354,337*l.*; and in the year 1850-51 there had been a surplus of 415,866*l.* The year 1851-52 is the last with respect to which he could give a complete statement. But he had received a proximate estimate for the year 1852-53; and although he could not answer for the perfect accuracy of that estimate, and did not therefore wish to bring forward a resolution founded upon it, he thought it right to lay before the House the information which it might be calculated to afford. The gross income of India in the year 1852-53 has been calculated at 26,915,431*l.*, and the gross expenditure has been calculated at 26,275,966*l.*, leaving a surplus of 639,465*l.* For these four years, therefore, 1849-50, 1850-51, 1851-52, and 1852-53, there had been a considerable and growing surplus in the revenue of India as compared with the expenditure. (Hear, hear.) But he was very sorry to have to say that there has been a very unfortunate change in that respect in the year which has just ended, as far as an estimate could at present be formed of the amount of the revenue in that year. He had stated that there had been a surplus in the year 1852-53; but in the year 1853-54, on the contrary, there appears to have been a considerable defalcation in the revenue of India. The estimated revenue of the last year is 26,586,826*l.*, and the estimated expenditure is 27,459,161*l.*, showing a probable deficit for that year of 872,335*l.*

Mr. Hume.—Does that include the expenditure in Burmah?

Sir C. Wood said he should come to that presently. It was with very great sorrow he was compelled to announce that deficit in the Indian revenue during the year 1853-54, in spite of the encouraging prospects from the surplus of the four preceding years. But, at the same time, there were circumstances which must diminish to a certain extent, at all events, the surprise or regret which this announcement might at first create. There had been during the last year no great diminution of revenue in India except in one item; and the deficit in that year arises principally from an increase of expenditure, some portion of which, at all events, we may certainly calculate will not continue. There was during the last year a falling-off to the amount of about 6,000*l.* in the land revenue; but the principal falling-off has been in the revenue derived from opium, which has diminished by a sum of 236,000*l.* There is a further falling-off to the amount of about 54,000*l.*, arising out of the abolition of the monopoly on tobacco. Again, there has been an increased sum expended on the cultivation of opium to the extent of 290,000*l.*; so that the total falling-off in the revenue derived from opium during the year has amounted to between 500,000*l.* and 600,000*l.* It is certainly an unfortunate circumstance that so large a portion of the revenue of India should be raised from so uncertain a source as the revenue on opium. (Hear, hear.) He had further to observe that there has taken place during the last year an increased expenditure on public works in India to the amount of 102,000*l.* (Hear, hear.) There has been an increased expense for military charges and military buildings, which comprise the greater portion of the expenditure for the Burmese war, to the extent of 150,000*l.*; and there has been an increase for the cost of transporting troops to the amount of 40,000*l.* The whole expenditure of the Burmese war may, therefore, be taken at less than 200,000*l.* That was a much lower sum than had been anticipated, and that result is owing to the fact that the war has been conducted with great economy as well as efficiency. The next charge is one which will not be incurred again, and it is one which will serve to show that a general statement of the expenditure in any particular year cannot be taken as a fair criterion of the financial condition of India in that year. Hon. members were aware that a certain sum was paid here for the Queen's troops employed in the East-India service; and a large arrear having arisen under that head in past years, that arrear had just been paid off, and an additional charge of 450,000*l.* has thus been met. There has also been an increased payment for the debt to the amount of 65,000*l.* Here, again, the charge will in future years be considerably diminished. Under the terms of a conversion of stock made some time since, there had been paid for the interest of the debt in the month of April a sum of 250,000*l.*, which under ordinary circumstances would not have been paid until the month of July; and, in point of fact, that amount has been transferred from the past financial year to the current year, and has contributed to swell the deficit of the year 1853-54. But if we were to take the last three years together, we should find that they present a surplus in the revenue of India; and considering the transference of accounts which occasionally takes place, it would perhaps be fairer to select such a period, rather than a single year, as a criterion of the financial condition of that country. He, therefore, by no means despaired of seeing the finances of India placed in a satisfactory position in future years, although with such a large deficit now staring us in the face, we should be extremely cautious in any financial operation in which we may feel disposed to engage. Hon. gentlemen must recollect that the revenue of India is not like the revenue of this country, in which a decrease in one item leads to an increase in another. The land revenue, which is the great item of revenue in India, is not susceptible of any increase. It is perfectly well known that in Bengal the terms of the settlement of the land preclude the possibility of an increase of revenue under that head. In the North-western Provinces and in the Bombay presidency, where leases of land have been granted for a considerable term of years, it would be equally unreasonable to expect any such increase. And, with regard to Madras, he was afraid that as far as the land revenue is concerned, the first operation we should have to undertake must be a reduction of that revenue. The next great source of revenue in that country was opium, from which a sum of 4,000,000*l.* has in some years been derived. It may, perhaps, be hereafter maintained nearly at that amount, because, although those who are called the rebels in China have denounced the use of opium, that denunciation does not seem to have in the slightest degree diminished the consumption of the article; and as the opium of India is of a quality very superior to that grown in China, he did not think it probable that the payments made by the Chinese for the Indian opium could become very materially reduced. But at the same time the revenue derived from opium is of a very uncertain character, and we should be raising our calculations upon very unsafe foundations if we were to conclude that that revenue would necessarily become permanent. The next great item of revenue in India is salt. Since the debate which took place last year upon that subject a document had been placed in his (Sir C. Wood) hands which might contribute to remove the unfavourable impressions entertained by many honourable gentlemen with respect to the operation of the salt-tax in India. That document is a paper prepared by a gentleman attached to the medical staff in Bengal, and who took great pains to ascertain the condition of the people brought under his care. (The right hon. gentleman here read a portion of the document in question, from which it would appear that the lower classes in Bengal possessed as ample means as the same classes in most of the civilised countries of the world of purchasing a sufficient amount of food.) He stated this in order to relieve the mind of hon. gentlemen with regard to the vote of last year, because I sent out immediate instructions to the Governor General of India to appoint a commission, and one of the most able civil servants of the government, Mr. Plowden, was appointed to investigate the matter. Mr. Plowden went to Bombay, and from thence he proceeded to Madras, and when the result of his investigation is sent home, he (Sir C. W.) would have great pleasure in laying it on the table of the house. Hon. members must be aware that great objection is made to the introduction of the excise, and great complaints are made of the cruelty of the native collectors. The introduction of the excise would render necessary the appointment of a large number of native collectors, and would increase their means of extortion and oppression. If the house should think it necessary to put an end to that mode of collecting the tax, they would have the opportunity of doing so. The only other item of revenue to which he should refer was the customs revenue, which amounts to about a million a year. He had directed the Governor General to pay particular attention to the whole subject of fibrous substances, such as flax and hemp, and to send any reasonable quantity of articles of that kind that were produced, in order that they might be submitted to the manufacturers of this country; because, in the event of any deficient supply of flax and hemp from other places, a sufficient quantity might be obtained from this quarter. On the whole, there is no certain prospect of an increased revenue in India, and in most of the items of expenditure there is no great prospect of much diminution. The large item of expenditure in India is the army, and we have already undertaken to occupy a large increase of territory. We have annexed the whole territory of the Punjab, the district of Pegu, and the territory of Nagpore; and the only addition that has been made to the military force of India is two European regiments and three native regiments. It could hardly be supposed that the whole of this vast extent of territory could be managed by so small a force; and it is obvious that, under existing circumstances, there is no prospect of any material diminution in the number of our troops.

If hon. gentlemen refer to the statistical papers that have been laid on the table, the small number of troops maintained in our Indian possessions would appear almost curious. The whole of the Queen's troops in India amounted to 30,000 men; the Europeans in the Company's service, including officers, amounted to 20,000; making altogether, 50,000. There are about 240,000 natives in the Company's armies, and these with the Queen's troops, amounted to 290,000 men. The contingent from native princes was about 30,000; and in the whole you may say there are 350,000. Now, the few native states in India maintain of one description or another a large force, amounting to about 398,000 men. He had no doubt, that when by the more general introduction of railways additional facilities of locomotion are given, some reduction may be made; but, until that takes place, he did not think, with the additional territory to be defended, it was possible to make any material reduction in the number of troops. With regard to other great sources of expense—public works, judicial establishments, and the salaries of judicial officers—he thought the feeling of the house last year was that the expenditure must be increased and not diminished. There was one source of expenditure, upon which we have been able to effect a considerable reduction—viz., the interest paid on the Indian debt (hear, hear). Nothing has given him (Sir C. Wood) greater satisfaction than to have completed the total conversion of the Indian 5 per cents., which are now reduced to a maximum of 4 per cent., excepting some local bonds. I shall state the result of these operations. The first portion of the debt operated on was the transfer loan of 3,441,000*l.*, of which 2,734,000*l.* was converted, and 707,000*l.* was taken in cash. The government of India proceeded with great judgment in these arrangements, and the local portion was concluded on the 3rd of April last. The result of the whole, so far as is known, up to the end of May, was this—the whole amount of the 5 per cents. was 23,771,000*l.* in round numbers. Of that sum 20,701,000*l.* has been transferred; 1,370,000*l.* has been taken in cash, and 1,700,000*l.* remains of that account untouched. The demand for cash increased considerably in India when the funds of this country fell. The operations of the war naturally produced an effect in India, and cash was demanded. Before the last accounts came away, the market here had turned, and he did not believe the demand for cash in India will be greater than it was. In estimating how that 1,700,000*l.* is to be disposed of, he proposed to assume that it will be transferred and taken in cash in the same proportions as the other portions of the debt; and if so, 1,200,000*l.* will be transferred, and 500,000*l.* taken in cash. Supposing that to be the case, adding that to the portion which we know to be taken, of the whole Five per Cent. Stock 21,901,000*l.* will have been transferred, and 1,870,000*l.* taken in cash. But he did not think this was, after all, a fair representation of the case. The practice in India is to have open loans; any one may pay in money and receive the interest. The Four per Cent. Loan was closed in September last, and since then a Three-and-a-Half per Cent. Loan has been opened. Since the conversion has taken place, and its payments made, there has been paid into these 1,130,000*l.*, so that in truth it has been a conversion to that extent, because we have paid off at five and borrowed at four. Deducting that amount from what I have stated, the actual amount of cash is 740,000*l.* only. There have been transferred actually or virtually in the manner I have described 25,765,000*l.* There has been taken in cash 1,447,000*l.*, and the whole of the five per cents. have been extinguished. The saving effected has been one per cent. on the sum transferred, and five per cent. on the sum paid off. The amount of these two added together is 330,000*l.* per annum. The right hon. president then passing from finance, delivered an elaborate exposition of the state of India in regard to her other relations and circumstances, and in speaking of Public Works dwelt at much length on the munificent Ganges Canal.

Sir E. Perry spoke at some length; the object of his speech being an attack on the Home Government of India.

Mr. Kimbaird.—If the various authorities of India were compelled to draw up a report of the condition of their various districts, something on the model of Lord Elgin's report, giving a full view of the social condition, improvement, and state of commerce of the various districts, the best results would flow from such a practice. If they were able to see the progress that was made, and if the different governors in India were able to contrast the progress of their departments with other departments, it would act as an incentive to improvement, and have the best effects both on the governors and on the general interests of India. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Hume assured his hon. friend who had just sat down, that the reports to which he had alluded had hitherto been prepared (hear, hear). There was no want of statistical detail in India. He expressed his satisfaction at the manner in which the right hon.

gentleman (Sir C. Wood) had begun the duties of his office. On one point, however, he differed with the right hon. gentleman—namely, his denial that the revenue of Madras could be improved. He (Mr. Hume) quite agreed with Col. Colton, that the neglect of communication by roads and canals had precluded the augmentation of the revenue of India. He admitted, with the right hon. gentleman, that much would depend on a proper supervision of works, but it could not be pretended that there was not a plentiful amount of engineering and other talent at command. A remaining source of the decay of Indian finance was the continuance of petty taxation in that country; and he hoped that ere long the matorpha tax and all similar imposts would be abolished—that we should hear no more of persons being called upon to pay a tax for sinking a well (hear, hear). With regard to the military system of India, he also trusted that a larger measure of justice would be extended to native officers. The doctrine of Lord Dalhousie, that the natives might be robbed in respect of their territory, he thought a most mischievous one. We had 150,000,000 of people under our control in India, and the end of legislation should be to strike off the shackles of that people, and make them rich and happy (hear, hear).

Mr. Danby Seymour was anxious to bear his testimony to the efforts which the right hon. gentleman had made during the year in the direction of Indian legislation, but the retention of the salt tax would generally be regarded as a grievance. He did not agree with the right hon. baronet as to the state of the population of Bengal; the wages he understood to be low, and the people in a very distressed state. It came out that there was a deficit of 800,000*l.*, which had to be made up, and he (Mr. D. Seymour) thought that economy could not be better practised than by reducing the regular cavalry in India, which was inefficient in the field. Irregular cavalry only cost half the money. There was only one regiment of regular cavalry in the Madras army which had not shot its officers.

Mr. Phillimore said the first object in India as regarded statesmen was to obtain cheap traffic with regard to transit. He rejoiced at the opening of the Godavery, which would give cotton to England at a rate to compete with American cotton. As regarded extension of territory, he (Mr. Phillimore) fully concurred with the hon. member for Montrose in designating Lord Dalhousie's letter an insolent and imprudent document.

Mr. S. Fitzgerald.—Officers of the Queen's troops serving in India, said they were placed in a most degrading and injurious position, in consequence of the rules and orders of the service in that country.

Mr. V. Scully complained that the statement had not been made at an earlier period of the session, and also that the members connected with India were not in attendance in the house. He thought the misfortunes of the people of India arose from the vice of the land tenures in that country, and he hoped the right hon. gentleman would attend to that subject, as vicious tenures of land had been the ruin of the West Indies as well as of Ireland. The condition of the rural population of Poonah, in June, 1854, was of the worst description; they were literally famished, and thousands of them had been living on roots for the preceding four months, all because of the viciousness of the land tenures in that country.

Sir C. Wood replied. The circumstance to which the hon. and learned gentleman alluded had arisen from the want of rains, and not from the land tenures. As regarded the works of the Godavery, an iron steamboat would be sent out next year for the purpose of clearing the river as high up as possible.

The resolutions were then agreed to, and ordered to be reported the following day at twelve o'clock.

The house then resumed.

AUGUST 9.

On the report of the resolutions being brought up by Mr. il son,

Mr. Hume said the East India Company had been accused of acting unfairly towards the Queen's officers. He believed that on the contrary, the Queen's officers were better treated in every respect than the Company's own officers. They had more than their fair share of the divisional and brigade command. Recently, too, a Queen's officer (Lieutenant General Anson) had been promoted over the heads of eighty-two lieutenant-generals, to command the troops at Madras.

Mr. Fitzgerald admitted, that as to the higher commands, appointments were given to officers in the Queen's service to the exclusion of officers in the Company's service, but what he complained of was the absolute exclusion of Queen's officers from general staff appointments.

The report was then received.

EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The annual meeting of proprietors of this company was held at the London Tavern on the 10th instant, W. R. Crauford, Esq., in the chair.

The secretary read the report of the directors, which stated, that when the last advices left India, it had been determined to open the line from Howrah to Pundooah for traffic, on or about the 15th July, and that they see no reason to doubt the expectation of opening the entire length of the first section of the line, to Raneeungee, 121 miles, by the end of the present year. The works on the next section of the main-line towards Rajmahal, as far as the river More, are well advanced, and the board have advices from Calcutta of contracts being entered into for the completion of the line from the river More to Cawnpore by the year 1857. It is intended to construct the line from Cawnpore to Delhi simultaneously. A large proportion of the requisite way materials and rolling stock is already contracted for, and will be sent forward by every available opportunity. In order to provide funds for the vigorous prosecution of the works, the board have raised the sum of 1,000,000*l.*, on debentures bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum, and convertible at any time during their currency into shares.

The payment of these debentures and the interest thereon is guaranteed by the East-India Company. In conclusion, the board advert to the death of their late lamented chairman, Mr. Aglionby, whose connexion with the undertaking during a lengthened period of time had obtained for him the respect and esteem of his colleagues, and of all engaged in the administration of the company.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said they had raised the sum of 1,000,000*l.* on debentures, which would bear interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum, and be convertible at any time during their currency into shares. The payment of these debentures and the interest thereon was guaranteed by the East-India Company, and was to be repayable at the expiration of three or five years. If these debentures remained out at the end of five years, the East-India Company would become holders of stock in the railway, so that the arrangement could not be considered to affect prejudicially the financial position of the company.

The progress of the works in India was perfectly satisfactory, and, in fact, they were being pushed on to an extent that could hardly have been hoped for. They were under contract with the East-India Company to complete the line to Delhi in seven years; but the directors saw no reason why it should not be finished much within that period. They believed that the line, to a distance of forty-four miles beyond Calcutta, was opened on the 15th of last month, and that it would be finished to a distance of 121 miles beyond Calcutta, at the end of the year. Calcutta would then be connected with collieries at Burdwan, and they might very reasonably expect to carry a large amount of coal, as there was an enormous demand for it in Calcutta. As far as their advices enabled them to judge, the line would be opened to Rajmahal in 1856, which would give them an immense traffic to the central valley of the Ganges.

The report was then unanimously adopted.

A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the proceedings.

EAST-INDIAN IRON COMPANY.

The first half-yearly meeting of this company took place on the 11th instant, at their offices, New Broad-street. Owing to the death of the respected chairman of the company (Mr. Aglionby), R. W. Crauford, Esq., presided. The report informed the proprietors that the second call of 2*l.* 9*s.* per share had been made and well responded to. The valuation of the works and properties of the Indian Iron and Steel Company had been brought to a conclusion, and the board hoped shortly to be in a position to express definitely an opinion as to the propriety of immediately concluding the negotiation for the purchase of the works and property of the old company, and at once entering upon active operations. In the mean time the old company continued to carry on the works, and place them in the most advantageous position for the proposed transfer to the new company. The apparatus, &c., had been despatched, and negotiations were in progress for engaging Swedish workmen to proceed to the works.

Beylore, the chief seat of the company's iron-works, had been selected as the site of the terminus on the western coast of India by the engineer of the Madras Railway Company, which would open out an easy communication with important mineral fields, to the company's works on the Malabar as well as the Coromandel coast. The attendance being very small, the chairman said he could not move the adoption of the report, but merely make a few observations upon it. The works of the old company had been estimated as worth 50,000*l.*, but the price had been settled 30,000*l.* Mr. Beaumont had reported upon the general position and prospects of the undertaking, and they hoped soon to be able to decide whether they should go on or not. The call had been paid upon 14,000 shares. In answer to Mr. Hadow (a shareholder), the chairman further said that the shareholders might rest assured that they would not decide upon going on with the company unless they could do so with zeal and energy. The proceedings shortly after terminated.

BOOKS.

The Siege of Silistria: a Poem. By WILLIAM THOMAS THORNTON, author of Zohrab. London, 1854. Longman and Co.

Those who have read Mr. Thornton's former poetical effusions will be prepared to find in this stirring interest in the subject, and grace, smoothness, and vigour in the versification. Their expectations will be realized, and they will quit the perusal of the "Siege of Silistria" with one only feeling of regret—that it is so brief. While the soldiers of the combined army are prepared to achieve victories, it is gratifying to have a son of songat once able and willing to render justice to their achievements. The following specimen of the poem cannot fail to afford pleasure:—

Nor lacks brave Hussein strength or skill
His novel duty to fulfil.
He wastes not breath in idle word,
But writes his orders with his sword.
Let those who for his mandate wait
His own example imitate.
Why look ye yet for further clue?
Do as ye see the Pacha do!
Where'er the combat rages most,
There is he instant at his post.
Where'er assailants thickest swarm,
There labours Hussein's vengeful arm.
Where'er defenders need his aid,
'Tis brought by Hussein's lifted blade.
Nor are his Frank allies more slack.
Not now hangs gallant Butler back,
Nor, prompt as he in glory's track,
Bold Nasmyth, and the Prussian Grach.
Britons, the former pair, who, train'd
In Indian warfare, here have gain'd
Fresh scope for prowess there attain'd.
Nor of less lofty seal the third,
Nor by less pure ambition stirr'd,
Who, when of Russian raid he heard,
Hasten'd with theirs his lot to blend,
Who Europe's common cause defend,
And, far as subject might, supply
A recreant king's deficiency.

THE BLESSINGS OF NATIVE RULE IN INDIA.—The Bombay Times states, that in the Guicowar's dominions, prisoners receive nothing from the state. They are fed on charity. Moreover, "we have been informed by a subject of the Guicowar, a man of strict integrity, that there are starving prisons in the Guicowar's dominions—'within, full of dead men's bones'—sinks of corruption and rottenness, into which prisoners are put on purpose to be starved to death, unless their desperate condition should induce their friends to pay a large sum for their ransom. Such prisons exist, and are in use now, at this very time." Yet by one clause of our treaty with this man, we are enabled to compel him to govern according to the principles of justice and equity! If we put that clause in operation, we shall be told that the Government is actuated solely by lust of territorial aggrandizement.—Friend of India.

East-India House, 9th August, 1854.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the annexed code of Regulations for the admission of Candidates at the first Examination, to be held in January next, for the appointment of ASSISTANT-SURGEONS in the service of the East-India Company, has been framed by the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, under the provisions of the Act 16 & 17 Vict. cap. 95, sec. 38.

REGULATIONS FOR THE ADMISSION OF CANDIDATES FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT-SURGEONS IN THE SERVICE OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

All natural-born subjects of her Majesty may be Candidates for admission into the service of the East-India Company as Assistant-Surgeons. They must, however, be between 22 and 28 years of age, and of sound bodily health.

They must subscribe and send in to Dr. Scott, the Physician to the Honourable East-India Company, before the 10th day of December, 1854, a declaration to the following effect:—

"I (Christian and surname at full length), a Candidate for employment as an Assistant-Surgeon in the service of the East-India Company, do hereby declare that I was _____ years of age on the _____ day of _____, last, and that I labour under no constitutional disease or physical disability that can interfere with the due discharge of the duties of a medical officer; and I also attest my readiness to proceed on duty to India within three months of receiving my appointment."

This declaration must be accompanied by the following documents:—

1. Proof of age, either by extract from the register of the parish in which the Candidate was born, or by his own declaration pursuant to the Act 5 & 6 Wm. 4. c. 62.
2. A diploma in surgery, or a degree in medicine, provided an examination in surgery be required for such degree, from some body competent by law to grant or confer such diploma or degree.
3. A certificate of having attended two courses of lectures, of six months each, on the practice of physic, and of having attended for six months the practice and clinical instruction of the physicians at some hospital, containing at least on an average one hundred in-patients; or of having attended one course of lectures of six months, on the practice of physic, and clinical instruction for twelve months.
4. A certificate of having attended for three months the practical instruction given at one of the public asylums for the treatment of the insane.
5. A certificate of having attended for three months one of the institutions, or wards of a hospital, especially devoted to the treatment of ophthalmic disease.
6. A certificate of having attended a course of lectures on midwifery, and of having conducted at least six labours.
7. A certificate of having acquired a practical knowledge of cupping.

Candidates may also, at their option, send in certificates of attendance at any hospitals, or on any courses of lectures, in addition to the above. Attendance on a course of military surgery is recommended.

Candidates producing satisfactory certificates will be admitted to an Examination to be held in January, 1855.

The Examination will include the following subjects:—

1. Surgery in all its departments.
2. Medicine, including the diseases of women and children, therapeutics, pharmacy, and hygiene.
3. Anatomy and physiology, including comparative anatomy.
4. Natural history, including botany and zoology.

The examination will be conducted—

1. By means of written questions and answers.
2. By object examinations and experiments, when the subject admits of such tests.
3. By practical examination at the bedside of the patient, and by dissections and operations on the dead body.
4. By viva-voce examination.

The persons who shall be pronounced by the Examiners to be the best qualified in all respects, shall be appointed to fill the requisite number of appointments as Assistant-Surgeons in the East-India Company's service.

All Assistant-Surgeons are required to subscribe to the Military or Medical, and Medical Retiring Funds, at the Presidencies to which they may be respectively appointed, and to the Military Orphan Society also, if appointed to Bengal.

All Assistant-Surgeons who shall neglect or refuse to proceed to India under the orders of the Court of Directors, within three months from the date of their appointments, will be considered as having forfeited them, unless special circumstances shall justify a departure from this regulation.

Candidates may apply to Dr. Scott, 13, Stratton Street, for further information, if needed.

N.B.—The certificates and notices as to Examination herein contained, apply only to the Examination to be held in January next. Regulations regarding the requirements of Candidates for future Examinations will be issued after the first Examination.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

Superior shaving-brushes, Naples soap, and every article of first-rate quality for the toilet. Caution. Do not buy any strop as genuine unless Mechi's name is on them, there being so many counterfeits. Elegant case of razors for presents, from 25s. to 10 guineas. Ivory-handled and Scotch strops.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE

MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

PAYNE and SONS' INDIAN CURRY POWDER,

UNRIVALLED for its delicious FLAVOUR and stimulating QUALITIES, in 1 lb. Bottles, 3s. 6d.; ½ lb. 2s. 3d.; or 7 lbs. for 21s.

CURRY and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE, 1 lb. jars, 3s. 6d.; ½ lb. 2s. 3d. CURRY SAUCE, Delhi and Osele Chutnee, 1s. 6d. per bottle.

PICKLED MANGOES, HUMPS, TAP SAUCE, and every description of Indian Delicacies, may be had, at greatly reduced prices, from PAYNE and SONS' FOREIGN WAREHOUSE, 328, REGENT STREET, LONDON.—A List forwarded on application.

TO THE LADIES.—The powerful influence of the sun on the skin and complexion at this period of the year, calls for increased attention in preserving their delicacy and beauty. The most pleasing and effectual specific for this desirable object is

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, so deservedly established in royal and public favour and estimation. Its application neutralizes the effects of atmosphere, and induces that healthy action of the minute secretory vessels of the skin, by which its delicacy and beauty are so essentially promoted. Freckles, tan, spots, pimples, and discolorations, are eradicated by the application of the KALYDOR, and give place to a healthy clearness and transparency of complexion. Ladies travelling, or taking out-door exercise, will find it to diffuse a grateful and refreshing feeling. In cases of sunburn, stings of insects, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

The heat of summer also frequently communicates a dryness to the hair, and a tendency to fall off, which may be completely obviated by the use of ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, a delightfully fragrant and transparent preparation, and as an invigorator and purifier beyond all precedent.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; or family bottles (equal to four small), at 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

Nor at this season can we be too careful to preserve the teeth from the deleterious effects of vegetable acids (the immediate cause of tooth-ache), by a systematic employment, night and morning, of ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, a white powder, compounded of the rarest and most fragrant exotics. It bestows on the teeth a pearl-like whiteness, frees them from tartar, and imparts to the gums a healthy firmness, and to the breath a grateful sweetness and purity.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

Beware of Spurious Imitations.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS," preceding that of the article on the wrapper or label. Sold by A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS EFFECTED ANOTHER CURE

OF THE DIGESTIVE ORGANS.—Mr. Andrew Dawson, of Melbourne, was a constant sufferer from indigestion; no matter what he ate, the difficulty of digesting it was always the same, for which he consulted many of the medical profession, and tried remedy after remedy without attaining any benefit whatever. Being nearly dispirited with continual suffering, he was advised to try HOLLOWAY'S PILLS. He did so, and adhered to the diet recommended with the directions; thus he has so strengthened the tone of his stomach, and increased his appetite, that he can now indulge in any kind of animal or other food without the least inconvenience.

Sold by all respectable vendors of medicine, and at the Establishment of PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE present mail does not bring a line from Burmah which claims notice in this part of our paper.

We might, without erring very widely, say the same of the intelligence from the opposite side; but as it has been our custom of late to give at length in this place the communications of the correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, we shall, in this instance at least, adhere to our late practice. So here is "our latest letter from Cabul." The editor, in a passage which we shall presently quote, very correctly characterizes it.

"There is a rumour in respectable quarters, which however requires confirmation, that the Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan has communicated to the British government his readiness, if all the Afghan territories now in the hands of the English are restored to him, to take upon himself to prevent the Russian army from advancing, should it ever intend to invade the British possessions in the East.

"Kareem Candaharee has just arrived. He mentioned that Sooltan Allee, son of Kohundil Khan, by a Persian Kajar wife, is expected to return from Teheran with some guns and Persian soldiers, which the king has been pleased to give to him.

"Sirdar Sooltan Mahomed Khan has received a letter from Kohundil Khan of Candahar, which, notwithstanding the repeated solicitations of the Ameer, was not produced for his perusal. No one knows what it contained. The Ameer has lately been showing greater attention to Khan Shereen Khan and Gholam Hasun Khan Afshar than usual, which has led the people to remark that it is to secure the good-will of the king of Persia. There is now frequent intercourse between the sons of Meerwaiz and Khan Shereen Khan, which has caused jealousy and doubts among their Soonnee followers.

"Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan at Koorum has asked the permission of the Ameer to address a letter to the Commissioner Sahab on some public matters regarding that frontier. The Ameer has had an attack of indigestion, but thank God he is well again.

"A report has arrived here from Cashmeer, that Ameer Khan, younger brother of the late Ahmed Khan, the treacherous agent of Nazir Khairullah Khan, has poisoned the wife of his brother, with the view that she should not convey information to the Nazir, where and how much wealth was left by her husband.

"News has arrived here that the Russians are daily gaining a footing in the dominions of Room (Turkey), and the Shah of Persia has assembled a large army at Mazendran, in the neighbourhood of the Russian frontier, and has despatched one of the late Shah Kam Ran's sons with some troops towards Khorasan. His majesty is also preparing to pay his devotions at the holy shrine of Emam Moosee Raza, at Mushid. About 20,000 Persian soldiers are now stationed at Merw to enforce their master's demands both upon the king of Bokhara and the khan of Khiva. The former has already made friendly advances to the Persian court. The chiefs of Candahar, with Sirdar Sooltan Mahomed Khan at Cabool, are attaching themselves to Persia. Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan, the Afghan governor of Toorkistan, has received overtures from the Ozbeg chiefs of Shiburghan and Suripool to become tributary to the ruler of Cabool, if the governor will not attack their possessions.

"A messenger has reached from Herat with the news that the king of Persia has addressed a firman to Mahomed Saeed Khan, of Herat, stating that the Russians are waging war with the Sultan-i-Room, and it is therefore now more necessary than ever that he should closely attach himself to the power of Persia. On this, the

ARRIVAL OF MAILS.

The Bengal, with a mail, left Calcutta July 15th, Sand Heads 16th, Madras 21st, Point de Galle 24th, Aden Aug. 5th, and arrived at Suez Aug. 12th.

The Semiramis, with a mail, left Bombay July 20th, and arrived at Aden Aug. 4th. The mails were transferred to the Victoria, and arrived at Suez Aug. 12th.

The Cadiz, with the China mail, left Hong-Kong July 6th, Singapore 14th, Penang 16th, and arrived at Point de Galle July 22nd.

The mails thus brought were taken on to Alexandria; they arrived at Malta Aug. 24th, and Marseilles 27th (per Valetta).

The Ripon, with the remainder, may be expected at Southampton on Sept. 9th. The delay is attributable to the vessel having sustained damage to her machinery.

DEPARTURES OF EACH MONTH—MAILS FROM LONDON TO INDIA, CHINA, ETC.

Viâ Southampton (from London), at 8 o'clock in the morning of the 4th and 20th. It is advisable to post letters in London on the previous evening; if that day be Sunday, then on the evening of the 3rd and 19th; if Monday (of course) before 8 o'clock on that morning.

Postage, letters under  $\frac{1}{2}$  oz. . . . . 1s.

Herat chief deputed an agent to the Ameer of Cabool, but on his arrival at Candahar he was seized by the chiefs of that place and plundered of all his property, as horses, &c. He is now in custody. The Ameer is very much annoyed at this insult, and talks of proceeding to Candahar for revenge. The envoy of the Ameer was, on his return from Persia, treated in the same way by the Ahmud Shah (Candahar) chiefs, but released on the intercession of the widow of Yar Mahomed Khan."

We promised to give the editor's comment on his correspondent's letter. It is a very modest one. He gives it as an introduction, we as an addendum; as the reader will thereby be better able to estimate its justice.

"It [the letter] will be found to contain very little of any importance. It is said that the Governor-General has peremptorily rejected the advances of Dost Mahomed; and if it be true that his Highness has insisted on the possession of Peshawar as the first condition of negotiations, we do not wonder at Lord Dalhousie's disinclination to treat. But though the friendship of the ruler of Cabul may be purchased too dearly, it is worth having, if it can be secured by a small subsidy."

It is not difficult to guess whence the reports of the Russians "daily gaining a footing" in the Turkish dominions, have their origin. In matters of intrigue, false rumours, and tortuous policy of every kind, we have not now to learn how great is the Northern Bear.

There appears to be nothing new from Oude. In the summaries which appear in the columns of our daily cotemporaries, the reported offer of assistance from the king of Oude figures as a spick and span new article of intelligence. Our readers will recollect that it appeared in our publication of the 15th instant, where at page 442 they will find it.

An experimental trip on the railway from Howrah to Pandooah was made on the 6th July. The train—if it may be called a train—consisted only of an engine and a single carriage. The performances of the iron horse of course "astonished the natives," and called forth among them various opinions as to the cause of his movements. One was, that the animal was put in motion by the mere word of the Governor-General.

The Poonah Observer publishes an order, dated 8th July, for the entire effective strength of her Majesty's 10th Hussars to hold themselves in readiness to march to Oolwa, there to embark for Egypt, en route to Turkey. It is reported, however, that in consequence of various impediments to the earlier removal of the regiment, it will not embark before the beginning of September, perhaps the end of that month.

The Bombay Telegraph, which plumes itself on the earliness and accuracy of its Horse Guards news, is very indignant because certain other papers (or their editors) laughed at an intimation in the first-named paper, that such a step as the despatch of troops from Bombay for the seat of war was meditated. We never laughed, and do not laugh now, in narrating that private letters from Poonah inform the Telegraph, that a portion of the horse brigade, and one or more European regiments, will follow the 10th Hussars very shortly. As to speculating how any of these troops are to be conveyed, we leave that task to our Indian brethren. The Poonah Observer again comes in aid, by stating that an express has been sent to the Governor-General, requesting that so many of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's large steamers as are available at Calcutta may be forthwith sent round to Bombay for the transport of the hussars. We do not ask what is to become of the mail.

Passing from India to Ceylon, we find nothing for notice, except the occurrence of some short but violent squalls, in one of which a fine old banian-tree, overhanging the Galle road, fraught, it is said, with many recollections of bygone times and bygone residents in Ceylon, of the days of Barnes and Brownrig, was torn up by the roots. Our love for old trees and for old associations must be admitted to excuse our adverting to the accident in this place.

China affords little or nothing to make up for the shortcomings of the rest of the East. The following is the only scrap of intelligence worth picking out of the papers before us:—

"In our Overland edition we mentioned that a body of malcontents, members of the Triad Society, had pillaged the market-town of Shih-Lung, and afterwards invested the district city of Tung-kwan, near the Bogue, on the Canton river; and we have now received information that Tung-kwan fell into their hands on the 17th instant, chiefly by the assistance of confederates within the city. The imperialist soldiers, numbering only 300 or 400, were speedily overpowered, with very little bloodshed. Three or four military officers (the highest of whom was Moh Ki-liang) were killed, but the assistant civil magistrates fled, leaving their chief, with others, in the hands of their enemies, by whom they were afterwards liberated at the entreaty of one of their number, who proved to be a friend of Ho Aluk, the Triad leader.

"After burning the chief magistrate's yamun, they plundered the treasury of some 20,000 taels of silver, and all the rice-granaries belonging to government; then opened the prisons, and permitted the felons to escape and join their ranks; and afterwards proceeded to levy contributions from the inhabitants. The day of the attack, a placard was issued by Ho Aluk, assuring the inhabitants of protection against pillage; but apparently he has been unable to fulfil his promise.

"At first, considerable alarm prevailed in Canton itself, which, however, has since been allayed by the vigilance and activity of the authorities, who have placed three divisions, each of three hundred Tartars and Kiha soldiers, at such points on the eastern and northern sides of the city as are most open to attack; while inside the walls the troops, numbering about 8,000, are constantly on the alert. But the security of the city rests more on the determination of the inhabitants not to trust their persons and property to the tender mercies of a gang of ruffians, but to support the present authorities—at least until a more stable government than that of the Triads can be organized.

"Meanwhile some 7,000 troops have been despatched to Tung-kwan since the 23rd, and it is generally reported that Ho Aluk has evacuated the city,—whether through dread of the imperialist soldiers or not, is not stated; but a second rumour is to the effect that an encounter had taken place on the 25th, at Sintang, between Whampoa and the Bogue, in which the Triads were defeated, with the loss of upwards of a hundred killed, and from fifty to sixty made prisoners."

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA, REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

H.M.'s Troops.—Capt. G. A. Ferrier, H.M.'s 24th, at Mussoorie, June 24; Paymaster J. Mockler, H.M.'s 70th, at Ferozepore; Lieut. J. C. King, H.M.'s 74th Highlanders, at Jackatallah, Neilgherries, June 29; Lieut.-Col. J. S. Schonswar, H.M.'s 25th, at Cannanore, July 3.

BENGAL.—Capt. J. C. Lamb, 52nd N.I., at Umritsur, June 24; Ens. F. D. Tulloch, 48th N.I., at Barrackpore, aged 24, June 26.

MADRAS.—Capt. T. Back, 2nd N.I., at Palamcottah, June 28.

BOMBAY.—Capt. E. T. Peacocke, 1st N.I., at Bombay, July 14.

A QUESTION OF CHANCES.—The Bombay Times records a case of forgery in the Small Cause Court. A Marwarce altered a promissory note for five rupees into one for fifty. The Court detected the fraud and ordered the sufferer to prosecute, as it possessed no power to punish. The victim refused, as he had no time to waste, and the forger escaped with a reprimand. Had the Marwarce been sent at once to prison for six months, the risk would have been too heavy for the profits. As it is, forgery is a game of "heads I win, tails you lose." If undetected, it is successful. If detected, the villain escapes with a reprimand, and some additional credit among his countrymen.—Friend of India.

BURMAH.

PEGU.

A correspondent calls our attention to a petty but most vexatious grievance, which affects almost every officer employed in Pegu. It can be remedied by the Government at once. Packages addressed to officers in the province arrive in Rangoon by steamers and sailing vessels every day. Whatever they contain, remittances or edibles, arms or books, uniforms or tobacco, they are thrown on to the beach, and, unless addressed to an agent in Rangoon, there they lie until the master attendant has time to remove them to his godowns. In those godowns they remain till the owner chances to visit Rangoon, and in the vague hope of a fortunate discovery turns over the mass of articles collected in those storehouses. He finds them, it is true, but ruined by damp and white ants. Public packages fare no better. An officer sent some clothing for his men from Calcutta, and six months afterwards the parcels, addressed and franked in the regular manner, were found in Capt. Lewis's warehouses. It is no part, perhaps, of Capt. Lewis's duty to turn commission agent, but, in the infancy of civilization, one of his assistants might be authorised to send on parcels to their addresses, the addressee paying all expenses.—Friend of India, July 6.

RANGOON.

June 18, 1854.—Nothing has yet been heard of the Lady Nugent; it is supposed she must have been wrecked on the Andaman Islands; and the steamer Nemesis is going to be sent down there at the suggestion of the general to see if she can rescue any of the unfortunates who were on board. We have had rain every day since the 24th ultimo; the last two days the sun has actually shone bright for some hours, and caused our thermometers to rise considerably, being to-day about 88, whereas for three weeks past it has not been above 82 and 84. There is a report that the Goung Gee finds himself in a different position this season to former ones, and is well inclined to "come in" upon almost any terms.

Some suspicions against the head man of Ok-phoo, who has been considered a staunch ally, has caused him to be ceased, as also all his papers, and at present he remains under restraint. I hope nothing serious will be found against him, as he is said to have been one of the richest and most influential men of birth or consequence in Burmah for some years past.—Bengal Hurkaru, June 30.

MEERADAY, June 12, 1854.—Major Allan and the party under his orders returned from marking out the boundary line this day week; the party had crossed the Arracan range, about 4,000 feet above the level of the sea, and connecting the line with the old Arracan boundary. It will give you some idea of the nature of the country, to learn that during the three months that the party were out, they saw but two barking deer, and no other large game of any sort or kind; they marched through a jungly country, very scantily interspersed with villages, and many of those deserted; water was at a high premium, and they were often put to great straits to procure that indispensable necessary both for the elephants and themselves. They came in, however, looking all the better for their trip, and almost sorry to return to the dull monotony of Meeraday existence. The rains have now regularly set in, and the weather is cool and pleasant; there are few flies and fewer mosquitoes; the river has not risen much, but we fear that July is the month for the heavy fall of rain; the current, however, is very strong, and he must be a stout swimmer who could stem it for four or five hundred yards. The outpost Moukten, of which I gave a description in a former letter, has been abandoned for Tabrulla, a larger town, situated in the border of the Prome district—a most desirable position, as the force located there is now able to keep in check the dacoits in that and in the frontier districts. We have accounts of a good deal of fighting in the Tharawadie districts, but the celebrated Goung Gee still remains unconquered and at large. This versatile genius is in the habit of visiting our camp, disguised as a woodseller, a drover, or as some other trader, and thus informing himself of our movements, he profits by them accordingly. One would think that the history of England, and especially the life of king Alfred, were familiar to this unlettered Burman, were it not that his ignorance on every point is notorious. He must possess, however, a kind of rude genius, to enable him to baffle, as he has baffled, the parties by whom he has been so often surrounded. The Burmans, however, taking them as a nation, are not a fighting race; they do not like work of any kind. Easily amused, always merry and cheerful, they prefer cracking jokes to cracking heads; it often happens that even a high rate of pay,—three times as high as that given in Bengal,—will not induce them to stir out of their habitations, much less to risk their lives in predatory excursions. We can easily imagine, then, that in a few years, when roads are made, and civilization has increased, more especially, too, if the principle of the plantation of Ulster should be carried on to a large scale, by inducing Bengalees and their families to settle here, that Burmah will be as flourishing as any of our possessions in the East."—Ibid.

A correspondent of the Englishman, writing from Rangoon, says a track six feet wide has been opened between Sandoway and the Irrawaddy. He mentions also that a sanatorium may be established within thirty miles of Prome, 3,000 feet above the level of the sea, and with a temperature which never rises above 80 deg.

BENGAL.

AN OPIUM SALE IN CALCUTTA.

Perhaps the most extraordinary fact in connection with our Indian empire is the existence and permanence of the opium revenue. Certainly the sight best worth seeing in the metropolis of that empire is the monthly sale at which that revenue is collected. It is unique in the world. The operations of the London Exchange may be of greater political importance. The Clearing House, on Saturday night, sees a larger transfer of available credit. Epsom, on a Derby day, displays perhaps evidences of even greater excitement. The High Bazar of Stamboul may present an aspect even more genuinely Oriental. But for the accumulation of all these circumstances, for enormous mercantile transactions concluded in a few hours, amidst almost passionate excitement, and by Orientals surprised for the moment out of their habitual apathy, an opium sale is unique. We propose to describe it, rather for the benefit of our English than our Indian readers, though as there are thousands of Londoners who have never seen St. Paul's, so there are hundreds of Calcutta habitues who have never witnessed its most interesting spectacle.

The sale takes place in a large room of a building called the Calcutta Exchange. This, be it remarked, corresponds in no degree with edifices bearing a similar designation in Europe. It is simply an auction mart, devoted chiefly to haberdashery, furniture, and toys. Passing up a broad flight of stairs, hung with pictorial rubbish, we enter a large room divided by pillars into three separate aisles. It is ordinarily filled with tables, covered with every description of goods pleasant to children and their guardians; but on the sale day all this has been removed. In the middle aisle is a large square, railed off for bidders from the remainder of the building, and in this stands the auctioneer's pulpit, a large table, and a variety of benches. There is no other furniture, no goods, and of course no opium visible. No one wants to see the drug. There is the Company's guarantee that it is good, and the most virulent patriot in Calcutta will accept the Company's word for all he is worth in the world. Let us enter the railed space, which is defended by a European constable in a preternatural state of excitement from heat and worry, and from his corner watch the scene. As soon as we have recovered from the confusion produced by the astounding din, the predominant sensation is one of redness. Everything is red. The punkabs are red, perhaps to please the somewhat gaudy taste of the Portuguese and East-Indian families, who are the best customers of the Exchange. The very glare in the room, which is excessive, seems tinged with red, and you look around for the cause. It is speedily revealed. The whole place swarms with Marwarries. This name, which is applied in Bombay to a particular caste, is in Bengal used to denote any trader from the west. Active, intelligent, and penurious, they are everywhere the most successful of the money-dealers who have sprung into rank luxuriance under the British rule. They are, if not the largest, the most numerous of the opium dealers, and they swarm outside and inside the barrier as bidders, speculators, agents, and spectators. Unlike the Bengalees, who in their business-dress avoid colours, these men display a marked penchant for red. The mark on their foreheads, which indicates that though Hindoos they are more especially worshippers of Ugnée, is made with ochre. Their turbans are of Surat cloth, and its brilliant crimson is scarcely concealed by its excessive filth. These men, with their stolid faces, thin moustaches, and dull eyes, occupy every corner. They seem to monopolize the building, and it is not till you have gazed carefully around, that you perceive that almost all other Asiatic races are faithfully represented. On your right stands a shallow, gloomy-looking English Jew, his full black eyes alone indicating that he too is an Oriental. In front, seated by the table, are a group of Oriental Jews, in the dress rendered traditional in England by old biblical pictures, their splendid features and sweeping robes, ruddy cheeks, and animated expression, forming a marked contrast to their English co-religionists. They are

At eleven o'clock the auctioneer takes his place for an hour and a half of the hottest work we ever remember to have witnessed. The firm whom he represents, Messrs. Mackenzie, Lyall, and Co., receive from Government for this service, we believe, a commission of one-eighth per cent. It yields them about Rs. 25,000 a year, and the spectator at first wonders for what service that sum is a remuneration. He is speedily undeceived. The bidding begins, and he expects, of course, that the outrageous din will be a little hushed. Not a bit of it. Everybody is talking at once, everybody is gesticulating, and shooting his fingers into the air for some purpose not immediately apparent, but supposed to be a signal. How the auctioneer obtains the bids is a mystery. Nothing can be heard, there is no nodding, and to the spectator all appears to be reckless confusion. Moreover, on asking a gentleman who sat behind the auctioneer for some months to explain, he professed himself equally ignorant. The only solution he could offer was, that the auctioneer had an intuitive perception of a bidder, as some animals have of the presence of a snake. One thing alone is certain, he does collect the bids, and his average of blunders is one in two years. The bidding is as follows:—Every body bids for a specified article, in an English auction, where everybody bids for a specified article, and the highest carries off his prize. It is not a Dutch auction, where the auctioneer runs down the price till somebody is contented. The bidder buys a lot of five chests, but he may, on the strength of that bid, take any number not exceeding 125 chests. In other words, he may, at his own option, alter the value of his bid to the extent of 20,000*l*. This strange privilege, without which, however, the sale would never end, greatly increases the excitement. For instance, the bidding has begun low. The best bidders have not arrived. The astute speculator sees it will go up, sweeps off his 125 chests, and re-sells them an hour after without stirring from his seat. The auctioneer makes no effort to announce the bids. A peal of thunder would scarcely be heard. The amount is written on a black board, and elevated by a servant. By and bye the bidding droops. There is a regular yell outside the barrier. In that open space are congregated the bazaar speculators, all Marwarries, the men who really rule the price of the drug. They have formed time-bargains, exactly like the time-bargains of the Stock Exchange, pledging themselves to deliver so many hundred chests of opium, at a fixed price, three days after the sale. Perhaps a million and a half sterling has been staked in this manner, and the excitement is proportionate. To-day, the bulls are palpably taken in; the news brought from China by the Shanghai is favourable, and they have speculated on the rise. From some unexplained cause, the bidding droops; and the speculators yell accordingly. So large are the stakes, and so widely is the passion for this gambling diffused, that the bets are heavier in Bombay, a thousand miles off, than in Calcutta, and expresses start every half hour for the Western Presidency. They will beat those organized by Government by two days, though the completion of the

The plan of the volume is simple and intelligible. The first section defines the jurisdiction of the courts. The next sets forth in a summary manner the law of evidence. The next twelve refer to matters to be decided according to the creed of the parties, inheritance, family arrangements, disposition of property, contracts, sales, and mortgages. The succeeding five, on agency, bailment, partnership, bills of exchange, debts, interest, mesne profits, and insolvency, contain an attempt to supply the great Indian want, a code of commercial law. We have nothing approaching to it, and outside of the precincts of the Supreme Court, no man can tell how a case, involving anything more complicated than a simple contract, may be decided. The last three contain a law of libel, some fundamental rules regarding proprietorship, and some principles to be observed with regard to the decision of caste disputes. We may remark that in all these cases, though the provisions of the code are confined chiefly to principles, they are occasionally accompanied by absolute limitations, which, in a Regulation province, would require the very highest legislative authority. Thus it is ordered that no Court shall compel unwilling persons to complete a marriage. There is the Hindoo idea of the validity of betrothal upset at once. Every person who purchases anything is protected for four-and-twenty hours by an implied warranty. If within that period he discovers a defect, the seller is compelled to take back the property. Here is a Mohammedan principle, radically just, it is true, applied to the entire population, of whatever creed. The principles of partnership laid down, create throughout the Punjab the system denominated en commandité, each partner being liable only to the extent of the share of which he has publicly notified himself possessed. In spite, however, of these occasional assumptions of a high legislative power, the general character of the code may be thus summed up. It is an adaptation of the laws revered by men of the different creeds, and the local customs recognised in the Punjab, with the addition of certain arbitrary rules on questions where no certain or just law appears to apply. The scheme adopted to ascertain these customs will be fairly understood from the subjoined sentence. It is from the commentary upon the law of exchanges.

"The method by which this section has been prepared, was briefly as follows:—The main principles of the English law on bills of exchange were first collated, and explained to the chief mercantile men of Lahore, and thus the fundamental differences between that system and the custom of these provinces were elicited. At length a vernacular draft was prepared which might be fitted for the consideration of the commercial authorities at Umritsur, whither it was accordingly sent. The leading merchants of that city then carefully examined each clause of the proposed draft, making such emendations, corrections, or additions, as they thought proper, and appended a comment on the whole. Several of them have also been consulted verbally. The amended rules have now been drawn up in English. It may be believed, then, that this section represents the opinions of the first commercial authorities in the Punjab, of men whose prosperity may mainly depend on the practical working and local adaptability of the rules in question. They had every motive to give good advice, and that they are competent to do so, cannot be doubted. It is hoped, therefore, that the principles embodied in these rules may be received with some confidence, although in many respects they differ from the law and practice in England."

Thus far the code satisfies all the requirements of the public for which it is intended. There remains one more department, the system of procedure. In India, this is of infinitely greater importance than the code itself. There are few laws to which a native will not speedily adjust himself, which he will not at once understand, and out of which he will not discover some easy loophole. It is the procedure, the manner of taking evidence, the authority of the amlah, and, above all, the causes of delay which specially affect his comfort. And in this respect the civil code of the Punjab is far less perfect than we had hoped it would be found. There is a loophole left for the monster evil of delay. It is true that a variety of precautions have been taken to ensure speed. Plaintiff and defendant are brought face to face. The trial is fixed for a particular day, and on that day it must take place. If the plaintiff does not appear, a decree may still be given. A deed of compromise is as valid as a decree. Technical flaws are to be disregarded. But the two monster evils of the Regulation Courts, the record and the power of appeal, are retained in the Punjab. The evidence is to be taken down in writing, and may be sent up in appeal, and there is an end of any hope of celerity of justice. It is useless to repeat arguments which we employed a fortnight since in relation to the Small Cause Courts. The process will be the same in Bengal and the Punjab, though the evil may be diminished in the latter province. The people are less litigious and more truthful. The judicial officers are more absolute, and there is a code. Many sources of delay which must exist in Bengal, do not exist in the Punjab. But the primary source, the "record," remains; and we cannot but fear that when the administration has become older, when the incessant watchfulness is relaxed, when the courts are infested by the scoundrels who fatten on all Indian tribunals, and when a long period of peace has produced a taste for the excitement of litigation, the retention of the record will be found to have impaired the efficiency of the code.

We have two more remarks to make. Mr. Montgomery has laid down a law of libel and a law of usury. Both are delicate and doubtful questions. In both he appears to us fully to have succeeded. The code admits justification as a defence in an action for libel, but not in every instance. The libeller must prove that his assertion was not only true, but necessary, and not dictated simply by a malicious impulse. With all our prejudice in favour of unlicensed printing, we are compelled to regard this as the true law of libel. If a journalist asserts that a judge has taken bribes, and proves his assertion, he is a public benefactor. When he asserts that the judge is too fond of port wine, and proves his assertion, his veracity is unimpeachable, but he is not the less a public nuisance. Similarly with regard to the usury laws. Mr. Montgomery has simply abolished them. A man in the Punjab may sell money as freely as oil. If he asks too much, the purchaser is free to make his bargain with some other dealer. The bargain in all cases is to be kept, unless fraud is proved, a rule the wisdom of which will one day be acknowledged even by a Parliament of territorial magnates.—Friend of India.

THE REPORTED DEFICIENCY OF SALT IN BENGAL.

SOME alarm has of late been felt at the prospect of a deficiency of salt in Bengal. The cessation of imports from England, and a diminution of the stock below the usual average, have rendered it necessary to take unusual measures for procuring a new supply. Abandoned manufactories have been reopened, large supplies have been ordered from Madras, and advances to an unusual extent have been made to the Molunghees constantly in employ. Measures, dictated only by a wise precaution, have been misinterpreted as provisions against a foreseen necessity. The alarm has spread, and has been increased by two other circumstances. Firstly. The possibility of a deficiency of salt in Bengal is a contingency so terrible, that men ordinarily of cool judgment, become excited by the mere speculation. Secondly, owing to arrangements in which we cannot but think we detect traces of mismanagement, it occasionally happens that the best and whitest descriptions of salt come into the market at the cheapest rates. This salt will bear great adulteration; and on its appearance is purchased, though it is not removed, by a few powerful firms. The ordinary dealers cannot obtain this profitable salt, and the public, seeing that lakhs of maunds are sold at once, jumps at the conclusion that the native dealers, aware of an impending scarcity, have combined to monopolise the existing supply. We propose to demonstrate that these fears are practically without foundation.

The amount of the sales and imports in any one year by no means indicates the amount of consumption. When speculation is active and money easy, the deliveries speedily become large. They decrease when the capital is required for more profitable purposes. The average deliveries of three years, however, may, we believe, be taken to represent very nearly the average of consumption. For the last three years it has been—

Govt. Sales .....	Mds.	22,38,702	31,25,129	37,89,914
Excise .....	"	18,600	19,600	43,550
Imported .....	"	29,26,865	24,94,332	15,61,655
Retail .....	"	8,77,396	8,82,867	8,67,000
		60,61,563	65,21,928	62,62,119

The average of consumption, therefore, may be taken at sixty-three lacs of maunds (62,81,610). Of this amount, however, five lacs of maunds is required in Cuttack, and is supplied from local resources, and the total quantity necessary is reduced to fifty-eight lacs of maunds. To meet this demand there was, on the 30th April, of old salt in store,

Govt. storehouses .....	Mds.	15,50,000
Imported and in bond .....	"	2,77,390
		18,41,642

To this there has been added since that date—

From Hidgelee and Tumlook .....	Mds.	17,00,000
Cuttack .....	"	13,00,000
Chittagong .....	"	5,00,000
On its way from Madras .....	"	1,00,000
" " Arracan .....	"	1,00,000

Thus there is a supply ready, actually available and purchasable of more than 55 lacs, or eleven months' supply. This, however, would be leaving the margin somewhat too narrow, and accordingly orders have been transmitted to Madras and Arracan, and within the year there will be in hand a further supply of—

From Madras .....	Mds.	5,00,000
Arracan .. .....	"	1,00,000
Private importation .....	"	12,00,000

It may be necessary to explain that this item of private importation is not a guess. The supply from England has diminished, but in this, the worst year of all, it still reached 3,93,823 maunds. A ship laden with salt for Calcutta has since been heard of at Melbourne. Moreover, salt is imported from other places. The Arabs and the Singalese, the people of Coromandel and Malabar, are not affected either by the European war or the Australian gold. They will send salt still, and last year they despatched more than five lacs of maunds. This account shows that there will be, on 30th April, 1855, a balance of sixteen lacs in the golahs. By that time three-fourths of the new salt, the manufacture of which commences in November and ends in May, will be in store, and the supply will be abundant, and this without such a previous exhaustion of the golahs as would enable the merchants to monopolise the reserve.

There exists in reality no danger whatever. The war, coming behind the drain of freight for Australia, might have embarrassed the Government for a time. The contingency was happily foreseen. Madras, in Mr. Plowden's opinion, could supply the universe with salt, and a twelvemonth's notice would bring out the whole resources of that presidency. The rumour, however, has been spread, it is supported by facts which may deceive the inexperienced, and we have no slight pleasure in giving it this unequivocal contradiction.—Friend of India.

THE COLEHAN.

A few weeks since we noticed the efforts which have been made to evangelize some of the savage races, which still prowl through some of the Indian jungles. These tribes, the relics of the aborigines, occupy the place which in the ancient world belonged to the pre-dial slaves, and in modern Europe, to the lowest section of the urban populations. Savages in the midst of civilization, the improvement of all around them seems but to drive them still further from the ranks of the community. Such a tribe, as savage as the Australian aborigines, exists within a day's journey of the Indian metropolis, and we are assured offers one of the most promising fields for missionary effort.

Between Midnapore and Chyassa, in the district of Singbhoom, stretches a district covering about 1,500 square miles, and called the Colehan. It is inhabited by a tribe who style themselves the Turka Coles. They have no connection either in lineage or in language with the tribes of the same name, the Ooraon or Dhun-gar Coles, who flock down every year from the hills round Chota Nagpore to the plains, and who are, to the workmen of Bengal, what the Irish interlopers are to the reapers of the west of England. They are about 75,000 in number, and are probably the most degraded of all the tribes included within the limits of India Proper. They have no caste, being divided merely into families or clans, no creed, no deities, no hope and no fear of a future state of being. Their sole religious impulse is an inordinate terror of evil spirits, or of witchcraft, which hurries them on to the commission of the crimes most abhorrent to orientals. Men have been known to murder their own parents, and their own children, on the bare suspicion of a knowledge of witchcraft. Those who, from the possession of a few cattle, are accounted rich, reduce themselves when attacked by sickness to beggary, by sacrifices to avert the wrath of the evil spirits, and even steal to fulfil the incessant demands upon their herds. The people, naturally lazy, cultivate only when they cannot rob, and confine their cultivation to the rice necessary for their immediate subsistence. In each village there is a weaver or two, who furnish the infinitesimal quantity of cloth required by a people with whom there is little distinction between full dress and nudity, a single maker of earthen vessels, and a few herdsmen to watch the cattle. This is the only approach to a class of artisans and tradesmen. The remainder of the population are agriculturists and idlers, remarkable only for their laziness and excessive irascibility. The slightest provocation appears to irritate a Cole almost to insanity. Like Hatto, whose crimes have recently excited such attention in England, the most trivial neglect appears to madden these untrained spirits. If they cannot obtain immediate vengeance, they commit suicide. The presence of a government officer in their midst has restrained their violence, and increased to a lamentable extent the number of suicides. The pestilence, for it is a sort of moral contagion, is particularly observable among the females.

Nevertheless, this race, thus degraded, passionate, and cruel, is in many respects a hopeful one. The Coles are content to work, and work hard, in their own way, for an adequate inducement, and their bodily strength and hardihood render them admirable artisans. They excel more particularly in blacksmiths' work and carpentry. They are fond of learning, though at present almost entirely without the means of instruction. In 1837, Government sanctioned the establishment of a school, in which English and Hindee were taught. Not only did the boys crowd to acquire the latter, but grown and old men might be seen gravely conning over the Hindee alphabet. Unfortunately, the master of the school was a true disciple of Sir Charles Trevelyan. Careless alike of time and place, of the capacity of the people, and the wishes of his pupils, he persisted in teaching English. The Coles wanted English as much as a London cadger is interested in Syriac, and at last finding they could obtain nothing else, abandoned the school in disgust. Then the Government made, as it fancied, an immense step in advance. It established three vernacular schools, and thought the end secured. Unfortunately, it made one mistake. It omitted to inquire what was the vernacular of the Colehan. It fixed upon Bengalee, with which the Coles have as much concern as the slaves of Travancore. Their own language is an aboriginal dialect, and the language around them is Hindee, and this only will they attempt to acquire. The three schools, we believe, still drag on an existence useless for the people for whom they are intended.

It is in this district that missionaries are at the present moment urgently required. The people are numerous enough to reward exertion. They have nothing to unlearn, and no caste from which to be released. They are passionately anxious for a particular form of instruction, and have shown, under favourable circumstances, an aptitude for civilization. If schools were established, the Government would assist in rendering them permanent, and a race as low as the South Sea Islanders would be raised at least one step in the scale of civilization. Is the experiment to remain untried?—Friend of India.

CRIME IN THE LAHORE DISTRICT.

In civilized countries, the great preventive of crime is certainty of punishment. So completely has this axiom been accepted by the most acute observers, that many have proposed to abolish altogether the prerogative of pardon. They would invest the law with something of the majesty of a Greek fate, a power which cannot be turned aside, and from the operation of which it is hopeless to escape. The ruffian, they say, who would quail at the certainty of death, will risk his chance of a merciful judge, and an over-lenient Home Secretary. Whatever may be the case in Europe, it is clear that in India certainty is not the one thing needful. It is speed which is required. A native is not cowed by a punishment, which is to affect him some twelve months after the commission of his crime. One of the strangest of his psychological peculiarities is his incapability of remorse. To use his own expression, he "sits and waits" with the imperturbable apathy, with which, if fate and the sadder are against him, he will subsequently mount the gallows. It is speedy justice that he dreads, which deprives him of all hope from perjury, and leaves him without time for the exercise of his boundless ingenuity in evasion. We question whether the majority of natives do not consider a breach of the salt laws more dangerous than forgery, and this simply because the smaller punishment is summarily administered. Wherever in India the law moves swiftly, heinous crime diminishes, and it appears to move swiftly in the Lahore division.

That division is under the charge of Mr. C. Raikes, the opponent of female infanticide, and his report on the operations of the past year, is crowded with facts of the greatest importance to the Indian statesman. It is not by any means as easy to govern an English county. Most of the districts, Lahore itself more especially, are crowded with the human vermin, who rise in revolutions to the surface of society. A good digestion and a bad heart, were the requisites for success, when Paris obeyed Louis the Magnificent. A bold heart and a bad conscience have for fourteen years been the primary requisites at Lahore. Since the annexation, the scoundrels that formerly sought to rise by atrocious crime, continue their practice for subsistence, and until they have been purchased, transported, or hung, the internal administration of Lahore will demand incessant anxiety and care. The populace, too, have that fierceness of character, which is so frequently apparent in London criminals, while the universal idea of natives that they have a right to maltreat the females of the family, shows itself in diabolical outrages. Nevertheless, judgment is speedy, and violent crime has diminished. In 1852, eleven cases of murder were reported in Lahore; in 1853, only six; and homicide, rape, and theft by drugging have diminished in an equal or greater proportion.

The cause of the diminution is obvious. Out of 3,805 cases tried during the past year, thirty-seven only remained undisposed of at its close, and thirteen of these were committed within the last month. The average duration of every case investigated by the police, was only eleven days; and of those examined in any method, only a week. We doubt, if London is taken out of the account, whether justice in England is much more rapid. This fact, however, does not show the real celerity attained. In Bengal, the people dread appearing as witnesses, nearly as much as appearing at the bar. Trials are so protracted, and stations so distant, that it is necessary to employ a certain degree of coercion to keep the witnesses together. The consequence is patent to all. The witnesses, if possible, keep out of the way, no one dreams of offering voluntary evidence, and respectable testimony is not to be obtained. This evil does not exist in the Punjab. In the number of cases we have mentioned, 4,276 witnesses were concerned. Of these were dismissed:—

1st day	..	..	..	..	..	3,772
2nd "	..	..	..	..	..	448
3rd "	..	..	..	..	..	36
4th "	..	..	..	..	..	13

The "one day" probably means from half an hour to three hours, a time which even in England must be devoted to attendance on a court. Let no one object that this is the record of crime in a great city, where the elements of distance does not enter into the account. It is the same in the country districts. In Goordaspur, seventy-eight per cent. of the witnesses were dismissed at once, and not one remained beyond the sixth day. In Goojranwala not one was detained more than six days, and in Sealkote, only seven were kept for four days, and not one beyond that time. In the whole division, out of 18,070 witnesses, eighty-three per cent. were dismissed at once. We put it to any magistrate in Bengal, whether such a system would not tend to decrease the number of acquittals, and the average of crime.

Although, however, the heinous crimes of the country have diminished, the lesser offences appear to have increased. The number of burglaries, which in 1852 was 874, had risen to 1,066 in 1853, while the number of simple thefts had almost doubled; cattle stealing had been increased by 6 per cent., and the legal crime of counterfeiting coin by 20 per cent. By far the larger portion of this increase is attributable to greater activity, and experience on the part of the police, and possibly to an increased willingness on the part of prosecutors. There remains a percentage of real increase, which is attributed to the drought, but which we suspect is owing, at least in part, to the supplanting of a native by a civilised rule. Under every system and in every country there will always exist a class of "have-nots," who are determined to "have," without working. Under a government like that of Runjeet they attain their object by force; under British rule, they descend from depredators into pickpockets, lurk on the highway, or enter houses at the dead of night. Moreover, the British rule, severe as it may be towards the greater crimes, is comparatively indulgent to all offences, but one, against property. The Mohammedan bowed off the thief's right hand. The Sikh was probably as cruel. The Englishman simply condemns him to inaction within four walls for a limited space of time. The change, which though lenient, is perhaps just, acts as an encouragement to meaner criminals, and theft flourishes accordingly.

It remains only to point out the descriptions of crime common in this division of the Punjab. They differ greatly from those, against which the magistracy of Bengal are striving to contend. There are no affrays, with armed regiments on each side, for no one is permitted to carry arms; affray attended with homicide is a capital offence, and a "lathee" is a lethal weapon. There are no dacoities, for the dacoits must be unarmed, and a Punjabee householder differs greatly from a Bengalee. There are very few cases of embezzlement, forgery, or perjury, for these are the vices of the weaker oriental races. Cattle stealing is as prevalent as sheep stealing in Cumberland, but this, like smuggling, is one of the offences which do not necessarily indicate any great propensity to crime. The highlander who reived his neighbour's steers, was by no means so depraved as the London pickpocket. For the rest, this division presents much the appearance of an English county. The crimes are nearly the same, both in extent and character, Thuggee being almost the sole exceptional offence. We submit that after making every allowance for difference in the people, the rough justice of the Punjab protects life and property, better than the misnamed "Regulation system."—Friend of India.

THE MUTLAH RIVER.

IN alluding to the Mutlah river, the Chamber of Commerce very truly observes that there is one consideration connected with that inquiry, which will before long command the earnest attention, not only of the mercantile body, but of all classes connected with Calcutta. They mean the transfer of the trade of the port to the right bank of the river, which will slowly, perhaps, but surely follow the completion of the line of railway from Howrah to the Upper Provinces, unless both banks are made to participate equally in the advantages of the railway. We pointed out these probable consequences many months ago, and therefore advocated the proposed plan of bridging the Hooghly. By this means the anticipated evil would be partly counteracted, partly only, because even a bridge would not prevent the greater part of our import trade, as far as it relates to the consumption in the provinces, flowing into Howrah. The Chamber of Commerce, however, suggest a different plan. They are of opinion that the best mode of securing an equal participation in the benefits of the railway, would be to have a short branch line from Calcutta to join the main line from Howrah, crossing the river by a bridge, a little below Pultah Ghat, and to leave the communication between the two banks here to be kept up by means of efficient steam ferries.

The idea is not bad, though not original, being, we believe, a part of Mr. Sim's scheme. This, no doubt, would prove a most effectual means of securing a continuation of the greater portion of the inland trade to the town of Calcutta; but if to be carried out, we apprehend that the work will have to be done entirely at the expense of those chiefly interested in the undertaking. It is extremely unlikely that the railway company would be found ready to construct the line in question, because it would render that from Howrah comparatively useless, and because it would be an open avowal that, in selecting Howrah as a terminus, the railway company had committed a most egregious mistake. There can, however, be no question of the suggested line being most desirable in any respect. First, it would prevent the anticipated great depreciation of landed property at Calcutta, and secondly, it would be sure of extensive patronage, not only by the mercantile, but every other class of the community which is likely to avail itself of a railway. Consignees would of course land their goods on this side of the river, and when once here, it is extremely improbable that any of the inland traders would go to the expense of sending the goods across the water for transmission by the rail, when they could despatch them from Calcutta itself. As for passengers, they would certainly rather start from this side than take the trouble of crossing over to Howrah. The rail, therefore, if carried out, has most excellent prospects, as far as regards the undertaking as a speculation, but, as before stated, it must be carried out entirely by private enterprise, to guard against monopoly. The total cost of the line, including a bridge at Pultah, would not exceed twenty lacs, and that amount could be raised, without the least difficulty, by any joint-stock company. To carry out the undertaking, however, two things are most essential,—encouragement and aid on the part of Government, and arrangement with the railway company. Of the former we almost despair, and the latter appears to us to be likely to involve endless difficulties. However, let the Chamber of Commerce try and see what can be done. The subject is of such importance that it is well worthy of the most earnest attention of those interested in the commerce and landed property of this city.—Hurkaru.

MEETING OF THE MEMBERS OF THE CIVIL SERVICE.

A meeting of the members of the Civil Service is to be held at noon this day at the Town Hall for the purpose of considering the provisions of the "New Furlough Rules," which, though not yet officially promulgated by the Supreme Government, have been published at Madras, and are believed to be authentic. It has been pointed out to us,—ourselves not among the "privileged," and therefore not much understanding the points at issue,—that the new rules require considerable elucidation, revision, and amendment; and that between the two, the new and old rules, the latter must be taken for choice; inasmuch as they at least are intelligible in all their provisions—an advantage the new rules in many of their clauses do not possess. It has been said, we are told, that the collective wisdom of the Government of India is already at fault in the application of the rules to submitted cases. The provisions in regard to sick leave appear, we understand, to limit the period to be counted as service to eighteen months on the whole twenty-five years of service. If this be the true interpretation, the difference in this respect between the new rules and the old must be considered to be of the last importance. As remarked in a brochure we have seen; by the rules, still actually in force, such (sick) leave can "be taken again and again after intervals of three years' service, so that if necessary a sick man might be absent on sick leave for ten years during the full period of service." No improper advantage has, however, been taken of this indulgence. It would seem, moreover, that the operative effect of the limit of the period of service in all cases to thirty-five years will go far to prevent any of the present middle-men in the service obtaining their annuity till that period has been passed. A commentator on the proposed rules makes it out that a servant whose service commenced in 1831, and who would therefore be entitled to an annuity in 1856, is likely to find himself in that year in the position of having 110 seniors to be first provided with pensions, which 110, at the average annual rate of appropriation, may be absorbed in the succeeding nine years. The meeting, no doubt, will duly take note of these eventualities.—Hurkaru, July 5.

The meeting of the Civil Service for the purpose of discussing the new furlough rules, which took place yesterday at noon, was very numerously attended—the following gentlemen being present: Mr. Dick, Sir R. Barlow, Messrs. Ricketts, Dunbar, C. Allen, Plowden, Edmonstone, Bidwell, Torrens, Adams, Bracken, Crawford, Elliot, Alexander, Riddell, Colvin, A. Young, Mills, Waterfield, Drummond, Lillie, Couper, Pearson, Cockburn, Campbell, G. Young, Loch, Dalrymple, Harrington, Harvey, F. Lushington, Hobhouse, Devereux, Fergusson, Wigram, Cockerell, H. Cockerell, V. Palmer, Barnard Buckland, and Raikes. Several resolutions were passed, embodying the changes desired by the service; and a committee, consisting of Messrs. Colvin, Plowden, Harrington, Hon. E. Drummond, H. B. Riddell, and J. W. Dalrymple, was appointed for the purpose of preparing a memorial on the part of the meeting for submission to the Most Noble the Governor General. A further report of the proceedings and of the resolutions adopted will be furnished hereafter.—Ibid. July 6.

THE SUB-MARINE TELEGRAPH.

Before the year is over England will, it is said, in point of intelligence, be brought five days nearer to India, and we shall be able to receive London intelligence in Calcutta within twenty-five days. The sub-marine telegraph, which is to connect Italy with Egypt, is no longer a chimera; its realization is rapidly approaching. The first portion of the great Mediterranean cable, the largest ever made, and also the largest with regard to circumference, has been completed in the yard near Greenwich, and is ready for shipment. We had written thus far when we received the Bombay Times of the 29th ultimo, containing an article touching upon the above subject, and the equally interesting one of a direct railway communication between Calcutta and the shores of the British Channel.

As regards the former, the Times says:—"The wire is now being laid down to the southernmost point of Sardinia, and preparations will be made immediately for carrying it across the Mediterranean. Within six months of its touching the African shore it will of course be at Suez." We hope our contemporary may be right, but we fear he is a little sanguine, although we must admit that what he anticipates is within the bounds of possibility, if not of probability. After what has been done in India, there is nothing to prevent his expectations being fulfilled if an O'Shaughnessy can be found to carry out the work, but we must have something more to put the telegraph in working order. We must have an establishment of efficient signallers, which we have not yet in India, and are not likely to have for some time, although measures are to be taken to procure such, as will be seen by reference to an advertisement which appears elsewhere in our columns, and from which it will also be observed that the Indian telegraph will be opened for the use of the public in November next.

Our contemporary goes on to express his hopes of the communication being continued from Suez to Aden, and again from Aden to Bombay by means of "submarine lines, which have now become so simple and well understood that the telegraph people rather prefer carrying their lines under water." This once accomplished, we should be within talking distance of London; but, considering the countries through which the line must pass between Algeria and Egypt, we are free to confess that we apprehend considerable difficulty and delay in completing the communication between London and Suez. This, we feel no doubt, will be done sooner or later, and once accomplished, we shall be brought within about twelve days of London. That, however, everything that can be done will be done we may rest assured when such a man as Professor Wheatstone is the originator of these speculations on paper.

The subject of a direct railway communication between England and India is an idea of Mr. Stephenson's, who states that "Constantinople will be connected by railway with the British Channel in the course of the next two years, unless the matter be put off by the war, and at all events its completion will take place within eighteen months of the conclusion of peace." Our readers have heard of the Greek kalends. If Mr. Stephenson is to wait for the completion of the European line of railway until the war upon which we are just entering is finished, we fear that few of us will ever see the iron horse in the City of the Sultan.

"In three years more he feels confident that the line will be completed through Asia Minor, &c., into Scinde, thence crossing to join the Goozerat line wherever this by the year 1860 may lead, and doubtless by this time Bombay, Calcutta, and Madras, will be united by rail." We wish we could consider Mr. Stephenson as a prophet. We have little, very little hope of seeing the Bombay and Calcutta railway completed by the year 1860, unless the railway Companies put on considerably more steam than they have hitherto done. We have our doubts if the year 1870 will dawn upon us before the journey from Calcutta to the capital of Western India can be accomplished by railway transit. As for a line from the shores of the Bosphorus to Goozerat, through countries none of which have an extensive commerce, while others are actual deserts, we regard it as little better than an hallucination, even though the project has the sanction of so high an authority as Mr. Stephenson.

A canal uniting the Mediterranean with the Red Sea is, we think, a more feasible undertaking, and one which will so greatly facilitate the communication between Europe and Asia as to bring back the trade of the East to the channel through which it flowed before the passage round the Cape was discovered. It would also prevent the risk of the communication between England and many parts of Asia being transferred to the route across the Isthmus of Panama, of which by late accounts there appears to be considerable danger.

We have no doubt that the period occupied in the passage from India to England will be rapidly diminished every year, and that the electric telegraph will in due time be continuous between the two countries; but even though supported by such high authorities, we cannot share in the anticipations of our Bombay contemporary that either the one or the other of the proposed undertakings will be completed in even double the period that those upon whose opinions he pins his faith so sanguinely expect.—Hurkaru.

THE EXTERNAL COMMERCE OF BENGAL FOR 1853-54.

Mr. Campbell has once more enabled us to present our annual review of the progress of the trade of Calcutta. It appears to have improved but little during the past year. The effect of the discovery of gold, and the consequent diversion of shipping to Australia, has not yet passed away, and the European campaign will scarcely increase the tonnage in the ports of Southern Asia. Nevertheless, the imports have increased, as compared with the returns of the previous year. The value of the merchandize imported in 1853-54 was Rs. 5,58,98,251, against Rs. 4,86,90,452 in 1852-53. This increase is owing entirely to the revival of the trade with Great Britain, which last year, partly from glutted markets, and partly from the Australian mania, sunk at once upwards of a million sterling. It has risen to the extent of Rs. 74,39,445, and now amounts to Rs. 4,50,64,721 for merchandize alone. The increase, as usual, is chiefly in Manchester goods, Sheffield ware, machinery, and drinkables. From almost all other countries,—from the United States and Singapore, from Australia and the Gulfs, the imports have declined. France, China, and Holland alone showing figures of any consequence on the other side. The imports from Pegu, it is true, have been doubled since the annexation, but the total amount is only six and a half lacs. Notwithstanding the great total increase of imports, the tonnage of the ships which conveyed them has been scarcely enlarged, and is still greatly below the statement for 1851-52.

	Vessels.	Tonnage.
1853-54	618	305,409

It is, therefore, obviously impossible to speak of our import trade as expanding; and, although many causes may be assigned to account for the stoppage, we incline to think we have for the present nearly reached the limit of demand.

The export trade has positively declined. The gross amount of exports, excluding specie, was in 1852-53 Rs. 11,18,36,891, and last year only Rs. 10,67,70,907, a decrease of Rs. 50,65,000. Of this amount, however, thirty-two lacs must be set down to the diminished price of opium. During 1853-54, the increased production did not pay. The 36,178 chests offered for sale in the previous year were purchased for Rs. 4,02,00,944, while the 40,787 chests of 1853-54 fetched only Rs. 3,69,02,087. How far this result is attributable to the increase in quantity, and how far to the disturbances in China, we leave to the decision of the Revenue Board. We may, however, remark that the disturbances are likely to diminish the quantity purchased, rather than the price offered. The export of indigo has increased by 17 lacs, of saltpetre by 6½ lacs, of rice by 14, of silk by 13½, of hides by Rs. 3,86,192, and of jute by Rs. 4,27,805. The export of all our remaining staples has declined, that of cotton having fallen by Rs. 20,77,380, sugar by 70 lacs of rupees, gunny cloth by 6 lacs, and linseed by nearly 5. In spite, therefore, of some symptoms of recovery, we cannot consider the present state of the trade of Calcutta thoroughly satisfactory.

It is worthy of notice that the total revenue raised from the commerce of Bengal is only Rs. 78,73,618 a year, or less on the average than 4½ per cent. ad valorem. Even this amount, it is proposed, and we think wisely, to decrease. The total proceeds of the export duties are only Rs. 13,25,231, and the Chamber of Commerce has pointed out that of this sum nearly eleven lacs are raised from some fourteen articles. Upwards of sixty articles remain liable to a duty, which produces in all scarcely two lacs of rupees a year. Furthermore, these duties are altogether irregular. All country produce, as a general rule, is subject to an ad valorem duty of three per cent. Cotton wool, however, is taxed at 8 annas a maund, grain at ½ an anna per bag, indigo at Rs. 3 per maund, silk at Rs. 3½ per seer, and tobacco at 4 annas per maund. Moreover, if the goods are exported in foreign bottoms, the duties are all doubled, and thus a direct bounty is extracted from the pockets of British merchants, to pay to British shipowners. Sugar carried in English bottoms is free, an exemption which can be defended only on the ground, that the competition with slave-grown sugar is so severe, that the article will not bear the duty. That argument, however, is true of every article, the production of which is not confined to specific localities. It is time that all this were swept away. Export duties are always objectionable, if only because they limit the extent of production. They can be defended only on the ground of the necessity of raising revenue, and when that necessity ceases, they ought to be abolished. If a substitute is absolutely required, it might be found among the imports. It is not, however, required, and the indirect return is absolutely certain. The greatest danger to which our land revenue is exposed, is the over-production of a single cereal, which by creating a perpetual glut in the market, renders the payment of a specie revenue a matter of yearly increasing difficulty. In Bengal, as in the Punjab, to obviate the evil we must encourage new cultivations, and to place an export duty on indigo and sugar (in foreign bottoms), on silk and tobacco, is not a very appreciable form of encouragement.—Friend of India.

The LONDON MAIL of May 24th arrived at Calcutta, on June 30th (per Bengal). The Mail of June 8th arrived at Calcutta on July 13 (per Bentinck).

THE FRENCH EXHIBITION.—A letter from Nusseerabad mentions that one of the Rajpootana princes has presented to our Government a set of jewellery valued at one lac of rupees, which he desires may be transmitted to the French Exhibition. This is liberality indeed, especially if the prince be one of those who contributed to the London Exhibition of 1851, and obtained in return for his valuable presents a copy of the Illustrated London Exhibition.—Bengal Hurkaru, July 5.

THE GAS COMPANY.—We are glad to hear that the applications for shares in the Gas Company already exceed the number allotted to Calcutta. This speaks well for the community, and shows that the spirit of enterprise which formerly characterized this metropolis has not altogether died away.

DR. O'SHAUGHNESSY.—We are authorized to state that there is no truth whatever in a report which has been circulated, to the effect that Dr. O'Shaughnessy is about to return to England. He will not quit his post until the telegraph lines and offices are in a perfectly efficient state.—Delhi Gazette, June 24.

RAJA OF PATEALA.—We have heard a rumour that the Raja of Pateala is about to visit England, but for what purpose we have as yet no information. He probably has his grievance, and, as he is a Sikh, will care little for shipboard inconveniences.—Lahore Chronicle, June 28.

THE OPIUM SALE.—The seventh opium sale of the season took place at the Exchange Rooms yesterday. The following was the result:—

	Chests.	Highest.	Lowest.	Average.	Proceeds.
Behar .....	2,855	785	780	780.7-10	2,228,300
Benares ....	1,170	815	805	810.13-8	948,700

This shows a falling-off as compared with the last sale of little less than 30 rupees per chest for Behar, and very nearly 7 rupees for Benares, and the difference as compared with the May sale gives a decrease of Rupees, fifteen for the former, twenty-one for the latter.—Hurkaru, July 5.

MR. GILLESPIE, late Quarter Master of H. M.'s 98th Regiment, arrived at the Presidency yesterday, July 6, under Military escort, and was made over to the Civil power, and lodged in the Great Jail, pending his being sent to a penal settlement to undergo his sentence of transportation.

REV. A. MORGAN.—It would seem that in these days of alliances, the bonds between the communities of Madras and Calcutta are becoming more firmly drawn. We have a recent evidence of this in the visit of the Rev. A. Morgan, of the Parental Academic Institution, and in the results which it has called forth to the people there, in the establishment of a similar seminary, and to himself, in enlarging his sphere of observation, and increasing his zeal in the cause of education. It has further resulted in the sensible manifestation of gratitude on their part by sending to him, what there was not time to bestow in his presence, an elegant silver vase, with an appropriate inscription. The workmanship does credit to that city which has of late in our own circles gained no little reputation from its School of Industrial Art. Its design is no less elegant than appropriate. In the form of the old Greek urn-vases, it is seen supported by a succession of leaves in frosted silver, which fall over it and contrast well with the rest of the vase. Surmounting the usual handles at the side, and forming part of them are two boys with opened volume before them, pointing symbolically, we presume, to the parent and infant institutions. The whole is completed by an elegant cover, which with a flower of frosted silver for its handle sets off a perfect gem of Art, equally by few things of the same nature which we have seen in Calcutta. Its inscription is as follows:—"Presented by the Committee of the Madras Parental Academic Institution and Doveton College, to the Rev. Andrew Morgan, Principal of the Calcutta Parental Academic Institution and Doveton College, on the occasion of his visit to Madras as a token of their esteem and regard, 16th May, 1854." We need not further notice this, as we believe it is the intention of the Madras Committee to record the matter in the Illustrated London News, where with an engraving of the vase, our readers will probably see it in due time.—Hurkaru, July 5.

ABSDUR PRACTICE OF CONFIRMATION.—The Governor-General has determined upon doing away with the absurd practice of rendering it incumbent upon officers issuing station orders to send the same up for confirmation to the Commander-in-Chief. The practice was not calculated to protect the interests of the State in any way, because if such orders were based upon the regulations prescribed by the Pay Code, the Commander-in-Chief had not the power of withholding confirmation; whereas, on the other hand, an order once confirmed by His Excellency could no more be withheld audit, even if the expense it involved was directly opposed to the rules of the Pay and Audit Code. On the whole, we are inclined to think that the practice has done more harm than good, because it is hardly to be expected that the Commander-in-Chief's staff is so competent to exercise a check upon station orders as an office of audit. The Governor-General has therefore caused intimation to be sent to the Adjutant-General of the Army, that henceforth His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will no longer be troubled with these sort of confirmations, and that the bills for expenditure incurred under such orders are to be submitted through the usual channels of Audit. The Military Auditor-General and the Auditor of Commissariat Accounts will receive instructions accordingly.

THE CORPS OF ENGINEERS.—The Morning Chronicle reviews the report that an augmentation is to be made to the corps of Engineers, and asserts that the orders for a fifth Battalion will appear almost immediately. Our contemporary, who is usually correct in military matters, commits a strange oversight with regard to the promotion which this augmentation will cause. Instead of only advancing the senior of each grade to the next superior grade, it will promote 1 Lieutenant Colonel, 2 Majors, 3 Captains, 9 1st Lieutenants and 19 2nd Lieutenants. Who these will be it is needless for us to particularise, as doubtless all those interested in the matter have an Army List to which to refer. The increase of the Engineers is required as a measure of state convenience, and it will serve to save the officers of the corps from supersession by those of other branches of the service, and which would have arisen from the unjust system which has long prevailed of having many supernumerary 2nd Lieutenants in India, and unposted Cadets in addition at Chatham. These will all be absorbed by the intended augmentation, and we hope that henceforward the Company's Engineer Officers will receive their proper rank, and be posted to the corps as soon as they leave Addiscombe. It is an anomaly to allow them to count the time spent at Chatham as service, and not to place their names on the roster of the corps until they come to India. By this increase all the Cadets of 1841 with two exceptions will be promoted to Companies, while the 2nd Lieutenants down to W. S. Trevor, the last Cadet of 1849, will be advanced to the superior grade.

Mr. DUNBAR, member of the Sudder Board of Revenue, is said to be going to sea for a change of air.

A MILITARY ROAD from Martaban to Tounghoo is to be constructed.

Mr. RITCHIE is to act as Advocate-General during the absence of Mr. Prinsep, who is about to proceed to the Straits on the Rajah Brooke investigation.

THE ESTATE OF THE LATE SIR T. TURTON.—The Official Assignee has just declared a dividend of 5 per cent. upon the estate of Sir Thomas, his life is also said to have been very largely insured.

Mrs. BLUETT came before the Insolvent Court, on Saturday July 1, and was opposed on behalf of Captain Rogers for the damages in the late action for libel. The Commissioners sentenced Mrs. B. to twelve months' imprisonment, from which term are to be deducted the two months she has already been in jail.

THE "CAUTLEY MEDAL."—Lieutenant-Colonel Cautley, late visitor of the Thomason College, having assigned funds for permanent grant of an annual medal in that institution, for proficiency in mathematical study, as applied to practical engineering, the Honorable the Lieutenant-Governor is pleased to direct that the medal in question shall be termed the "Cautley Medal."

THIRD EUROPEAN REGIMENT.—The Third European Regiment is in luck's way. We hear that two officers of the corps contemplate retiring in the course of the next few months, which, with a third already indicated in general orders, will give three vacancies. Two of the officers alluded to are captains, and the third a lieutenant.—Bengal Hurkaru, July 5.

REVISION ON THE INVALID ESTABLISHMENT.—The long threatened revision of the Invalid Establishment is about to take place. A minute inquiry is at once to be instituted, regarding the health of all invalid officers, with a view of rendering their services available for local and other duties. The inquiry will be prosecuted by special medical committees at each station. Officers commanding the stations in which invalid officers reside are also to report on their talents, characters, habits, and everything that relates to their fitness for employment. There are about a hundred officers in all on the Invalid Establishment, and it is not improbable that at least twenty or thirty of these will be found capable of discharging many duties which now keep efficient officers away from their regiments. It is certain that when invalid officers can manage banks and edit newspapers, there is no reason why their services should be entirely lost to the state.—Delhi Gazette, July 1.

CIVIL CHANGES.—Mr. J. H. Patton will, it is said, go into the Sudder in the room of Mr. George Plowden, and be succeeded as additional judge of the 24-Pergunnahs by Mr. James, of Burdwan. Mr. John Torrens is nominated to succeed Mr. Elliott as commissioner of Burdwan, but it is not known whether he will accept the office.

LIEUT. PENSON, OF THE 3RD EUROPEAN REGT., is not to be allowed to resign the service. He is, we regret to hear, under arrest at Chinsurah, and will be tried next week upon four charges for intoxication and violent conduct.—Hurkaru.

CAPT. F. E. VOYLE, deputy-commissioner of Khangurh, Leia, says the sugar cultivation is the most profitable in that district. The ordinary produce is fourteen maunds of goor per beega, and the ordinary price is Rs. 2-8 per maund. Is this the standard beega? No native cultivation, we imagine, in Bengal, produces anything approximating to this result. It is equal to 104 an acre, or nearly the outturn from the rich clays of Essex.

COL. RAINIER.—The Mofussilite says:—"We have heard that Col. Rainier, of the 98th regiment, is ordered to retire by the Horse Guards. Not many months ago Col. Roberts, of the same corps, was offered the option of retiring or standing a court-martial. He went home, and is said to have been gazetted out. Col. Rainier's supposed fault is, not having reported the extraordinary manner in which the duties of the corps were conducted under the conduct of Col. Roberts, and certain gross irregularities which were charged against that officer. If this really be the cause assigned, it would seem that a rule is laid down that the second colonel of a regiment, who has always been looked upon as the fifth wheel of a coach, is now to enjoy the honourable post of spy on his immediate commanding officer. In the present case, to be sure, the conduct of Col. Roberts was exceptional as well as exceptionable, being, we believe, so flagrant, that any officer who was worth his salt, much less his pay, was bound to report it. Nevertheless, the precedent cannot be particularly agreeable to second colonels. A question naturally arises out of these proceedings, apart from that of Col. Rainier's responsibility. How was it that Col. Roberts was privileged so far beyond other officers similarly circumstanced, in being allowed the option of retiring? This is one of the pleasing mysteries of military law.—Englishman.

SIR LAWRENCE PEEL.—The Citizen states that Sir Lawrence Peel has fixed upon April 1855 as the period at which he will finally quit India. The statement is, we believe, correct, but we fear the health of the Chief Justice will scarcely permit him to keep his resolution.—Friend of India.

ARMING THE STEAMERS.—The Hurkaru understands that orders are out for arming the Sesostris and Tenasserim at once. Each will be provided with one sixty-four and two thirty-two pounders, and the Fire Queen also will receive a smaller armament. Are these guns to be worked by lascars, or, if not, where are the Europeans to be obtained?

WRECKS BETWEEN RANGOON AND BALASORE.—Between 1st May, 1853, and 1st April, 1854, twenty-nine vessels were lost on the coast between Rangoon and Balasore. This list is exclusive of country vessels.

THE LATE MUTTY LOLL SEAL.—There is an extraordinary and absurd story about the late Mutty Loll Seal current in the bazaar, which it appears is extensively believed in by the lower and more ignorant classes of the natives. It is said that the great millionaire is not really dead, but that he has made away with himself with the object of avoiding the consequences of a suit which has been given against him by the Privy Council, by whose decision he has made himself liable to transportation.

AN ELOPEMENT.—Letters received from Rawul Pindee give an amusing account of the elopement of the lady of a field-officer at that station with a gallant captain; a party of sowars was sent in pursuit of the runaway couple, overtook them, and brought them back in custody.

MR. W. C. BROWN AND THE "MOFUSSILITE."—In April, 1853, a correspondent of the Mofussilite attacked a Mr. W. C. Brown, who had published a prospectus of a bullock train from Calcutta to Lahore. He mentioned certain facts, which induced him to consider the undertaking something "very like a swindle." Mr. Brown brought a civil action for libel. The Mofussilite refused to give up his correspondent, and pleaded justification. The Agra Civil Court held that there was no proof of malus animus, and that the statement was not wilfully exaggerated. Verdict accordingly for defendant. Plaintiff to pay all costs.

Lines of Electric Telegraph from Agra to Mupoorie and Nynce Tal are to be immediately commenced.

THE CLERK TO THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL is to have an official residence and establishment in Chowringhee.

THE INVALIDS stationed at Chunar are to be removed to a new station in the neighbourhood of Nynce Tal, Chunar being the hottest station in Upper India.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENTS IN ASSAM.—Major S. F. Hanney, stationed at Luckimpore, in Assam, has forwarded to the Board of Revenue an account of the result of certain agricultural experiments. Tea flourishes as well as in other districts. The Cotton comes up freely, and the sea-island species appear adapted to the climate. A large quantity of Otaheitan sugar cane has been distributed among the peasantry, and appears likely to succeed. The report was forwarded to Government, and in reply the Under Secretary says, "I am to convey to you the Lieutenant-Governor's acknowledgments for the pains you have taken to develop and make known the productive capabilities of the soil of that part of Assam, and his assurance that any reasonable assistance on the part of Government, that may be requisite for the prosecution of experiments of this nature, will be readily afforded." The facts are only valuable as showing the disposition of the authorities to attend to everything.

MEERUT.—The following is an extract from a letter from Meerut, dated the 26th ultimo:—"Our folks here are exceedingly busy with drawing up lists of articles for the Paris Exhibition. It appears that on the former occasion hardly anything was sent from this, owing to a want of energy on the part of those who were entrusted with the management of affairs. Our present commissioner is, however, bent upon making a good and interesting collection, and certainly it will not be his fault if the division of Meerut is not properly represented. I hear that among other things the commissioner is in treaty with Capt. Thomas Hutton, of the Invalids, for his very valuable collection of geological specimens, which I am told is the only private one of the kind in India. You will recollect that Capt. Hutton some years ago undertook to travel through the various districts over which the Himalaya mountains extend, and that he was considerably assisted by the Asiatic Society in the undertaking. Whether the collection he is now about to sell is the original one made by him during his travels, or whether it consists of specimens since collected, I am unable to say; but whatever it may be, you may rely on it that anything got up by a man of Capt. Hutton's scientific acquirements will be no disgrace to the French Exhibition. There is hardly any other news worth communicating from hence."—Hurkaru.

PETITIONS.—The following order issued by the Sudder Board of Revenue is succinct and satisfactory:—"No petition or application of any sort shall be received which is not written so as to be readable by any person acquainted with the character. It may occupy the writer an additional five minutes of his time, for which the public do not pay; the time of many public officers will be saved, for which the public do pay."

DOST MAHOMMED'S GRATITUDE.—The Delhi Gazette informs us, that Dost Mahommed has addressed to the editor of that journal a letter strongly expressive of his gratitude for a defence of his character against a false accusation. The Dost, it will be remembered, was accused by a frightened political officer of having instigated the assassination of Col. Mackeson. The Delhi Gazette pointed out how inconsistent was such a charge with all that is known of the ruler of Cabul. Hence the gratitude of the Ameer, which, if it proves nothing else, indicates his sensitiveness to English opinion.

A FIFTH BATTALION has been added to the European corps at each presidency.

PILOTS ON THE HOOGLY.—The Hurkaru states, that some time since an offer was made to the public to allow any one to practise as a Pilot, who would pass the necessary examination. Moreover, he was to be allowed the use of the government pilot brigs. The offer has never been accepted, but the fact is a curious illustration of the truth of some of the charges brought against the government. Long after it was published, correspondents of the newspapers continued to talk of the close monopoly of the Hooghly. As our contemporary justly observes, the great want of the trade of Calcutta is an efficient Steam Tug Company, with strength enough to dare to "make bargains," without asking the permission of Calcutta houses.

THE FOUR PER CENTS. are drooping, and stand at present at four per cent. discount. The English holders are tempted by the war price of money at home, and have ordered their agents to realize. We fancy the exportation of specie to India, which has continued for the last three years, is at length at an end. The tide is turning the other way, and if the war continues, the shareholders in the Bank of Bengal may obtain a respectable dividend.

MILITARY ON DITS.—RETIREMENTS.—The Hurkaru understands that two officers of the Commissariat Department contemplate shortly to retire from the service. This will open promotion in the Department itself, as well as in the regiments to which they belong.—It is believed that the Honorable Captain Byng will be succeeded in the Command of the Sebundy Sappers and Miners at Darjeeling, by Lieutenant C. Murray, of the 70th N.I., who was removed from an appointment in an Irregular Cavalry Corps some years back, because his nomination to it by Sir Charles Napier had been a glaring infringement of the Standing Orders which limited the number of Staff employees to be taken from each Regiment to six.—Lieut.-Col. Abbott, c.b., at present Principal Commissary of Ordnance, is to be at the head of the department for the purpose of discharging the duties hitherto performed by the Military Board. He is to have his Head-Quarters at Meerut, and to be to a certain extent under the control of the Brigadier Commandant of Artillery.—The Master of the Ordnance is to have either Captain Dickens or Major Robertson, or perhaps both as Assistants.—First Lieutenant Delane, of the Horse Artillery, succeeds to the Adjutancy of the 1st Battalion of Artillery, vacated by the recent promotion of Lieutenant Wintle.—It is confidently stated that the order for removal from the Army of all officers above sixty years will be out shortly, and be put into effect from the 1st of January next.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

50th do. from Madras to Secunderabad.
51st do. from Vellore to Trichinopoly.
52nd do. from Cuddapah to Secunderabad.

COURT MARTIAL.

LIEUT. JAMES TURNER HARRIS, 17th N.I.

Head Quarters, Simla, June 15, 1854.—At a general court-martial assembled at Delhi, on Thursday, May 11, 1854, Lieut. J. T. Harris, 17th N.I. was tried on the following charge: viz.

For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances:

1st. In having, at Calcutta, on or about May 10, 1853, in part liquidation of a debt due by him to Jugdees Roy, muhajun of Delhi, drawn, and caused to be delivered to the said Jugdees Roy, a bill of exchange for Rs. 370, dated May 10, 1853, addressed to the secretary of the Agra Bank, Calcutta, and made payable to the said Jugdees Roy, or to his order, on June 1, 1853; he, Lieut. Harris, at the time of the drawing and delivery of that bill of exchange, having had no funds in the said bank, nor any authority to draw thereon for money; and which said bill of exchange not having been honoured, the whole amount of his debt to Jugdees Roy still remains due to him.

2nd. In having, at Calcutta, on or about May 29, 1853, in liquidation of the debt due by him to Jugdees Roy, muhajun of Delhi, drawn, and caused to be delivered to the said Jugdees Roy, a bill for exchange of Rs. 510, dated May 29, 1853, addressed to the secretary of the Agra Bank, Agra, and made payable to the said Jugdees Roy, or to his order, on June 15, 1853; he, Lieut. Harris, at the time of the drawing and delivery of that bill of exchange, having had no funds in the Agra branch of the said bank, nor any authority to draw thereon for money; and which said bill of exchange not having been honoured, the amount thereof still remains due to the said Jugdees Roy.

Finding.—Guilty.

Sentence.—To be severely reprimanded, and in addition to lose 3 steps (three steps) in the list of lieutenants of his regiment.

Revised Sentence.—The Court beg respectfully to adhere to their original sentence.

Confirmed.

(Signed) W. M. GOWM, General,
Commander-in-Chief, East Indies.

Head-Quarters, Simla, June 10, 1854.

Remarks by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—The Commander-in-Chief has confirmed the sentence passed by the Court, but it is one which his Excellency cannot approve, considering it to be altogether inadequate to the serious offences of which Lieut. Harris has been justly convicted.

In awarding this sentence, the Court have declared to the army their deliberate opinion that it is a comparatively venial offence in one of their body to draw bills of exchange upon a bank in which he has no funds, and to allow these bills to remain unpaid. His Excellency entirely differs from the Court; and in publishing these proceedings, wishes to remind the army that the honour of the service to which they belong is mainly in their own keeping. Such discreditable proceedings as those in which Lieutenant Harris is proved to have been engaged are happily of rare occurrence amongst officers; but when charges of this complexion are proved to the satisfaction of a court-martial, the interests of the army would be best consulted, in his Excellency's opinion, by visiting on the offender a more marked and decided punishment than has been awarded in the present case.

These remarks are to be read to Lieutenant Harris by the officer commanding at Delhi, in the presence of all the officers at the station assembled for the purpose. Lieutenant Harris is then to be released from arrest, and directed to return to his duty; his name is to be transposed in the list of lieutenants of the 17th regiment of native infantry, and it will stand in future next below that of Lieut. Horace Brimfield.

MADRAS.

THE MADRAS MEETING.

ON Friday, the 26th May, there was a great meeting at Madras. A knot of Europeans at that presidency, dissatisfied with the result of the spasm year 1853, have resolved to revive the agitation which, since the passing of the new Act, has gradually decreased. As a preliminary, they have reorganized the Madras Reform Association. The meeting was thinly attended, though Europeans in the East usually enjoy the few opportunities they possess of public speaking, and natives are gratified by condolences on their deprivation of political authority. In the present instance, as in almost all others, the movement derived what little vitality it possessed exclusively from the Europeans. It was got up by Europeans; it was supported by Europeans; with one exception, all the speakers were Europeans. The exception was Vencataroyaloo Naidoo, the individual, we presume, who in 1849 made himself notorious by a libel action against the Madras Government. Even he, however, the solitary representative of the native community, complained bitterly that, in a meeting for the benefit of the natives, he was not permitted to say his say at full length. For the rest, the speeches were remarkable for their moderation, their statistics, and their density. Indian patriotism, when it is not violent, is always dull,—and the Madras speeches were not violent. The speakers talked of English ignorance, quoted Joe Millers about riding from Bombay to Calcutta, descanted on the ryotwarree, read extracts from Col. Cotton's book, and lamented the absence of popular control over the executive. Mr. Norton, it is true, broke from trammels which, in Madras at least, have become conventional. Rising with his subject, he declared, in a burst of oratory worthy of an American or of Mr. Murrough, that his book "had come athwart the darkness of the nation with the suddenness of a flash of lightning." Omne ignotum pro magnifico is a maxim in which Mr. Norton obviously has faith. Mr. Mead also ventured a novel statement:—

"He defied Lord Dalhousie to oppose the demands of the Madras peasant for a reduction of assessment, because in fixing the taxation of Pegu, he had decreed that the best soils in that fertile land, where the rain never failed and irrigation by artificial means was unknown, should only pay two rupees an acre, whilst in this presidency it was as high as thirty and even forty rupees."

We do not question Mr. Mead's veracity, but his information is too startling to claim our implicit credence. There is probably not an acre of land, even under the careless assessment of Bengal, which is assessed at more than five rupees. Does Mr. Mead mean to assert that there is land in the southern presidency, not under garden cultivation, which can pay eight times as much? If so, the complaints as to the weight of the average assessment, which we have hitherto admitted to be just, must be totally unfounded. Lastly, Mr. Ouchterlony repeated, for the five thousandth time, the charge that the British Government has destroyed the ancient families. We weary of an accusation which is repeated at every patriotic meeting, and which, though literally true, is substantially false. The British rule has destroyed the ancient zemindar families, and the fact is one of its highest recommendations. These old families, with one or two exceptions, added to all the vices of Orientals all the foibles of the ancient race of Irish landlords. They lived on in a rough, spendthrift style, fatal to all improvement. When prosperous, they were immersed in coarse luxury. When ruined, they first rack-rented their tenantry, and then sought to re-establish their fortunes by bribing an official, courting the Nawab, or intriguing with the bankers. The Encumbered Estates Act rid Ireland of its "old Milesian gentry." The Sale Law, a perpetual Encumbered Estates Act, rid Bengal of its "ancient zemindars." They may be regretted by the antiquary and the genealogist, but the statesman can regard them only as an abolished nuisance. Unpunctual, careless, freehanded, and oppressive, their existence was incompatible with that of a Government, in which routine and method are the first of merits.

The resolutions were as unpractical as the speeches. They expressed the desire of the meeting for changes in the tenure of land, in the means adopted for public improvement, and in the system of State education. And for these ends, they proposed to re-open the parliamentary committee-rooms. This is, in fact, a prayer for further parliamentary interference, and it is for this, and this only, that we condemn the European agitators of Madras. Taken by itself, their movement might be as beneficial as it is disinterested. If they can overcome the prejudices produced by race, by creed, and by the settled habits of centuries, and really create a bond between natives and Europeans, they will have performed an undertaking worthy of all praise. The authorities of the Punjab have done much in this direction. If they can collect information which shall lead to an amelioration of the evils all allow to exist, they will have rendered to the cause of progress an important aid. If they can create such a pressure from without, as shall break down the red-tape barriers which surround all Governments of routine, they will also have effected a great work. But all these advantages will be dearly purchased at the price of parliamentary interference. Of all bodies in the world, the House of Commons is the most incompetent to govern a distant possession. It has ruined the West-Indian colonies. It was stayed from ruining Canada only by a rebellion. It would have allowed Earl Grey to ruin Australia, but that the colonists assumed the attitude which, among Englishmen, portends an armed resistance. In its utter incompetency, it has at last abnegated its functions, suffered Jamaica to become an English Haiti, and the Anglo-Saxon colonies to govern themselves. In India, from the day it sanctioned that imperial job, the Tanjore Commission, to the day when it grew maudlin over Sir John Pakington's romances about worms, it has never interfered, except for mischief. As a municipal council for the management of English domestic affairs, the House of Commons may be perfect. As the imperial authority, it is successful only when it is quiescent, or so excited as to submit to the dictatorship of a Premier.

If the philanthropists of Madras are sincere, the path of energetic action, and consequent progress, lies open before them. Let them put aside for six months their absurd jealousy of the Central Government. Let them abandon their perpetual reference to England, and lay their facts and their opinions before the Government of India. They will find themselves treated not only with courtesy but with attention. They desire to remove the lethargy which for five years has oppressed Madras. The bitterest Radical has no more humiliating consciousness of that lethargy than Lord Dalhousie. They desire the spread of education. The Supreme Government is sanctioning schemes so broad, that they may yet produce active antagonism at home. They desire to reform the ryotwarree. The bias of the central authority is in favour of long tenures, and associated proprietorship. They ask for public improvements. The Governor-General believes in Major Cotton and the navigation of the Godavery. Backed by his recommendation, their facts and plans must be accepted and obeyed at home, and the association will have effectual reform instead of talk and subscriptions.—Friend of India.

TRANQUEBAR—OPENING OF THE NEW CANAL.

AGREEABLY to notice, the public attended on the Queen's birthday to witness the ceremony of opening the new canal. A large tent was pitched near the canal, and the tent, together with the two new bridges which have been erected over the canal, were decorated with flags. The assistant collector (Mr. Innes) addressed those present in a speech of some length, from which we quote the following passage:—

"To vindicate the Government (said Mr. Innes) more fully from the charge of neglect of the interests committed to their charge, I need only point to a few of the works, either completed or in progress from time to time undertaken by it: the Ganges Canal, the anicut across the Godavery, two works such as no other country can show, either for the vast scale of the undertakings, or the immense advantages to be derived from them. There are also the upper anicut across the head of the Coleroon, the magnificent bridges across the Cauvery and Coleroon at Trichinopoly, the Western Ghaut roads, the encouragement given to railroads, the electric telegraph, whereby parties, however distant, can communicate with the rapidity of lightning. And nearer home may be mentioned the bridge about to be built over the Coleroon, near its mouth, at a cost of Rs. 1,50,000. In this province alone upwards of 4 lacs of rupees have been spent in the course of the season, in road-making, bridging, canal-cutting, and in draining swamps. The difficulties of some of these undertakings may be estimated by my telling you that in one road of twenty miles now in the course of construction, ten bridges have had to be built over rivers more or less broad. To turn to education, a school is being established at Combaconum, and the attention of Government appears now more earnestly directed to this subject, and to be free from that hesitation which has hitherto opposed its spread. I will now recur to the canal, portions of which it is proposed to open this day to the extent of four miles; ten miles more will be completed in two months, which will be connected with the canal in progress in the South Arcot district, when fifty miles will exist of unbroken navigation: this will subsequently be continued to Madras. The advantages to this port are immense; but the liberality of the Government must be well seconded by the energy and industry of the people."

Mr. Innes, in concluding, paid a tribute to the energy and activity of the engineer's department which has carried out this work, and to the liberal object Government has had in view in the execution of it.

The Rev. Mr. Taylor, chaplain, read an appropriate prayer, and the usual prayer for her Majesty and the Royal family. Afterwards the company proceeded to the place where the opening of the canal was to be made. As soon as the water flowed into the canal, a royal salute was fired. The Rev. Mr. Taylor, Major Lawford, C.E. and Mr. Innes, assistant collector, proceeded a few hundred yards up the new canal on a boat. About 5,000 natives were assembled on the occasion, and appeared to take great interest in it. The ladies and gentlemen returned to the tent, where health to the Queen was proposed by the Rev. Mr. Taylor, and was received with demonstrations of loyalty. The National Anthem was then sung by all present. The health of Major Lawford was proposed and drunk with applause. The ceremony was closed by a great display of fireworks.

COMMUNICATION BETWEEN MADRAS AND BURMAH.

A few days since we pointed out to the public the importance of a line of communication between Madras and Burmah, and promised them some statistics to show the safety of the undertaking.

The following statement of the troops and others belonging to the Madras Army at present permanently stationed beyond seas, shows a grand total including all grades of 18,696 persons.

	Commissioned Officers.	Warrant and Staff Non-Commissioned Officers and Clerks.	Troops.		Public Followers.	Private Followers.	Total.
			European.	Native.

Aden .....	35	5	93	1150	120	191	1594
Grand Total .....							18696

These troops have to be relieved after three years' service. Setting aside the numbers to be conveyed outward to fill up vacancies and those returning sick, if one-third is taken for each year's relief, a close approximation will be gained of the annual expense of transport by sailing vessels, to arrive at which an average of the cost of employing ships for this purpose since 1845 to the present time has been struck. The annexed table exhibits the result.

The following is the probable annual expense of the transport service without the aid of the steamers. Not including the occasional drafts to fill up vacancies and the sick returning.

or annually, Company's rupees . . 4,48,919 11 3

Two steamers of about 800 tons would effect all these reliefs with regularity and despatch, during that portion of the year when movements by sea can be made without difficulty or more than ordinary discomfort. In the south-west monsoons the weather in the Bay of Bengal is too severe to admit of the reliefs taking place at that time. A boisterous sea and continual rain render the position of the soldier on board ship most disagreeable, and the wear and tear of both vessels and engines are such as to make it inexpedient, except under pressing circumstances, to send a steamer even across the Bay from Madras. The objection is of course stronger to her return when wind and sea are against her.

The annual working expenses of the Hugh Lindsay, excluding the cost of coals, are about 40,000 rupees. The corresponding cost of a vessel of 800 tons may be set down at about 55,000 rupees. The probable annual expense of two steamers would therefore be as follows:—

Working expenses of two 800 ton steamers at 55,000 rupees each . . . . .	1,10,000	0 0
200 tons of coal at 25 rupees per ton. This allows for steam being up 15 days each month at 20 tons a day for each steamer, calculated to perform annually between 30,000 and 35,000 miles of steaming at 8 miles an hour . . . . .	1,80,000	0 0
Expense of sailing vessels for effecting reliefs as before calculated . . . . .	4,48,919	11 3
Saving on conveyance of treasure . . . . .	28,564	0 0
Saving on conveyance of stores Not calculated Do. on occasional passages Do. on private passage and freight . . . . .	Do.	Do.

Amount of annual saving by the establishment of the two steamers . . . . . 1,87,483 11 3

In a report from the Government of Bombay on the expense of keeping up the steamers between that Presidency and Suez, published by order of Parliament, 10 per cent. is set down as the estimated expense of repairs. Supposing then, that 30,000l. be taken as the first cost of each steamer, and this is ample to cover all outlay for hull, engines, and fittings, we have an estimated item of 60,000 rupees annually for repairs, which would still leave 1½ lac saved each year. The steamers would, therefore, pay for themselves in five years from the profits of Government traffic alone.

In our next we will endeavour to show the extent of private trade on the present average, and shall be deeply disappointed if the combined results do not lead the Madras public to instant action.—Athenæum, July 15.

FORT ST. GEORGE.—Experiments have been made to test the stability of the sea-wall of Fort St. George. The heavy guns on the ramparts have been fired for two hours with blank and shotted cartridges.

DRAINAGE.—The Madras Spectator announces that the local government has sanctioned the construction of new lines of drainage, and channels of irrigation in the districts of Masulipatam and Rajahmundry. The expense is estimated at Rs. 2,70,000. Five hundred miles of road have also been authorized in the district of Bellary. The primary object of the latter measure is to employ the population, whom the recent drought has exposed to the risk of famine.

MR. BRUNTON, deputy superintendent of the electric telegraph at Madras, has been sent to lay down an electric telegraph in the Tenasserim and Martaban provinces.

THE BANK OF MADRAS.—A correspondent of the Madras Athenæum relates the following extraordinary story:—"Allow me to bring to notice, for, I think, the public benefit, I came here to open business last March. On looking over the loan terms of the Bank of Madras, I observed, 'Loans on Cash Credits on do.' (Government Securities), 'on amount drawn.' I withdrew a promissory note from the Government agents, indorsed it over to the Bank of Madras, with a request that a cash credit account might be opened to the extent of its value, when I was informed, under date 10th April, 1854:—"In reply, I beg to acquaint you that the bank does not grant cash credit accounts to non-resident parties." This not being notified in the bank's terms, put me to de'ar, expense, and disappointment." That is, a St. Pancras pawnbroker will not take pledges from a Spitalfields operative!

MORE TROOPS FOR SINGAPORE.—The Madras United Service Gazette states, on the authority of letters from Col. Butterworth, that an urgent requisition has been addressed to the Supreme Government for another regiment of sepoys for Singapore. The governor of Singapore, apparently, has accepted the recent riots as a warning, and is resolved to be prepared for a new outbreak.

MISSIONARY DISPENSARY.—The Bangalore Herald publishes an interesting account of a missionary dispensary. It was opened in March, 1853, in Neyoor (Travancore), by the Rev. C. C. Leitch. In a single year no fewer than 5,318 cases were attended, of whom one-fourth were females. So highly is the medical skill of Europeans appreciated, that caste gives way. Brahmins submit to the attendance of Pariahs, and even their wives sit quietly in the waiting-room amidst all kinds of sick persons. The benefit conferred is said to be inestimable. Mr. Leitch has found in the course of his medical experience many Nairs, who need but a little courage to profess Christianity.

BANGALORE.—It appears that grain is exported from the Mysore to the Cuddapa and Bellary districts to such an extent as to make it difficult to get carts for ordinary purposes. With the prospect of another deficient monsoon, and consequent scanty harvest before us, we might feel somewhat inclined to grumble at this drain on our stores, were we not assured on good authority that Mysore has in its underground granaries raggy enough to provision its people for three years. So we can afford to be generous, and have another boast to add to our good roads and cheap government, abundance of food.—Bangalore Herald, July 4.

A RUSSIAN PRIZE.—We take the following from the Madras Spectator:—"Great excitement was caused last evening, and to an extraordinary degree amongst the native community, by the account that a Russian vessel was entering the roads. The opportune presence of the steamer Bengal enabled her being promptly taken possession of, when she proved to be the Idealeit, Capt. Hanston, belonging to Russian Finland, and bringing a cargo of coals from Hartlepool, which she left in February. The crew, a fine sturdy set of men, were greatly taken aback at the unlooked for termination of their voyage; but we imagine that they are exempt from seizure and detention, under the Privy Council Order of the 7th April, which provided that any Russian vessel leaving a foreign port for any port or place in the British Indian territories prior to the 29th of March last past, should be privileged to enter such port, discharge her cargo, and forthwith depart 'without molestation.'"

RECRUITS for the Hon. Company's service, 100 for the artillery and 164 for the infantry, under the command of Lieut. M. Meyer, of the 11th regt. N.I. arrived from England on Sunday last, on board the ship Roxburgh Castle. The artillery were marched to the Mount, and the infantry to Poonamallee yesterday evening.—Athenæum, July 4.

MALABAR, 15th June, 1854.—Since my last we have had many falls of rain, and the weather is, on the whole, monsoonish. With all this rain, the heat has not yet comparatively abated, the thermometer still verging on 80 deg. to 85 deg. The Abkarry farm of Malabar has been put up and knocked down for 21,000 rupees per annum to a Nair for three years. Our post-master, Mr. West, has obtained leave of absence to the Neilgherry Hills for six months, and during his absence the public staff officer will officiate. A treasure party of the 27th regiment N.I. left Mangalore for Bellary with nine lacs of rupees, I hear; and that this money is to be appropriated to the execution of public works in the latter district. Cholera is still lurking in the interior, and the Manantoddy moon-siff has fallen a victim to it. From the particular locality, it would be advisable if an East Indian or European could now be selected to fill that post; for there are so many European planters and other settlers who frequently resort thither with suits, &c. Perfect honesty and respectability are what should be mostly kept in view in such a selection.—Madras Spectator, June 26.

AN ENGLISH SCHOOL IN MYSORE.—By a letter from the Rev. E. J. Hardey, of Mysore, to the editor of the Spectator, it appears that Rs. 1,647 have been subscribed and actually paid by the natives of the city of Mysore towards the establishment of an English school in that place. The amount would not strike us as at all extraordinary, had it been given by some one wealthy individual. A week or two ago a Bombay millionaire, Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeeboy, offered the local government a lac of rupees for a school of industry. We are not at all surprised, though exceedingly glad, that here and there some merchant prince should signalize his name by an act of munificent charity. India is just the place for anything of that sort. It is thick with temples, tanks, chuttrums for weary travellers, and colleges for lazy priests, built chiefly at individual expense. Big sums from big people we can understand pretty well. Small subscriptions from several, as in the case in hand, however, we venture to say, is something rare and noteworthy. It indicates a movement among the people, and not an isolated philanthropy. Another point of interest is the fact that the whole of the money has been placed in the hands of a missionary, with the full understanding that the school is to be established under his superintendence, and that the Bible is not to be excluded. Pretty well for a provincial town. Calcutta knows more about Addison, without question, and Madras is not wholly ignorant of Shakespeare; we dare say, too, they can both of them produce specimens of young India in stockings; but we greatly doubt whether they can beat Mysore in point of real liberality.—Madras Paper.

BOMBAY.

The LONDON MAIL of June 8th arrived at Bombay, July 4th, (per Ajdaha).

ANOTHER COURT MARTIAL, 15TH N. I.—A sixth Court Martial has arisen at Bombay out of the recent trial of Col. Gidley. The accused in this instance is Lieut. Fraser, of the 15th Bombay N. I., who is charged with an offensive remark made at the funeral of the late Dr. Elliot, and with perjury.

ARAB HORSES.—The Bombay Telegraph and Courier states, that the Arab horses presented by the Imam of Muscat to Lord Elphinstone are to be put up to auction. It is high time this rule should be somewhat relaxed. The immediate sale of these presents is not now indispensable to the reputation of officers of Government, and is a grave discourtesy to the princes who offer them. The Imam of Muscat is no subject of the Company.

SIR JAMSETJEE JEEJEEBHAY'S INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.—Some time since, Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy offered to devote a lakh of Rupees to an Industrial School, provided the Government would furnish materials and superintendence. The offer was referred to England, and has been accepted by the Court of Directors. A commencement is to be made immediately.

CAPTAIN JAMES RENNIE.—We have much pleasure in mentioning that the services of Captain James Rennie, of the Indian Navy, in the war with Burmah, have not been overlooked by the Court of Directors. They have, we hear, sent him a complimentary letter, referring to a despatch from the Governor-General in Council, respecting the services rendered by him during the recent war in Burmah, and intimating that the Court had resolved to present him with a sword of two hundred guineas' value, with appropriate inscription, in testimony of their appreciation of those services. This is as it should be. The jealousy of the Royal services, or rather of the Horse Guards and Admiralty, causes at all times a very parsimonious distribution to Indian officers of those honours which emanate from the ministry. It is the more incumbent on the Court of Directors, so long as they are permitted to exist, to show that they appreciate the merits of those in their service who have neither aristocratic nor borough interest to procure for them any notice from the ministry.—Englishman, July 5.

THE INDIAN IRON AND STEEL COMPANY.—A short paragraph among our extracts from the Bombay papers, given last Monday, intimated that the Indian Iron and Steel Company had put forth at home an answer to the damaging pamphlet published out here some months back, and that copies of their rejoinder had reached this country. We are glad to hear it, since their silence under such grave imputations as the writer in question brought forward, would have been suspicious. It is understood that the defence proceeds from those parties who were connected with the original Porto Novo Iron Works, and whose data, of course, afforded a basis to the new association. We have not seen their rejoinder yet, but heartily hope that it will prove satisfactory, both on their own account, and because we should rejoice to see the Iron and Steel Company successful. The Bombay Telegraph reports very favourably of the brochure, but another Western print, the Oriental News, is of a different opinion. He thinks that the attack looks more truthful than the defence, and that the latter has not more than scotched the former in immaterial points. As to that we can at present say nothing; but we must notice one particular, in which he speaks authoritatively against the defendants, so far as his language enables us to judge. They lay the authorship of the offensive pamphlet to the charge of a party employed by them, and treat him with hard words into the bargain, but the Oriental News contradicts them. "We may as well mention," are his words, "that Mr. Brunton (the accused person) had nothing whatever to do with the pamphlet in question; it was published in Bombay, and we believe he was ignorant of the existence of such a document until he received a copy." If so, the writers of the answering publication have made a great mistake, but one, we may add, that was shared in by most of those for whom the question had interest, the information of the pamphleteer having apparently proceeded from no other source. We shall look curiously for the sur-rejoinder that will of course be provoked. Whoever the author of the pages that stirred up the Iron and Steel Company may have been, he is bound to come forward and meet their negation of his statements, and the public will be gainers, let the controversy end how it may. He, we remember, professed his readiness to disclose his identity, if that were desired, feeling himself satisfied of the impregnability of his facts. The time has now arrived for his doing so, whether he be the party named or be not. If another than Mr. Brunton, he is bound to exonerate that gentleman, of whom he has led the shareholders of the old Company to write harsh things, and, if really the suspected individual, we think that he should meet those who accuse him without disguise. It is no trifle that he has laid at their door, but a deliberate attempt to take in the public by false representations on a great scale.—Madras Paper.

IMPORTS.—(Bombay, July 19).—Little of novelty or interest for remark in the Import Market, which, as usual at this season, is closed, and the business of the past three weeks is consequently of a limited nature. A few transactions have had effect in cotton manufactures, and from the low figures at which some have been forced on the dealers by Importers, of what are on the spot, and in anticipation of coming supplies, has had an unfavourable influence on the buyers, who hesitate entering on further purchases except on their own terms, and which, holders, from sudden and somewhat unexpected fall in the rate of exchange on London are not prepared to submit to. In consequence a firmer tone prevails in the market. Until, however, the moonsoon develops itself more fully, we cannot expect much activity.

CEYLON.

The LONDON MAIL of June 24th arrived at Point de Galle, July 24th, en route to Calcutta (per Oriental).

THE CEYLON COMMITTEE.—We perceive that the Ceylon Committee for the revival of the fixed establishments of the island have recommended the reduction of the salary of the governor. It is now £7,000 a year. They wish to make it £4,000. Sir George Anderson opposes, and declares that it has been already sufficiently reduced. The Committee also consider that £1,000 a year is sufficient for the Colonial Secretary. The islanders will one day find that this radical policy of under-paying everybody is inexpedient. Political adventurers who will "take anything" are very often very hard bargainers.

GOLD.—The report of the discovery of gold diggings in Ceylon has been again revived. The Examiner of the 23rd June states that a party of diggers have discovered the metals in paying quantities at Newera Ellia.

SCINDE.

UPPER SCINDE.

Letters from Upper Scinde communicate a fall of rain and the prospect of an abundant harvest.—One correspondent writes—

"The first topic of conversation in Upper Scinde is always the weather and really what we have had the last month and a half deserves to be talked about. Such heat! The oldest inhabitant hereabouts, who of course is always right, says "he never seed such weather in his life afore." However, it is to be trusted the great heat has passed, as a fine pelting shower of rain that fell for some hours on Wednesday afternoon has cooled the air considerably. The sky looks far from contented, and a farther supply may be looked for. The canals are filled to overflowing, and the septs from the river have covered the sands bordering on the same, swamping also a good deal of lately sown Khureef crop. I hear that the village of Phuloo adjoining the Larkhana bundar has been nearly washed away, and the greater part of the inhabitants are enjoying an amphibious style of living; however, the Sindees like being moist, and one of their favourite proverbs, is suktor khon budtor bhulo ake, meaning, "it is better to be swamped than to have a dry season." The late rain has also wonderfully improved the roads, and one can take a morning's canter with a chance of being recognised on return home by one's friends. The bridge over the Ghar (the largest I fancy in Scinde) has been finished some time now; it is a great blessing to all. The canal is 97 feet in width and 13½ feet in depth. There has been a school established at Larkhana; some eighty scholars attend daily to receive useful instruction, though at any distribution of sweetmeats it has been observed that the numbers rapidly increase. The Khureef crops now being sown, are expected to be about double those of any former seasons. By-the-bye, can you tell us when a clergyman is expected at Shikarpoor? The question is often asked, but never answered by the arrival of the reverend gentleman. Now would be a good time for him to come and look after his flock. However, he will receive in future news from us, as I hear the nearest clergyman to Shikarpoor is to be favoured with quarterly returns of burials, which must, of course, give him a very clear insight into the spiritual wants of the rest of the fold. The collector and his lady are quite well; they entertained a large and brilliant circle at dinner on the 27th inst. What an united set the Upper Sind deputy collectors must be, as I hear they have established a perambulating library, with the collector at its head, and that all have enrolled themselves on its list. I had a peep at the proposed bill of fare and also at the rules; the former gave promise of much mental food at a very small price, the latter seemed rather stringent, more particularly the one relating to the destruction of any books, &c.; it ran as follows:—"Any member discovered wrecking a document in transitu to be fined fearfully—say two rupees."

Another of our correspondents says—"A sipahee of the 2nd Belooch regiment some months ago shot his native adjutant. He was tried by a court martial—convicted—and sentenced to be hanged. This is perhaps as it should be; viz. life for life. I have since heard from natives and European officers that dead dogs were cast into the grave of the poor wretch. Of course, as is customary on these occasions, the regiment marched round, and the men must have seen the carcasses of the dogs in the grave. This is a matter that should be inquired into, as it is a very great insult to a Moosulman, and an act of the kind would tend greatly to lower Europeans in the eyes of natives."

We feel assured that Capt. Hough will at once enquire into this matter; we can hardly believe the story to be even probable or that the captain could have been made cognizant of it. We give it now, so that its truth or untruth can at once be ascertained and the public made aware of the fact.—Scinde Kosid.

RESOURCES OF SCINDE UNEXPLORED.—While the Punjab has for some time possessed a geologist, and Pegu has the advantage of a topographical survey, there seems as yet to be ever so remote a prospect of the scientific exploration of this province. Seams of lignite and strata of coal have been found to be abundant in the Kurrachee Collectorate,—sulphur is procurable and iron ore scattered on the very surface of the earth; yet in the face of such proof there appears an apathy hardly credible. A few months ago a sample of black soil was brought in from about half-a-dozen miles of the station; it seemed to be heavy earth, but upon analyzing the lump, it contained nitrate of potash, sulphur, and iron, with very little earth in it,—the black colour being obtained from the iron. It will be a query for time to solve whether the State will be indebted for its revenue rather to the bowels of the earth than its mere surface or soil. With abundant evidence of this kind around us, the Government need hardly hesitate as to the course it might pursue; scarcely fair has it been to fling "a reproach to British enterprise," when itself offers the best testimony of a reproach for not ascertaining resources that it may at any time work productively—more so than wringing a coin payment of the cultivator who has ever paid his dues in kind, and who, in the interior, scarcely knows or can remember a metal currency either in his own or his forefathers' time.

CULTIVATION OF INDIGO.—We perceive from some statistics published in the Scindian, that the cultivation of indigo in Scinde is rapidly extending. In 1852 the area covered with the plant was 454 beegas. In 1853 it was 1,192. The produce, however, was only 141 maunds. Improved cultivation, more scientific manufacture and larger capital are still required. The planters, moreover, are exposed to another difficulty. All the plant in the district comes to maturity at once, and an unusually large number of vats is consequently required for each factory. Government, to encourage the manufacture, has guaranteed the indigo lands against an increased assessment for six years.

CHINA.

SHANGHAE.

On the 21st instant, between 6 and 7 o'clock P.M., a sharp engagement took place between the insurgents and imperialists near the site of the old camps, and consequently in the close vicinity of our ground. The small guard of marines, as is usual under such circumstances, was posted so as to prevent the intrusion of any armed men of either party at the point most threatened, and was repeatedly fired upon by the imperialists, after they had shown themselves, to prevent the attempt made by some of the soldiery to pass the creek and gain the main road within our boundaries: finally the fire was returned by the marines, but Captain O'Callaghan and Captain Keane being on the ground, and desiring as far as possible to avoid collisions fraught with mischief, speedily gave the order to cease firing, and withdrew the men towards the guard-house at the other end of the race-course. The imperialist soldiery apparently regarding this as a retreat and sign of fear, immediately moved on in a parallel line, and from the opposite side of the creek kept up a sharp fire, regardless of Captain O'Callaghan's efforts to induce them to desist; and as he was on horseback, they could have no plea of ignorance as to his presence, or who he was. Equally regardless of the fact that not a shot was returned, they kept up this most unprovoked attack along the whole course to the end. Fortunately none of the officers or men were wounded, thanks to the inability of their assailants to give effect to their intentions.

We understand his Excellency Sir James Stirling, immediately the circumstances were made known to him, took a very decided line of action with the chief military authority, insisting upon full and prompt satisfaction for an attack upon the Queen's forces, marked as it was by the most entire disregard of justification. An interview with the treasurer, Keih, and two other officials, took place the following day at H.M.'s consulate, during which both H.M.'s plenipotentiary and the admiral being present, we doubt not a clear understanding, as to the future consequences of such acts, will have been arrived at. The determination with which this matter has been taken up by the chief naval authority, who fortunately was on the spot, cannot but have the best effect, and may go far to prevent, for a time, the renewal of such wanton outrages by a soldiery every whit as reckless and as lawless as their counterparts in the city. Nor is it to be regretted, perhaps, since to such outrages this community must be continually exposed, so long as the city is in a state of siege, that his Excellency the Rear-Admiral has had an opportunity of verifying, by personal experience, the actual state of affairs, and been enabled to judge for himself of the temper and discipline of troops ever menacing the settlement with inroads of a similar kind to those which led to the destruction of their camps on the 3rd and 4th of April.—North China Herald, June 24.

DREADFUL SHIPWRECKS.—The British lorch Victoria, navigated by her owner, Mr. T. Roberts, returned from the Pratas Shoals yesterday afternoon (July 5), bringing, ex Topaz, 111 Chinese passengers, and the mate and residue of the Topaz's crew, altogether 135 souls, the Victoria has also rescued a Mr. and Mrs. Maloy, who were passengers on board the Hygeia, the vessel now proving to be the second bark reported as on the Pratas. The Hygeia, with a crew of eleven, including the master (Dibble) and two mates, left the precincts of this harbour on the 31st of June.—It appears that, out of 529 souls wrecked, only 110 have reached the island.—Twenty-nine will have perished on the raft, and 390 remain on the hull. When the Victoria, with only half a dozen casks of water to supply 147 souls on board, passed near to the Hygeia, the unfortunate creatures could be seen on the broadside of the hull (which was nearly keel out), and on the jib-boom, evidently without a grain of food or a drop of water, and this under a burning sun. Long before this, unless relief has reached them, a large proportion, if not all, will have perished of madness or starvation. The horrible sight, as described by the female passenger (Mrs. Maloy), is a harrowing tale. "It was dreadful enough," she says, "to see upwards of a hundred people on the Pratas sand-bank ravenously devouring the green mulberry-leaves, chewing the rank grass, and sucking the warm blood of the boobies and sea-gulls that came within their reach. But for nearly four hundred to have no hope; the moan of their fearful cry for help sounding low on the breeze, and no help to give—it was horrible!" The name of Thomas Roberts, the humble shipwright of West Point, the immediate saviour of the lives of upwards of 130 people, is deserving of being recorded as that of a man who has done some good for his fellow-creatures, and we take this opportunity of so recording it. It was the general opinion at the time he left, in the teeth of a hard gale, that he was only throwing away both vessel and life in attempting a service it remained with others better able to perform.—Mr. and Mrs. Maloy were two of the cabin passengers in the Sarah Moore, whose wreck was reported in our issue of the 17th May.—Mr. Roberts went down on no other stipulation than the word of Capt. Swinton, that if he had to sell the shirt off his back he should have a couple of hundred dollars for the trip, and as much more as the owners of the vessel would give. The gold medal of the Humane Society is deserving here, we think.

—The brig Rapid, Capt. Smith, which left Singapore for this port on the 17th April, was driven ashore on the coast of Cochin China on the 20th May (about the time the Hurkara was dismantled). The chief mate, two Europeans (Succunies) and part of the lascar crew, left the wreck in the long-boat, and have not since been heard of. The master and rest of the crew succeeded in chartering two west coast fishing-boats, in which, with what could be saved from the vessel, they reached Macao on Friday last.—Friend of China, July 5.

H.M.'s steam-ships Rattler and Styx have proceeded to Nanking on a diplomatic mission, with Mr. Medhurst, Chinese secretary, and Mr. L. Bowring, on board.

THE AMERICAN DIPLOMATIC VISIT TO NANKING.—(From the North China Herald, June 24).—The Suequehanna and her consort reached Nanking on Saturday, 27th May. On Tuesday a communication was received from the city in answer to one from Capt. Buchanan. Its contents have not been made public, but it is generally understood that it was similar in its tone to the communication addressed to Sir Geo. Bonham during the visit of the Hermes. It sets forth the same claims to universal supremacy, though it states those claims, it is believed, in stronger language, and with a more preposterous tone of self-conceit, than appears in the letter to the English plenipotentiary. The feeling manifested, however, is the same. There is no evidence of any change of policy or of feeling towards foreigners since the visit of the Hermes. On the part of the people and subordinate officials, the same friendly feeling was manifested that was observed a year ago. These claims to superiority are not inconsistent with the existence of a purpose to encourage foreign commerce. They are the result of ignorance and pride. They will, however, be a bar to the formation of treaties, and therefore it becomes the treaty powers to set them right on this point as soon as possible. The reception given to foreigners at Nanking does not prove the existence of a feeling of hostility on the part of the insurgent chiefs. The visit of the Susquehanna has put us in possession of facts which prove that the insurgents have undisturbed control of a large extent of country—so large as to furnish a guarantee to their ultimate success. It is certain that they now have command of the Yang-tsz river, as far at least as the Po-yang lake, and probably much further. In the immediate vicinity of Nanking the country is not in the power of the insurgents. A daily market is held at a point about a mile distant from the city wall, for the sale of poultry, vegetables, meat, and other produce. The city itself is under strict martial law, and indeed is at present a mere military camp.

AN AMERICAN'S OPINION ON BRITISH INDIA AND ITS GOVERNMENT.—Bayard Taylor, correspondent of the New York Tribune, has published in that journal a letter containing his impressions of the Indian Government. He arrived, he says, full of the most violent prejudices. The following sentence will sufficiently illustrate his change of opinion:—"That there are wrongs and abuses which call for severe reprehension, is undeniable; but I have seen enough to satisfy me that, in spite of oppression, in some instances of the most grinding character, in spite of that spirit of selfish aggrandisement which first set on foot and is still prosecuting the subjugation of India, the country has prospered under English government. So far from regretting the progress of annexation, which has been so rapid of late years (and who are we, that we should cast a stone against this sin?), I shall consider it a fortunate thing for India when the title of every native sovereign is extinguished, and the power of England stretches, in unbroken integrity, from Cashmere to Cape Comorin."—Friend of India.

DEBT IN THE INDIAN ARMY.—It is well known that the thoughtless manner in which young Indian officers contract debt is mainly the result of the facilities afforded them by tradesmen. Money due by them is recoverable by methods that in the cases of debtors not of the Company's Army would be futile. The holders of subaltern's promissory notes, receipts for goods, &c., are fully aware that commanding officers are willing to listen to their complaints, and that if other plans fail, they can still hold over their debtor's head, in terrorem, the threat of placing his commission in jeopardy by an appeal to Army Head Quarters. To avoid this, many and galling have been the expedients resorted to, and bitter and spirit-crushing the pecuniary subterfuges to which young men have been forced in order to wipe out the score of boyish expenditure, an expenditure as unnecessary on their parts as culpable on that of those who afforded facilities to it. There is but one remedy for this, and it is a simple, easy, and efficacious one. Let the authorities, remembering that the high allowances they grant their servants are paid to enable them to sustain the rank of gentlemen, not of gentlemen in difficulties, announce that henceforth, any credit allowed to either the civil or military services must be recovered by the ordinary legal processes and without assistance from either commanding officers or head quarter's authorities. But, that it requires an extent of legislative power, which it is needless to say they are not vested with, we would have them, in the case of their military servants, go a step further, and as men whose services are engaged to, and prepaid by, the State, enact that they should be exempt from arrest under process for debt. Were such the case, the credit system would have indeed received its death blow.—Abridged from the Indian Evening Mail.

AMERICAN COTTON.—"If we look back to the history of the commerce of this country at the time of its commencement, what are our exports? Cotton was hardly raised at all. The tables will show that the exportation of cotton in the year 1790 and '91 was hardly more than 40,000 to 50,000 dollars a year. It has gone on increasing rapidly, till it now amounts, in a year of large products and high prices, to more than one hundred million of dollars. Then there was more of flax, more of indigo, more of rice, more of almost anything else exported from the South than of cotton. I think I have heard it said that, when Mr. Jefferson negotiated the treaty of 1794 with Great Britain, he did not know that any cotton was raised in this country; and that when, under that treaty which gave the United States the right to carry their own products in their own ships to British ports, a shipment of cotton was sent to England, the British Custom-houses refused to admit it under the treaty, on the ground that there was none of that article raised in America."—From the Speech of DANIEL WEBSTER in the United States Senate, on the subject of Slavery and Slave States, March 7, 1850.

A MODERN BLACK-HOLE TRAGEDY.—The following incident may be depended upon:—Mungul Sain, a rich mahajun, had a wedding, and it is customary on such occasions to distribute alms to the poor. Lucknow is a place where mendicancy is made a profession: on the occasion of this wedding, some two or three thousand fakirs flocked to Mungul Sain's house for alms. In order to prevent confusion, or that each individual might not receive a share twice, the mahajun locked them up in his house as they came, determining to commence his charitable purpose the next morning; meanwhile the festive scene proceeded, and Mungul Sain was happy as the night was long. Next morning, when the gates were opened, a scene of horror was disclosed to view; upwards of sixty persons, men, women, and children, lay commingled, heaped one on another, quite dead: immediately the gate was open, a terrible rush towards the street ensued, in which more people lost their lives. During the night they had undergone the appalling horrors of thirst and suffocating heat. There is one consolation, however, the State has not suffered much loss by the death of sixty or seventy vagabonds.—Correspondent of Benares Recorder.

EFFECTS OF THE ABOLITION OF LOTTERIES AT CALCUTTA. Since treating on the subject of municipal improvements, we cannot help comparing the respective advantages derived by the public from the Lottery Committee and the Municipal Commissioners. There is no denying that the opening and widening of the streets to the south, as well as the cleansing and repair of the public roads, was more effectually attended to by that indirect mode of taxation. Lotteries, however, have succumbed to the force of public opinion at home, and in their stead the inhabitants have been obliged to submit to direct taxation for the purpose of maintaining an almost useless board of Municipal Commissioners.—Bengal Hurkaru.

EDUCATION IN INDIA.

NO. II.

WE resume this subject with much satisfaction, and proceed to give an account of the measures proposed for carrying out education in India.

By far the most important of the proposed measures is, in our judgment, the establishment of universities in various parts of India, with the power of "conferring academical degrees as evidences of attainment in the different branches of art and science." Of the value of another part of the proposed functions of the universities—that of "adding marks of honour for those who may desire to compete for honorary distinction," we are by no means certain. We do not know that it was necessary to have an exact model for the imitation of those by whom the new universities are to be got up. We should have thought that it would have been better to take a comprehensive review of the various universities of Europe and the United States, and to select from each such parts as were best adapted to India. But it has been determined to have a model, and that model is the institution recently chartered, and bearing the name of the London University. If a model were necessary, this perhaps was the most suitable, and in the words of the despatch "the best adapted to the wants of India," though, as is properly added, "some variation will be necessary in points of detail." The universities of India are to "consist of a chancellor, vice-chancellor, and fellows, who will constitute a senate." We do not exactly see what Indian universities have to do with chancellors and vice-chancellors. We suppose they are to be the ornamental part of the establishments, something like the scarlet gown and gilded coach by which the dignity of the Lord Mayor is manifested. Like their model, the Indian universities are to have "affiliated institutions," and as the universities cannot inculcate or give preference to any religious tenets, no inquiries will be made in regard to these "affiliated institutions," whether they teach this religion or that, or any or none. At home we should regard this apparent indifference to religious truth as a great evil and a great scandal. In India it is unavoidable, and he who should call upon the Government of that country to assist the propagation of Christianity by an exercise of its authority, would be impeding the progress of divine truth, so far as any human efforts can impede it. But while Government can do little or nothing to promote the diffusion of Christianity, it ought to do nothing against it. Woe to the man who shall take his stand with the votaries of spiritual darkness. It is gratifying to find that, while those nurtured in the idolatries of Hindooism or the impostures of Mahomedanism may aspire to enjoy the benefits of the universities, the disciples of missionary and other Christian schools are not to be excluded. We do not set these schools up as the very cream of all schools—we fear that there is much narrow-mindedness in the management of many of them, and much extravagance of assertion as to their results. But it is consolatory to know that Christianity is no longer placed under a ban by a Christian Government—that truth has the same status as falsehood, and that becoming a Christian does not disqualify a man from attaining the distinctions due to learning, if he deserve them. Thus runs the despatch: "Institutions conducted by all denominations of Christians, Hindoos, Mahomedans, Parsees, Sikhs, Bhuddists, Jains, or any other religious persuasion, may be affiliated to the universities, if they are found to afford the requisite course of study, and can be depended upon for the certificates of conduct which will be required." The association in the above quotation of the pure and holy system of Christianity, with the abominations of some of the other systems mentioned therein, gives a shock to the Christian reader, as it must have given one to him who penned it; but it was necessary to be explicit, and we have no more right to find fault with it than with a detail, when necessary, of the more repugnant parts of surgical study or surgical practice.

The Indian universities will bear little resemblance to those of the United Kingdom. There the universities are places for study; in India they will be but places for examination. It is proposed, however, to institute in connection with them professorships, "for the purpose of the delivery of lectures in various branches of learning, for the acquisition of which, at any rate in an advanced degree, facilities do not now exist in other institutions in India." Law is one of the branches specified, and we think properly, provided the study be pursued in a comprehensive and liberal manner. The investigation of the principles of what is called natural law, of the principal systems of law which have prevailed among civilized nations—such inquiries are among the most important and most elevating that can be pursued. But if by law be meant merely the collective authoritative instruments known down to the year 1834 as "regulations," but since dignified by the name of acts, the study may make a sharp practitioner, but will never form a learned lawyer. Civil engineering is another subject mentioned, though, it is admitted, that such practical instruction as is given at Roorkee "is far more useful than any lectures could possibly be." A further tribute to this noble establishment is rendered in a subsequent part of the despatch. The institution of professorships of the vernacular languages of India is hinted at; and also of Sanscrit, Arabic and Persian. The vernacular languages of India in their present state are, we fear, not worth such machinery for their cultivation. With regard to the ancient languages, and the Persian, as they form the groundwork of the vernacular, the case is different; but if the suggestion be acted upon, we have reason to hope that few of the absurdities enshrined in Sanscrit will be disinterred. It is well observed, that "the grammar of these languages, and their application to the improvement of the spoken language of the country, are the points to which the attention of the professors should be mainly directed; and there will be an ample field for their labours, unconnected with any instruction in the tenets of the Hindoo and Mahomedan religions." There is more than sufficient provision already for instruction in this nonsense. We presume that when reading lectures is spoken of as the chief, indeed the only, duty of the professors, it is not meant that the periodical discharge of "paper pellets" is to be considered a fulfilment of the professor's office. The lectures, we suppose, are not to be like those read—and merely read—at mechanics' institutions and places of that kind, where the matter, to use a common phrase, "goes in at one ear and out at the other;" but the lecturer will, we presume, be expected to take some pains to insure that what he delivers shall make at least a temporary lodgment in the disciple's head.

The details of the regulations for examinations for degrees are of course left to the local authorities. "The standard for common degrees," it is observed, "will require to be fixed with very great judgment." Our only apprehension on this point is, that it should be fixed too low, and that the academical distinction should thus become ridiculous. We will not, however, anticipate error. The competition for honours is to follow the examinations for degrees, an arrangement which strikes us as a strange one; but as it is admitted by most persons, that as the world grows older it grows wiser, we dare not object. Even though writing in the privacy of our study, the rush of blood would suffuse with redness every portion of our cuticular covering, from the most elevated hair on our head to the extremities of our great toes, had we the hardihood to question what all the world, or the noisier part of it, affirms. A fit of illness, we fear, would follow.

The establishment of universities at Calcutta and Bombay appears to be all that is immediately meditated; but the authorities profess to be "ready to sanction the creation of an university at Madras, or in any other part of India where a sufficient number of institutions exist, from which properly qualified candidates for degrees could be supplied." Madras, we trust, will lose for ever the ugly epithet of the "benighted."

On the constitution of the governing bodies of the proposed universities, we find the following as to the holiday and working-day members:—

"The offices of Chancellor and Vice-Chancellor will naturally be filled by persons of high station, who have shown an interest in the cause of education; and it is in connection with the universities that we propose to avail ourselves of the services of the existing Council of Education at Calcutta, and Board of Education at Bombay. We wish to place these gentlemen in a position which will not only mark our sense of the exertions which they have made in furtherance of education, but will give it the benefit of their past experience of the subject. We propose, therefore, that the Council of Education at Calcutta, and the Board of Education at Bombay, with some additional members to be named by the Government, shall constitute the senate of the university at each of those Presidencies. The additional members should be so selected as to give to all those who represent the different systems of education which will be carried on in the affiliated institutions—including natives of India, of all religious persuasions, who possess the confidence of the native communities—a fair voice in the senates."

We have some misgivings about this; but it may be hoped that care will be taken, that while the natives have "a fair voice in the senates," they have no more. If they once are allowed to gain a preponderating voice, farewell to all hope for the advancement of India in learning and science.

Here for the present we must pause. Being pressed for space we cannot afford enough for a fair consideration of the remainder of the interesting document before us, which, therefore, we must reserve for a future number.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE PUNJAB.

NO. VI.

WE pass over a short and not very important section, headed "Jagirs and Pensions," only observing that the pious impostors, with which every part of India abounds, appear to have had no reason to complain of want of liberality in the new rulers of the Punjab. We next arrive at a far more gratifying subject, "Development of Resources." A civil engineer was appointed, and to his department was assigned the construction of all public works and the control of all local improvements. Roads necessarily occupy an important place in this department. On the grand trunk road from Lahore to Peshawur vast difficulties presented themselves; but most of them have been surmounted, while the rest are in process of being overcome, and "the whole line has been traced, surveyed, and put well in progress." A grand trunk road from Beas to Lahore has been completed, and a straight line of road carried from Umritsur to Sealkote, which is further connected with Peshawur by a branch to Wuzerabad. Military and commercial roads from Lahore to Mooltan, and from Lahore to Ferozepore, have been opened. Others, also, have been constructed in which great difficulties interposed. To afford facilities for the commerce between Central Asia and the ports of Bombay and Sind, two great lines were projected; one from Dera Ismael Khan to Lahore—this line is complete; the other is to start also from Dera Ismael Khan, and proceed to Ullohur, where it will join the Delhi road;—this road has been laid down, but not executed. Wells have been provided along the lines, as there are scarcely any which do not in some part of their course traverse arid and desolate tracts. Many other lines are proposed, and a variety of cross-roads have already been made. The result is thus summed up as to the principal works: 1,349 miles of road have been cleared and constructed; 853 miles are under construction; 2,487 miles have been traced, and 5,272 miles surveyed. This is more than at first sight it appears, for it is "exclusive of minor cross and branch roads."

The following exhibits both the Government and the people in a favourable light:—

"It has been not an unfrequent practice with the Government to grant loans to landholders for works of agricultural improvement, on the security of the land. This custom the Board have followed. Numerous sums have been advanced, and during one year of threatened drought, the readiness of the state to give assistance was notified by a proclamation, setting forth, that any proprietor who might accept a loan, and therewith construct a well or other work of irrigation, would, at the coming settlement, be taxed only for unirrigated land. In some of the arid districts adjoining the central wastes, the people gladly availed themselves of this proffered succour. Many villages were thereby saved from destruction. Regarding the repayment of these loans as special debts of honour, the landholders made strenuous and successful efforts for the discharge of their liabilities. It is remarkable that these loans, though advanced in the most poverty-stricken localities, have been entirely recovered."

We must quote another passage, which reflects credit on the enterprise of the people and on the discretion of their governors in allowing them fair play. Where Government interference is necessary, it must interfere; but it is much better if the people can and will do what they want for themselves:—

"The capabilities of the Punjab for canal irrigation are notorious. It is intersected by great rivers; it is bounded on two sides by hills, whence pour down countless rivulets; the general surface of the land slopes southward, with a considerable gradient. These facts at once proclaim it to be a country eminently adapted for canals.

Nearly all the dynasties which have ruled over the Five Rivers have done something for irrigation; nearly every district possesses flowing canals, or else the ruins of ancient water-courses. Many of the valleys and plains at the base of the Himalaya ranges are moistened by water-cuts conducted from the mountain-torrents. The people, deeply sensible of the value of these works, mutually combine, with an unusual degree of harmony and public spirit, not only for the construction of the reservoirs, but also for distribution of the water, and the regulation of the supply. In such cases, when the community displays so much aptitude for self-government, the Board consider non-interference the best policy, while they would always be ready to afford any aid which might be solicited."

The Emperor Shah Jehan, about the year 1633, constructed a canal, known as the Huslie Canal, "not," as is remarked, "for purposes of general irrigation" (these were beneath imperial notice), "but for the supply of the fountains and waterworks [at the royal gardens and conservatory at Lahore." It was thought that this canal might be made available to supply the wants of the Baree Doab; but on examination it was found impracticable, and a new one was accordingly determined on. The old one, however, has been repaired, with a view to deriving some benefit from it till the new one can be brought into work. The new canal is estimated to cost a large sum (530,000/); but if the calculations are correct, it will be a most profitable outlay, as the returns are estimated at 27½ per cent. It is admitted, however, that time must elapse before these large returns can be realized.

The Board wind up this part of their report thus:—

"When the magnitude, variety, and difficulty of the operations undertaken by this department (the civil engineers) are considered, the civil and military buildings, the public works, the roads, the bridges and viaducts, the salt-mines, and lastly, the canals, it is believed that in few parts of India has more been done within a short time for the physical improvement of the country than in the Punjab."

"In few parts of India,"—it might have been added, in no part of the world, looking only at what is done by Government. This vile Indian Government, somehow or other, does a great deal more for the good of the people than any other.

At the convenient resting-place at which we have arrived, we shall take a siesta, and this not from weariness, but want of room for active exertion.

SHIPMENT OF MUNITIONS OF WAR TO INDIA.—The Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury have caused the Commissioners of Customs to be acquainted that, in compliance with their recommendation, their lordships are pleased to authorise the board to allow the shipment of munitions of war, &c. by the East-India Company, without the necessity of an order in council being obtained in each case, in the same manner as with regard to the shipment to her Majesty's forces in the East, under Treasury order of April last, and without bond being required of the Company.

SHOULD NATIVES BE ADMITTED TO PRACTISE IN THE SUPREME COURTS?—In regard to the official correspondence on the admission of natives to the legal profession in her Majesty's courts, we would remark, that since there is no reason that natives should not have a fair field, we wish them all advantage from the Governor-General's decision. If they are qualified to pass as attorneys, it would be highly improper to exclude them from so doing. Still the question stands, What are the qualifications of an attorney? A judge may admit a native to practise, and we only trust that our judges will have a due regard to the ulterior effects of their decisions. Law is already quite far enough removed from justice; and from what we know of natives, their practice would not tend to bring it any nearer. In certain respects, in subtlety of intellect, in a foolish following out of proximate ends without any regard to ulterior consequences, the natives have the advantage of us; and we fancy that in law-courts they could, with native clients, very speedily cast all English competitors. We may be wrong in this supposition; but we have always found that chicanery may very easily be permitted to grow up and destroy the employment of straightforward men. There is, of course, no immediate prospect of such an evil as this we have referred to; but it is just as well to keep one's eyes open and a bright look-out ahead.—Bombay Times.

A NERVOUS LANDLORD.—Among the Small Cause Court reports, we find one of a case brought by Mr. Paliologus, "One, &c." against Mr. Lidiard, his landlord, the plaintiff claiming damages for having been excluded from certain rooms which the defendant had agreed to let him. The agreement was admitted, but the defendant, a timid old gentleman, explained that his reason for not acting up to it was, that his lodger had brought a jackal-trap into the compound, from which he concluded that he intended to use the apartments which he had taken either as a menagerie or a hunting-ground, neither of which would tend to increase the peace and tranquillity of Mr. Lidiard's dwelling-house. It appeared in the course of the trial that the supposed jackal-trap was merely a fowl-pen. Mr. Lidiard, therefore, had to pay for his groundless apprehensions. We can hardly pity him, for had he reflected for a moment, he might have recollected the maxim "clerus clerum non decimat." Lawyers don't catch jackals.—Bengal Hurkaru.

BOOKS.

A Manual of Practical Therapeutics, considered Chiefly with reference to Articles of the Materia Medica. By EDWARD JOHN WARING, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London, Honourable East-India Company's Service. London, 1854. Smith, Elder, and Co.

THE author of this work affirms that "it has often been remarked that a little book is a great evil." We do not recollect to have met with this remark often, or at all. The maxim that "a great book is a great evil," is common enough; but common as it is, it is for the most part correct. But however that may be, Mr. Waring's book does not fall under the condemnatory sentence, whichever way it be read. Though closely printed, and extending to more than seven hundred pages, they are very small ones, and therefore it is not a great book; and if it be regarded as a little one, its merits will amply redeem it from the imputation of being an evil, great or small. It is a most useful and valuable manual, and we know not how its place could be properly supplied, nor by what means the mass of information which it condenses within so small a compass could be otherwise obtained, except by consulting a large number of volumes throughout which it is dispersed. Mr. Waring's Indian experience, moreover, qualifies him peculiarly to be the tutor of those who, like himself, serve the Honourable Company. The author, indeed, distinctly disclaims any character beyond that of a compiler. We will not offend his modesty by insisting on his accepting a higher title, but we may without offence advert to the good sense and temperate philosophy which mark the introduction, wherein, if nowhere else, Mr. Waring is certainly original. The careful and accurate judgment, the nice discrimination, and the aptitude for medical investigation there displayed, ought to secure for the author the highest professional praise. There is a book called Medical Logic. The term is not a very happy one; but the word logic, being taken in the loose sense in which, in such a mode of use, it must be received, the few introductory pages of Mr. Waring's book afford a far better illustration of the subject.

Observations on Colonel Cotton's proposed System of Cheap Railroads for India. By a MADRAS OFFICER. Madras, Pharoah and Co.

This pamphlet opens most unprepossessingly with the following quotation from a Mr. Norton, a barrister practising in one of the Supreme Courts in India:—"Our mission here really is to teach the natives to govern themselves; and, whether that shall be sooner or later, our policy, I take it (to put it upon no nobler motive), is, so to arrange the interim, that when the separation takes place, it may leave upon the minds and recollections of the respective parties a sense of obligations and benefits conferred on the one hand, and of duty performed on the other."

Our present duty, we take leave to observe, is to govern the natives as well as we can for their own good. There is a passage in an old compendium, which most of us once knew, wherein the person examined, as to what he learned from the Commandments, is directed to answer, that, one among other things, was to do his duty in that state of life to which it had pleased God to call him. Such is the rule for an individual, and such is the rule for a nation. In the order of God's providence we have been called to the government of India. Let us do our duty as governors; but the obligation is just the same as that which presses upon us in every part of the world where we have dominion. The duty of governing well has no more bearing in regard to India than in regard to Canada or Australia. In the exercise of that duty, as circumstances vary our course must vary; but the obligation to rule with justice and benevolence is the same. Such is the plain truth when cant is translated into common sense; and it is to be regretted that the "Madras Officer" should have introduced his publication by a fanfaronade in which, as far as we can judge, he is too reasonable a person to concur. We will not stop to ask what was Mr. Norton's "mission" in India. We conclude that it was to get as many briefs, and to levy as heavy fees as possible. This being an obvious solution of the difficulty, if there be one, we shall not seek for any other. Neither, as we are not curious overmuch, shall we inquire whether India is ever likely to separate from England, and, if so, when. Nobody expects any government to be everlasting. Empire after empire has passed away—even that of China is falling to pieces. We will, however, say this much: if we lose India at an early period it will be through our own folly, and the efforts of those agitators, who are as false to India as they are to their native country,—men who are the old-clothesmen of philanthropy, dealing in shreds and patches of that valuable article, and vending them in the spirit which pervades a similar kind of dealing in Cutler-street and Rosemary-lane.

But we must not condemn the "Madras Officer" because he has had the misfortune to introduce his performance with a rubbishy piece of claptrap. He differs from Colonel Cotton as to the substitute proposed by the latter for railways, a difference in which we humbly led the way, and he (the author of this pamphlet) considers, justly as we think, "that the construction of the trunk lines of railway as now sanctioned is not only one of the boldest, but one of the wisest measures that the government of this country [India] ever undertook." The writer illustrates his views by facts and calculations, through which it is impossible for us to follow him, but he appears to have the best of the question. He regards railways as calculated to furnish the grand means for improving India—and so do we. He is what we might think somewhat oversanguine, but let that pass. The tract, however, is a valuable one. We know not whether or not it is procurable in England, but it ought to be.

SOMETHING FOR THE FRIENDS OF JUDICIAL REFORM IN INDIA.—A fruitwoman has been murdered at Madras. The coroner's jury, after a lengthy inquest, returned a verdict that "the deceased was found dead by certain marks of violence received during her lifetime." Had a Company's judge returned a verdict so preposterous, we should never have heard the last of the "untrained judiciary."—Friend of India.

A WONDERFUL HORSE.—The following actually forms part of an advertisement of a sale of horses which appeared in the Madras Athenæum:—"A grey Arab riding-horse, 'Little Monarch,' well known on the Bombay side as a first-rate pig-sticker." LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future insurers FOUR-FIFTHS of the PROFITS, with QUINQUENNIAL DIVISION, or a LOW RATE of PREMIUM without participation of profits.

The next division of profits will be declared in June, 1855, when all participating policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1854, will be allowed to share in the profits.

At the several past divisions of profits made by this Company, the reversionary bonuses added to the policies from one-half the profits, amounted, on an average of the different ages, to about one per cent. per annum on the sums insured, and the total bonuses added at the four septennial divisions exceeded 770,000l.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The extra premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to insure their lives at the tabular premiums, may have their lives insured at extra premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50l.

ASSIGNMENTS OF POLICIES.—Written notices of, received and registered.

MEDICAL FEES paid by the Company, and no charge will be made for policy stamps.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.—Insurances effected upon every description of property, at the usual rates.

FAMILY ENDOWMENT, LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY SOCIETY.

The above rates, it will be observed, are below those of any other Indian office.

To the policy holders on the profit scale, who have paid five years' premium, a bonus of twenty per cent. has been annually allowed for the last three years.

The Society grants an immediate reduction to the English rates to parties proceeding to Europe for a permanency, and a reduction after one year to those who come for a short period only.

The civil rate only charged on the lives of parties in the military service, holding civil offices, as long as they continue in such office.

Deferred Annuities and Endowments payable at any given period are also granted.

Tables and full information may be had at the Office in Chatham Place; or on application to the Secretaries at Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.; or to the Agents at the other Indian Presidencies.

The marked success which has attended the operations of this Society justifies the Directors in calling the attention of the public to the superior advantages held out to all classes desirous of affecting Assurances upon their lives.

The subjoined scale of rates is framed with the greatest care, and will be found to be as MODERATE AS IS CONSISTENT WITH PERFECT SECURITY.

Annual Premium required for the Assurance of £100 on a single Life, with participation in Profits:—

30	£1 18 8	35	£2 14 11	50	£4 5 6
25	2 3 3	40	3 3 0	55	5 5 10
30	2 8 10	45	3 12 2	60	6 13 2

Tables for Policies to be effected in India have been especially prepared from the records of the East-India Company, on the experience of mortality in that country.

During the last thirteen years, the reduction of Premium on Policies entitled to participate in Profits has averaged more than 44 per cent., and in the last four years it has been declared at 45 per cent.

An annual division is made of one-fifth of the ascertained profits of the five preceding years; the other four-fifths being set apart to enter into the average of succeeding years.

Of the sum annually divisible, 75 per cent. is apportioned to Policy-holders who have paid six annual Premiums, either in a Reduction of subsequent Premiums, or as a Bonus added to the Policy. The remainder is apportioned to the Shareholders.

Assets of the Society, upwards of £600,000.—Amount of Policies in force, £2,000,000.—Annual income arising from Premiums, exclusively of interest on the invested capital, exceeds £120,000.

Weekly Board-day, Thursday, at 1 o'clock.

Committees sit every Tuesday and Saturday, at 12 o'clock, when Policies requiring despatch may be effected.

ALLEN'S MAPS OF INDIA, &amp;c.

DRAWN BY JOHN WALKER,

Geographer to the East-India Company.

A New Map of India;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectories, and the Position and Boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

* The object kept in view in compiling this Map, has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all Stations—Civil and Military—are inserted, as well as those of all Towns and places of note, likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various Districts and Collectories, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The Railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for Reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been shunned.

A General Map of India;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Hon. East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

Map of India;

From the most recent authorities. On two sheets—Size, 2 ft. 10 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 1s.

Map of the Routes in India;

With Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 8s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this Map are given the whole of the Military and Civil Stations, together with the principal Towns, the villages being omitted so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies.

A Map of the Western Provinces of Hindoostan;

The Punjab, Cabool, Sindh, Bhawalpore, &c.; including all the States between Candahar and Allahabad. On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 2 in. high. 30s.; or on cloth, in a case, £2; or on rollers, and varnished, £2. 10s.

Map of India and China, Burmah, Siam, the Malay Peninsula, and the Empire of Anam.

On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 3 ft. 4 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

Map showing the Steam Communication and Overland Routes

Between England, India, China, and Australia. Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 4 in. high; on cloth, in a case, 14s., or with rollers, and varnished, 18s.

Map of Arabia;

Compiled from all the most recent authorities, by order of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company.—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high; on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory.

On one sheet, 5s.; or on cloth, in a case, 6s.

Map of Afghanistan and the adjacent Countries;

On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

Map of China,

From the most authentic sources of information. One large sheet—Size, 2 ft. 7 in. wide; 2 ft. 2 in. high. 4s.; or on cloth, in a case, 11s.

Map of the Burman Empire,

Showing the annexed district of Pegu. One sheet, 3s. 6d.; or on cloth, in a case, 5s.

London: Wm. H. ALLEN & Co., 7, Leadenhall Street.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE

MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 6d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co. Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS have again

Cured an Ulcerated Leg after every other remedy failed.—Henry Winton, of Rickmansworth, was for a long time an object of horror to his friends, owing to his predisposition to Ulcerous Sores; he tried every remedy likely to benefit him, but they turned out of no avail; finally, his leg became so completely covered with Ulcers, that amputation of the limb appeared to be the only thing likely to save his life. At this juncture, he had recourse to HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS; and in four months from using these remedies, he was cured, to the astonishment of all who knew him.

Sold by all vendors of medicines, and at PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY'S Establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

TO THE LADIES.—The powerful influence of the sun on the skin and complexion at this period of the year, calls for increased attention in preserving their delicacy and beauty. The most pleasing and effectual specific for this desirable object is

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, so deservedly established in royal and public favour and estimation. Its application neutralizes the effect of atmosphere, and induces that healthy action of the minute secretory vessels of the skin, by which its delicacy and beauty are so essentially promoted. Freckles, tan, spots, pimples, and discolorations, are eradicated by the application of the KALYDOR, and give place to a healthy clearness and transparency of complexion. Ladies travelling, or taking out-door exercise, will find it to diffuse a grateful and refreshing feeling. In cases of sunburn, stings of insects, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

The heat of summer also frequently communicates a dryness to the hair, and a tendency to fall off, which may be completely obviated by the use of ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, a delightfully fragrant and transparent preparation, and as an invigorator and purifier beyond all precedent.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; or family bottles (equal to four small), at 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

Nor at this season can we be too careful to preserve the teeth from the deleterious effects of vegetable acids (the immediate cause of tooth-ache), by a systematic employment, night and morning, of ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, a white powder, compounded of the rarest and most fragrant essences. It bestows on the teeth a pearl-like whiteness, frees them from tartar, and imparts to the gums a healthy firmness, and to the breath a grateful sweetness and purity.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

Beware of SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLAND'S," preceding that of the article on the wrapper or label. Sold by A. ROWLAND & SONS, 29, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

CHILDREN FROM INDIA.

A LADY, residing in the healthy neighbourhood of the Regent's Park, wishes to have TWO or THREE CHILDREN from abroad, to EDUCATE and take the entire charge of. She will be assisted by her sisters, who are highly accomplished, used to tuition, of cheerful dispositions, and who will take pleasure in making the home happy to the children entrusted to their care. The highest references given.

Address, by letter only, to E. G., Mr. Booth's Library, Duke Street, Portland Place.

TO CHRISTIAN PARENTS.

SOME LADIES, who have under their care several Little Girls from India, would be happy to RECEIVE INTO THEIR FAMILY, CHILDREN whose Parents purpose sending them to England, and for whom a HOME (not a School) is desired. Their house is in a healthy and pleasant situation, about thirty miles west of London. The domestic attendance for the younger Children and general arrangements are strictly those of a family. The Children are under the pastoral care of a decidedly Evangelical Clergyman. First-class Professional Teachers attend at the house, from the neighbourhood and from London.—References can be given to the Rev. F. Trench, Incumbent of St. John's, Reading; the Rev. C. J. Goodhart, Minister of Park Chapel, Chelsea; Rev. J. Betts, Nailsworth; and to relatives of the Children, both in India and England.

Address, C. L., Mr. Lovejoy's Library, Reading, Berks.

ADDISCOMBE, HAILEYBURY, SANDHURST, and DIRECT APPOINTMENTS. — YOUNG GENTLEMEN destined for such Appointments are efficiently prepared in all the requisite branches in the Establishment of W. KIESE, M.A., Grove, Blackheath.

KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON.

A MASTER in KING'S COLLEGE SCHOOL is willing to take charge of ONE or TWO BOYS from India. Their education would be carefully superintended, and they would be thoroughly prepared for their future pursuits, whether MILITARY or CIVIL, MERCANTILE or PROFESSIONAL. During the vacation they would go to the seaside or into the country, and be treated as members of the family. Terms, INCLUDING VACATIONS, COLLEGE FEES, BOOKS, AND ALL EXTRAS, 120 guineas per annum.

Address, REV. GEORGE RUST, M.A., 17, James Street, Buckingham Gate, London.

SURVEYING ARMY APPOINTMENTS IN INDIA.

OFFICERS at Home on Furlough, and GENTLEMEN CADETS, desirous of qualifying themselves for the Diplomas in SURVEYING and ENGINEERING, may obtain the requisite information by applying to Mr. HENRY JAMES CASTLE, Associate of the Institute of Civil Engineers, and Lecturer in Surveying and Levelling at King's College, London, who is at all times prepared to give Private Instruction (or to form a class for practical field-work) in the uses and application of the several Instruments required for Surveying and Levelling. If desired, one or two Pupils could reside with the Lecturer.

A WIDOW, a Native of Madras, is desirous of returning to India, and wishes to obtain a situation as NURSE, and to attend upon the Lady. Salary no object. She is a most respectable person, speaks English well, and can be highly recommended. She is a good-tempered, quiet person; can dress hair, work well at her needle, and also understands the care of children, &c. &c.

Address to A. B., care of Grindlay and Co., 124, Bishopsgate Street.

To sail from Gravesend 26th September, and will embark Passengers at Portsmouth.

FOR CALCUTTA direct, the splendid fast-sailing river-built ship ALFRED, 1,400 tons (belonging to Messrs. GREEN, of Blackwall), W. H. POPE, Commander. Lying in the East-India Docks. This Ship has very superior accommodations for Passengers, and will carry an experienced Surgeon.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE dearth of news from India continues, and the present arrival shows rather an increased scarcity than otherwise. From the Bengal territory, and the neighbouring districts we are not favoured with a scrap of intelligence fit for insertion in this part of our journal. On the other side, the Delhi Gazette is not rich as formerly in revelations of the state of the countries lying to the northwest; but, upon the principle of getting what we can, we appropriate the following to the benefit of the British public:—

“On the 16th instant a messenger arrived here from the Ameer's agent at Herat. He had come by the way of Toorkistan. Zabeerool Dowlah of Herat has written to Dost Mahomed, to say, that the Shah of Persia and the English ambassador at Teheran are both making friendly overtures towards him, but that he, the Herat chief, has never swerved from the engagements to Dost Mahomed, and has only corresponded with other powers in order to obtain information of what is going on for the Dost's advantage. The Herat chief complains, however, that in spite of his friendly conduct, Dost Mahomed permitted the Candahar chiefs to despoil him of part of his territory. He, therefore, begged that the ruler of Cabul would at once coerce his brothers at Candahar, and compel them to restore to Herat the districts in question. If the Ameer would lead the army in person, he, the Herat chief, would also co-operate with him. But if no redress was granted, there would be an end to all further friendship, as this was the ultimatum of the Herat state. On the receipt of this letter the Ameer called a meeting of all the chiefs at the house of Sirdar Sultan Mahomed Khan. After a long consultation, it was proposed that Madud Khan, the Dost's cousin should be sent to Candahar, to persuade the chiefs there to accede to the demands of Herat, threatening them with force in the event of a refusal. The deliberations terminated with a Fatha, as if all had been satisfactorily decided upon. However, the next day, the mission of the Dost's cousin was given up, and an old and influential Dooranee, named Gholam Mahomed Khan, was selected in his stead. But this messenger has not yet left, and it remains to be seen if he will go at all. Sirdar Gholam Haider Khan is to carry on any negotiations that may take place with the British Government. He has in reality the implicit confidence of his father the Ameer, but it will be given out that there has been a quarrel between father and son, and that the latter has, in a fit of desperation, thrown himself into the arms of the English. This stratagem will, it is hoped, save the credit of the Ameer with the chiefs who are hostile to the policy; or will at least prevent any disturbance, until everything is satisfactorily arranged with the British commissioner. It is not yet decided whether Gholam Haider Khan is to wait on the English commissioner at Peshawur, or whether he will ask for a British officer to meet him half-way at Jellalabad. The people here at Cabul have a story that the British, with the consent of the Khan of Khelat, are about to build cantonments on both sides of the Bulan pass. From the Herat frontier we hear rumours that the Persians are steadily strengthening their army at Merw.

“There is also a report, but it is not credited, that the Russians are negotiating with the Herat chief for permission to strengthen and garrison the fort of Goorgan, which is situated about fifty miles from Asterabad, on the road to Herat and Khiva. On the same indifferent authority we hear that there are numerous Russian officers in the Persian camp at Merw.

“Dost Mahomed has just lost one of his daughters, who was married to the grandson of Meerdad Khan Khootuk.

“There has been a misunderstanding between Sirdar Gholam

The mails thus brought were taken on to Alexandria; they arrived at Malta Sept. 13th (per Tagus), and Marseilles Sept. 15th (per Vectis).

The Tagus, with the remainder, may be expected at Southampton on the 24th inst.

DEPARTURES OF EACH MONTH—MAILS FROM LONDON TO INDIA, CHINA, ETC.

Via Southampton (from London), at 8 o'clock in the morning of the 4th and 20th. It is advisable to post letters in London on the previous evening; if that day be Sunday, then on the evening of the 3rd and 19th; if Monday (of course) before 8 o'clock on that morning.

Postage, letters under  $\frac{1}{2}$  oz. . . . . 1s.
“ “ 1 oz. . . . . 2s.

Pre-payment is optional, but out of London it is the most certain to insure early despatch; and it will be preferable to affix stamps rather than to pay in money.—Newspapers, free.

Via Marseilles, on the 9th and 25th; if either of these days be Sunday, then on the 10th or 26th.

Postage (must be in stamps), letters, under  $\frac{1}{2}$  oz. 1s. 10d.
“ “  $\frac{1}{2}$  oz. 2s. 3d.

* * The Marseilles mails of the 9th and 25th overtake the Southampton mails of the 4th and 20th, at Malta; they arrive in India together.

Mahomed Khan and Sirdar Shere Ali Khan, owing to an intrigue, the particulars of which would not interest you.

"It is said that the son of Kohun Dil Khan, of Candahar, has returned from Persia with two thousand muskets, granted him by the Shah for the use of his infantry.

"As I think I told you before, Sher Khan and Elahee Buksh, sons of Sala Khan, of Cabul, who are now in India in the guise of merchants, keep the Ameer constantly supplied with news from all parts of India. The family of Daya Rao, at Kohat, also constantly send news for the Dost."

At Bombay, the order for the movement of the 10th Hussars to the seat of war has been countermanded, and that regiment stands fast for the present. An affair which, however, appears to have caused more excitement than the above change of orders, is the trial of Captain Haines, late political agent at Aden, for embezzlement; it lasted five days, and ended in an acquittal, much, as it appears, to the gratification of the Bombay community, or at least that portion thereof assembled in the court, by whom the verdict was received with demonstrations of applause. The defendant is not yet, however, safe, or was not at the date of the latest intelligence, for there were other indictments pending, and whether they were to be brought on or not seemed uncertain. On being questioned by the Judge, according to some papers, the Advocate-General said he intended to try them; according to others, he was undecided. The co-operation of the natives on the fast-day, in prayer for the success of the British arms in the war now raging, and for the restoration of peace, was so general as to have called forth a public expression of satisfaction and gratitude from the Governor in Council at Bombay. Without attaching much importance to the prayers of those who worship they "know not what," the fact of the concurrence of the natives in religious acts for such a purpose shows that they are not all quite so hostile to British rule as is sometimes represented at home.

The Nizam's irregular cavalry (commanded by British officers), and, it is said, some other corps, have tendered their services against the Russians; but these offers have been refused, as it might have been expected they would be.

One of the most gratifying things noticeable in the present state of India is the multiplication of lines of communication by electric telegraph. In Pegu, arrangements are in progress for their construction, and it is anticipated that early in next year a line will be in operation between Rangoon and Prome, to be subsequently extended to Calcutta.

In China affairs seem to be in a state of "confusion worse confounded." The "China Mail" of the 22nd July affords the following passage, from which it is to be inferred, that in certain parts at least of the country the insurgents do not make much way:—

"We have no reliable intelligence about the rebel movements in the north. The 'North-China Herald,' of July 15th, publishes extracts from the 'Peking Gazette' up to June 11th, from which we gather that the insurgents had certainly made no advance northward, nor had they gained any advantages in the few skirmishes that had taken place. Reports had reached Ngan-hwuy of the capture by them of Kemun, and the murder in cold blood of the district magistrate and the chief military officer; but the place was retaken within a few weeks. The merchants of Teen-tsin, besides enrolling a militia, had voluntarily offered to advance money on Government paper in payment of rice for the supply of the capital, on the understanding that the notes should be received in payment of the salt gabelle. It would appear, also, that the gentry of Thung-chow had at their own charges raised a corps of 11,870 men for the defence of Peking."

Thus much for Peking,—now for Canton, regarding which we find in the "Friend of China," also of the 22nd July, the particulars which we here extract:—

"Canton is now the point of all anxiety, and though not in the actual possession of rebels, it is, apparently, the next thing to it. As we write, a letter arrives, written yesterday, from which we learn that firing and fighting had been going on, on the hills in the rear of the city, for several hours, and every one was anxious to see what the result would be. Business at a complete stand-still, and all Chinese possessing the means moving away as fast as possible. The plans for capturing Canton appear to have been laid with much foresight and skill. All the troops that could be sent from the garrison were first attracted to the Toong-koon district. That being effected, Ho-Aluk, the rebel leader, then moved up the river towards Fat-shan, passing, with a body of three thousand picked men, it has been ascertained, within a couple of miles of the foreign factories."

"Fat-shan (a rich town some ten miles above Canton) being occupied, and the residents laid under tribute, Ho Aluk's bands now assail the Tartar encampment at the northward of the city. Two nights ago they made an attempt to enter the city at its northern and eastern gates, and not until they had captured two mandarins, and killed and wounded several others, did they desist from the attack. Before going to press, it is not unlikely that we may have to tell of the citadel having been taken, and the régime of a couple of centuries brought to a close.

"For the protection of British property at Canton, the Comus, 14 guns, is moored off the factories, and the sloop Racehorse is to go up from this to join her there in a day or two. The Americans have the steamers Queen and John Hancock, and schooner J. F. Cooper, with a couple of chop-boats, with some fourscore men from the Vincennes at Whampoa. This force is strong enough to effect anything necessary."

Before quitting China we may remark that its seas seem to be infested with hordes and fleets of pirates.

Japan from recent circumstances is becoming an interesting country, more especially to the mercantile community. Any information respecting it must consequently be acceptable, and that which follows is of the latest date.

"The news brought by the U. S. sloop Vandalia, which arrived at Woosung on the 13th June, though brief, is highly interesting.

"On the 5th April the sloop Saratoga left the Bay of Jeddo for Panama, having on board Captain Adams with despatches for Washington.

"On the 8th April the steam frigate Mississippi left Canagara for Little Jeddo, and thence proceeded to Simoda, the second port to be opened to American trade—a small unimportant place, with clean and broad streets, but poor shops, and where numerous beggars surrounded the visitors. The only building in the town worth seeing would appear to be a large temple. Simoda is to be the coal depôt, and the Japanese have promised to keep it well supplied.

"On the 13th of May the steamer left Simoda, and after a four days' voyage arrived in Khakodade, the third and the finest of the harbours to be opened to trade, situated at the eastern entrance of the Straits of Sangar, near the Sea of Ochotsk. The town is larger than Simoda, and business seems to be conducted on a better footing. Two hundred vessels, it is said, could anchor in safety in the bay at all seasons. Wood and water are abundant, and fish plentiful.

"During the voyage many whales were seen from the steamer, often three and four together; and from the vicinity of Khakodade to the cruising-ground, with its other advantages, the harbour will doubtless become the principal rendezvous of the whalers. The Japanese say they will be able to supply plenty of provisions, &c., when they understand precisely what foreigners require."

THE SMALL CAUSE COURT OF CALCUTTA.

The business of the Small Cause Court of Calcutta has slightly fallen off. The total number of cases which in 1852-53 was 26,881, amounted in 1853-54 to only 24,455. It is still, however, greatly in excess of the number instituted in 1850-51. Thus there were—

	1850-51.	'51-52.	'52-53.	'53-54.
English cases ..	4,407	4,544	4,796	4,397
Native .....	16,916	23,205	22,085	20,058
Total....	21,323	27,749	26,881	24,455

A real falling off to this extent would be a gratifying fact. It would indicate a great diminution in the tendency to institute fictitious claims, and an increase in the moral terror of the Court. Even in Europe the efficacy of a tribunal is to be judged, not by the number of suits it decides, but the number which it prevents. When John Smith is fairly convinced that a court will always compel him to pay a just debt, he finds it cheaper, as well as less discreditable, to pay without compulsion. In India, where the number of fictitious is equal to that of just claims, and where a bona-fide suit is often supported by perjured evidence, the process is infinitely more rapid. An absolutely wise court would have very few suits before it. The fraudulent creditor would pay at once, rather than incur the ultimate certainty of decree and costs. The vindictive claimant would shrink from the certainty of exposure and social punishment. The decline in the business of the Small Cause Court, however, is only partially attributable to this cause. The Court has enjoyed more holidays. It sat seventeen days less than in the former year; and as the average is ninety-four suits per diem, a very large number must at once be subtracted from the roll. Another cause is the decline of a branch of trade which all over India seems to involve the necessity of perpetual litigation. This is the business of the Ooriya cloth dealers, the great customers of the ancient court of requests. The poorest as well as the richest must have clothes of some kind. The business is carried on by men with capital, who can credit; the goods are not very perishable, and the suits in consequence are endless. They are diminishing, however. In 1824, the dealers instituted 9,024 suits; in 1830, 2,407; in 1853, 1,300; and in 1853-54, only 647. It is believed that this is owing to a positive decay of trade, caused by the decrease in the traffic of the Ooriya bearers. They have been supplanted by the Mussulmen horse dealers, who continue to let more popular conveyances, at rates scarcely higher than those of the palanquins. Moreover, the European suits do not increase. A newspaper is issued by the Court, containing a notice of the cases to be brought forward, and Europeans are annoyed by the publicity. They prefer paying their debts, and the precise object for which the Court was instituted is attained. Lastly, the number of cases under Rs. 10 slowly diminishes. It is still 15,155, or 62 per cent. of the whole, but it shows no tendency whatever to increase. The fact must be considered creditable to the Court. These suits arise from three causes, all curiously illustrative of the social condition of Calcutta. The first is wages, the second money-lending, and the third petty assault. With regard to wages, there appears to exist very considerable misconception. Employers in Calcutta complain that they have no control over their servants, and attribute their insolence to the Court, which always decrees that the arrear of wages must be discharged. Naturally enough they desire to withhold this arrear, as a punishment for what is practically a breach of contract. The Court, however, holds that no man can take advantage of his own wrong; and that if the master has not paid up to date, he has committed a wrong. He can have no possible lien on the wages which the forbearance of his servant leaves in his hands. Moreover, there is a class of men in Calcutta who make a practice of cheating their servants. These men engage more assistance than they can afford, keep their servants on in hope for months, then discharge them without characters, and resist payment of arrears because of "that silver spoon." It is this cause, among others, which produces the enormous number of suits for money lent. Nearly 7,000 (6,700) such claims were decided by the Court during the past twelve months. The servant cannot obtain his wages. Nevertheless, he must eat. If he were an Englishman, he would probably resort to the pawnbroker. As he is a native, he applies to the money-lender. That astute individual seldom demands any security. In fact, he has no desire ever to see his principal returned. He only demands an anna in the rupee per month, that is, seventy-five per cent. per annum, with compound interest calculated twelve times a year. In settling this interest, the quarrels arise. Neither party professes to keep any accounts. The borrower, however, has a vague idea that he is cheated, and at last resists payment, and is thrown into court. The judges, well aware that the principal has been repaid over and over again, endeavour to give the claimant as bare justice as possible, and Baboo Russomoy Dutt had a peculiar tact in comprehending and exposing this species of legal swindling. Lastly there remain the actions for assault. Nine times out of ten these are simply frauds. A native defeated in the war of words, makes affidavit of personal ill-treatment, and brings an action for assault. His object is simply to annoy, and the judges have set themselves so steadily against such suits, that the number is gradually reduced. The operations of the court, therefore, would appear to compel Europeans to discharge their debts, to limit excessive usury, and to decrease the number of suits intended as instruments of oppression. How completely these objects are effected may be best seen from the following figures:

Amount.	Cases.
Rs. 10 .....	15,115
50 .....	4,231
100 .....	922
200 .....	558

We have omitted details which embarrass the question.

The Court, moreover, has in another respect, fulfilled the object of its founders. It has rid suitors of the harpies who, under the title of vakeels and mooktears, are the legal pests of the courts of the interior. Last year, barristers appeared in court only twice, attorneys in only 149 cases, and pleaders in only 2,955. In the remaining 22,349 cases, the parties appeared themselves, and incurred therefore no expense beyond the fees of court. These latter are more than sufficient, though less than the average of the English county courts. The total amount of property in litigation was Rs. 508,820, and the fees amounted to twelve and a half per cent. upon this sum. We have, therefore, in Calcutta, arrived at this point. Justice may be obtained in less than a week for an expenditure of some eighth part of the amount in litigation. This degree of success has not yet been exceeded in England, and will not be, until politicians are convinced that justice is one of the objects of Government, and should be paid for, like the national defences, out of the national revenue.—Friend of India.

OUDE.

There is a class of men in existence with whom it is impossible to argue. When one argument is destroyed they bring forward a second, and when bereft also of that, they reproduce the old one as if it had never been discussed. They are all followers of King James the Second. That stupid monarch, says Macaulay, used to "assert a proposition; and as often as wiser people ventured respectfully to show that it was erroneous, he asserted it again in exactly the same words, and conceived that by doing so he at once disposed of all objections." What this class is to society, the opponents of annexation are to Indian journalism. They are constantly convicted, and never convinced. Formerly, they opposed annexation as "the simple right of force." They were driven from that position. Then they asserted, and made Parliament declare, that it was dangerous to the safety of the empire. It was shown that the pyramid is strengthened by widening its base. Lastly, they brought forward a cloud of figures to show that annexation was a costly amusement. We have proved that annexation, on a large scale, invariably pays. And now the Madras Spectator, in the old way, re-occupies the old ground, and, with antiquated arguments, tells us that Nagpore ought not to be annexed, and that our claim to it is simply the right of force.

We will not fall into the error we condemn. We decline to reopen in India the question of our claim upon Nagpore. But we will argue out the matter on ground not yet ours, and accept the litigation though we change the venue. We hold that the kingdom of Oude ought to be instantly annexed, and support our opinion by the arguments we have so frequently adduced. We have a moral and a legal right to annex Oude.

We have a moral right, because every man has a right to repent of the commission of a crime. We have committed a great national crime in Oude. The deeds of a single twelvemonth have left for ever a deep stain upon the memory of Warren Hastings. We have repeated those deeds every year for half a century. The Nizam of Oude desired to crush the Rohillas, and hired English soldiers to accomplish the task. For letting them out, for so infamous a purpose, Hastings has always been condemned. For fifty years we have let out our power to support the same family in the commission of precisely the same atrocities. The only difference is, that whereas the Nizam of that day oppressed his enemies, his successors add cowardice to cruelty, and oppress their own subjects instead of their foes, artisans instead of warriors, peaceful cultivators instead of armed chieftains. We have here, says a recent traveller in Oude, Asiatic sovereignty in perfection, "a sovereign surrounded by buffoons, parasites, and pandars, with an empty treasury, venal courtiers, and a lawless, licentious soldiery; placed in a country unequalled for fertility; rich in cereal and mineral treasures; intersected by fine rivers; and possessing some hundred miles of forest lands, yielding timber such as no other country can produce. A population, dense, industrious, and well behaved, yet ground down by every species of oppression, legal, fiscal, and martial; districts devastated for miles; villages unroofed, and rapine rampant. He that runs may read, and it requires no ghost from the realms below to expose the rottenness of affairs in such a country. Treaties violated or disregarded; solemn warnings treated with contempt; magnanimity described as weakness; and forbearance attributed to fear; peculation abounding in all departments; and the Courts of Justice, as a keen observer has well said, 'the name is a melancholy irony applied to tribunals in which the unblushing bribery can only be equalled by the profound ignorance of those who administer the laws.'"

This description, strong as it is, is not strong enough. It does not paint the infinite misery sustained by the population. Men who read such general statements, are apt to forget that every village burnt contains so many individual men, women, and children; that every fraud of a chuckladar brings all the horrors of invasion, and all the miseries of civil war home to the hearths of thousands; that every caprice of the king costs lives as well as money; and that every revolt ensures a devastation, like that which in the Palatinate has blackened for ever the memory of Louis the Magnificent. It is the biography of individuals that we want in such circumstances. Europe could listen quietly to the story of the "counter revolution" in Naples. It only began to sympathize when Mr. Gladstone related the individual sufferings of Poerio. He was tied to a galley slave. The Times said, that Providence might yet have a deeper degradation in store for him. It might tie him to the king of Naples. If we could write the history of a single Oude village, we should prove that there are Indian princes beside whom even king Bomba might feel himself disgraced. And for all this, for the oppressed people and the devastated villages, for the ruined families, and the social anarchy, for the extortions of the farmers-general, and the caprices of the king, we are as responsible as Hastings for the destruction of the Rohillas. Disguise it as we may, the government of Oude is our creation. It is an instrument not only suffered, but set up by ourselves. Without the ultimate aid of British bayonets, it would not be worth a week's purchase. The men who crowd into our ranks as sepoys, are not the men to endure an oppression unless it be irresistible. They would avenge themselves, but for us, and we are no more guiltless in the matter than the Russians were guiltless of the subjugation of Hungary.

The legal right to annex may be proved in briefer style. We need quote but one clause of the treaty:—

"It is hereby provided, that the King of Oude will take into his immediate and earnest consideration, in concert with the British Resident, the best means of remedying the existing defects in the police and in the judicial and revenue administrations of his dominions; and that if his Majesty should neglect to attend to the advice and counsel of the British Government or its local representative, and if (which God forbid) gross and systematic oppression, anarchy, and misrule should hereafter at any time prevail within the Oude dominions, such as seriously to endanger the public tranquillity, the British Government reserves to itself the right of appointing its own officers to the management of whatsoever portion of the Oude territory, either to a small or to a great extent, in which such misrule as that above alluded to may have occurred, for so long a period as it may deem necessary."

Words could scarcely be clearer, and the Indian Government in declining to annex, not only fosters oppression, but renders its own promise of none avail. It sacrifices millions to the interest of one, by hesitating to redeem its own pledged word.

We have left the Madras Spectator a better field for his rhetoric than Nagpore. That country is part of the British dominions, and can no more be surrendered than Yorkshire or Cornwall. Oude is not yet annexed. The Spectator's arguments may even avail to change the fixed resolution of our rulers, and thus he will enjoy a happy opportunity of supporting the absolute right of one, to perpetuate the misery of the many.—Friend of India.

THE NEW LAW OF EVIDENCE.

"There is nothing so false as figures, except facts," said Canning. That paradox appears to have been hitherto the basis of the English theory of legal evidence. It ignored facts. The testimony which convinced every body else was apparently for that very reason rejected by the expounders of the law. Partly from the distrust of perjury natural to barbarous nations, and partly from a reasonable suspicion of the Crown, the English lawyers bent every energy to restrict the admissibility of evidence. A man might be perfectly willing to state facts of which nobody else could possibly be cognizant, but he was an interested party, and his testimony therefore was considered worthless. He might be compelled to speak the truth under adroit cross-questioning, but the English law declared that he should not criminate himself. John Smith hears Thomas Brown declare that he has made his will. Thomas Brown is a truth-speaking man, and Smith believes him, but he must not state that belief in Court, because it is hearsay evidence. If, however, he in the same place, at the same time, and in the same manner hears Brown acknowledge a debt, he may state that fact, and his statement would be competent testimony. It is against Brown's interest, and the law presumes that a man will never utter a falsehood against his own interest. It never stops to consider that the real question is not Brown's motive, but Smith's credibility, which is exactly equal in both cases, but is allowed in the one and denied in the other. A merchant receives a book from a correspondent, containing certain accounts. He considers that book as prima-facie evidence of the accounts, until the contrary is proved. The law will do nothing of the kind, but rejects the book as evidence altogether. Two specimens of handwriting are produced in court. Every one with two eyes is ready to vouch for their identity. The law holds all such evidence worthless, and demands the testimony of some one who has seen the person, whose signature is produced, write, or has received letters from him. It is not that the law simply demands proof more circumstantial and exact, than private individuals are able or entitled to require. To such carefulness it would be impossible to object. But the law positively refuses to accept this evidence quantum valeat. It holds that the jury is competent to decide on the facts from the testimony produced, and the opinion includes the ability to comprehend the value of evidence. Yet it will not permit the jury to receive all kinds of evidence, to estimate Brown's motives or Smith's credibility, but decides arbitrarily that such and such kinds of evidence only are admissible, and if the facts cannot be ascertained from them they must remain concealed. The cause of justice is hampered by quibblings, and collated testimony is at once deprived of its legal value. Yet "circumstantial evidence," which is seldom anything beyond a collection of small facts of a similar description, is sufficient to convict the murderer.

At length the current of public opinion has begun to change. It is felt that the main object of the tribunals is to elicit truth, and not to protect crime. The great bulwarks of freedom are giving way one after the other. Amidst the vaticinations of the older lawyers, and the tears of Baron Parke, a man has been permitted to give evidence in his own suit. The innovation has extended to India, has been productive of the happiest results, and has emboldened the legislature to take another step in advance. The Calcutta Gazette of the 26th July contains a bill of a new law of evidence. It is said to have been drafted by Sir Lawrence Peel, and is creditable alike to his legal knowledge and his liberality of purpose. It contains fifty-three clauses; and it is not too much to say that each one of the fifty-three strikes down some cherished absurdity. The general principle of the bill may be briefly explained. It admits every description of evidence, quantum valeat. It leaves to the jury, or to the judges where there is no jury, the task of deciding upon the light in which the testimony is to be regarded. If its force depends upon the credibility of the witness, they will form a judgment of his character. If it rests in an aggregate of probabilities, they will estimate the circumstances which create that probability. All sorts of technical obstructions are swept away. Courts are to take notice of each other, of official personages, of British statutes, and of foreign codes. They are not to refuse to recognize the existence of any particular Act of Parliament, of such a person as the Lieutenant-Governor, of a local law, or a foreign custom. No witness is to be rejected, except for intellectual infirmity. If he is a child, and cannot understand an oath, he is still to give his evidence. If he is an infidel, and holds no oath to be binding, he is still to give his testimony, and to suffer the penalties of perjury if he gives it falsely. One witness is to be sufficient in law, except in cases of treason, with which, as a matter of prerogative, the Indian legislature was incompetent to interfere. A party may discredit his own witness, books are to be admitted as corroborative proof, and entries are to be held sufficient for the identification of property. Comparisons of handwriting, the great bugbear in matters of written evidence, are to be permitted. Powers of attorney signed at a distance, will require no further proof than the evidence of the person producing them; the production of a letter-book is to be prima-facie proof of the contents and despatch of the letter; and, lastly, the certified copy of a public document is evidence, "so long as it is drawn up in the form, and purports to be executed in the manner directed by the statute, act, regulation, or ordinance which makes it evidence."

We have not space for the remainder of the provisions. They are almost all technical; those which we have quoted involve principles, and their object is admirably summed up in the last clause of all:—

"The provisions in this Act contained shall apply to extend, but not to restrict the law and practice of the courts of the East-India Company or other courts as to the reception of evidence. In no court shall the improper admission or rejection of evidence be ground of itself for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case, if it shall appear to the Court before which such objection is raised, that independently of the evidence admitted and objected to, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision, or that if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have varied the decision."

For the future, therefore, the courts of law will have almost the same means of ascertaining the truth which private individuals possess. We shall have fewer cases in which the verdict of the public and the verdict of the law, moral certainty and legal demonstration, are diametrically opposed. Criminals will be unable to avail themselves of technical difficulties, property will not be lost because of the inadmissibility of some conclusive evidence; and, though last not least, the utility of attorneys in making evidence presentable will be materially diminished.

We require but one step more, the abolition of the custom which protects the guilty from criminating himself. This custom, originally maintained, we suspect, as a protection against the use of torture, is now indefensible except as a premium on crime. Why should not the criminal be interrogated? If he is guilty, why refuse to society the chance of discovering his guilt from evasive or contradictory replies? If innocent, in what manner does the interrogation increase his danger? We have heard but two forcible arguments in defence of the English practice. The first is that a man on trial, perhaps for his life, is under a terrible temptation to commit perjury. Yet the very Legislature which advances this objection, compels the same man to plead guilty or not guilty. The objection may be removed by permitting him to reply to the interpellations without an oath. If he tells the truth, the jury may discover the clue to the crime. If he speaks falsely, the detected falsehood,—and falsehood is soon exposed by cross examination—will be an additional evidence of guilt. The second objection is, that such questioning converts the judge into a special pleader. The delight in his own skill, and the vanity natural to mankind, alike tempt him to convict the prisoner, and the failure of his efforts leaves a bias produced by irritation. This has frequently been the case in France, and the objection to the French practice is undoubtedly sound. Its force, however, is destroyed, if the office of interrogator is separated from the function of the judge, and the task is assigned to the public prosecutor, or the opposing counsel. We have no hope of any such innovation for the present. The conventional custom has become a national belief, and men reason in its defence, as if it were a moral law which it was impious even to attack. Nevertheless no man in private life scruples to ask the accused, "Are you innocent or guilty?"—Friend of India.

THE EXCISE ON SALT.

It has been resolved to try the experiment of permitting the manufacture of salt under a system of excise. The resolution is important, not merely in itself, but as the first great administrative effort of the new Government of Bengal. From the day on which Sir John Packington, in the teeth of the ministry, carried through the House of Commons his denunciation of the monopoly, it has been evident that this experiment must at last be tried. The House of Commons never gives up a philanthropic cry. It was easy in this country to reply to Sir John Packington. He obviously cared only for Droitwich, and Droitwich cared only for an increase of its exports. His facts were all borrowed from the pamphlets of adventurers, his figures were always incorrect, and his monody over the unhappy Bengalees, half-eaten by worms, was a subject rather for scorn than for discussion. Still he contrived to elicit the real feeling of the House. The Commons represent England, and Englishmen have an hereditary hatred of monopolies. It was the will of Parliament that the experiment should be tried, be the consequences what they might. Moreover, the staunchest defenders of the monopoly have long felt that it was advisable, if possible, to levy the revenue in a form less obnoxious to popular feeling. The real character of the monopoly signified nothing. A tax should appear light as well as be so, and a monopoly can never appear light. It was a perpetual bone of contention between the Indian Government and the British people. Every disappointed speculator, every dismissed servant, and every crotchety member of Parliament could always find an audience, to hear him rail against the Company which supported the "iniquitous salt monopoly." The people at large did not understand the facts, and with regard to Indian affairs, the ancient proverb may be changed into omne ignotum pro malefico. Impressed with these views, and really anxious to discover the least oppressive form of levying the tax, the Government of India despatched Mr. G. Plowden to investigate the subject, in all the salt districts of the three presidencies.

Meanwhile, the new administration of Bengal was organised. Mr. Halliday, as appears from his evidence before the committee, was not only aware of the popular obloquy incurred by the monopoly, but convinced of the possibility of a reform. He believed that the tax might be levied, like the tax on spirits in England, by an excise. One of his first efforts, therefore, was to suggest a trial of the experiment in one of the abandoned factories. The difficulties in the way were numerous. It was necessary to preserve the revenue, yet allow the independent manufacturer some liberty of action. It was necessary to allow a number of independent factories in the jungles, yet prevent smuggling. The year was a bad one for the trial. There was a cry of a deficiency of salt, and therefore a desire to cover every inch of the salt swamps with the Government manufacture. At the same time it was necessary to leave the experiment room to succeed. For the sake, not of the Government, but of the private manufacturer, it was impossible to permit it in the manufacturing districts. He could not hope to contend in the labour market with the salt agent, who, besides the prestige of half a century, has an army of disciplined subordinates, and the control of the Government purse. The difficulties one and all gave way to determination, and the sanction of the Supreme Government was obtained to a plan, which must be judged by its results, but which appears fairly adapted for success. The abandoned Aurrang of the 24-Pergunnahs has been selected as the scene of the experiment. It is the best for the manufacturer. It is more fertile in salt—if we may employ such an expression—than any other, and it is in the neighbourhood of Calcutta. Two localities have been selected, where the independent manufacturer will be allowed to work. These localities, heretofore employed by Government itself, will be let out at nominal rents, say three annas a beegah, to anybody who chooses to engage in the undertaking. He will take out from the nearest supervising officer a license—for which he will not pay—for the manufacture of a certain number of maunds. At present, we believe, to avoid the applications of persons without means, and to limit the number of separate establishments, this number must not be less than 2,000 maunds. The manufacture will be watched by the Darogah day by day, just as it is watched in the Government Aurrang, and reported to the agent, as it is reported now. There will be no new restrictions, and no attempt made to harass the manufacturer who intends to secure an honest profit, and pay an honest tax. The salt, when manufactured, will be carried to a store-house, or for the present to an empty government golah. If the manufacturer chooses, and is rich enough, he may give security for the amount of tax. The store-house will then become a bonded-warehouse. He will have absolute control over the salt, and will pay his duty at the time, and in the way, most convenient to himself and to the government. If he has not enough capital, or better ways of employing it, the process will still be easy. The store-house will be watched by a government officer. The manufacturer will send the purchaser to the agent, who on the receipt of the duty, will grant a permit to remove so many maunds. That permit is the Darogah's warrant for delivery, and the purchaser's safe-conduct against any charge of smuggling.

There may be little additions of detail in the rules about to be made public, but this is the general outline of the scheme. The doubt of course is whether the restrictions are sufficient to prevent the extension of the illicit trade. This can be tested only by actual experiment, and in any case, the chances of successful bribery—for that is the real obstacle to success—appear to be as great under the monopoly as under the more liberal excise. As to the desire of capitalists to engage in the traffic, no doubt whatever seems to be entertained. It is believed that the manufacture upon these terms must be popular, and that if so, the experiment must succeed. The speculator will have the advantage of a population habituated for years to every detail of the manufacture. He will reap the profit of an economy, which can be secured only by the minute and vigilant inspection dictated by private interests. He engages in a trade which knows no limit, and can experience no glut, and he produces an article which fifty millions of people cannot do without. We really know of no other requisites necessary to constitute profitable trade.

One difficulty remains. It is one which we should never dream of mentioning in any other country than Bengal. It is possible that intending manufacturers may distrust, not the bona fides, but the heartiness of government in the cause. They may dread lest the experiment should be intended as a blind. They may fear the influence of official prejudices, and of that silent opposition of inertia which has frustrated so many experiments in Bengal. The fear is produced partly by ignorance of the true character of the government, and partly by the rustiness of portions of its machinery. In the present instance it may be finally laid aside. We can state authoritatively, that the lieutenant-governor intends his experiment to be successful, and, so far as in him lies, will see that it becomes so. If an enlarged experience should prove that any of the restrictions imposed are unnecessary, or unduly vexatious, a fair representation of the facts will ensure reform. The object of the government is to substitute an excise for the monopoly, and to leave the manufacture as free as is consistent with the security of the revenue.—Friend of India.

CULTURE OF FLAX AND HEMP IN BUNDELCUND.

Now that blood has been shed on both sides, our commercial relations with Russia will never again be resumed with that degree of confidence, or to that extent, that existed before the present war. The flax of Riga and St. Petersburg will therefore become a scarce article in the English markets, and England must look to its own colonies to supply the deficiency. This can easily be done, by directing the funds England advances to Russian growers to British India. With less capital than what English merchants now expend in Russia, India can produce flax which will not be inferior in fibre, or colour, to the Riga flax, which is considered the best in the world. India wants the capital, and millions of its untitled acres, that lie between the right banks of the Jumna and the Bundelcund range of hills, could be turned into flax and hemp fields, for the growth of which the soil is peculiarly well adapted. There the grower will not find the difficulties he has to contend with in these provinces, arising out of the rights of a prior, and a prescriptive occupancy of the soil by the native cultivator, which is the chief cause of our indigo cultivation being so disproportionate to the spirit of enterprise directed towards this staple product of British India. In Bundelcund the soil is almost free and unoccupied, and the land-rent is also so low that failure in the cultivation of either of these two products, flax and hemp, would be impossible. There are numerous hill-streams with clear water over the whole country, that would admirably serve the purpose of steeping; and abundant material for building abounds in the hills of slate-stone and red granite, that now can be purchased to any size and any quantity, for a moderate sum. The population of Bundelcund is small, and the villages scattered, and at great distances from one another; and there is a lack of industry in the working population, to which cause may be attributed the apparent poverty of the country, and the backwardness of its agricultural products. To the British capitalist and planter, these trifling difficulties would not long be impediments to success, as labourers could be procured from the districts of this province, for instance, Jounpore, Azimghur, and Ghazepore, where the population so exceeds the demand for agricultural labour that hundreds and thousands may be seen emigrating just before the rains set in, to the Goruckpore district, to take farms in the terai of Goruckpore, but where the emigrants are decimated by the jungle fever; yet the tide of emigration does not stop. The labourer faces death rather than remain in his own overpopulated village to starve. The climate of Bundelcund is free from the scourge called the jungle fever; between the hills and the Jumna, it is more healthy than many of our districts in the Doab provinces are, and would, on that account alone, be a place of inducement for the surplus population of the above-named districts. To make this part of India attractive to the British planter or capitalist, the Government have a primary duty to fulfil, which is to make two lines of a good commercial road. The first from a place called Mow, on the banks of the Jumna, to Banda, via Ramnuggur, Tirhowan, and Bodowsa; and the next from Mow to Mirzapore, via Sewragpore and Kirce—the local committee funds will not be enough to make an attempt even, but the Government could give the local committee of Mirzapore and Banda a loan from the public treasury to construct the roads, which loan could be repaid by charging a toll on all merchandize and passengers. In the course of a few years, by the increased traffic that these improvements will cause, the loan will be diminished, and eventually paid up. Government, as the landlord of the soil, is bound to introduce these improvements into Bundelcund, which country, in consequence of a poor population, and want of energy in the zemindar class of people, is every year a defaulter to Government for the public revenue. Several estates have changed hands by having been brought to the hammer for such arrears, and under the more moderate policy of Mr. Thomason, several estates are now held Kham; and to maintain their value, Government is obliged to make advances from its own purse to the cultivators as an inducement for them to cultivate their farms, and not to desert the village.

This extraneous kind of aid is but little appreciated by the cultivators, therefore can never effect the reforms and improvements intended to be gained by the measure, the spirit of industry is lacking, and this can only be attained by improving the means of internal communication that will give the grower confidence, that within a stipulated time his produce will reach a market, and be safe from injury. If government will only notice this subject in the light it deserves to be treated, in a few years Bundelcund will be a different country to what it now is, and we may behold flax and hemp factories all over the country where it is hardly grown now. There has been an attempt made to improve the transit communication of the district of Banda, by the commissioner, Mr. Lowther, to whose individual and personal energies the public are indebted for the metalled road, which is equal to the Grand Trunk road in construction, having bridges all over the streams and ruts that intersect its way; but when it comes to be known that it cost Mr. Lowther ten years of perseverance before the government would sanction the outlay required for its construction, it may be hopeless for this generation to expect the other proposed lines to be constructed at all. The Bundelcund landholders are almost on the brink of insolvency, and if the facilities of traffic are not soon introduced, government will suffer as landlords, and the population become more and more impoverished, so that a change of policy would not benefit them. The government is bound to provide its tenants with the means of transit, such as good commercial roads for the products of the soil, and the revenue of the State ought to bear their proportion in the outlay for such works. The present system of taxing the Zemindar for construction and repairs of roads in his district, is impolitic—he cannot afford the tax; government must provide the means as it best can. Public highways are, properly speaking, government property, and must be paid for by government.—Benares Recorder, July 15.

COMMERCE OF BENGAL.

We gather from Campbell's Commercial Annual for 1853-54, that the total value of merchandize and treasure imported and exported during the year under review amounted to Rs. 19,13,93,703, of which the Imports embrace Rs. 7,71,89,038, and the Exports 11,42,04,665, against a total value of Rs. 20,05,73,672 in 1852-53; thus showing a falling off of nearly ninety-two lakhs on the trade of the previous year, which, we regret to perceive, is chiefly attributable to a reduction in the value of exports to England, France, and China, which, in some measure, is counterbalanced by an increased trade with other countries. The Import business, however, shows a decided increase, for we find that, from Great Britain alone, the value of goods imported is computed at Rs. 4,50,64,721, against Rs. 3,76,25,276 in 1852-3; whereas the Exports show only Rs. 3,95,04,043, against Rs. 4,37,78,348 in the previous year, the balance of trade between Great Britain and Bengal being thus in favour of the former country.

The total amount of custom dues collected in 1853-54, was on exports and imports Rs. 78,73,618-5-9, showing a decrease of Rs. 16,84,457-10-3 on the income of the previous year, being equivalent to a falling off of nearly twenty-one per cent. The decrease is most perceptible in importations of salt, and on bonded salt imported on British bottoms, whilst on the other hand there is an increase in the importation of bonded salt in foreign ships.

The statement exhibiting the amount of import and export tonnage will take everybody by surprise, for while scarcity of tonnage formed a standing complaint, it appears that both the number of ships, as well as the amount of tonnage in 1853-54 exceeded that of the previous year, for we find that in 1853-54 there were against the following in 1852-53.

909 departures	421,827 "
Total.. 1,732	827,924
856 arrivals	419,066 "
813 departures	407,801 "

giving an absolute increase in 1853-54 of 63 vessels and 1,123 tons.

The trade in native coasting vessels shows a most satisfactory result to the revenue. There is a considerable increase in the tonnage, and the customs collections exhibit a surplus of Rs. 63,357-13-6 on comparison with the previous year. The increase is, however, derived from the import trade, the exports having decidedly fallen off. On the whole, the customs revenue has, during the year for which the report is made up, not been so favourable as during the preceding year.

ORGANIZATION OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

The question is settled. For the present the Indian Legislature will not admit the public to its deliberations. When its system has been hardened by time, and its members become familiar with oral discussion, when its forms have stood the test of experience, and its character has been fixed by successful legislation, the advantages of publicity may be reconsidered. For the present, the Legislature deems itself in its infancy, and with somewhat precocious wisdom declines to part with the bandages, which support while they restrain the child. Deeply as we regret this decision, we cannot honestly condemn its authors. The consequences of publicity appear even to us so momentous, that we can scarcely blame the Council for hesitating to incur them. The arguments on both sides are so nearly balanced, that we cannot consider it unnatural for the most conservative statesmen in the world to adhere for a moment to those in which they have been trained. The Council doors must ultimately be opened, and for the present we must rest satisfied with believing that if secrecy diminishes energy, it secures independence, and that it restrains unprofitable talk, as well as the healthy influence of public opinion.

We are not of course aware of the grounds on which the decision has been based. One political argument will, however, readily suggest itself. Publicity is often held to imply responsibility. The Indian Legislature is not responsible, either to the white aristocracy who would read its debates, or the millions who will experience the effects of them. It is responsible to Parliament alone, and Parliament has expressed no opinion on the necessity of open doors. There is force in the argument, though it is overrated, and at all events the question is settled for the day.

This difficulty postponed, the new Legislature has set itself earnestly to work. It is exempt from any risk of the dangers of idleness. The old Legislature latterly postponed everything to the formation of the new and more extended Council. Human business and official thought could not stop for Indian etiquette. There was, besides, a sudden development of the desire for immediate improvement. The legislators slept, and the thinkers on legislation multiplied their schemes. There were scores of "projects of law" and no laws. The result was the accumulation of enormous arrears. One hundred and sixty draft Acts "await consideration," and unless the Council frames laws as Lord Brougham gave decisions, by instinct, it has business in hand sufficient for six years. The work at this moment actually doing equals the average public business of Parliament. There is that interminable Penal Code, with all Macaulay's notes, and all Bethune's erasures, all the Council's minutes, and all Mr. Peacock's queries, to be driven on. No sane man ever expects to see it in the Gazette, but still there it is, and clause by clause, chapter by chapter, it must be laboriously considered. There is no Mr. Livingston in the Council, to outroyer a code, and if there were, the Council would not abnegate its functions in his favour. Then there is a Railway Bill which, unlike the code, must be passed, if the lives of the lieges are not to burden the legislative conscience. A law of patents is now framing. The law of arrest still requires improvement. The usury laws are to be reformed, and the Council will scarcely adopt the summary logic of the Punjab Code. There is an Oath's Bill, as troublesome as that on which Lord John Russell broke down, for we have three creeds to conciliate, of which one repudiates oaths in theory, and the second in practice, while the third considers an oath almost essential to perjury. Laws for the marine, laws for the internal organization of the Supreme Court, a law of evidence, and a law for the management of the presidency banks, are among the questions now before the Council. That they demand grave and careful consideration will be conceded by the strongest advocate of legislative speed. That they will not yet be passed will be allowed by all who understand what "grave consideration" means in India.

Every expedient, however, has been adopted to render the movements of the Council as swift as is consistent with success. As we predicted, the French system of select bureaux has been imported into India. Every one of these laws is referred to a select committee. That committee is not chosen by lot. It is not chosen on party grounds. It is, we believe, composed of three, four, or five members who are known to have a special acquaintance with the business in hand. Thus we understand that the bill for the presidency banks is considered by Messrs. Dorin, Allen, and Malet, the two first being, or having been, financial secretaries and ex-officio directors of the Bank of Bengal. The law of evidence is entrusted to Sir Lawrence Peel, Sir James Colville, and Mr. Peacock, all trained lawyers; to Mr. Mills, who is drawing up a code of procedure; and to Mr. Grant, who possesses a special aptitude for judicial questions. For the railway bill there are the representatives of the minor presidencies, an arrangement which secures the local knowledge indispensable to success, and Mr. Peacock. Every bill proposed is thus placed in the crucible. The subject is exhausted in committee, and the result of the investigation undertaken and the information collected is finally submitted to the entire body. The system may be considered complete, though caution will be required to obviate the great Indian danger of unreasonable delay.—Friend of India.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL RAINIER'S REMOVAL FROM THE ARMY.

It was stated lately that among the reforms proposed by the army commission in England was the abolition of the rank of major,—an officer who has led hitherto a very gentlemanly existence, having had to perform very little duty, that little of an easy nature. With hardly any authority in the regiment, except when in temporary command of it during the absence of the lieutenant-colonel, it was generally supposed that he had little or no responsibility; but it seems that this was an erroneous impression, which we may be excused for entertaining in common with many others, because we do not arrogate to ourselves any intimate acquaintance with the regulations of the Horse Guards, according to which it now appears that a major is to act the spy for the higher military authorities, and report to them upon the conduct of his lieutenant-colonel, and if he does not do so he is to be held responsible for, and punished for such irregularities as his superior officer may commit. Such being the case we can only hope it is true that the grade of major is to be abolished, for otherwise ninety-nine out of every hundred of the high-minded and honourable gentlemen who hold the rank of captain in Her Majesty's army will decline promotion which is to entail upon them the performance of a duty against which the spirit of every gentleman must rebel.

These remarks have been induced by the perusal of the statement of Lieutenant-Colonel Rainier's case made in the Morning Chronicle. We consider our contemporary's remarks so just, and his defence of Lieutenant-Colonel Rainier so proper, that we have made room for his article, although it is a long one. Lieutenant-Colonel Rainier was, at the time when the disgraceful occurrences, which have led to so much misery, took place, in the 98th, only a major; he was, however, second in command, and therefore the fittest person to hand up such matters to army head-quarters; but, as very clearly shown by the Chronicle, he was about the last man in the regiment likely to hear of what was going on; and unless he had been in possession of evidence, by which he could have proved every statement, so as not to leave the shadow of doubt as to the correctness of his assertions, he would have been the most fool-hardy man in the service had he brought any accusation against his commanding officer; for although he might have convicted him, he would have brought down ruin upon himself had he failed to substantiate each and every allegation adduced.

It is opposed to every idea of military discipline for a junior officer to arraign his senior. We could point to many instances in which such has been done, and in every one the accuser has been more or less a sufferer, and through the rest of his career a marked man. We would go more at length into this matter, but it is hardly necessary, since the article we have taken from the Chronicle is evidently written by one who is acquainted with all the facts of the case. We could wish that he had not assigned motives for this harsh and cruel order; as he does so we presume he is behind the scenes, and that there is some officer who is to be served by placing Lieut.-Col. Rainier on the shelf, perhaps more than one. The injustice done appears to us so glaring, and the impolicy of the measure so apparent, that we think the case might have been allowed to rest upon its merits. If, as insinuated, Lieut.-Col. Rainier is to be removed with a view to benefit his juniors, we can only say that every man connected with so base an intrigue, deserves to be dismissed from his employment.—Hurkaru.

PROSPERITY OF THE INDIAN EXCHEQUER.

During the last eighteen months we have more than once drawn the attention of our readers to the increasing prosperity of the Indian exchequer. We warned the public not to give credence to various assertions put forth by a contemporary, and we assured those who fondly expected the opening of another loan at a higher rate of interest that there was not the remotest prospect of their expectations being realised. We did not write upon mere speculation, but with facts before us; and such being the case, we ventured to hint at the probable position which the money market would maintain, and the turn which rates of exchange were likely to take in the course of the twelvemonth. What we anticipated has occurred. Money is as abundant as ever, the rates of interest low, and those who have funds to remit to England can do so only at a sacrifice. Anybody who paid attention to monetary affairs, and who was not either giving way to self-delusion, or bent upon a systematic perversion of facts, could have formed no different conjectures. With decreasing expenditure in the face of a steadily augmenting revenue; with a reduction in the annual interest payable by the State; and with the application of the shears of economy to every public department, it was clear that there would be a considerable surplus, and that such surplus would continue increasing almost upon the basis of compound interest.

The Friend of India now furnishes us with a rough statement of the gross revenue and gross charges of the Indian empire in 1851-52, which, after providing for the home expenses, as well as for the outlay of the war, shows a surplus of Rs. 72,00,000. The year 1852-53, for which the accounts are not yet rendered, shows a still greater surplus; but where the result will tell most favourably, will be in the accounts of 1853-1854, the estimates of which have been carefully drawn up and already submitted. It is in those accounts, in which the effects of the tranquillisation of Burmah, of the reduced rate of interest payable by the State, and of other financial and economical reforms will become apparent. The saving effected by those measures is itself considerable, but if, in addition to this, it be taken into consideration that the revenue itself has in every other presidency greatly increased, it is obvious that the surplus must be very great, being derived from a double source, namely, increased gross revenue, and decreased expenditure. We believe that, according to the estimates alluded to, the net surplus for 1853-1854 is expected to reach about two million pounds sterling; and it is a not less remarkable fact, that a very fair share of such surplus is contributed by one department alone, the commissariat, in which is set down at very nearly twenty lacs of rupees. If, with such facts before them, people still look forward to the opening of a new loan at a higher rate of interest, and are disappointed, they can only blame themselves. The war with Russia, if protracted for a considerable length of time, may have the effect of causing funds now floating in the commerce with this country to be withdrawn from it, and thus exercise an influence on our money market, but such would hardly produce a heavy pressure, and, at all events, could not affect the Indian exchequer, which, by its enormous cash balances, is in a position to furnish the sinews wherewith to carry on, even an Indian war, for a long time, without the necessity of having recourse to borrowing.—Hurkaru.

ENGLISH THEORIES AND INDIAN FACTS.

Mr. Temple's report on the administration of the Punjab has been well received in England. One journal only, while admitting the literary ability, and political interest of the report, distrusts its statements, and denies its conclusions. We need not say it is the Examiner. That journal has for years been remarkable for the ignorant malignity with which it discusses the efforts of the Government of India. In the present instance, it roundly asserts that the annexation has been a failure, and the Punjab does not pay:—

"In the first year of our rule we had a surplus revenue over expenditure of 520,000*l.*, and in the second of 650,000*l.*; but the charges do not include the Punjab's share of those for the general government, or of the Indian debt, or any part of the regular army, all of which are thrown on old Bengal. Of these omitted charges, the strangest and the most flagrant are the military; for in the very years referred to in the report, we find, from the statements submitted to Parliament by the East-India Directors themselves, that the regular troops serving in the Punjab amounted to no fewer than 82,863, which must have cost about double the whole gross revenue of the new acquisition. Surely the presence of these 'four score thousand bayonets' goes a good way towards accounting for the boasted tranquillity of the Punjab. When all these matters are considered, it becomes pretty certain that the Punjab gives no surplus at all."

We should be almost ashamed to reply to so preposterous a statement, but that it may be credited by others as ignorant as the Examiner. The eighty-three thousand bayonets are not an addition to the expense of the Punjab. There were not levied because it was annexed. They would not be disbanded if the province were surrendered. They form a part of the Indian standing army, and when our frontier was extended, were ordered to move upwards. The other day one-third of all the troops in England were collected on Chobham Common. Was their pay charged to Surrey? Yet that proceeding would be at least as reasonable as to charge the Punjab with the army coiled up round Lahore instead of Meerut. Moreover, the statement about the debt and the central government, plausible as it appears, is equally untrue. Under the Indian system, each province pays for itself first, and then contributes its surplus to the general expenditure. The arrangement in the Punjab is the same as in Bengal, except that the former pays half a million towards the debt, the army, and the supreme government, while the latter contributes twelve times as much. The only reason for making out a special budget for the Punjab is, that we have provinces like Scinde, which do not yet pay their own expenses. Every penny raised in the Punjab above its local expenses is a direct gain to the empire, i. e. we should not have had it had the country not been annexed. We beg leave to assure the Examiner—though he will discredit the statement—that there are men in India who can count that our rulers of provinces even if tyrants are not fools, and that Lord Dalhousie knows that two and two are four just as well as he did when at the Board of Trade.

The reviewer proceeds summarily to demolish a theory believed in by the government, maintained by the press, and accepted by every man in India of ordinary intelligence.

"The commissioners ascribe the discontent and distress, however, not to over-assessment, but to the cheapness produced by a production in excess of demand; or, in other words, they have recourse to the long ago exploded excuse of 'a glut,' as producing an unnatural and injurious cheapness of agricultural produce. They are mistaken. In every well-ordered state of society, cheapness of food is a cause not of distress, but prosperity, and our own country affords very many illustrations of this undeniable fact. But there is never so ostentatious a conviction on the part of the Indian governments that they are all right, as when every man of common knowledge and sagacity sees that they are all wrong."

There spoke the true English doctrinaire, the man who is utterly unable to comprehend any state of society but his own. He knows that in England, where the consumers are to the producers as three to one, cheap food is an advantage. He knows that society in England is well ordered. Ergo in "every well ordered state of society, cheapness of food is a cause not of distress but of prosperity." We might question the fact; we might argue that food is cheaper in Tipperary than in London, and in the Papal States than both, but the argument is unnecessary. The Examiner's postulate is wanting. Asiatic society, according to English ideas, is not "well ordered." It has no Manchester men. It has few traders, and no idle classes, except soldiers, writers, priests, and beggars. Everybody else cultivates the land, and everybody obtains from the land one single cereal.

There is little foreign exportation, and the people of the rice-districts will not eat the wheat of the corn countries. The harvest, therefore, must either be eaten in the province in which it grows, or rot, and when the land is fertile, it is often too great to be eaten in time. The surplus is thrown into the market at any or no rate, and the consequent fall in price shows the existence of a glut. The presence of too much food is incomprehensible to an Englishman, but we will lower the argument to the comprehension of the Examiner. Suppose the exportation of piece goods suddenly to cease, while the production kept on at its old rate. When everybody in England had been clothed, would there be a glut or not? And suppose, furthermore, that three-fourths of the population lived on this cotton trade, would not the inevitable fall of the price per yard reduce them to distress? That is precisely the case with our food manufacture, which the Examiner is unable to comprehend.

We do not say the evil is irremediable. We believe it to be nothing of the kind. With a railway to Lahore, and steamers large enough to carry heavy goods, we shall pour our superfluity upon Europe. When red wheat from the Doab is sold in Mark-lane at thirty shillings a quarter, the Examiner will modify its opinion as to the prosperity produced by a superabundance of food.—Friend of India.

THE MINERAL RESOURCES OF INDIA.

What Government ought to have done half a century ago,—what private enterprise would have carried out long ere this, had the least encouragement been held out by the East-India Company, is now on the point of being effected by the force of circumstances. The mineral resources of India are no longer to remain undeveloped; the ferruginous wealth which nature has scattered around us is no longer to be disregarded; the well-deserved reproach of our importing from abroad and paying dearly for what exists in abundance within our reach, if we only will take the trouble of gathering it, is to be silenced; in short, we are henceforth to produce our own iron,—at least that portion of it required for the construction of our rail. An advertisement of the managing director and agent of the Indian Railway Company assures us that a qualified practical iron-viewer (?) will be sent out from England, upon whose report, after personal inspection of the several districts indicated, should it prove favourable, the Indian Iron Company, already completely reorganised on the western coast of India, will, it is believed, be prepared to despatch the men and machinery necessary for at once establishing iron-works on a limited but sufficient scale, upon the most eligible site which shall have been selected, with due regard to the proximity of the materials and the convenience of cheap communication. The advertisement further states, that the Railway Company will for some years require all the iron that can be produced from such source, and that the necessary arrangements are to be decided upon in October next.

If the promises held out are fulfilled, and we have no doubt they will be, we shall have from that period to date a new era in the commercial history of India. It will be the first important step towards the redemption of those vast treasures which have been allowed to remain for so long a time undisturbed in their hidden repositories, and it will create a branch of industry which, under a government that understood how to appreciate the value of the development of natural resources, would long ago have rendered the country independent of foreign supply. The Railway Company states that the iron company will be prepared to establish iron works on a limited scale. This is a matter of prudence; but we have not the least doubt that, before many years, the initiatory step will be followed throughout the country; for, as railways will sooner or later traverse India in all directions, iron works will spring up accordingly, and in proportion to the proximity of the raw material to the several lines.

It is, however, somewhat worthy of remark, that for this sudden favourable turn the country is neither indebted to Government nor the Railway Company. The great rise in the price of the metal at home, the increased rates of freights, and finally the late prohibition of exporting iron from England, have been the cause of it. Without a combination of such circumstances, the iron mines of India might have remained undisturbed for a long time to come.—Hurkaru.

THE PRINCIPALSHIP OF THE MEDICAL COLLEGE is still in the market, Dr. Duncan Stewart having declined to accept the post on the condition stipulated, viz., that he must give up his presidency surgeoncy.

CAPTAIN BYNG has been appointed to the command of the Sylhet Light Infantry.

RETIREMENTS.—Brigadiers Gwatkin, Wilkinson, and Holme, all on sick leave at Mussoorie, have retired from active service. If all the brigadiers at Simla follow this bright example, there will be a chance yet of promotion amongst some of our young colonels, before it is too late.—Mufussilite, July 10.

MR. W. MCADAM STEWART has been elected a director of the Bank of Bengal in the room of Mr. D. Mackinlay, resigned.

DACCA BANK.—A dividend at the rate of eight (8) per cent. per annum is payable at the Dacca Bank, on account of the half-year ending 30th June, 1854.

ESTATE OF COLVILLE GILMORE AND CO.—A third dividend, at the rate of two per cent., on this estate is now payable at the office of the official assignee, No. 1, Mangoe-lane, Calcutta.

ESTATE OF FERGUSON AND CO.—The ninth dividend on this estate, at Co.'s anna one and three pies per 100 sicca rupees, is now payable at the office of the official assignee, Calcutta.

ORIENTAL BANK.—The directors of the Oriental Bank have presented gratuities to all their officers;—to Europeans ten per cent., to natives thirteen per cent., upon their salaries for the year. The corporation will, it is said, divide fifteen per cent. upon its shares from the profits of the year 1853.

DR. FRANCIS, the superintending surgeon at Dacca, is reported to be dangerously ill.

THE SHIP Pekin, reported by the telegraph as being at anchor in Saugor Roads, with only one anchor left, and the weather bad, has been detained by a mutiny among the crew; the commander and ten of the mutineers came up to Calcutta, on board the Alligator steamer, on Saturday afternoon.—Hurkaru, Aug. 4.

THE ADJI BRIDGE.—A correspondent, writing from Beerbhoom, says, that the bridge erected across the Adji river for the railway, has been destroyed by severe floods, which have lately occurred there.

EARTHQUAKE.—We understand that a shock of earthquake was felt in town yesterday morning, a little after six o'clock. It is said, that two clocks in a house situated in Lower Circular Road were stopped by the undulation, which was sensibly felt in that locality, and that several persons who are not early risers were prematurely waked up in different parts of the town, by the shaking of their beds.—Hurkaru, July 27.

DEATH OF MR. WILLIS EARLE.—The death of an old and highly-respected resident of Calcutta is announced. Mr. Willis Earle was found dead in his bed yesterday morning. His death is supposed to have been very sudden, having arisen from a cessation of power in the heart.—Hurkaru, July 19.

FIRST LIEUTENANT A. R. FULLER, of the Artillery, has obtained the Government reward of Rs. 1,000 for eminent attainments in the Oordoo and Hindee languages.

THE TELEGRAPH IN BURMAH.—A line of electric telegraph is to be laid down from Rangoon to Pegu, and from thence two other lines are to be carried to Meaday and Tongboo, connecting those places with Rangoon.

THE RELIEF FOR 1854-55 is said to have reached the Government; unless it be returned to army head-quarters for revision, we may expect to see it promulgated before the end of next month.

A PLAN FOR BRIDGING THE RIVER SOANE is said to be before the Government. The estimated cost of the undertaking is stated to be eighty-six lacs of rupees.

LIEUT. HARRIS, 17TH N.I.—The Citizen is perfectly correct in his notice that this officer is about to retire from the service;—and is equally correct in stating that his resignation has been tendered to the Commander-in-Chief. We were acquainted with the fact a few days after the result of Lieut. Harris's court-martial was published, but for reasons it is unnecessary to explain, we were prevented from making it public. Lieut. H. now stands in an unenviable position, he apprehends further persecutions, and we think he has acted prudently in resigning. The Commander-in-Chief, however, may console himself with the idea that the loss entailed by the sentence of the court-martial puts Lieut. H. "out of pocket," and his retirement from the service by even the sale of his commission, will be anything but advantageous.—Indian Standard, July 28.

THE "Lady Nugent."—We hear that a letter has been received in town, from the most reliable authority at Madras, stating that the Lady Nugent is safe; we believe that the public may receive this intelligence with confidence. We think it is to be regretted that when people receive information of this nature they should be deterred by any delicacy from giving it to the press. Every person must be interested in knowing the fate of the gallant men on board the Lady Nugent, and many persons may have friends among them; for their sake such news should be given to the papers, especially as no regulation would be infringed even by a Government servant's contributing it.—Hurkaru, August 2. The Madras Athenaeum observes:—"No news as yet, we grieve to say, have we received of the missing Lady Nugent. The steamer Seostria, which had been sent in search from Calcutta, had not by the latest intelligence thence returned, although time sufficient had elapsed for a trip and back to the Andamans; this has created a hope that she has found the missing vessel, and is detained in rendering her assistance. We shall anxiously await the arrival of the mail from Calcutta.

LIEUT.-COL. J. S. HODGSON has resigned the command of the Punjab irregular force.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—We understand that it is the intention of the chief justice to leave Calcutta, for a trip to Madras, by the second steamer which will leave for Suez next month, and which will sail on the 19th. His lordship intends to return on board the Nile, and hopes to find his health sufficiently recruited to enable him to discharge his duties without further absence during the remainder of his incumbency. The public of India will feel inclined to regret that this very zealous and able officer did not permit himself a longer relaxation; which might perhaps have resulted in such a permanent improvement of health as to induce him to continue his valuable services for a year or two longer.—Hurkaru, July 27.

MR. WYLIE'S LOCUM TENENS.—All further speculation as to Mr. Wylie's temporary locum tenens is at an end. The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has appointed Mr. A. G. Macpherson to officiate as first judge of the Court of Small Causes during the absence of Mr. Mcleod Wylie, or until further orders. It would thus appear as if the bar of Calcutta was no longer a sure road to an independent fortune.

ARMY OF OBSERVATION.—Is there to be a force collected on the North-Western Frontier? If so, what is to be its denomination and extent? Is it to be called the Army of Observation, or the Army of the Indus, or perhaps the Army of Demonstration? Is it to consist of ten thousand or a hundred thousand men? Something is unquestionably brewing; at all events arrangements are in progress which indicate that the Indian authorities are fully alive to the importance of the old proverb "vis pacem prepare bellum." This, in connection with certain rumours which have reached us from Lucknow regarding a correspondence between the king and the Shah of Persia, induce us to think that the authorities are perfectly correct in keeping a sharp look upon Persia. Are the troops said to be destined for embarkation at Bombay and Kurrachee still to go to Turkey? We doubt it, and adhere to our former opinion.—Hurkaru, July 28.

INDIGO.—THE AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY continues its efforts to introduce the green indigo into Bengal. Mr. M'Murray reports that 254 plants have been propagated, and are ready for planting out in the open ground. If they come up well the experiment will be successful, and a new cultivation will have been added to the resources of Bengal.

ORIENTAL BANK.—The Hurkaru reports that the Oriental Bank will this year be enabled to divide profits at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum.

THE RAJAH OF PUTTEALA.—The Lahore Chronicle states that the Rajah of Putteala is about to visit England. He wishes to take a thousand men with him, horse and foot, elephants, camels, and dancing girls. He has also asked for an officer to accompany him, and is ready to expend £500,000 sterling on his trip. We doubt if the Oriental retinue will be permitted, though a troop of Mussulman sepoys would be a spectacle in England.

THE MILITARY CODE.—The Hurkaru states that Lieut. R. M. Paton, of the artillery, has been directed to complete the military code. This code has been nearly three years in preparation.

DEATH OF MR. P. MELVILL.—We regret to notice, in the Lahore Chronicle, the death of Mr. P. Melvill, C.S., secretary to the chief commissioner of the Punjab. He died suddenly at Anarkulee, on the 14th July. He has been succeeded, ad interim, by Mr. R. Temple, until the pleasure of the Governor-General is known.

CUSTOMS DUTIES AT ARRACAN, &c.—The Calcutta Gazette of the 12th July contains the draft of an Act "to provide for the levy of Duties of Customs in the Arracan, Pegu, Martaban, and Tenasserim Provinces." Goods from Burmah, with some exceptions, are subject to a duty of ten per cent. ad valorem. Rice, paddy, and salt exported in the same direction are all taxed, and an import duty has been imposed on opium of Rs. 24 per seer. Should Pegu ever be filled with Chinese, as Siam has been, this duty may be a valuable source of revenue.

IMPORTANT CASE IN HINDOO LAW.—The Englishman reports that an important case of Hindoo law is shortly to be decided by the Sudder Court. It is briefly this. Can a Hindoo widow be deprived of her husband's property if she sells part of it to the injury of the next heir? In other words, is the right of a widow over her husband's property absolute or not?—Oddly enough, while entail is the basis of the Hindoo law of inheritance, the owner has absolute right over his property during his lifetime. Thus Gopal cannot will away an inherited estate. It must go to his children. But he can sell it without their consent.

SIR L. PEEL.—We perceive that the Horticultural and Agricultural Society has requested Sir L. Peel to sit for his portrait. It will be placed in the Metcalfe Hall. Any surplus of subscriptions is to be expended in medals, to be called Peel Medals, and bestowed as prizes at the Horticultural shows.

LIFE OF MOHAMMED.—Dr. Sprenger has written to the Asiatic Society of Bengal from Alexandria, announcing a most important discovery. It is a manuscript of Waqidy, the best authority on the life of Mohammed. No copy was known to exist. It belongs to the Dragoman of the Austrian Consulate in that town, and has been secured for the "Bibliotheca Indica."

ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—The superintendent of electric telegraphs in India has reported to the Governor-General in Council that great difficulty has been experienced during the present rainy season in signalling correctly along the line; the electric telegraph cannot therefore be yet employed for the regular transmission of messages, and it will probably not be opened to the public till after the 1st November next, of which, however, previous notice will be given.

OPIMUM.—The Hurkaru reports that the cultivation of opium is still increasing, and the produce of 1853-54 will amount to 58,000 chests. The plan, we think, has failed, and any further increase has been peremptorily forbidden by the home authorities.

THE CALCUTTA AND TWENTY FOUR PERGUNNAH COLLECTORATES are to be amalgamated.

THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNION BANK the other day brought an action in the Supreme Court against Mr. Skinner, the only surviving member of the firm of Jardine, Skinner, and Co., with a view to compel him to account for the value of certain securities said to have been sold to him during the time the bank did business, by an agent of theirs, and for which it was alleged full satisfaction had not been given. Mr. Skinner not only proved that such was not the case, but actually produced in court the bills which had been given to the bank in payment, he having procured them from England for that purpose. The bill was thrown out, with costs.

THE BANK OF BENGAL has declared its thirty-first dividend at the rate of ten per cent. per annum.

COURT-MARTIAL ON CAPTAIN DORIN.—Orders have been received from army head-quarters to place Captain Dorin, one of the principals in the Military Club horsewhipping affair, on his trial by court-martial. We are glad to hear that the Simla people have taken a proper, sensible, military view of the matter; and only regret that the division people and the Court of Inquiry did not do the same, but went raking into irrelevant matters and affairs essentially of a private nature, thereby unnecessarily wounding the feelings of individuals in no way connected with the main and only legitimate subject of inquiry—the assault and altercation. Captain Dorin is to be tried for having been engaged in personal altercation with another officer, which in this instance means, in self-defence. We suppose that he will plead guilty to having yielded to the impulse of the first law of nature, and admit that so far he entered into the altercation; and what more can come of it we cannot see. This simple result will, we hope, serve as a memento to Courts of Inquiry to confine themselves in future, as much as possible, to the main object of investigation, and not get diverging into distant matters, to the annoyance of people dragged undeservedly into notoriety. Of course Captain Dorin will be honourably acquitted of anything derogatory to the character of an officer and a gentleman. It remains to be seen what will be done with the assailant on his arrival in England; and we should not be surprised to see Mr. Bridgman's name scratched out of the army list.—Morning Chronicle, July 14.

THE KOHAT PASS.—The Lahore Chronicle, we are happy to observe, states that the measures taken for the protection of travellers through the Kohat Pass have been eminently successful. The tables have been completely turned upon the Afreedies, for Captain Coke has for the second time closed against them the door that they used to shut against us. Our contemporary also gives us an account of the progress of the Grand Trunk Road towards Lahore, which is not very satisfactory, saving in as much as it shows the advantages likely to be derived from the operation of the new system lately introduced into the Department of Public Works. There was a difference of opinion as to the line which the road ought to take at Ferozepore. The question came before the chief commissioner of the Punjab and the chief engineer, and these authorities in a few days decided a point which, under the old régime, when such matters had to be referred to the Military Board, it would have required months to settle. What an immense amount of useless correspondence would have occurred! The saving of this alone is an advantage. There is another benefit which will result from the introduction of the new system. The heavy packets of papers which used to be sent by dāk from the most distant parts of the presidency to Calcutta will no longer burden the wallets. The distances which papers will have to be sent will be reduced, and the number of packets transmitted by dāk will be diminished, as many matters which required to be referred to Calcutta for decision will now be settled by the authorities on the spot.—Bengal Hurkaru.

AN ADDITIONAL BATTALION has been added to the Bengal engineers.

THE LIEUT.-GOVERNOR.—The Calcutta journals announce the arrival of the Lieut.-Governor of Krishnagur. A very large meeting of Europeans and natives was called in honour of his arrival, and it was unanimously resolved,—"That this meeting looks upon the visit of the Lieut.-Governor as one affording great satisfaction to all classes in this district. That in honour of the visit of the Lieut.-Governor a subscription be immediately entered into, the proceeds of the same to be given to any such useful institution connected with this district as the Lieut.-Governor may think most worthy his support." Upwards of seven thousand rupees have been already subscribed, and the Lieut.-Governor has been requested to indicate the direction in which it should be bestowed. The private secretary in reply expresses Mr. Halliday's sense of this compliment offered, and his desire that the money should be applied for the benefit of the Charitable Dispensary. The demonstration is a remarkable one. It proves that residents in the Mofussil are thoroughly conscious of the advantages which will accrue from the visits of the Lieut.-Governor. It indicates, also, with some other facts, that the personal unpopularity once attributed to Mr. Halliday has disappeared.

MUTINY ON THE "NEPTUNE CAR."—The following is an extract of a letter from Captain Thomas Allen, dated Sandheads, the 11th inst.:—"The crew of the American ship Neptune of 1816 tons register, mutinied this morning at the head of Thornhill channel or lower part of Saugor roads. With three men, four boys, captain and officers, pilot and leadsman, and a boat's crew from the Dwarkanauth steamer, the anchor was hove and hausers passed to the steamer, and proceeded out to sea in tow of the steamer, with twenty-three mutineers below. After the steamer left her, was worked out to sea (the mutineers still below) by the few above-mentioned, and is out all safe. I intend to use my authority on the high seas." The captain adds that his revolvers are loaded, and that he intends to use them if necessary; and that, although the crew all swear they will not go to sea nor do any work, he expects they will have to work, or be shot. Gentlemen from the diggings would do well to make up their minds to work, before they ship themselves under the American flag; for although all are free and equal in the United States, commanders of ships possess an authority over their crew which the English law denies to British commanders, and will exert it too.—Englishman, July 14.

MOVEMENTS IN THE 3RD EUROPEAN REGIMENT.—We understand that the movements in the 3rd European regiment are already commencing, and that Capt. Wardroper is about to retire from it and from the service in all next month, receiving a bonus from his juniors in the corps for so doing. We fear that the ensigns may also look for another step as the result of the court-martial upon Lieut. Penson, before which that officer was tried last month, as we understand that the defence was only one in form and name, and powerless as a vindication of his conduct, which gave rise to serious charges.—Englishman, July 14.

LUCKNOW.—Last week some person informed the resident, that the king had received a letter from H. M. the king of Persia, to the effect that as soon as India is invaded by a Persian army, H. M. will do all he possibly can for the stability of the Oude state. The cautious resident, immediately on hearing this, sent the Durbar Vukeel Musseehood Dowlah Bahadoor, to demand the document alluded to from H. M. as quickly as possible, whether forged or genuine, of which the resident would be the best judge. This message was like a thunderbolt to the king; and the durbar; they thought their days were numbered. However, they did not lose their moral courage, and made a stout and bold denial, and solicited a strict inquiry and close investigation, as it was a highly serious charge against them, enough to cause their utter destruction and being ground down to dust. The resident replied as H. M. denied the receipt of the letter he would take his word, and have done with the matter. There is a prevalent opinion throughout the kingdom of Oude, that the country will be annexed previous to the Most Noble the Governor-General's departure for England, as his lordship will not leave such an important business to his successor, and allow him the credit of it.—Hurkaru, July 29.

MILITARY ON DITS.—The Agra Messenger tells us that Lieut. R. Chauncy, of the 71st N.I. has passed for the invalids.—It is reported at Lahore that the Commander-in-Chief will pay that station a visit during the ensuing cold season, and also go to Mooltan and Peshawur.—Lieutenants J. Leven and S. C. W. Ogilvie are reported to have passed with great credit the examination entitling them to be permanently appointed to the Commissariat, to which department they were attached as probationers.—The Poona Observer gives an on dit to the effect that Sir William Gomm intends to resign the Command-in-Chief in December, and will be succeeded by Lord Frederick Fitzclarence.—Colone Cotton of H. M.'s 22nd regiment, has sent in his papers to sell.—H. M.'s 35th regiment is under orders for Madras to relieve the 25th Borderers.—The Hurkaru hints at the probability of the collection of an army on the North-Western Frontier, and also gives a report of information having been conveyed to the resident at Lucknow of the king being in correspondence with the Shah of Persia, and apropos to this asks, if the troops to be embarked at Bombay and Kurrachee are still to go to Turkey.—The Central Star states that the 38th L.I. is to go to Burmah, they must, we presume therefore, have volunteered, for they cannot be ordered down, it is not in the bond, that they are to cross the seas.—Brigadiers Gwatkin, Home, and Williamson, all at Mussoorie, have retired from active service.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

ADDITIONAL BATTALION TO THE ENGINEERS AT EACH PRESIDENCY.

Fort William, July 4, 1854.—The following paragraphs of a military letter, No. 9, from the Honourable the Court of Directors to the Governor-General of India in Council, dated May 24, 1854, are published for general information:—

"Para. 2.—Considering it to be unnecessary any longer to delay the addition of one battalion to the Corps of Engineers at each of the three Presidencies, we now authorise you to carry that measure into effect.

"Para. 3.—The date of this augmentation is to be one month from the receipt by you of this despatch."

The Honourable Court's despatch having been received on the 1st instant, the augmentation will date from August 1, 1854.

INTRODUCTION OF RIFLES.

Head-quarters, Simla, July 10, 1854.—The Most Noble the Governor-General in Council having, on the recommendation of the Commander-in-Chief, sanctioned rifles of the ordinary description being supplied, to the extent of 10 per company, to each infantry regiment whilst serving on the Peshawur frontier, in view to a body of selected riflemen for special service being at all times available, His Excellency directs that officers commanding will be particular in selecting such men only as are known to be good shots, and that they will use their best endeavours to train and make the men expert in the use of these weapons.

2. On the departure from the frontier of any regiment, the rifles in use are either to be handed over to the relieving regiment, or lodged in the Peshawur magazine for issue to the relieving corps on its arrival at that station.

3. The muskets, &c., belonging to the men to whom rifles are issued are to be lodged in regimental store; and officers commanding will report monthly, in their returns, on the state of the rifles, implements, ammunition, &c., in use, and will certify that the muskets placed in store are well taken care of.

TENURE OF BRIGADE COMMANDS.

Fort William, July 11, 1854.—No. 720 of 1854.—In order to remove the doubts which appear to exist, regarding the tenure of brigade commands, the Most Noble the Governor-General in Council is pleased to promulgate the following rules, which have received the sanction of the Hon. the Court of Directors.

2. The tenure of brigade commands is restricted to five years from the date on which each officer enters upon the duties under the general order appointing him to a permanent brigadiership, whether he be or be not entitled to off-reckonings.

3. In case of a brigadier being removed on public grounds, for the interests of the service (or on private application), from one station to another, he will, during the interval between making over command at the one and assuming command at the other, cease to draw staff allowance, but this period will not be reckoned within the five years' tenure.

4. But no allowance will be made on account of absence on leave, whether under medical certificate, or on private affairs.

5. Under the authority of the Hon. the Court of Directors, conveyed in their letter, No. 29, of the 5th April, 1837, published in Government General Order, No. 154 of that year, whenever it shall appear that the continued services of any brigadier are indispensable to the public interests, the Government of India has the power to continue him in command, until the decision of the Hon. Court shall be received.

6. This regulation applies equally to the brigadier commandant of artillery.

CHARGES OF OFFICERS OF MOUNTED CORPS.

Fort William, July 25, 1854.—The Most Noble the Governor-General in Council is pleased to direct that officers of horse field-batteries, shall be considered on the same footing with regard to their mustered charges as officers of mounted corps, and that accordingly horse allowance, at the rates now sanctioned, viz., rupees (60) sixty per mensem for captains, and rupees (30) thirty per mensem for subalterns and medical officers, shall be passed to them, precisely under the same rules which govern the admission of the allowance to officers of horse artillery and cavalry.

2. This cancels the concluding part of article 22, section III., of the pay code of 1849.

ISSUE OF PENSIONS IN THE COLONIES.

Fort William, July 25, 1854.—Financial Department.—With reference to Government General Order, No. 520 of the 24th June, 1853, the following letter, No. 15, dated 3rd May, 1854, and inclosure, from the Honourable the Court of Directors to the Governor of the presidency of Fort William in Bengal in the Financial Department, are published for general information:—

With reference to our despatch in this department, dated 6th April, 1853, No. 11, we forward in the packet copy of a further letter from her Majesty's treasury, dated 3rd May, 1854, 76964<sup>2</sup>, stating that directions have been given to the commissariat officers in charge in Van Diemen's Land, Western Australia, South Australia, and New Zealand, to issue the pensions of all persons retired from the Company's service who may reside at either of those colonies, on the production of certificates of last payments in India, and receipt of the necessary communication from the Indian Governments.

We are, &c.,

(Signed) J. OLIPHANT,

And Nine other DIRECTORS.

London, 30th May, 1854.

The Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the Court of Directors of the East India Company.

Gentlemen,—With reference to Sir J. C. Melvill's letter, dated the 6th ultimo, I am commanded by the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to acquaint you that my lords have authorized the commissariat officers in charge in New South Wales to issue the pension of Mrs. W. Smith, widow of the late Capt. W. S. Smith, of the Madras establishment, and that they have informed him, at the same time, that you have requested that the pensions of persons on your establishment, located in New South Wales and Victoria, may, in order to save the delay of a reference to this country, be issued from the commissariat chest, on the production of certificates of last payments in India, and receipt of the necessary communication from the Indian governments, and the assistant commissary-general has been authorized to issue the same accordingly. Similar directions have been given to the commissariat officers in charge in

Van Diemen's Land,
Western Australia,
South Australia, and New Zealand.

The enclosures of Sir J. C. Melvill's letter are herewith returned.

I am, &c.,

(Signed) C. E. TREVELYAN.

Treasury Chambers, 3rd May, 1854.

PROHIBITION OF SALES, BETWEEN COMPANY'S SERVANTS AND FOREIGN PRINCES.

Fort William, Foreign Department, July 25, 1854.—By a resolution, dated the 31st October, 1821, the Governor-General in Council was pleased to prohibit all sales, purchases, and transfers between the civil and military servants of Government on the one hand, and foreign princes, or chiefs, or natives of rank or opulence on the other, of "grounds, houses, boats, equipages, plate, furniture, and generally every description of private property exceeding the value of Rupees 5,000, without the sanction of Government being previously obtained."

2. On the 3rd December, 1832, a circular letter was addressed to the residents and political agents, directing that the sale of property by British officers to native chiefs, or persons of rank at the native courts, being particularly liable to abuse, should be altogether discontinued; and on the 29th May, 1850, the residents and political agents were again addressed, and furnished with copies of instructions from the Honourable Court of Directors to the same effect.

3. It has been brought to the notice of Government that, notwithstanding these repeated orders, the practice in question still prevails. The Most Noble the Governor-General in Council, therefore, acting in conformity with the wishes of the Court of Directors, is pleased to notify, for general information, that the officers of Government, of whatever rank or class, are absolutely prohibited from selling, or being concerned in the sale of property, of any amount or description, to native princes and chiefs, or to their relatives or ministers, or to any native gentlemen of rank or opulence, residing under the protection of the British Government.

4. Any disobedience of these orders will be followed by the displeasure of the Government of India, and by such other penalty as the circumstances of the case may demand.

5. These orders are to be considered applicable to all officers of the British Government, in whatever presidency they may be serving.

G. F. EDMONSTONE,
Secy. to the Govt. of India.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Aug. 4, 1854).—As regards the market for British Cotton Piece Goods, we are happy to be able to report a better state of affairs. With increased demand for many descriptions of goods, prices also have improved, and considerable sales have been effected during the past fortnight. The demand, however, for the up-country markets has not been active for this time of the year, and having prospects of heavy imports for the next two or three months, we must be cautious in entertaining hopes of further improvement. Grey and White Shirtings have been in good demand, and an advance has taken place. Jaconets much inquired, and dealers coming forward freely with better offers. Madapolams have been selling at improved prices. Grey and White Mulls have been favoured a good deal. Lappets neglected. Book Muslins in better inquiry. Printed and Coloured Goods are attracting attention. White Cotton Mule Twist continues in excellent demand, and a large business is reported during the past month. Coloured Yarns remain unaltered. Woolens are improving.

MADRAS.

DEATH OF COLONEL SCHONSWAR.—The following is from Cananore, July 4:—"I have with sincere regret to announce the death, at this station, at six o'clock last evening, of the well-known and much respected commanding officer of H.M.'s 25th regt. Lieutenant-colonel James Smith Schonswar. The deceased was, twelve days ago, attacked with dysentery in its severest form, which is attributed to his having used a damp and leaky room as his dormitory. The colonel seemed to be progressing favourably till Saturday last (1st instant), on the evening of which day, however, alarming symptoms unfortunately presented themselves, since which he gradually sank, and at the hour above mentioned calmly resigned his soul into the hands of its Creator. This mournful event has cast a deep gloom over the entire community of this place, but particularly over the regiment which had the fortune to be commanded by Colonel Schonswar, who was held as well by its officers and men as by the residents in general, in the greatest respect and estimation. The remains of the deceased were interred this evening at five o'clock in the Protestant burial-ground with due military honours. Consequent upon the death of Lieutenant-colonel Schonswar, the undermentioned officers of the 25th King's Own Borderers will be promoted to the superior grades. Major H. F. Strange, Capt. (Brevet major) S. B. Hamilton, Lieut. H. E. Jones, and Ensign H. S. Brown."

THE PROTESTANT CHURCH AT PONDICHERY.—The Right Reverend Thomas Deatry, D. D., Lord Bishop of Madras, &c. &c. &c.—My Lord,—We, the undersigned members of the Protestant congregation of Pondicherry, beg leave most respectfully to submit to your lordship's kind consideration, the state of spiritual destitution we are in here, in consequence of there not being a resident Protestant clergyman amongst us, and our being thereby deprived of the means of grace on the Lord's and other holy days, with the exception of only one Sunday in each month, when we are blessed with a visit from the rev. chaplain of Cuddalore, and then with only one service in the morning; but of which, also, we are deprived for three months in the year, when he is obliged to quit his station, on his annual visit to Salem; but even out of the nine services so vouchsafed to us in the year, only four are authorized by the Government of Madras; the others, five in number, being performed by your lordship's kind sanction and permission, but not approved of, or confirmed as yet, by a Government order.

SIR VANSITTART STONHOUSE is not to take his seat in council; and upon very good authority it is stated, that Mr. Walter Elliot will succeed his namesake, and Sir Henry Montgomery be chosen to fill the provisional appointment. We are happy to think that under the presidency of Lord Harris it is a matter of but small moment who sits in consultation with him, or we might be tempted to say a few words upon the twofold choice of the home authorities.—Athenæum.

AN additional battalion has been added to the Madras engineers. LIEUT. A. J. BOILEAU, Madras Engineers, has sent us his subscription, Rs. 50, for the wives and children of our countrymen who are fighting in Turkey.—Madras Athenæum.

BRIGADIER CLARKE.—By Col. Outram's unceremonious supersession of Brigadier Clarke at Aden, the Madras army has lost that brigade command, and will continue to be done out of it—for the manoeuvre is a "do" beyond all question—as long as the first-named officer remains at the station. Brigadier Clarke loses nothing by this unfair arrangement, having got Jaulnah instead; but the coast army suffers. Thus it is that tricks to the prejudice of this presidency, or of the services which belong to it, are constantly being played.—Spectator.

THE MADRAS COMMAND IN CHIEF.—Our contemporaries and military friends may save themselves the trouble, on our word, of any further speculation as to who is to succeed to the Madras command in chief. The Honourable George Anson, now commanding the Meerut division, is the man. The selection is a good one, and an excellent one as compared with the appointments to that important post that have been made of late years, as Major General Anson is, comparatively speaking, a young man for his rank and standing in the army; and we shall, in all probability, be saved the pain of hearing of his being carried about in a litter, hoisted over the ship's side in a barrel to go to England, and dying on the voyage, or dropping dead in a dāk-bungalow, as has been the ghastly fashion with the Madras commanders-in-chief of late.—Morning Chronicle, August 3.

THE ROAD FROM NERINJAPETT TO SALEM AND YEDAPADY.—We understand that Government have authorized the opening of the road from Nerinjapett to Salem and Yedapady: and also the cutting of the jungle along the line of the Salem Canal, preparatory to the proposed restoration of the Nerinjapett Anicut across the Cauvery.—Spectator, July 21.

—A detachment of recruits, consisting of 2 sappers, 50 artillery and 58 infantry of the Hon. Comp. service, arrived from England on the ship Royal Albert, under the command of Lieutenant G. Holland, of the Bengal artillery, and were disembarked August 7, and marched to the Mount.

THE MADRAS LINE OF ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH between Poona and Sattara, was opened on the 3rd of August, an event which the deputy superintendent, Dr. Green, reported to Mr. Secretary Goldsmid on the 5th of July as follows:—"I have the honour to inform the Right Hon. the Governor, that the section of the Madras line from Poona to Sattara was opened on 3rd instant, and I have the satisfaction to state, that it works extremely well. I did not anticipate that I should have been able to open this section so soon, because none of the works for the river crossings over the Neera, Kristna and Yemma rivers had been prepared. The rivers, however, were easily crossed in the ordinary way, by the working party—loss of time and a heavy outlay being thus avoided."—Telegraph.

THE RUSSIAN SHIP "IDEALET" has sailed to Batavia, the agents being unable to obtain a buyer for her at the reserved price. As much as Rs. 35,300 was offered by one bidder, and another is said to have made a conditional offer of Rs. 38,000, at which sum, if the sale could have been assured, Messrs. Binny and Co. would no doubt have been glad to part with her.—Athenæum.

OUTACAMUND.—(From a Correspondent of Madras Athenæum.)—The number of deaths at Jackallallah in the 74th, reported by your correspondent (23 or 24) is, I believe, much about the truth. But the causes he assigns for the mortality are erroneous. It is not owing to the alleged "intemperate" habits of the men. I have been for several months in the immediate neighbourhood of the camp, and have never once seen a man the worse for liquor. It is impossible that this could be the case, if the sickness were owing to intemperance. Possibly the men may drink; but they drink just as much at Madras, Trichinopoly, Cannanore, and every other station, and yet they do not, at these stations, die off like rotten sheep. Here, it is unquestionable, the mortality has been fearful. In the months of May and June the deaths were, in proportion to the force, at the rate of 20 per cent. per annum! about four times the usual average mortality of the Presidency. Nor was this only among the men. During the same time one officer (Lieut. King) out of 18 died, though only one month on the Hills. A second (Quarter-master Daines) was obliged to be invalided and sent home. A third has applied for leave from the same cause. A fourth (Mr. Swaffield), as well as the chaplain (Mr. Hamilton), are now very ill from the prevailing epidemic—the latter having been obliged to go twice down the ghaut for the recovery of his health. It is ridiculous to talk of secondary causes as the origin of the mortality: especially of intemperance. The men who have died have not been the old seasoned drinkers. Nine-tenths of them have been young men from 18 to 23 years of age, who were not addicted to intemperate habits. And one fourth or fifth of the whole deaths have been those of children—from 5 to 10 years old. Would you believe it—they are actually sending up another company of 80 men from Trichinopoly. And not a place to hold them but some newly-built huts of mud and clay—dripping with wet, and redolent of fever, ague, and death! You may expect a nice "Mortality Return" ere long."

MALABAR.—Scarcity in Malabar has almost reached the famine point. Jewels are sold, by those who have them, to obtain food; and jewels are to the Hindu what furniture is to an Englishman. If Europeans were to be seen hawking about their chairs and tables for sale, it would be considered a sure proof of extremity, as we should know that there must be hunger in the homes thus emptied. Jewel selling has the same signification among Hindus, it is a sure proof that bread is wanted. But there are in Malabar, as elsewhere, classes without jewels, they have nothing with which to supply the deficiency of wages; they soon exhaust their scanty means and "fast for a day or two," as our correspondent says,—that is they starve. The local authorities, taking this state of things into their consideration, have advanced a loan, amounting to two months' salary, to the government employes; this is benevolent and beneficial as far as the Cutcherry people are concerned, but we doubt its general utility, in fact we think it is injurious to the public at large; for governments, by enabling their servants to pay high prices for food, actually encourage those high prices, to the serious detriment of the unassisted classes. If loans are to be made at all, they should be granted to the lowest poor, not to the people of the middle and upper stratas,—should be given to those who, when their own means are thus supplemented will not be able to obtain any other market-goer.—Correspondent of Madras Athenæum.

THE CONDUCT OF THE PARSEES.

We know few occurrences more worthy of record than the conduct of the Parsees of Bombay on the day of humiliation. It is the first instance in which an Indian race, not stimulated by Europeans, or commanded by its own prince, has voluntarily stepped forward to express its sympathy with the fortunes of Great Britain. A similar occurrence in North America has just excited the applause of Europe. The Canadians have expressed their determination to bear their share in the European war. Canada, say they, is a constituent portion of the empire. It is excited by the same hopes, affected by the same dangers, and animated by the same indignation against the oppressor of mankind. As the readiest means of affording efficient aid to the mother-country, the Canadians have offered to defend themselves, and thus release the imperial troops for foreign service. The demonstration has been accepted as a proof that present justice has removed the ancient enmity, and as an indication of the growing unity of the Anglo-Saxon race. It is scarcely more important than that of the Parsees. They are not, like the Canadians, Englishmen by blood. They have not like them an instinctive pride in English victories, or an instinctive sorrow over British disasters. They have not like them a language, which makes every thought uttered in England patent to every brain in North America. They have not been educated in English sympathies, vested with English constitutional privileges, or habituated to the English system of collective action. Their sole tie with England is in the sense of benefits received for generations, and of the protection of a government which has raised a miserable clan of cultivators—for in Cutch they were little better—into a powerful and prosperous community of traders. The accident of conquest has made them British subjects. The unswerving protection and justice of the Government has raised them into sympathizers with Great Britain. Without the slightest incitement from the Europeans, they have voluntarily stepped forward to express their loyalty to the English sovereign. The punchayat, the representative of the nation, accepted the day fixed by the Governor-General, arranged a special worship in every temple, and formally requested the community to attend. The call was obeyed, the temples were crowded, and on the 16th July this was the prayer uttered in the ancient Zend, and in temples dedicated to Fire by a race of pagan traders:—

"I offer my prayer to Thee, O glorious and exalted God, that the Sovereign of this Realm may have the victory with honour and with triumph in the War. May the Sovereign of Sovereigns inspire with wisdom and endow with strength her Army and Navy. Long live the Sovereign, and may the Empire flourish. May God annihilate her enemies, and may His blessing rest upon her. May He watch over all these events, and destroy the enemy. I make my prayer and supplications unto Thee, Almighty God, that success may attend the cause of our Queen in the field of battle. May our Queen continue her rule in justice and mercy, and may her name and her power be handed down to many generations. May she ever maintain in all its integrity her exalted position, which is illumined with light and glory."

In such a prayer, the most zealous Christian can find little to object, and the most devoted loyalist nothing to condemn. The invocation is to the one God, worshipped alike by Parsees and by Englishmen, and for the sovereign whom both nationalities agree to accept as their representative.

We do not wish to exaggerate the importance of such an event. We are aware that the Parsees have always been loyal to any power which would protect them. We are aware that as traders they enjoy every advantage of English rule, and suffer nothing from its imperfections. We are aware that they are by nature the least Asiatic of the Indian races, that their intelligence far exceeds that of the men around them, and that their representatives in Bombay are the most intelligent of themselves. Nevertheless the fact remains. A race admitted to be the foremost in India, has of its own accord declared its loyalty to the Crown. It has overlooked all petty grievances; it has forgotten all differences of creed; it has remembered only the incalculable benefits it has received, and has openly and honourably acknowledged the obligation thereby incurred. If enlightened self-interest is the true bond of nationalities, the Parsees are one with the British. If loyalty is indeed "the cheap defence of nations," the Parsees, in their own temples, without compulsion, and without inducement, solemnly declare that they are loyal.

The facts may read a lesson to Englishmen at home, and to natives in Calcutta, to the member for Manchester, and to Young Bengal. Mr. Bright may understand, that the Government which has produced such feeling, is not a Government either of fools or oppressors. The presidency of Bombay was for years the worst administered of the Indian provinces. Of its administrators the least efficient was probably Lord Falkland. Yet its best educated and wealthiest race profess a profound attachment to the authority, of which Lord Falkland was the representative. Young Bengal may see the path in which the best hope of progress really lies. Let him accept the fact of conquest, try to become English, take his stand, not on the right of man, but on the rights of British subjects, perform the duties attached to his new position, and sink at once the difference of race. He will gain more than by lisping baby treason against a government, with which the wiser Parsee seeks a perpetual alliance.—Friend of India.

The LONDON MAIL of June 26th arrived at Bombay July 23rd (per Elphinstone).

THE MERCANTILE BANK.—The Bombay Telegraph and Courier states, that the new Mercantile Bank is already prosperous. Its capital is only twelve lacs, and it has been only six months in existence, yet it has already a reserve fund of 40,000 rupees.

SUPPOSED LOSS OF THE "WILLIAM GIBSON."—We regret to say that there is a report current that the ship William Gibson, which left this port for London on the 17th inst., has been lost. We are at all times chary of placing confidence in idle rumour, but the sources from which we have heard of this mishap leave but little margin to doubt its exactitude; however no official notice has yet been published, and we suppose we must say that the report requires confirmation.—Bombay Times, July 31.

AN ADDITIONAL BATTALION has been added to the Bombay engineers.

THE LOSS OF THE SHIP JOHN COOPER, from Colombo to London, burnt at sea, is reported by the Bombay Gazette on the authority of a private letter.

LIEUT.-COLONEL GIDLEY.—The Lahore Chronicle mentions a circumstance connected with the trial of Lieut.-Col. Gidley, which he justly characterises as unfair, un-English, and opposed to all ideas of impartiality in the administration of justice. It is that leading questions were allowed to be put to some of the witnesses by the judge advocate-general, on the ground that he apprehended their evidence would be favourable to the prisoner. Comment upon such a proceeding is almost superfluous; it will be condemned by every right-thinking man. Our contemporary says: "It is painful to think that in the nineteenth century, before a body of British officers, another British officer should have presumed to make such a proposition to them, that he should have been enabled to back his request by quoting from a book published 'by authority,' and that, moreover, the Court should have acquiesced in this request as a matter of course." These observations appear to us just, and they throw a new light upon a trial which has caused much sensation throughout India. We have no intention of defending the conduct of Colonel Gidley and the officers of the 15th Bombay N.I., who have been punished for offences of a very serious description; still we cannot but regret that a conviction should have been obtained by such unconstitutional means; and it would, in our opinion, have been preferable to have allowed the guilty to escape, rather than to have resorted to them. If this be military law, truly that law requires an immediate thorough reform.—Hurkaru, August 1.

THE TRIAL OF CAPT. HAINES, ex-political agent at Aden, for embezzlement, commenced on Tuesday, the 25th instant, before the Hon. Sir Charles Jackson. The jury were composed entirely of Europeans, the great majority of them being gentlemen employed in banks, mercantile offices, and as auctioneers, and consequently well accustomed to accounts. Capt. Haines came to the court with his solicitor, Mr. Jefferson, near whom he sat until his lordship took his seat on the bench, when he walked into the dock, and bowed respectfully to the judge. The jury having been duly sworn, the clerk of the crown read the first indictment, containing twenty-two different items, charging embezzlement and fraudulent misappropriation of public money, to which Capt. Haines pleaded not guilty. The Advocate-General, assisted by Messrs. Howard and Lowndes, conducted the case for the prosecution, and Messrs. Taylor and Standen defended the prisoner. Mr. Taylor applied for permission for Captain Haines to be allowed to sit near his counsel, but his lordship said, that it had been ruled that in all cases of felony the prisoner should be in the dock, and as Captain Haines had already been arraigned there, it was necessary he should remain in the dock; every opportunity would be afforded to him of communicating with his counsel, and his lordship directed that he should be accommodated with a seat. The trial occupied five days, and on Saturday evening last the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. Captain Haines, however, is still in custody, as the judge advocate general intimated to Sir Charles Jackson that he was not decided as to whether he would prosecute Captain Haines on any of the other indictments or not. His lordship has appointed this day to hear the judge advocate general's determination.—Bombay Times, July 31.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

OFFICERS' MESSSES.

Head-Quarters, Poona, July 17, 1854.—Under the authority of the Governor in Council, the following rules and orders are published by the Commander-in-Chief for the guidance of the officers' messes of this army.

1. The maintenance of a regimental mess, upon an economical and well-regulated system, is an object of great importance, requiring the unremitting attention of the commanding officer, who is responsible to the Government and Commander-in-Chief for its prosperity; the tone prevailing amongst the officers composing it; for the correctness of its accounts in general; and for the curbing of all unnecessary expense.

2. By the established rules and usages of the service, both as regards her Majesty's army and the army of this presidency, all officers serving with their regiments are required to join and attend the mess; and exemption and privileges allowed to married members, with respect both to the regular attendance and the payment of the monthly messing, are made contingent upon their families being in India. The private convenience of individual officers may rightly be made an object, but not the chief object, of consideration in connection with their regimental messes. Those institutions, established and liberally supported by Government, for the general comfort, credit, and respectability of all, demand the first consideration, and should insure from every officer his best and cordial support.

3. As a general rule, the pecuniary difficulties of an officer, whether married or single, can never be admitted as giving him a claim to special exemption from the payment of any mess charge sanctioned by established rules, much less as justifying his withdrawal from the mess of his regiment, since by the regulations of the service, Queen's and Company's, every mess is required to be conducted on such principles of economy as may place it within the means of all.

The only exception which can be permitted of an unmarried officer having the privilege of an honorary member of the mess, is that of having a mother, or sister, or other female relative residing with him.

4. In the management of regimental messes, economy, consistent with respectability, should ever be kept steadily in view. It is a mistake to suppose that the latter is enhanced by a display of massive plate, or costly wines and viands. That commanding officer will best perform his duty, and advance the well-being and respectability of his corps, who assumes as his standard the neatness and comfort of a well-regulated private table, rather than the display and profusion of a public entertainment; and however unwilling the Commander-in-Chief may be to interfere in the interior arrangements of a regimental mess, yet he will notice with his severe displeasure any commanding officer for every instance that may be brought to his notice of extravagance in the management of such institutions.

5. On the moral as much as on the military training of the young officer, his future usefulness mainly depends. Separated at an early age from his natural guardians, his character is in a great degree formed from the example of those around him; it is therefore doubly the duty of the commanding officer and of the senior officers of a regiment to see that the rules and decorum of society are at all times strictly maintained at the regimental mess; and, whilst friendly intercourse and the comfort and happiness of all should be furthered and encouraged, everything approaching indecorum and extravagance should be discountenanced to the utmost. From the tone and system of the regimental mess, a just estimate may be formed of the fitness of the commanding officer, and of the attention he bestows on this important part of his duty; and it is the duty of reviewing officers at all times, and the more particularly at their periodical inspections, to scrutinize narrowly everything connected with these institutions, particularly the books and accounts, and to report fully, not only as regards their financial condition, but as respects the system of economy and order that prevails in their management.

6. The donations and subscriptions authorized by the Government (as follows) are never to be exceeded.

NOTE.—The donations and subscriptions of the officers in the regiment of artillery, consequent on the numerous unavoidable transfers in that corps, must be regulated by regimental arrangements—with this proviso, that no officer shall ever be required to pay a second donation of his rank, nor shall the amount of donation or subscription ever exceed that laid down by the preceding tables for cavalry and infantry, as applicable to officers of horse and foot artillery respectively.

7. All officers receiving Indian pay and allowances are to pay the regulated mess subscription.

8. On occasions of augmentation, the donations of officers transferred to the newly-raised regiments will be paid by government on contingent bills, accompanied by certificates that a mess has been established in the newly-raised corps.

Ensigns transferred, at their own request, from one regiment to another, under the provisions of Articles 32 and 33, Section VIII. Jameson's Code, are required to pay a full donation to the mess to their new corps, receiving a moiety of that paid to their former corps.

Lieut.-colonels, medical officers, and veterinary surgeons transferred from one regiment to another, and officers permitted to exchange regiment, are not to pay a second mess donation.

The monthly mess subscription of officers posted to regiments, or transferred from one regiment to another, is to commence from the first of the month following the posting or transfer.

9. Unposted cornets and ensigns are to pay the monthly subscriptions, but no donations to the messes of the regiments to which they are attached.

10. An officer appointed to do duty with another regiment, is to be an honorary member of its mess, and is to pay the monthly subscription of his rank to its support.

11. There are to be three funds in each regiment, designated as follows, and to be kept in three separate books, viz:—

1st. "Mess fund," which includes subscriptions and donations, to be appropriated to the purchase of glass, crockery, plate, and table furniture, to be chosen by vote in general, a few newspapers, and such other outlay as the committee may deem necessary, and the fund is in a position to afford, but all with the sanction of the commanding officer.

2nd. "Mess Store Fund," exclusively for wines and consumable articles, and carriage of the same, with reasonable per-centage added as may suffice to cover losses and contingencies.

3rd. "Government Fund," (viz. monthly allowance granted to the mess), to be devoted solely for the purchase of mess-houses, tents, furniture, carriage, and the payments of servants for the same.

12. Any profit which may be realized by the sale of liquor and supplies is to be retained as a reserve fund, to meet losses by breakage and other contingencies. It is never to be applied to the purpose of building, purchase of furniture, or to the credit of any other than the "Mess Store Fund."

When the Store Fund has attained a reasonably safe amount, the profit on liquor and supplies should cease, until circumstances render it expedient again to impose it.

13. The commanding officer is held responsible to the Government and the Commander-in-Chief for the general government of the mess. It is his duty especially to prevent any expenses being incurred which would involve the mess in debt; and he is required strictly to enforce the regular monthly settlement of all officers' accounts on each issue of pay; and with regard to an honorary member, not attached to the corps, the proposer and seconder of such honorary member must be held responsible that the monthly settlement is strictly observed. The president of the mess committee will, at the end of every month, previously to the issue of pay to the officers, send a statement of what is due from each officer, as well as from the honorary members, for messing, wines, &c. The amount must be stopped by the paymaster from officers' pay and credited to the mess funds. For all other arrears he will be held solely responsible, unless the same is at the time brought to the notice of the brigadier.

14. The management of the mess is to be conducted by a committee, to be composed of three members, one of whom shall be secretary, who will have charge of the mess-books, cash, letters, &c. The committee will be chosen at the end of every six months, at a quarterly mess meeting, by the majority of the officers present, the commanding officer having the power of putting his veto upon the choice; he being in every respect held responsible by the Government and Commander-in-Chief for the well being and management of the mess: whenever the commanding officer, however, considers it necessary to exercise his authority, against the opinion of the majority of the officers, he will forward the proceedings of the mess meeting, together with his reasons for having so interfered, immediately to the brigadier, with a view of their being laid before his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, should the former be unable to arrange the question referred to him. If deemed advisable by the commanding officer, one member will go out by rotation every three months; it being desirable that all officers in course of time should become acquainted with the management of the mess affairs.

15. Mess meetings are to be held quarterly, and the day to be named in regimental orders.

16. These meetings are to be conducted with the same regularity and order as a . . . e. Officers will sit according to their rank, the second in command on the right of the commanding officer, the third on his left; votes to be taken singly, the second in command voting first, and the commanding officer last.

17. Every officer is at perfect liberty to make any proposal he may consider for the benefit and comfort of the mess.

As a general rule, all matters connected with the management of a mess shall be decided by a majority of votes of the members present with the regiment; but the commanding officer being held specially responsible for the good order and economy thereof, is required, if he considers any proposition which may have been voted for by such majority, to be objectionable in any respect, to prohibit its being carried into effect; in which case, however, the commanding officer will immediately forward the proceedings of the mess meeting, together with his reason for having withheld his sanction, to the brigadier. Should he not be able to decide the question, it will be forwarded for the decision of the Commander-in-Chief; thus the wishes of every member of the mess will be placed before the Commander-in-Chief (should the brigadier or divisional general be unable to settle the question) who will decide the case.

18. At the quarterly meetings, the committee will submit a statement of the debts and assets of the mess, distinguishing dead stock, such as plate, glass, &c., from convertible property, such as wine, beer, and other stores; so that the real condition of the mess fund may be clearly seen. A similar statement of the debts and assets of the mess as they stood on the 1st of the month on which the inspection of the regiment is made, is to be framed, signed by the mess committee and the commanding officer, and to be presented to the inspecting officer, to be transmitted to the head-quarters, with the inspection report of the regiment. A statement of the debts and assets of the mess as above mentioned is to be circulated to the officers of the regiment, who may be absent or detached on staff employ. Whenever the mess may from any cause be in debt, no expense for the purchase of furniture, plate, or any other purpose, is to be incurred without the sanction of the Commander-in-Chief having been first obtained.

19. Such other regulations as may appear necessary for the interior arrangement, comfort, and happiness of the mess are to be established regimentally by the officers of the corps, under the sanction of the officer commanding.

20. The divisional paymasters are to deduct and forward to regimental head-quarters monthly, the mess subscriptions and donations on promotion due by officers absent from their regiments, or otherwise within the presidency.

21. A book is to be kept, in which a record of all the mess proceedings is to be fully inserted, immediately after the mess meeting, and signed by the commanding officer and president.

22. No officer shall be liable to extra expense on account of guests invited by other officers to the mess, and no public dinner shall be given in the name of the regiment unless with the concurrence of the commanding officer; but when the commanding officer and majority of the officers present may think proper to give a public dinner on occasions such as her Majesty's birthday, the presentation of colours, &c., or in compliment to another regiment, or to an individual, every officer who may be in the receipt of Indian allowances, whether present or absent, shall pay one share of the cost. The number of public dinners to which it will be obligatory for officers, staff and regimental, to subscribe, shall not exceed four in one year, and the commanding officer will be held responsible on all such occasions for the prevention of any undue expense.

23. The expense of balls, picnics, and other entertainments given by the officers of regiments, with the concurrence of the commanding officer, in return for civilities they may have collectively or individually received from the society of the station, are to be borne solely by those officers who may choose to subscribe for them. The Commander-in-Chief, aware, however, of the heavy expense necessarily attending all regimental entertainments, in consequence of the small number of officers, and those being mostly of the junior grades usually present with the corps, most strongly advises that the officers of a force or garrison unite in giving dinners or other entertainments, whether in compliment to a regiment on first arrival at, or departure from, the station, or occasionally in return for courtesies received from the civil members of the community.

24. Sherry, madeira, and moderately-priced claret are to be considered the mess wines on public occasions; and it is recommended that those of a more costly description should be avoided, as entailing expense incompatible with the resources of the younger members; on occasions when such expensive wines are ordered on the mess tables, the charge for them must be confined to those who order and sanction their introduction, and who partake of them, and on no account are they to form part of the public charges of an entertainment: and the Commander-in-Chief cannot readily conceive any occasion at which their introduction is required: but the officers will of course follow their own feelings on these occasions; he, however, expects the young officers not to incur uncalled for and unnecessary expense, and to remember the day of payment is always near at hand; and his Excellency prays the older officers to set a kind and considerate example of self-denial to their younger comrades.

25. Medical officers will take their tour as president and members of the mess committee, and president and vice-president of the week, in common with military officers, and the order in which they will take such tour, and vote with military officers at mess meetings, shall be that of their relative rank, and the priority of the dates of their commission, excepting only, that medical officers shall on no occasion take precedence of the officers commanding the regiment, whatever the rank of the latter may be. The same rule is to be observed in respect to precedence in taking seats at table.

26. The office of president and vice-president of the week is merely to regulate the general order and arrangements of the mess table. On all occasions that may call for official interference, pertains exclusively to the commanding officer, or in his absence to the senior military officer of the regiment, who may be present, and who alone will be held responsible for duly supporting the president and vice-president in the discharge of their proper duties, and for interposing his authority whenever circumstances may arise to call for his interference.

27. The senior officers who may be in the mess-room, or billiard-room of the mess-room, or within the compound or tent belonging to the mess, is responsible for the conduct of all his juniors, who must obey his orders as on parade, but no official interference is to be used without decided necessity.

28. The customary hour for the mess dinner being half an hour after sunset, this time will be adhered to, but the commanding officer has the power of changing it, should he conceive it necessary for the public service; but if he does so contrary to the votes of the officers, he will report the circumstance to the brigadier, with his reasons for such interference, which must be forwarded to the Commander-in-Chief.

29. Mess-plate, or other articles once purchased, become regimental property, which no individual claim will be allowed.

30. Officers proceeding temporarily on detached employ, and taking several months' supply with them, may be allowed to liquidate their bill by instalments, provided they give satisfactory security for the full amount, but not otherwise, for in the event of casualty arrears could not be recovered from the estate as a regimental debt.

The fund and accounts of a book society, or billiard table, are to be kept perfectly distinct from those of the mess, and the servants kept up for those objects are to be paid by those voluntarily subscribing to those sources of entertainment.

The band fund accounts are also to be kept distinct from those of the mess.

The practice of officers dealing with tradespeople for their own private purposes, through the medium of the mess, is prohibited, as in case of casualty the mess would not be freed from responsibility in the matter; all such transactions must be on the individual or collective responsibility of those concerned, and the accounts connected with them are in no case to be entered in the mess book, or to be in any way mixed up with its accounts.

The commanding officer will report quarterly to the brigadier the amount paid monthly by the officers for messing, including breakfast, lunch, and dinner; also the other expenses, such as servant, lights, &c., not including viands.

Inspecting generals are not expected to dine at the mess at the period they are reviewing the regiment.

The Queen's birthday, it is wished, should be a public day for the officer's mess in this army, and the only one; but this entertainment depends, of course, entirely upon the wishes of the officers.

It will be observed that every attention has been given, in drawing up these mess rules, to sustain the commanding officer in his official capacity, being, as he is, responsible to government and the Commander-in-Chief for the respectability, tone, and welfare of the mess of his regiment, while, at the same time, officers have the permission of appeal to the Commander-in-Chief, should their proper and just wishes and wants be denied them.

The following certificates are to be furnished on the 15th of every month, or as soon after the issue of pay as practicable, by the mess committee to the commanding-officer, who will name the day in the orders.

1st. I certify that all sums due by the mess to the messman, or by the officers for mess stores, or on any other account whatever, have been duly paid up to the first of the current month.

Month (date) (or as the case may be)

(Signed) A. B., Captain,
President Mess Committee.

2nd. Certified that we have inspected all the stores in the mess Godown, the plate, plated-ware, glass, linen, furniture, china, kitchen utensils, mess-room, outbuildings, &c., as per list, and have found all in good order, except (here state what may have been lost, broken, or damaged, and by whom) and that all such losses, or damage, have been made good by the parties who caused them, and the amount credited to the mess account.

(Signed) A. B., President.
C. D., Members.

(Date)

Certified that I have no claims whatever against any of the officers of the regiment, and that I have paid all demands against me in the bazaar, or elsewhere, as messman up to the first of the current month.

IMPORTS (Bombay, July 31).—The transactions of the last ten days in the import market offer little encouragement to importers, from the anxiety which some have evinced in pressing upon the market goods, not only "to arrive," but of what are in stock, at prices that must leave a serious loss to the shipper at the present rate of exchange. The want of firmness on the part of importers has caused them to exercise caution in their purchases, and the demand has consequently been wanting in speculative character, and the amount of transactions is in a small compass.

CHINA.

PROTEST AGAINST PAYMENT OF ARREARS OF DUTIES TO THE CHINESE.

The European merchants of Shanghai have addressed a protest, dated July 8, numerously signed, to his Excellency Sir John Bowring, H.M.'s superintendent of trade, against the supposed intention of Government to enforce payment of arrears of duties claimed by the Chinese Government by some summary process of the Consular Court. The merchants urge, in their letter (a copy of which, by the way, they request may be transmitted to her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign affairs), that this process in the Consular Court "will deprive those interested of the right of appeal, where they may think themselves aggrieved, to the legal tribunals of the country." The letter proceeds:—

"In our opinion, her Majesty's Consul acted illegally in ex-torting the documents upon which we presume action is now to be taken, having no authority to act in the matter either from the British or Chinese Governments, and consequently no legal use can be made of documents wrongfully obtained."

The merchants further call the attention of the Government to the important circumstances:—

"That the protection promised under treaty is still denied, since a foreign armed guard is, even now, stationed at all the principal approaches to the settlement; a volunteer corps, performing most laborious and irksome duties, has been enrolled; and a sum of upwards of 2,000*l.* has been expended by the merchants on the military defences of the place. But for all these measures, rendered necessary by the neglect of the Chinese Government to observe the provisions of the treaty, and the presence here of a strong naval force, it is probable that the settlement must have long since been abandoned."

"The letter concludes:—

"In urging upon your Excellency the foregoing considerations, it is not for us to proclaim ourselves judges in our own cause, and define precisely the weight to be attached to them, but, Sir, we are acting on behalf of others as well as ourselves. In many instances the money sought to be recovered has not been retained by us, and, when it has been retained, it is held on trust. It is our duty to discharge that trust, and, as men of business, we know that if we yield to a demand not legally due, we render ourselves liable to our constituents. Under these circumstances, we require for our guidance and protection a judicial decision. We have no desire, either on our own part or on that of our constituents, to evade any just claim that can be made upon us, but, doubting as we do the legality of Mr. Consul Alcock's conduct, while doing full justice to the motives which dictated it, and deeply grateful for some of his acts, we cannot think that he should be the judge in matters in respect to which we are compelled to call his conduct in question. We think the question too great and complicated to be decided except by a high judicial tribunal, and respectfully request, therefore, that it may be referred to the Supreme Court at Hong-Kong, so that the protection afforded by the laws of England to the meanest of her Majesty's subjects may not be withheld from us."

In his reply to the spirited protest above quoted from, Sir John Bowring assures the merchants that "he feels a painful sense of the responsibility of his position," greatly added to "by the weight and respectability of the signatures attached to the communication." His Excellency then apprises the protesting parties that, "after the most deliberate consideration, and in order to give effect to the intentions and instructions of her Britannic Majesty's Government, his Excellency has determined that the Consular Court shall be opened to investigate and adjudicate on the claims which may be put forward on account of the Chinese authorities for duties, the payment of which has been suspended since the 7th of September last, and as any appeal against such adjudication will have to be made to his Excellency as chief superintendent of British trade, he does not deem himself at liberty to give opinions as to particular cases which may hereafter officially come before him."

As regards Mr. Alcock's conduct, it is throughout vindicated. "Her Britannic Majesty's Government have already pronounced their judgment. They have sanctioned and approved the measures he adopted in the extremely embarrassing position in which he was placed."

The following passages of the reply are very decisive:—

"His Excellency cannot admit that the successful evasion of duties by any unscrupulous person, whether native or foreign, emancipates Her Majesty's subjects from the obligations which Her Majesty has contracted on their behalf. No British merchant is entitled to protection in his fraudulent transactions, but he may fairly look to the aid of his government in order to prevent his being injured by the fraud of his competitors."

"His Excellency does not recognise the right, sought to be exercised on the 20th of January, by the United States' Commissioner, to declare, without any reference to the Chinese authorities or to his official colleagues, that 'treaties were abrogated' and the 'port of Shanghai free.' Such a declaration from the United States' Commissioner could not release the queen's subjects from their obligations.

"As regards the protection to which her Majesty's subjects are entitled while pursuing their avocations under the sanction of treaties, his Excellency is of opinion that the expenses to which they have been subjected in order to secure their properties and persons should be paid by the Chinese Government, and the consul is instructed to recover the amount of such expenses.

"And in reply to the final request of your letter, that the question may be referred to the Supreme Court at Hong-Kong, his Excellency instructs me to state that tribunal has no jurisdiction in matters growing out of treaty obligations, which being engagements from sovereign to sovereign cannot be taken cognizance of by the tribunals of either of the contracting parties, but must be the subject of diplomatic representation.

"His Excellency will forward to the Earl of Clarendon a copy of your letter, and of this his reply by the earliest opportunity."

FIERCE PIRATICAL ATTACKS.

The lugger-rigged vessel Pekin, with a full cargo of merchandise, stores, some 3,000 dols. in cash, and government despatches, left Shanghai on the 10th of June, bound to Fun-chow-fu. As passengers there were Mr. P. F. Richards, of the firm of Richards and Co., Shanghai, to whom the vessel and cargo belonged, Mr. John Overstone, Mr. Rogers, and four Chinese, natives of Soochow and Canton: master, David Fergusson; mate, Henry Miller; crew, nine Ningpo Chinese; armament, three small guns. The vessel had reached Fou-yuon, when a small, suspicious-looking, white-bottom Cinchew junk was seen, in company with another closer to the land, steering to the northward. The current being favourable, the Pekin was soon fairly in the passage between the island and the main, some four miles and a half across. About 4 p.m. a small deep bay, with bluff rocky entrance, was observed, and—horror of horrors!—a large fleet of junks, many of them under weigh, with, in order that there should be no mistake about their character, large black flags at the fore. Forming into two divisions, the decks crowded with men, the whole fleet, pulling and sailing, came rapidly onwards, and when within gunshot opened fire, one of their shots severely wounding the mate, Henry Miller, in the head. Seven of the Europeans narrowly escaped, after losing all their property and were stripped of their clothes.

The lercha was next set fire to: but the crew and passengers managed to effect their escape. They managed to track alongside the rocks, and with a couple of small pieces of rope tied together, succeeded in holding on to them. All hands then commenced landing, the hale men carefully tending the wounded, one of whom fell into the water, and was nearly crushed between the vessel and the rocks. Fortunately he was got safely on shore; but the place on which they landed was covered with small open oyster shells, and coral, which, to naked feet, were as caustic as to a sore. At last getting on to the hill side, they commenced ascending, but with much difficulty. After a long and toilsome travel, the mountain being fully 1,800 feet in height, they at last struck on a foot-path, following which, about 3 A.M., as near as could be judged, they succeeded in getting down into a valley, and here obtained succour.

PERSIA.

THE MILITARY STRENGTH OF PERSIA.—We have been repeatedly asked for an account of the military strength of Persia. It is a subject on which great misconception exists, and we have therefore prepared a narrative which, though perhaps too minute for the ordinary reader, will enable all military men to estimate the strength, disposition, and organization of the army.

The first introduction into Persia of European discipline, and a knowledge of the fabrication and use of artillery and fire-arms, was due to the gallant and adventurous Shirleys, who entered the service of Shah Abbas, more than two centuries and a half ago, and gave him valuable aid in his wars with the Porte. But although a few European officers and artificers were after that to be generally found in the Persian armies or courts, little advantage resulted, until in 1806, Napoleon, whose views were turned towards India, entered into an alliance with the Shah of Persia, and sent several officers to discipline the Persian troops and organize the matériel for an army. After a time the Russians obtained an ascendancy, and several of their officers were employed; but in 1828 a number of officers from England and India were sent to re-organize the force, which still retains the system then introduced. This fact has given the whole organization a peculiarly British character: whilst the great services and high qualifications of Sir H. Lyndsay Bethune, Cols. Ferrant, Shiel, and Passmore, Major Todd, Capt. Lynch, Mr. Armstrong, and several others, have established a high opinion in the minds of the Persian soldiery regarding the skill, courage, and justice of British officers.

The Persian army, as at present organized, is composed of regular and irregular infantry, irregular cavalry, and regular artillery, of which the latter alone is permanently maintained on the full establishment. The regular infantry (Serbáz), which consists of eighty-two regiments, is divided into two classes, the one forming the active permanent force, the other a reserve, somewhat similar to the Landwehr troops of Germany. The active portion of the infantry consists of 3 regiments of guards and 32 regiments of the line. Each regiment (Fouj) is composed of 10 companies (Dusteh), viz. 1 of grenadiers (Dusteh Bahadaran), 1 of light infantry (Dusteh Mekh Boorán), and 8 line or battalion companies (Dusteh Serbáz).

Each company is of the following strength:—

- 1 Captain (Sooltan),
- 1 Lieutenant (Naib-i-awal),
- 1 Sub-lieutenant (Naib-i-duwum),
- 5 Sergeants (Serjona),
- 10 Corporals (Deh-bashi),
- 100 Privates (Serbáz).

The line companies have each 1 fifer (Neitchee), and the flank companies 1 bugler (Sheipoorchee).

The staff of the regiment consists of

- 1 Colonel (Serjung),
- 1 Lieutenant Colonel (Faver awal),
- 1 Major (Faver duwum),
- 2 Adjutants (one to each wing),
- 1 Surgeon (Jerráh),
- 1 Accountant and Paymaster (Mirza),
- 1 Baggage-master (Tablida).

The full strength of a regiment is consequently 1190 of all grades. The right wing is under the charge of the lieutenant colonel, and the left wing of the majors.

The uniform consists of a red or blue cloth jacket, loose linen breeches, high brown or yellow leather boots, and the national lambskin cap; the two latter are supplied by the soldier, for which, however, he receives an annual allowance of about 7 rupees. The accoutrements are made of leather on the European plan; the arms are flint muskets and bayonets, of either English or Persian manufacture, which latter are of exceedingly good quality. The formation is in two ranks, and the men are good shots, and manoeuvre smartly, and are tolerably steady under arms.

Two regiments form a brigade (Teep), which is the command of a general of brigade (Ser Teep), and two or more brigades constitute a division, commanded by a general (Serdar). A general-in-chief is called Amir-i-tooman; a marshal, Amir-i-nizam. The war minister has the title of Wuzir-i-nizam, and he is assisted by a staff officer, uniting the functions of our adjutant and quarter-master-general's departments, who is designated Adjutant Bashi. Of the three regiments of Guards, the 1st or Bahaderan Khassa is a Grenadier corps, and composed exclusively of Christians, either subjects of the empire or refugees; it is at present commanded by a Russian named Samson Khan. The 2nd regiment is called the Old Guard, and the 3rd the New Guard of Karamania.

The position of the colonel somewhat resembles that of the colonel propriétaire in the Austrian service. The regiment is to a certain extent his property, and his power is absolute, as he can execute capital punishment by the bastinado. But there is a check, and a very effectual one, in the character of the men themselves, who, although they generally render implicit obedience to the colonel, yet, when he grossly abuses his power, or exercises it in a cruel or tyrannical manner, either mutiny and kill him, or make him prisoner and send him to the Shah, with a request that he may be removed. As a mutiny is a serious affair, these requests, which are rare, are always complied with; but a relative, generally a brother, of the former commandant is appointed.

The annual pay of the several ranks is as follows:—

Private .....	6 toman and	1 daily ration.
Corporal .....	8 " and 1½ ditto.
Sergeant .....	12 " and 2 ditto.
Sub-Lieutenant .....	36 " and 2½ ditto.
Lieutenant .....	40 " and 3 ditto.
Captain .....	80 " and 4 ditto.
Major .....	160 " and 6 ditto.
Lieutenant-Colonel .....	220 " and 10 ditto.
Colonel .....	500 " and 20 ditto.

The value of the toman is about 5 rupees. The ration consists of half a batman of bread, equal to about 3 pounds. A captain receives one ration of forage, consisting of 2 batmans of straw and 1 batman of barley; and the field officers receive severally, 3, 5, and 10 forage rations.

The pay of a general of brigade is 1,000 toman a year, with an allowance for his establishment, which generally consists of the revenues of a village. The pay of the higher rank depends on their influence and position.

The remaining forty-seven regiments form the reserve force; and of these the greater portion are little more than skeletons, the men being allowed unlimited leave. They are, however, annually mustered and exercised for a few days, and are always liable to be called on for service when required. A considerable portion of these corps have recently been embodied, and are now forming a reserve camp under the orders of Khan Baboo Khan, the king's uncle. The recruiting ground of these corps is chiefly distributed over the provinces of Irak Ajemi, Fars, Kerman, and Yezd. Their pay, when embodied, is the same as the active force, but whilst on leave they receive nothing.

The irregular infantry consists partly of a militia and partly of contingents, furnished by the frontier districts; this force amounts to about 80,000 men, called Toofunchees, armed with muskets or matchlocks. They are only called out on particular occasions, and even then they receive no pay, and find their own arms and equipments, but they receive rations and ammunition, and a sort of general license to plunder.

The whole of the Persian cavalry (Kooshoonee Sowaree), is irregular. Several attempts at organizing regular cavalry under European officers have been made, but without success, and all have been finally reduced. With the exception of 10,000 men, forming the Royal guard, the cavalry force is drawn from the several tribes, when required. The total force they are bound to furnish amounts to 190,000 men, which with the guard gives a grand total of 200,000 cavalry.

The fixed contingents of the tribes, to which extent they can be called upon, if requisite, is as follows:—

Khorasan .....	45,000 horsemen.
Fars, Kerman, and Arabistan ..	50,000 "
The Bakhtiaris .....	15,000 "
Kurdistan .....	20,000 "
Irak Ajemi .....	20,000 "
Azerbaijan .....	40,000 "

So large a force of cavalry may appear excessive with reference to the population, but it must be remembered that the infantry arm is proportionally weak, and also that in some parts of Persia, and especially on the frontiers, almost every man is a horseman. These troops receive no pay, and they furnish their own horses, arms, and equipments; but when called out they draw rations for themselves and their horses, and look to plunder for all else. They are commanded by their own khans and subordinate officers, but these are all nominated by the shah. A portion of this force, varying in strength, is permanently kept on foot, a certain number of villages being assigned for their support.

But the only respectable body of permanent cavalry is that composing the two corps of the royal guard, which amount together to 10,000 mounted men, designated severally, the Golam-i-pesh Khidmut and the Golam-i-Shah. Of these two corps, the first holds the higher rank, as the body guard of the shah. Formerly this corps, like the original Mamelukes of Egypt, was recruited by the children of Christian parents in Georgia, Armenia, &c. but now it is exclusively composed of Mussulmans of good family.

On appointment, the sowar receives 40 toman for the purchase of horse and equipments; the pay is 30 toman per annum, with rations and forage, and cloth for a new uniform at the festival of Naoroz. The whole, generally speaking, are very well mounted; the arms are a carbine, the curved sabre, a long dagger, and a pair of holster pistols. The perquisites, when employed on civil or political duties, are very considerable, and they are thus enabled to keep up a very strong and efficient appearance. The other and subordinate corps of the "Golam-i-Shah" are similarly but less sumptuously equipped and mounted, the outfit being only 25 and the annual pay 20 toman.

The artillery is confined to horse artillery and camel artillery. The former, which takes the place of foot artillery, is organised in batteries on the English system, and the latter consists of Zumbooraks, light swivel guns attached to the saddle of the camel, deriving their name from Zumboor, a knot. The horse artillery forms 3 regiments, each of 8 troops or batteries, with 162 officers, 3,258 non-commissioned and gunners, and 4,368 horses. There is also a reserve corps, with 3 batteries, 600 men, and about as many horses; giving a total, in round numbers, of 4,000 men, 5,000 horses, and 162 field-guns.

The batteries consist of 5 guns and 1 howitzer. The heavy batteries are composed of 12-pounder guns and 24 howitzers, the light batteries of 9, 6 or 3 pounder guns, and 12-pounder howitzers. Each battery has 9 ammunition waggons, 7 for the guns, and 2 for the howitzer, with the addition of a rocket carriage, and 1 spare gun carriage. The guns are worked by mounted detachments; 8 horses are allowed for the draft of each 12 9-pounder gun and 24-pounder howitzer, and 6 horses for the lighter pieces and the waggons. An ordinary battery has 182 horses. The ordnance and carriages are all constructed on English models, and, especially the latter, are of very serviceable description; but small-arm ammunition is carried on light two-wheeled tumbrils of the Russian pattern. English weights and measures are exclusively used by the artillery and in the magazines, and a translation of the "Pocket Gunner," made by the late Major D'Arcy Todd, who was for several years in the Persian service, is the present guide and basis of their system.

The corps of Zumboorchees consists of four companies, each of fifty men, with a captain and two lieutenants. Each man is mounted on a camel, and carries his Zumboorak affixed by means of trunions to a swivel on the front of the wooden saddle. The piece in form resembles a short musketoon, having a stock and flint lock with a wrought-iron barrel, carrying a ball of about 13 ounces, the whole weighing about 75 lbs. The total load, including the Zumboorchee, and a supply of ammunition, amounts to 450 lbs. One spare ammunition camel is allowed with every two Zumbooraks when on service.

Great pains have been taken to render this little corps as perfect and efficient as possible, it being a favourite arm with the Shah, to whose guard it is attached, and on all public occasions of ceremony it forms a leading and remarkable feature. The artillery generally is the most efficient branch of the service, and is kept tolerably complete. The uniform resembles that of the infantry, the jacket of dark blue cloth with red facings, the breeches of blue cotton, the boots, sword and pouch belts of black leather, with a regular horseman's cloak for bad weather. The arms are the sabre and a pair of pistols. The pay of each grade is one-third higher than that of the infantry, and the officers hold rank a grade higher than in the line, a colonel of artillery being equal to a general in the other branches.

The whole department is under the charge of a sort of Grand Master of Artillery, called Amir-i-Topkhaneh. This appointment, which is considered one of the most important in the empire, is only conferred on officers of the highest rank, and is occasionally held by the grand wuzir. There are several well-stored arsenals, the most important of which is that of Tehran, which includes a foundry, a gun-carriage and small-arm manufactory, with an extensive laboratory and workshops.

The large guns are for the most part of brass, and 8,000 camels are kept up for the parks and other ordnance purposes. In addition to the regular artillery, each large town has a body of trained gunners for local defence.

Such is the strength and organization of the Persian army at present.

The matériel is in many respects excellent; the men are tall, powerful, active, and intelligent, sober and temperate in their habits, capable of great endurance, and by no means wanting in courage. But they are generally averse to discipline, inclined to be mischievous, notorious liars, and incorrigible plunderers; and they have never yet proved equal to their only disciplined enemy, the Russians. Well supplied with European officers, and brigaded with European troops, the result might be very different. The arms and equipments, including the ordnance, are of decidedly good quality, and they are exceedingly well supplied with good horses, either for cavalry, artillery, or for baggage. Good saddle-horses for artillery or cavalry cost from 20 to 40 toman, and strong Yabooos from 8 to 12 toman; whilst camels fit for artillery purposes cost the Government from 10 to 15 toman; their ordinary load being 120 Tabrizi mäs, equal to more than six and a half hundred weight.

Thus it is evident that a British contingent employed in that quarter would not be likely to want the means of transport.—Friend of India.

THE MADRAS MEDICAL ESTABLISHMENT.

SOME of our readers may be aware that the deficiency of the Madras Medical establishment in regard to number has for some time past been obvious and inconvenient. Two years since a beginning was made to provide a remedy for the evil by the sanction of an addition of five to the then existing number. The formation of the 3rd European regiment rendered further addition necessary, and it is understood that two more medical officers will be added on this account, making the entire extension seven. Of these, two will be surgeons and five assistant surgeons.

NATIVE STATES—JHANSI AND OORCHA.

IN spite of the clamour raised by those who earn either bread or notoriety by barking at the Indian Government, the process by which the smaller states are absorbed into the dominions of the dominant power will in all probability go on till there shall be none left to be thus dealt with. Jhansi, in Bundelcund, for want of heirs or lawful claimants of any kind, is about thus to pass under the direct sway of the British Government; and we are not such earnest admirers of native rule as to feel any apprehension that the happiness of the people will in any degree suffer from the change. In such cases, to set up a ruler who, if he do anything, will in all probability do mischief, while we have both the power and the inclination to do good, we hold to be a course of policy which it would be flattering to call questionable.

Oorcha, or Tehree, another Bundelcund state, which is also in the lamentable condition of wanting a ruler, has been dealt with somewhat differently. Its fate has been for a time suspended, and a little longer display of independence is to be permitted. Oorcha prides itself over its neighbours on never having been in subjection to the Peishwa, and though this boast may be worth very little, it is something. The succession to the sovereignty of Oorcha seems destined never to be settled without a dispute. Some years since, a former Rajah, Tej Singh, departed this life: three widows of three different men, two of whom had been rulers of Oorcha, and the third was in a fair way of becoming so, had he not died, prematurely appeared in the thick of the conflict, one of them claiming the right to nominate a successor to the vacant seat of power. They agreed, however, in supporting the candidate who had otherwise the better claim, being the nephew of the deceased chief, in addition to having been formally adopted by him. He accordingly succeeded, but one of the widows contrived to become regent. The death of the chief then successful has opened the way for fresh intrigues. Soojur Singh (the prince lately deceased) made no adoption, but simply nominated as his successor a man of whom not much is known but that he is of an age which, if supported by moderate capacity, would leave little opportunity for controlling him, either by direct compulsion or by more insidious means. This did not suit the lady, who had tasted the sweets of power as regent, and wished to enjoy them again. Accordingly, she and her party oppose. The Government, we believe, will not insist upon the succession of the late Rajah's nominee, but will call upon the Bhondela chiefs to select the nearest collateral heir, who thereupon is to be adopted by the widow of the prince last reigning. Now we may ask with some confidence whether it would not be better that this principality, as well as all others like it, should be incorporated with the British Indian empire, than that it should, on the death of every ruler, become the scene of shameless and violent intrigue, as now?

NEWSPAPER POSTAGE IN INDIA.

WE are enabled to announce with confidence that the reduction of the postage on newspapers in India, which has so long and ardently been desired, will take place as soon as it may please the local Government to carry it into effect. When that may be, we of course cannot pretend to foresee; but the matter now rests with the powers in India, and when the word is given by them, newspapers will circulate by post at a uniform charge of one anna each.

CORRESPONDENCE.

INDIAN ENCUMBERED ESTATES, HOW TO BE DEALT WITH.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—The chief source of the revenue of the Indian Government is the land-tax; consequently, if by any method a larger surplus can be placed in the hands of a cultivator after paying the demand upon him, Government will be gainer. The richer the farmer the greater is the security that he will continue to pay his rent, and the more evident is it that the taxes which he pays do not ruin him.

The settlement has fixed what a cultivator must pay; but it has nothing to do with the fact of a cultivator becoming richer or poorer. The richer a cultivator becomes, the more secure the settlement; but if the cultivator is a poorer man year by year, the settlement is less certain. With capital the Indian cultivator is not much troubled, he seldom has anything over at the end of the year; and this is one of the chief reasons why land does not increase, in India, either in value or in the capabilities for production. One of the great evils under which the cultivator labours is—debt. Land is a good security in India, and money can easily be borrowed; the consequence is, that many estates are in the position of Irish encumbered estates, no improvement takes place, and the whole of the profits of the cultivator are eaten up by exorbitant interest, and too often by unjust demands, which eventually flood the civil courts of India with cases of corruption and extortion.

Capital which might be employed in commerce by the money-lender is actually employed to the detriment of society. If the class of cases which arise between money-lenders and cultivators could be removed from the civil courts, the result would be immediately apparent; the cultivator would enjoy his own profits, his capital would increase year by year, and the money-lender would employ his capital in the legitimate current of commerce. Money which is too easily acquired is soon spent; the cultivator has never, perhaps, felt during his whole life the pleasure of possessing a piece which he could really call his own, for many debts have come down from grandfather to grandson; the result is a demoralised and ruined population. I leave it to the Indian Government to tell the public how far this plague-spot has spread. I believe it to be at the bottom of much of the social misery of India.

Now there are two ways of meeting the evil; the method applied by the English Government to the Irish, who are looked upon as a somewhat alien race by Englishmen (I speak as partly Irish), and the method applied by the French to its own kindred blood. The Irish landlord is fast disappearing, his place is being supplied by Englishmen and their capital; he, poor man, wanders wherever he will, no one caring for him. The evil of Ireland has, however, been cured, no matter how rudely.

The French had to deal with a like evil, an indebted landed tenantry; but how did the French Government treat the evil? It has lent money to the landlords at the lowest possible rate of interest, which will in the course of a few years render the landlord a free man; the land being mortgaged to the Government in the mean time.

The cure applied by England to Ireland will not suit India; but that applied by France to the French will, in my opinion. It is easy to try the plan in one or two of the most indebted districts of India; if the plan succeeds, which it will when once the cultivator can really find his profits his own, let it be tried on a more extended scale. The rendering capital, now invested in mortgages, free to be made use of in commerce, will do much to improve trade in India.

I have only here endeavoured to point out a great principle; the details of interest, &c. &c., follow so naturally, that it is needless to dwell upon them at present.

BOOKS.

The Life and Correspondence of Charles, Lord Metcalfe, late Governor-General of India, Governor of Jamaica, and Governor-General of Canada: from unpublished Letters and Journals preserved by Himself, his Family, and his Friends. By JOHN WILLIAM KAYE, author of the History of the War in Afghanistan. 2 vols. London, 1854. Bentley.

LORD METCALFE, better known, perhaps, as Sir Charles Metcalfe, was one of the many distinguished men through whose agency it has pleased Divine Providence to unite the destinies of India with those of England. A civil servant, and never attaining the high position to which he aspired, and for which he was eminently fitted, the lustre which surrounds his name is of a mild, rather than of a dazzling character. But Lord Metcalfe was a great man, and in whatever walk of life he had been thrown, would, with fair play, have shown himself such. His father, a Director of the East India Company, and at one time the only one of the body to which he belonged who supported the greatest Governor-General that ever England gave to India (we need not name the Marquis of Wellesley), gave his son a writership at an early period of life. This he owed to his parentage; his future success he achieved for himself; and though his merits did not place him on the seat which, beyond all his competitors, he was qualified to occupy, they have earned for him a name which, while Indian history is studied, will never be forgotten. Except in the fortuitous circumstance which led to his destination—he owed little to anyone but himself. Of the advantages of education, his share was not an excessive, nor even an ample one. He enjoyed the elegant culture of Eton, but he quitted that renowned seminary at the age of fifteen; thenceforward the boy had to rely upon himself. He worked his way nobly, and he has left to his family the legacy of a name, which they may regard as one of the most precious gifts which they inherit.

Notwithstanding the early age at which he quitted Eton, Dr. Goodall, who was his preceptor (not then the head master), regarded him as a boy of very high promise, and his future career was complimentary to the good doctor's discernment. He entered little into the sports of the place, but was a grave, studious boy, seeking amusement rather in literary pursuits than in active exercises. The only extraordinary thing recorded of his schoolboy days was, that upon one occasion he was seen riding upon a camel belonging, it is to be presumed, to some itinerant showman. Dr. Goodall, adverting to this feat many years afterwards, said, "You see he was always orientally inclined." But the hero of these volumes was not orientally inclined. His feelings on arriving in India were of a melancholy kind, and he much wished to be allowed to return. He had formed a romantic attachment to a young lady slightly older than himself. Whether this had anything to do with his discontent with the scene of his future labours we shall not inquire. Neither shall we ask whether his living and dying a bachelor had any connection with this boyish friendship, for it seems scarcely to have amounted to love: but we think it would be rash to affirm that it had not, calm as the feeling appears to have been. But we are in danger of forgetting that it is not our duty to write the life of Lord Metcalfe. That is already done in a great degree by himself in the work before us, which ought to be in the hands of every servant of the East India Company, whether civil or military. It is a manual especially for the young civilian, who will here see in the example of a man at once great and good, the model of that which he should hope to be; while in the narration of the important affairs in which Lord Metcalfe was a chief actor, he will gain an insight at once into a most interesting period of Indian history, as well as into the duties which he will have to discharge, and the difficulties which he will have to encounter.

On his return to England Sir Charles Metcalfe was naturally ambitious of obtaining a seat in the House of Commons; but he would not buy and he would not solicit. By what means, therefore, he expected to gain his object it is not easy to say. He did not gain it, nor even had a prospect of gaining it. He thus lost the opportunity of proclaiming how different were the political opinions of his youth from those of his age. He set out in life a flaming tory of the old backbone school; he ended an ultra radical of the deepest shade. With this we have nothing to do. He did his duty in India, in Jamaica, in Canada; and it was not in his power at any time to do either good or evil by his speculative political opinions. Yet we must regret that these were not more consistent—that either his toryism had been less hot in youth, or his radicalism less wild in age. We have one more subject for regret, and that is that when the Crown was advised to reward the services of this eminent man by a peerage, the grant was not made with special remainder, through which the name of Metcalfe might have been preserved among those of the hereditary legislators of the country. In the absence of this addition, the gift of a peerage to a dying man without descendants looks like mockery.

The greater part of pages 627, 628 of the second volume of this work had, in our judgment, better have been omitted. We recollect reading an article some years since in the Edinburgh Review which commenced thus: "This book is written to be read at court." Now the passage in the life of Lord Metcalfe to which we here direct attention was written to be read, not by the public in general, Indian or British, but by a particular section of it, with which, as far as we know, the deceased nobleman had no especial sympathy or regard. We object not to the enforcement, at proper times, of the opinions thus pressed upon Lord Metcalfe, with or without discretion (we determine not which), but we do object to their being paraded in such a book as that now before us. Of the exhortations bestowed upon his lordship by friends, and even (for so we read) by "strangers," we say nothing. We will not quote Selden's remark, beginning: "For a priest to turn a man when he lies a dying," as we fear that in these days it might be regarded as coarse; and, moreover, it could not apply to Lord Metcalfe, inasmuch as, by the evidence of this book, it is clear that from his youth up religion was the governing principle of his life. So much faith, so much charity, so much purity, without an atom of the ostentation of any of them; without a particle of superstition, or a touch of exclusiveness, indicate that he was not one of "the children of this world;" and we need not doubt that as he had lived, so also "he died, fearing God."

We propose to make two quotations, the first exhibiting life in Government House under the Marquis Wellesley:—

"It happened that when intelligence reached Calcutta that the anticipated rupture had actually taken place, and that Colonel Collins had quitted Scindiah's court, Metcalfe and his associates were thrown into a state of excitement in which there was no great intermixture of pain. It was, indeed, a memorable day. There are men still living who, after the lapse of half a century, remember all the circumstances of that evening as vividly as though they had occurred in the present reign. For some days, the 'glorious little man,' as his disciples affectionately called Lord Wellesley, had been pacing one of the halls of Government House, girding himself up for the approaching crisis; and now he was prepared to meet it. Aided by Edmonstone, the Political Secretary, whose knowledge was as ready as it was extensive, he now dictated instructions to Colonel Collins, now to General Lake, now to Arthur Wellesley, now to John Malcolm, and now to Close and Kirkpatrick, the Residents at the courts of the Peishwa and the Nizam. All day long these weighty despatches grew beneath the hands of the young scribes. The brief twilight of the Indian evening passed and left the work only half done. But still by the bright lamp-light the young writers resolutely plied their pens, as hour after hour the Governor-General continued to dictate the despatches, upon which the fate of principalities depended. Words of encouragement, little needed, came freely from him, as he directed this great work. And still, as Adam, Bayley, Jenkins, Metcalfe, Cole, Monckton, and others wrote and wrote these weighty despatches, upon which the events of the great war were to turn, he told them ever and anon that their work would soon be done, and that there was a table spread for them in the banquet-room, at which they might presently drink success to the campaign. Though it was now the exhausting month of August, and rest and food were denied to them throughout many long hours, there was not one of them who flagged at his desk. Sustained by their youthful enthusiasm, they continued at their work till past midnight; then, weary, hungry, and athirst, they were conducted to the table which had been spread sumptuously for their entertainment. It was a festival not soon to be forgotten. A special message from Lord Wellesley instructed them to give full vent to their hilarity—to use his cellar as though it were their own, and not to think that they were bound to be quiet because they were in Government House. So they drank success to the campaign in good earnest; toasted the glorious Wellesley and his glorious brother; toasted General Lake and Colonel Stevenson; toasted the British Soldier and Jack Sepoy; and finally toasted one another. And the Governor-General did not complain that next day his 'office' was not very efficient."

Our next quotation shall exhibit the hero of these pages as a warrior,—a character in which he is very little known. At the siege of Deeg, however, he appeared in this character, and, as everywhere else, nobly performed his duty.

"The storming party was told off, and Metcalfe volunteered to accompany it. He was one of the first who entered the breach. There are soldiers now living who remember that memorable Christmas-eve, and delight to speak of the gallantry of the young civilian. The 'clerk' fairly won his spurs, and shared with the most distinguished of his comrades the honours, no less than the dangers, of one of the most brilliant achievements of the war. In the Commander-in-Chief's despatch, the name of Metcalfe was honourably mentioned. 'Before I conclude this despatch,' wrote Lord Lake, 'I cannot help mentioning the spirited conduct of Mr. Metcalfe, a civil servant, who volunteered his services with the storming party, and, as I am informed, was one of the first in the breach.' Afterwards, the fine old soldier called him his 'little stormer.'"

We can only repeat our wish that these volumes may be as universally read as they deserve to be.

ALLEN'S MAPS OF INDIA, &amp;c.

DRAWN BY JOHN WALKER,

Geographer to the East-India Company.

A New Map of India;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorates, and the Position and Boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

*. The object kept in view in compiling this Map, has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all Stations—Civil and Military—are inserted, as well as those of all Towns and places of note, likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various Districts and Collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The Railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for Reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been shunned.

A General Map of India;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Hon. East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

Map of India;

From the most recent authorities. On two sheets—Size, 2 ft. 10 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 1s.

Map of the Routes in India;

With Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this Map are given the whole of the Military and Civil Stations, together with the principal Towns, the villages being omitted so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies.

A Map of the Western Provinces of Hindoostan;

The Punjab, Cabool, Sind, Bhawalpore, &c.; including all the States between Candahar and Allahabad. On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 2 in. high. 30s.; or on cloth, in a case, £2; or on rollers, and varnished, £2. 10s.

Map of India and China, Burmah, Siam, the Malay Peninsula, and the Empire of Anam. On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 3 ft. 4 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

Map showing the Steam Communication and Overland Routes

Between England, India, China, and Australia. Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 4 in. high; on cloth, in a case, 14s.; or with rollers, and varnished, 18s.

Map of Arabia;

Compiled from all the most recent authorities, by order of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company.—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high; on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory.

On one sheet, 5s.; or on cloth, in a case, 6s.

Map of Afghanistan and the adjacent Countries;

On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

Map of China,

From the most authentic sources of information. One large sheet—Size, 2 ft. 7 in. wide; 2 ft. 2 in. high. 8s.; or on cloth, in a case, 11s.

Map of the Burman Empire,

Showing the annexed district of Pegu. One sheet, 3s. 6d.; or on cloth, in a case, 5s.

London: Wm. H. ALLEN & Co., 7, Leadenhall Street.

LADIES' & GENTLEMEN'S DRESSING CASES.—MECHI, 4, Leadenhall Street, London.—His STOCK possesses peculiar advantages, both in quality and price. There is a general complaint that the internal fittings of dressing cases are often very inferior. Those who purchase at Mech's will be sure of having everything of the best, because he has long been celebrated for the superiority of his cutlery, and has bestowed equal pains in bringing to perfection his tooth, nail, hair, and shaving brushes, and other necessities. In fact, he considers it essential that each article in a dressing case should be perfect in itself, so as to render the whole useful and complete. Catalogues gratis. The largest assortment in London of papier maché manufactures, and the usual stock of articles suited for presents. Mech's peculiar steel razors, 7s. and 10s. per pair. His magic strops, 2s. 6d. to 6s. 6d.; paste, 6d. and 1s. per cake. Cutlery ground and repaired daily on the premises.

All articles warranted to stand an Indian climate.

LADIES' OUTFITS TO INDIA.

JOHN BESMERE & CO., Manufacturers of LADIES' READY-MADE LINEN, Under-clothing, Baby-linen, and every article required for a family proceeding to India, are now compiling Outfits at their Manufacturing Prices, thus effecting an important saving in the outlay. Wedding Outfits on the same terms.

Ladies' Long Cloth Chemises, 1s. 6d., 2s., 2s. 6d.; Frilled Night Dresses, 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d.; Long Cloth Drawers, 1s. 6d., 1s. 9d., 2s.; Petticoats, 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d.; Dressing-gowns, 7s. 6d., 8s. 6d., 10s. each. A detailed Priced List of every article may be ordered by post. The Outfit Department is entirely superintended by young women of competent skill, aided by dressmakers of taste and experience.

All the Under-clothing is made up by selected classes of carefully-trained private hands, needlewomen who receive constant employment throughout the year, at a liberal and fixed rate of wages. This system, ORIGINATED BY THIS THE OLDEST ESTABLISHMENT OF THE KIND IN LONDON, has effectually redeemed the character of Ready-made Linen for strength and neatness, while its admitted usefulness and economy for garments for family and general home use, have placed it among the successful manufactures of the day.

To the Merchant exporting to Australia and other settlements, these goods, from the high character they bear, are very attractive, and rank among the safest shipments to those parts.

Ready-made Linen Warehouses, 61, 62, 63, and 64, HOUNDSDITCH, London.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly, and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the Kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

PAYNE and SONS' INDIAN CURRY POWDER, UNEQUALLED for its delicious FLAVOUR and stimulating QUALITIES, in 1 lb. Bottles, 3s. 6d.; ½ lb., 2s. 3d.; or 7 lbs. for 21s.

CURRY and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE, 1 lb. jars, 3s. 6d., ½ lbs., 2s. 3d. CURRY ESSENCE, Pickles and Chutneys, in 9d. per bottle. PICKLED MANGOES, HUMPS, TAP SAUCE, and every description of Indian Delicacies, may be had, at greatly reduced prices, from

PAYNE and SONS' FOREIGN WAREHOUSE, 328, REGENT STREET, LONDON.—A List forwarded on application.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS have again Cured an Ulcerated Leg after every other remedy failed.—Henry Winton, of Rickmansworth, was for a long time an object of horror to his friends, owing to his predisposition to Ulcerous Sores; he tried every remedy likely to benefit him, but they turned out of no avail; finally, his leg became so completely covered with Ulcers, that amputation of the limb appeared to be the only thing likely to save his life. At this juncture, he had recourse to HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS; and in four months from using these remedies, he was cured, to the astonishment of all who knew him.

Sold by all vendors of medicines, and at PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY'S Establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

UNDER THE IMMEDIATE PATRONAGE OF THE COURTS OF EUROPE, THE ARISTOCRACY, AND THE UPPER CLASSES.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL is a delightfully fragrant and transparent preparation for the Hair; and as an invigorator and purifier beyond all precedent. In dressing the hair, nothing can equal the effect of Rowlands' Macassar Oil, either on natural or artificial hair, rendering it so admirably soft that it will lie in any direction, producing beautifully flowing curls, and imparting a transcendent lustre.—Price 3s. 6d., 7s., family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' KALYDOR for the skin and complexion is unequalled for its rare and inestimable qualities. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek; the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms; its capability of soothing irritation, and removing cutaneous defects, discolorations, and all unsightly appearances, render it indispensable to every toilet.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO; or, Pearl Dentifrice.—A White Powder, compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the Oriental Herbal. It bestows on the Teeth a pearl-like whiteness, frees them from tartar, and prevents premature decay. It induces a healthy action of the Gums, and renders the Breath sweet and pure.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

the more important, so far as importance attaches to either.

"Dost Mahomed has received another letter from his agent at Herat, in continuation of that which I have already sent you. It states that the English and Persians are both inclined to assist Herat in recovering the territory wrested from it by the Candahar chiefs, in case the Dost should fail to compel his brothers to restore it.

"The chief of Herat has received a friendly letter from the Khan of Khiva, stating that the Persian force at Merw is daily increasing, and that if the Shah once gains firm footing there, with or without the aid of Russia, he will be master of all Khorasan. He (the Khan of Khiva) has been assured by the Russian general, who with his troops is encamped near Khiva, that if the Persians make any attempts on Khiva, they shall be driven back by the Russians. But it would never do for Khiva, and with it Bokhara and Herat, to remain thus in fear of the Persians, or to be compelled to accept assistance from Russia. In either case their position was a dependent one, and the only safe plan was to rely on their own arms. When Herat was besieged by the late King of Persia, the Khan of Khiva had sent thousands of his Toorkoman troops to harass the Persian camp, and those troops had done effective service. But without thus recurring to past services, he (the Khan of Khiva) hoped that for the sake of the common cause, the Herat chief would send his cavalry to vex the rear of the Persians at Merw.

"The Khan of Khiva has also asked the Herat chief for the redress of 'Tat Sahib and Shikspur Sahib' (the late Major Tod and the present Sir Richmond Shakespeare are of course intended), who had rendered such good services both to Herat and Khiva.

"Zaheer-ool-Dowlah has written to the Dost to say, that if the territory is restored to him, he will make it a dependency for Cabul.

"On this the Dost was inclined to set out at once with his army against his brothers at Candahar, but on the advice of Sirdar Sultan Mahomed, he recurred to his former intention of sending Gholam Mahomed Khan to Candahar in an amicable way, before resorting to severe measures. The next day the Ameer was informed that Sultan Mahomed's advice was insidious, as he was intriguing with the Candahar chiefs. The Dost has, therefore, excluded Sultan Mahomed from his councils, and the latter, together with Mahomed Osman Khan and Shojah Ood-dowlah, have got up a party in opposition to the Ameer.

"Rahmut Khan Oorukzaee has written from Peshawur to Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan, son of the Dost, offering to renew the negotiations with the English which were begun by the late Nawab Jubber Khan. Mahomed Azeem Khan replied that he had already wasted enough time in negotiating with subordinates; that when Mr. Taylor was at Peshawur, he had entered into a long correspondence, and afterwards found out that that officer could do nothing without authority from Calcutta. He must first know therefore what powers Major Edwardes possesses.

"Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan has, however, forwarded the correspondence to his father, and recommended an alliance with the English as a temporary expedient, until the Russians or Persians should hold out more advantageous terms. In such case there would be no harm in forsaking the English, who themselves are notoriously self-seeking and false. It will be easy to persuade the English into an alliance, since they look upon Herat as the key of India. The Ameer has sent no reply to this letter.

"The Persian force at Merw was being strongly reinforced.

"The Candahar chiefs are all quarrelling among themselves, and Kohun Dil Khan, who has been deserted by every one except Sirdar Meer Afzul Khan, is in great perplexity.

"The king of Budukshan has sent an envoy and presents to Cabul, and is anxious to contract an alliance with the Ameer.

"We learn from Peshawur that the Nazir Khairoollah is treated with great neglect. He makes little progress either in his negotiations with the English, or in his attempts to recover the money due to him. Major Edwardes always tells him in reply to his overtures, that he is 'waiting for an answer from Calcutta.'

"On hearing this the Ameer remarked, that the English would never discover the value of an alliance with him until they found the Russians in Bokhara. He knew that the English had apprehensions about the Russians, as he had been told that by many gentlemen at Calcutta. However he supposed that neither Major Edwardes nor the Governor-General could do anything until they had definite instructions from home.

"There is word from Kohat, that the Khalsa lands have been left uncultivated this year to provide an encamping-ground for a large force which is to assemble there after the rains. The Sahub-zadah of Khort, who had been oppressed by Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan, has been well received by Major Nicholson at Bunoo, and has been awarded a dress of honour.

"The Cabool merchants are very backward this year in contracting for the Dost's customs revenue. They have an idea that the English are going to advance from Peshawur, and that they will be the losers by any permanent agreement. The soldiers and petty traders on the other hand only hope that the English will come. The Ameer is busy enlisting troops, who flock to his standard from the Candahar territory. How he is to raise the money to pay them nobody knows.

"A report has reached Cabool to-day that Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan is dead at Bulk. But it requires confirmation.

"The Ameer has appointed Mahomed Aslum Khan, his youngest son, to be ruler of Dehzurgee. Another of his sons has been placed in charge of the Behsood Hazarah, which was formerly ruled by Akram Khan.

"Elihee Buksh and Shah Mahomed, who, as I told you, were travelling in India in the guise of traders, and used to send the Dost all the news, have returned to Cabul, leaving an agent behind them. They have given the Ameer an amusing jumble of fact and fiction relating to the war with Russia and the assembling of troops in the Punjab.

"The governor of Kalat-i-Ghilzie has reported the departure of the Persian ambassador (Elchee-i-Eran) from Ahmad Shahee to the Ameer, asking instructions from H. H. how to receive him at his own station, and how to escort him to Cabool."

The letter of the 27th will be found among our extracts.

We have nothing to add from the North-West.

Two petty princes have paid that debt which all must pay. One of them, the Rajah of Pallinpoor, has been succeeded by his eldest son, who has ascended the gудdee under the best auspices,—so say the astrologers, by whose advice the day and hour were chosen, and who must know, if any one knows. The other deceased chief is the Rajah of Bhownuggur, whose house, it is said, "is one of the oldest in the world," and who was "able to trace his family farther back than any European sovereign." It may be doubted, however, whether much faith ought to be put in Indian genealogies. The Rajah is succeeded by his brother.

The Bengal annual relief has been published in General Orders, and appears in the usual place.

At Bombay, Captain Haines, having escaped criminal conviction, is now to be proceeded against civilly, and is again the inmate of a jail.

From China there is little or nothing concerning that country (which, perhaps, is a good thing), but the following from the Friend of China of July 22, gives the later proceedings of Commodore Perry at Japan.

"The U. S. S. Mississippi, bearing the flag of Commodore Perry, arrived this morning, having left Japan the 25th ultimo, and Loochoo the 17th instant. The rest of the squadron are en route to this port, and may be looked for in a few days. We have been favoured with the following report of movements subsequent to the despatch of the Susquehanna, by which vessel we obtained the particulars published in our paper of the 5th April last. After the conclusion of the treaty, and interchanges of hospitality, the squadron sailed for Simoda, one of the two ports opened to the citizens of the United States. The fleet captain, Captain Adams, was despatched to Washington with the treaty, on the 5th of April, and took passage in the Saratoga as far as the west coast of America. A careful survey of the harbour of Simoda being made, and most of the stipulations of the treaty being put in practical operation, the commodore sailed for Hakodadi, where he arrived about the middle of May. This is one of the most magnificent bays and harbours in the world, and capable of holding all the fleets of the Pacific in security. The commodore's object in visiting Hakodadi was the same as at Simoda. In addition to the survey of the harbour, however, a vessel was sent to examine 'Volcano Bay,' another to the Island of Fatsio, which is the penal colony of Japan for political offenders; and another down the Japan sea to Shanghai. The mountains in the vicinity of Hakodadi abound with bears, deer, and small game, and the bay furnishes delicious salmon and shell-fish in the greatest abundance. There is a spring near the town, the water of which is strongly impregnated with sulphur, and is supposed to be highly medicinal. Hakodadi is the second city in size on the island of Yesso, and probably the first in commerce. Junks in great numbers were constantly arriving and departing whilst the squadron was there; and at no time were there less than one hundred at anchor in the port, yet the authorities said their numbers were always greatly increased during the summer months. On the return of the squadron to Simoda, the commissioners were already there awaiting the arrival of the commodore. The place had become an imperial city, and the Prince of Mima Saki and the Prince of Suruga had been appointed its governors. The good feeling which had subsisted between the Americans and the Japanese, since the arrival of the squadron, seemed to be increased by a more intimate acquaintance, and the squadron sailed on the 25th June with the best wishes of the commissioner and inhabitants, and expression of a hope of soon seeing them again in Japan. Stopping at Lew-chew for a short time, the Commodore and Regent of the island established some regulations for the benefit and protection of American vessels touching at the ports of the kingdom. The squadron left Lew-chew on the 17th inst.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA, REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

H.M.'s FORCES.—Capt. W. K. McLeod, H.M.'s 74th, near Pondicherry; Lieut. J. C. King, H.M.'s 74th, at Jacatallah, aged 22, June 29.

Jacob, at Nynee Tal, aged 18, July 25; Capt. J. C. Lamb, 52nd N.I., at Umritsur, June 24; Ens. C. Smallpiece, 65th N.I., at Rangoon, July 22.

MADRAS.—Lieut. T. H. V. Shortland, 36th N.I., drowned in the Sitang River, Burnah, April 23.

BURMAH.

The Berenice has brought us the Rangoon Chronicle down to the 2nd August. The king of Ava has sent a sample of coal, which is said to be of a superior quality, to Captain Phayre, but his Majesty's agents are said to want too high a price for it. With such abundant means for boat building, and such fine rivers, coal ought to be brought down to Rangoon and Maulmain at a very moderate cost, and if it exists in Pegu as well as in Burmah, and we have no doubt it does, Lord Dalhousie may have done well in adding this province to our empire. Coal fit for steamers in such a locality would be more valuable than gold, and its discovery would benefit us in Calcutta, as it would do away with the excuse of the P. and O. Company for their high rates of passage money, at least as far as the eastern seas are concerned. The Chronicle does not even hint that the war is likely to be renewed, nor does he report any disturbances, every thing seems profoundly tranquil, and the state of the Bassein district in particular is highly satisfactory; we are sorry to observe, however, that it is likely to be deprived of the valuable services of Major Fytche, who is reported to be so unwell that he will require a change of air. We have extracted from our contemporary an interesting account of the shipping trade of Rangoon, from which it appears that the port is already one of some importance, and will, we feel no doubt, become a place of considerable consequence before many years are over. By the same opportunity we have received the Maulmain Advertiser to the 4th August.

SHIPPING TRADE OF RANGOON.—We have been obligingly favoured with a sight of interesting public documents—one being a registered statement of our imports and exports, dutiable and free, including amount of tonnage duty from 1st Feb., 1853, to 30th April last; the other, an account of the receipts and disbursements of the Rangoon custom house, for the like period. From these tabular statements we observe, with much pleasure, that we have been steadily progressing in our trade within the dates above given; and should have shown a balance sheet enough to make even a Chancellor of the Exchequer chuckle with delight had all our imports been dutiable. As the matter stands, however, the official account exhibits a most satisfactory opening of our commercial history—all opposing circumstances, and the shortness hitherto of our career, being duly considered. We have had a tonnage amounting to 50,473, yielding Rupees 12,618 4 0, with imports valued at Rupees 1,564,767, and paying duty in Rupees 84,350 13 6; independent of free imports of the declared value of 40,85,102 3 10 rupees; while our exports have been of the value of Rupees 598,004 9 9, with free exports valued at Rupees 23,12,880 10 1. It thus appears that our imports have been rather more than 2½ to 1 of our exports. This is by no means an unfair proportion; though the figures would have shown differently had we, in the interim, possessed the timber-trade we ought to enjoy, and which, en passant, we hope will soon be the case.

Passing on to the second document, we find the Customs' receipts showing total of Rs. 116,565 10 0, with an expenditure of Rs. 16,600 1 0 for establishment; contingencies Rs. 5,858 4 2—and Rs. 905 2 6 paid as drawbacks; the balance in favour of the Custom House being no less than Company's Rs. 93,346 and some pice.

We congratulate our respected commissioner on these satisfactory accounts; the perusal of which cannot fail to draw his attention to a very material fact—the great advantage which would accrue to the port, by local circumstances and government revenue arrangements admitting of a more suitable increase in the export trade of Rangoon.—Chronicle, July 26.

BASSEIN.—The following is from a correspondent at Bassein, dated 20th July:—

This is by far the finest and most flourishing district in the province. A very extensive trade is going on with the upper provinces of Ava; upwards of 300 large boats are said to have lately left one town in the interior alone, loaded with the produce of the district; the cultivation is in increase of that of last year, and a very thriving trade may be expected next cold season.

The new city of Negrais is to be commenced immediately after the S.W. monsoon, established next cold weather, and land granted to settlers on the most liberal terms. The whole of the native coasting-trade with the Bay of Bengal and Calcutta, passed via Bassein during Burmese Government, and Negrais, from its natural advantages as regards trade, and its being the only, so to speak, harbour in the bay of Bengal, must soon rise to great importance under the British Government.

Since the rebellion, and hanging of its ringleaders, the district has been in a supreme state of quietude, not a dacoity or crime accompanied with violence heard of; everybody has the greatest confidence in Major Fytche; and his loss will be felt as a great misfortune by the whole community, not excepting the Dacoits; for they also are finding an honest employment by enlistment in a light infantry corps that he has been ordered to raise, for the purpose of absorbing these loose fish. The men enlisted have almost all either for or against him, he knows them, and they knew him; but it may be "tout au contraire" with a stranger; their absorption is a great relief to the country, and whatever happens they should not be again let loose on society.—Chronicle, July 29.

THE "ENTERPRISE."—The H. C.'s Steamer Enterprise arrived off town on Monday. We hear that she will proceed immediately to Bassein to relieve the H. C.'s Steamer Nemesis; the latter proceeding on to Calcutta for repairs preparatory to her proceeding to the Straits and China.—Ibid. August 2.

BENGAL. OUDE.

On the 29th June there was a panic at Cawnpore. The occurrence illustrates at once the necessity of annexing Oude, and the social misery which justifies the measure. One of those oppressors who in ancient France were called Farmers-general, and in modern Oude are denominated Chuckladars, is collecting revenue opposite Cawnpore. He collects it after the true native fashion, demanding first the regular revenue, then doubling his demand, then making delay an excuse for plunder, and then burning the village to the ground as contumacious. Wherever he moves, the inhabitants suffer all from which we turn in horror when a town is taken by assault. Among other oppressions, this man seized the family of a respectable Zemindar, the head of a subdivision of a Rajpoot clan. By the usual threats of insult to the women, he extorted from the unhappy landholder fourteen thousand rupees. Even this did not satisfy his insatiable rapacity. He saw that the Zemindar was wealthy, and knowing that the women were in his hands, fancied he could squeeze him absolutely dry. He demanded a second bribe of forty thousand rupees. He had mistaken his victim. The Zemindar saw no prospect of the release of his family, and believed that the next expedient would be to put himself, or them, to the torture. Driven to despair he called together his people, removed his property, and fled into the river. He encamped on a Chur, or bank in the Ganges, which was, fortunately for himself, a little nearer to the British than to the native side of the river.

In the long list of crimes there was but one which the Chuckladar dared not commit, and that one was to violate the territory of the Company. He might burn and murder, ravish and destroy as much as he pleased on his own side of the river, for Mr. Cobden is opposed to intervention, but one step across the frontier would have insured a speedy retribution. Force failed, and the Chuckladar, as an Asiatic, instinctively fell back on fraud. In his generous zeal for his British friends, he informed the authorities that a band of robbers from Oude had entered British territory, intended to lay it waste with fire and sword, and just at present were ensconced on an island in the river. This was the "invasion." The authorities, whether convinced or not, justly considered it their duty to be fully prepared. Pickets were thrown out, a company was ordered into the plain, and a troop of light cavalry held in readiness for the pursuit. It is probable that guns would have been prepared, but there were none fit for service in Cawnpore. We sincerely hope that this fact, for which we can vouch, may attract the personal attention of the Governor-General. Cawnpore is not only a frontier town; it is for many reasons one of the most important and exposed places in India. It has no European troops, and the maintenance of a battery in service order is a wise precaution long since dictated by the Government. A second order may possibly ensure the mounting of the pieces, the purchase of the horse or bullock gear, and a few other essentials, without which they have remained for the past two years. The scene terminated by the unfortunate Zemindar yielding himself to the magistrate, and begging only that he might not be surrendered to the Chuckladar. One little incident remains to be recorded. It rests on European testimony, and might be proved in a court of justice. A poor husbandman on the Oude side was seen, apparently begging one of the Chuckladar's soldiery not to injure him. He put up his hands in an attitude of supplication, and the next instant the soldier with his scymitar had sliced them off. There are men still living who can remember what their families suffered during the reign of terror. Let those who have shuddered over those stories, remember that in Oude there is a tyranny heavier than this, directed by an avarice from which the terrorists were free, and embittered by the cold cruelty of which Orientals alone are capable. Carrier's deeds at Nantes were scarcely worse than those of some of the farmers-general of Oude. Meanwhile, early in August, while all this was proceeding, the king of Oude, the head of the second Mussulman House in India legally married two meltranees (sweepers). Occurrences such as this, of which we have related but a part, do not occur occasionally. During the harvest they form the daily history of Oude, and for them in the sight of God and man, we are ourselves responsible.

We spoke a fortnight since of the extravagance of this family. We had then no room for the details, without which general facts leave but a transient impression. In July, 1814, died Saadut Khan. This old monarch through a long life had been haunted by the idea that he ought to resign. As a provision against that day, he set himself like the second King of Prussia to amass treasure. He succeeded, and died, still a sovereign, with an accumulation of fourteen millions sterling. Thirteen years after, died his son, who, besides the entire revenue of his kingdom, had spent four millions sterling. Ten years more passed, and in 1837, but seventy lakhs remained in the treasury. The rest had vanished with the revenue. The family had spent in twenty-three years, a sum which represents the fee simple of an estate of six hundred thousand a year.

Nor had they spent it in mere extravagance, as Europeans understand the phrase. We have some sympathy with the ambition which threw away millions to retain America, and with the not unkingly pride which squandered millions on Versailles. The royal house of Oude is little even in its vices. It has conducted no wars, and has struggled for independence only by intrigue.

It has erected no sumptuous buildings, and has built nothing useful even to the sovereign. The pride of each king has led him to adorn the mausoleum of his immediate ancestors, while his avarice has induced him to save expense by stripping the ornaments from those already in existence. Not one inch of road, not one bridge, or any work of public utility was built from these fourteen crores of rupees. All was spent in senseless luxury, bestowed on parasites, or wasted on female favourites, of whom the Pompadour or Dubarry give us but a faint idea. Since 1837, matters have been even worse. Till then the expenditure was supplied from this store; now it comes from the purses of the people. With a diminished population, and a crippled revenue, a nobility too strong for their master, and a soldiery mutinous to both, the Court finds in oppression and money-lenders the resource it once found in the palace vaults. The riotous expenditure is undiminished. The population has declined one-half.—Friend of India.

CIVIL JUSTICE AT LAHORE.

English jurisprudence needs a Johnson, and the House of Commons has published a blue book to illustrate that necessity. Ostensibly, it contains the replies of the twelve judges to certain queries addressed to them by the Lord Chancellor. Practically, it is filled with the protest of the judges against any attempt to translate technical terms into English. The Chancellor is anxious to define murder. The judges say every definition is a limitation, and therefore a source of safety to the criminal. Meanwhile, while the judges discuss etymology, the civil law, which chiefly requires improvement, remains unreformed. In India we have at least passed this point in the race; we know where the true obstacles are to be found, and are marching steadily, though somewhat slowly, to meet and destroy them. As usual, the Punjab is far in advance of the remainder of the empire. The authorities in that province have attacked and almost conquered the two monster evils of our civil law—excessive delay, and excessive costliness. In the district of Lahore the suitor can recover property of any amount under Rs. 5,000 within thirty-five days, and for less than three per cent. upon the claim.

The system created by Lord Dalhousie needs no defence beyond that single fact. In the best governed section of the empire, the Agra presidency, with its regulation law, and its trained judges, its long established system, and its settled peace, justice still costs sixteen and a half per cent. There is nothing whatever to mitigate the force of the contrast. The population around Lahore is one of the worst in the world. That capital has for fifteen years attracted every scoundrel possessed of a clear brain, and a seared conscience. The people add to all the ferocity of the Sikh all the chicanery innate in the Hindoo. They forge a deed with as little scruple as they commit a burglary. A dozen different governments have given rights to a dozen contending claimants. Archives have been destroyed, stolen, or secreted, in a series of revolutions. Family disputes have become inextricably confused, and, finally, the courts themselves are infested by Hindoostanee Amlahs, as evil as the mooktears of Bengal. Even Mr. Wedderburn has scarcely cleared them out. Yet the system has prevailed against all these difficulties, and amidst an Oriental population, civil justice is always cheap, and occasionally speedy.

Let us descend to details. In the year 1853-54, 17,631 suits awaited judgment in the civil courts of the entire division. Of this number, only 1,166 were pending at the close of the year, and of these—so far as we can judge from statistics, in this respect somewhat imperfect,—a large proportion had been but a short period on the file. The value of the cases was Rs. 12,51,989, or on an average Rs. 71 a suit, a somewhat large amount. The average cost was only Rs. 4, and the per-centage upon the claim only 4½ per cent. The maximum which is attained in Goordaspur is six per cent., scarcely more than a third of the average of Agra.

As regards delay, perfection has by no means been attained, but the improvement over the preceding year leaves room for sanguine expectation. The "record" has not been abolished, yet the average delay, which in 1852-53 was forty-eight days, was in 1853-54 only thirty-seven. The maximum in the least improved district is only forty days; and, be it remembered, this includes every description of civil action, from simple debts to breaches of promise,—from claims for the price of fruit to family disputes half a century old.

Some portion both of the cheapness, and the comparative celerity must be ascribed to the paucity of appeals. Out of these seventeen thousand and odd cases, only 324 were appealed, and of the appeals 230 were dismissed. Only thirty-three decisions were reversed, or modified, and only eighteen referred for retrial, figures which prove, among other things, that it may one day be safe to do away with the appeal nuisance altogether.

Speed therefore is partially secured, and the commissioner, Mr. C. Raikes, is still, it is said, earnestly endeavouring to produce a further improvement in this respect. Neither he or Mr. Montgomery, however, can effect much more in this direction, until the record is swept away, and we trust the forthcoming report of Messrs. Mills and Harrington, will convince all reasonable men, that the record protects nobody but corrupt judges and the native amlah. The Punjabees are contented with their courts, but they complain of one intolerable grievance. British rule promotes breach of promise of marriage. Under the ancient dynasty they settled such difficulties with the sabre. Under the new régime they can obtain only money penalties, and they are dissatisfied. They are not Manchester men. Unlike Mr. Cobden, but like most Orientals, they hold that there are some few things which are not reducible to price-currents, and among these is the honour of their families. It may perhaps be difficult for the British Government to disregard the "tenderness of our institutions," and punish the neglect to fulfil a contract as a matter of penal discipline. It might, however, follow its own precedent in all matters of marriage, inheritance, and divorce, let the question alone, and leave a punchayat of householders to pronounce, within certain limits, a final decision.—Friend of India.

NEW POSTAGE ACT.

The Postage Act is out!

We congratulate the public on this, although small comfort can the public wish us in return. That which secures to our friends the incalculable, the long-wished-for and long-deferred boon of a uniform, and really cheap system of postage, withholds it from ourselves, the guardians of the public rights, whose advocacy had contributed in a greater measure than ought else to impress upon the Government the necessity of postal reform.

However, we shall not much grumble. In the universal joy the announcement will occasion, let us not betray the littleness of mind which mars the effect of a benefit, because it does not altogether realise our expectations. Let us hope for better things hereafter, strengthening ourselves with the conviction that we have only to make ourselves powerful enough to have our claims respected.

For the benefit of such of our readers as may not feel quite tempted to wade through the Act (of which we are able to publish only the first instalment to-day), we give below the rates that will be charged under its provisions:—

On a letter not exceeding a quarter tola in weight—two pice ; The other rates are one anna, two annas, three annas, and four annas, as the weight increases from a quarter tola to two tolas : every additional tola over and above that being charged for at two annas, and every fraction of a tola being reckoned a full tola.

For newspapers the following are the rates :—

"Imported papers pay two annas, and four annas, weighing from six to twelve tolas ; an addition of two annas for every six tolas above that being made.

"Papers not imported are allowed just half the weights of imported papers !!!

"The Act shall commence and take effect from and after the first day of October, 1854."—Citizen, August 17.

THE CHIEF JUSTICESHIP OF BENGAL.

It may be considered premature to speculate as yet on the probable successor of Sir Lawrence Peel. It is certain, however, that as soon as his resignation is received, the reversion of his appointment will be promised. Already Sir James Colville and Mr. Leith are named as candidates, combining alike ability and interest. We desire, therefore, even at this early date, to record the protest of the public against the selection of any Anglo-Indian whatsoever,—not merely of any member of the Indian bar, but of any one who has ever resided in Calcutta. It is of the highest importance to the Empire, that the final referee in every department should be a man fresh from Europe, and unfettered by antecedents, by relationships, or by any of the social links which influence the views even of the most conscientious. It is in obedience to this policy that the Governor-General, the Commander-in-Chief, the Presidency Governors, and even the Metropolitan, have of late been selected from English statesmen, soldiers, and divines. Any departure from the rule, in these cases, would be viewed with regret even by the friends of the fortunate nominee. The office of Chief Justice is subject to the same necessity. Its occupant is at once Judge of the most important Court in India, a prominent member of the Supreme Legislature, and a censor morum for the metropolis of Asia. In all three characters, it is essential that he should appear absolutely independent.

1. As judge. It is at all times difficult in this country to secure to the judges that grave respect which is so strongly manifested in England. Dwelling amidst a limited society, they must either seclude themselves from the world, or part with some portion of the reserved dignity which ought to be inseparable from their office. The chief justice of the Queen's Bench lives practically apart. His associates are not the men upon whose cases he must decide. Of the thousands of suitors who come before him, he has probably never seen ten. Not only is he absolutely free from all bias, but he is free from the suspicion of it, and the second exemption is perhaps the more valuable of the two. The solitary exception proves the rule. Judges frequently form political connections, and it is in political trials that the value of a jury has been principally felt. Lord Ellenborough in Hone's case, and Lord Campbell in the Achilli action, betrayed in different directions a feeling, which if not bias, at least produced that impression on the spectators. In India, we cannot surround our judges with this social panoply. They must live and move, talk, write, and dine, amidst men whose fortunes may be materially affected by their decisions. It is but a day since an Indian judge, with equal astonishment and indignation, found himself seated at dinner, opposite a man he was to try on the following morning. It is useless to assert that English judges cannot be swayed by such influences. No one believes the present occupants of the three Indian benches to be capable of injustice, but every man, whether judge or suitor, barrister or witness, will trust the word of his friend before the word of a stranger. This species of bias it is impossible in this country to prevent. We may, however, diminish it to the utmost. The most efficient and the most righteous plan for such diminution is to import a chief justice, a man with the English personal reserve, ignorant of the intrigues of Calcutta, and with all his friendships still to make.

2. As member of the Supreme Legislature, we need a judge not versed in Indian theories. The Indian element in the Legislature is quite strong enough. It needs to be tempered by English ideas, English breadth of thought, and, if you will, by English prejudices. We do not know that English lawyers are one whit abler in their way than Indian lawyers. We only know that their thoughts turn on a different pivot, and the result is a free and sharp discussion, highly favourable to the legislative efficiency of the council. The Governor-General does not preside in that body. There are therefore but three thoroughly "English minds" actually engaged in the work of legislation. The proportion of alloy is not more than sufficient to harden the metal, and for this reason also the chief justice should be an English barrister.

3. Lastly, the chief justice is also the commissioner of the Insolvent Court. Partly from the extravagant habits of Calcutta, partly from the instinctive desire of every man to make a fortune, and seek a cooler climate, and partly from the violent fluctuations incidental to Oriental trade, that court exercises a most unusual degree of influence over the commercial world. An over-lenient commissioner stipulates reckless speculation. Even Sir Lawrence Peel, who is respected by every lawyer in India, who has earned from the natives the distinctive title of the Impartial—Pil aupokhyopati,—and who will be followed from India by the tears of hundreds whom his bounty has relieved, has in this court done injury to Calcutta. Partly from benevolence, and partly from an over acute perception of the different shades of fraud, he has permitted the Court to become an endurable alternative for speculators. It is this which really injures Indian trade. The respectable houses are exposed not only to the ordinary rivalry of commerce, but to the competition of men who have nothing to lose and all to gain,—whose system destroys the public credit of Calcutta, and whose reckless over-trading accelerates the recurrence of the periodical gluts. We need a judge with the moral daring to remand for two years every man who applies to be relieved from losses caused by speculations without capital. It may be the "vice of the system." The system needs to be suppressed. It may be harsh to "make individuals the scapegoats of a community." When the same law is fairly applied to all, the harshness becomes simple, though stern, justice. Fonblanque would reform the commercial morality of Calcutta in three years. He might not be able to produce universally the high tone of feeling still existing among the more solid houses, but he would at least produce the impression that gambling in produce was an unsafe road to a rapid fortune.—Friend of India.

THE TRIAL OF CAPTAIN HAINES.

Captain Haines, an officer of the Indian navy, who has for fourteen years filled the post of political agent at Aden, has been tried for felony. The station is an important one, the garrison is strong, and the sums which pass through the hands of the chief civil authority are of unusual magnitude. The most implicit confidence was reposed in Capt. Haines, and his accounts were passed almost without inquiry. At length in May, 1852, it occurred to the Accountant-General of Bombay, that the Aden treasury had not, like all other treasuries, been examined by a military committee. Orders were transmitted to remedy the omission, and it was discovered that the cash balance amounted only to Rs. 1,89,335. It ought to have been Rs. 4,71,315. Capt. Haines failed to account satisfactorily for the deficiency. which, however, he promptly acknowledged, and after some preliminary proceedings he was brought before the Supreme Court on a charge of embezzlement. After a lengthened trial, he has been formally acquitted on every count. The evidence was obviously inconclusive, the judge displayed an almost painful impartiality, and public feeling which influences the jury, appeared decidedly in favour of the accused. The verdict was received with loud applause.

We have no intention of examining the question as it affects Capt. Haines. He has been acquitted by a jury of his countrymen, and attack would be as ungenerous, as defence would be superfluous. Innocent or guilty, his punishment is already heavy, and we refer to his trial only for the political lesson it seems to us to afford. It appears to prove two things first, that our elaborate system of check is sometimes inefficient, and secondly, the necessity for constituting crassa negligentia a crime.

Captain Haines was an officer in high employ, trusted from his character, and left from political circumstances very much to his own discretion. His treasury was very large, and his payments necessarily very irregular. It might have been considered expedient to leave an officer entrusted with such powers, solely responsible for his own treasury. That course would certainly have elicited the feeling of honour which exists even in men otherwise degraded, and is frequently a greater defence from crime than the most rigid surveillance. Or, if that were inconsistent with the system of Government, no trust should have been reposed in any one but the Accountant General. The Government adopted neither course. They weakened the sense of honourable responsibility by appointing a check, and destroyed the efficiency of the check by selecting an officer incompetent to the task. Lieutenant Cruttenden, the assistant agent, was ordered to count the balances. Lieutenant Cruttenden had perfect confidence in Captain Haines, and when told by his superior that it was a mere form, believed him. He signed the receipts without counting the money, and the "check" displayed nothing but the suspicious caution of the Government. This requires to be remedied. It may be impossible for an organized Government to rely solely on personal honour. Men of honour in the commissariat have doubtless, in former days, done dishonourable things. If so, the check should at once be rendered absolutely efficient, and a check to be efficient must be applied from without. It should not be entrusted to a military committee. Either the examination provokes unpleasant feeling, and impairs the authority of the officer examined, or—a much more common case,—it degenerates into a farce. Officers will not scrutinize closely the accounts of a superior, with whom they are brought into habitual and friendly contact. They entertain the feeling which renders a gentleman unwilling to count the change received from an honest shop-keeper. We see no reason why, if a purely mercantile check is required, the purely mercantile system should not be adopted. In all banks with numerous branches in England, the accounts are examined by peripatetic inspectors. The inspector has nothing to do with the bank; he comes unexpectedly; he goes at his own convenience; his investigations create no irritation; and, as he can have no personal interests in the matter, they are never unfairly made. Fraud under such circumstances is impossible, while dread of the suspicion of it stimulates the lazy and restrains the negligent. An inspector of accounts could travel as easily as an inspector of jails, and the check would at once become thoroughly efficient.

Moreover, this system would correct in part a custom which ought to be a crime. We mean that crassa negligentia, that gross negligence, which in military law is ranked with cowardice and treachery. Captain Haines by his own testimony was guilty of this offence. For fourteen years he never counted his balances. He appears to have encouraged trade by exchanging dollars for rupees, without any accounts whatever. He signed bills on the departure of the mails without due examination. He advanced sums for the legitimate expenses of the station, without recording them at the time. He discovered only by accident, that his boxes in the treasury were all too rotten to hold the money. In short, by his own statement he did what we see private individuals do every day. He let things go as they best could, kept no accounts, or, what is worse, careless accounts, and when the crash came, acknowledged a civil liability. All this under the inspectorship would be simply impossible. All this we are tempted to think should in a public officer be considered a crime. The law considers carelessness in many cases punishable. If the captain of a steamer is careless, and his vessel strikes, he is transported. If a tradesman enters the Insolvent Court, and acknowledges that he has kept no books, the fact alone is a reason for remand. Why should not gross carelessness in matters of State importance be also visited with a penalty? The honest man would incur no additional danger. The guilty would have no additional shield, and the indolent officer would be compelled to assume a virtue necessary to his personal security. Individuals would not be injured, the State would obtain a great additional safeguard, and the Indian Government would be relieved of scandals of which it is not the cause, but of which it bears the blame.—Friend of India.

A TELEGRAPH FROM INDIA TO ENGLAND.

Two years have elapsed since we noticed the project of a railway from Calcutta to Calais. That project was not the chimerical dream of a speculator, and has not been abandoned. It is advancing even now, and the world may soon learn with astonishment how little interferes with its realization. Its completion, however, must occupy years, and meanwhile, the possibility of instantaneous communication with Europe, is a more immediate as well as more practical subject of discussion. It has been well opened by Mr. C. Adley, a civil engineer, now stationed at Burdwan. In a little pamphlet, remarkably well written, he has condensed most of the facts necessary to a comprehension of the scheme.

The obstacle, it is evident, is political, and not physical. A telegraphic company has already carried a line to Spezia, and from thence to London the communication is complete. By the expiration of 1855, they expect to have reached Alexandria, and the European half of the line may be considered as already provided. It remains to construct it on the Asiatic side. For this purpose, Mr. Adley suggests that the purely Overland route should be selected. He would make Kurrachee his starting point, and would thence carry his line through Beloochistan along the northern shore of the gulf to Bussorah, thence onward to Bagdad, and through the desert to Jerusalem. From Jerusalem, it would again cross the desert to Suez and Alexandria. Ordinary readers, misled by these great names, may fancy the undertaking one of almost romantic vastness. It is a very prosaic affair. The distance is only 2,450 miles, or less than the space covered by Dr. O'Shaughnessy in a single twelve-month. The mountainous territory to be crossed will not impede the telegraph. The sands of the desert will not overthrow the posts. The elements are no more powerful in Beloochistan than in Bengal, in Bagdad than in Calcutta. It is human opposition alone which we have to dread, and to obviate human opposition, the time is singularly well selected. The line passes through only three territories, Beloochistan, Persia, and Turkey. The Sultan is not likely to refuse the request of an ally, whose bayonets are supporting his throne. The Shah of Persia will be equally unwilling to offend his only counterpoise against the influence of Russia. It is the Beloochees, and the Bedouins who owe but a nominal allegiance either to Shah or Sultan, who alone are to be dreaded. Mr. Adley's arguments upon this point scarcely succeed in producing conviction. He says, the Beloochees obey the Khan of Khelat, and repeats a number of commonplaces about Bedouin hospitality. He considers also that both would avoid stealing wire of no possible value to themselves. The loyalty of the one, the hospitality of the second, and the common sense of all have very little to do with the question. Nobody supposes that a Bedouin wants a few miles of wire, or five hundred wooden posts. But we presume it is not intended to appoint Bedouin or Beloochee signallers, and the question is the amount of protection which can be secured for foreign interlopers. The workmen employed on the line must be Europeans, and a doubt will be felt if theegis of the Company is strong enough to protect men a thousand miles away, amidst barbarians who hate them as spies, as infidels, and as men of a higher and therefore mischievous civilization. It would, however, be possible for government to discover how far the tribes are accessible to the ordinary motives of self-interest, and this once discovered, the achievement, wild as it may appear, is not only possible, but easy.

The last question to be considered is the cost. It cannot be very great. Mr. Adley estimates it a quarter of a million sterling, or three times Dr. O'Shaughnessy's average, and the annual outlay for maintenance at 15,000*l.* The latter sum is too low, but even if it were quadrupled, the cost would be light for the object to be attained. The line would pay, and if not, the financial secretary would be in no fear of an immediate national insolvency. While England pays 170,000*l.* a year for a slow communication with India of five and thirty days, the empire may surely pay a third of that sum for the instantaneous transmission of intelligence. That the object would be worthy of the cost, few will be willing to deny. Every step which brings us into closer connection with England, increases our hold upon the country. Orders could be transmitted as soon as the emergency had occurred, and troops would be in readiness almost as soon as the danger became manifest. To use a jargon, which most of our readers can understand, England and India will become sympathetic, and with more perfect comprehension will come a greater readiness to assist the efforts made, and ameliorate the evils endured, in both countries.

The first practical step is formally to inquire of the Sultan, the Shah, and the Khan of Khelat, if the project meets with their approval, and this step, we hope, will before long be taken by the Government of India.—Friend of India.

THE TRADE OF SINGAPORE.

The growth of the trade of Melbourne is the wonder of the day. We question if it is more marvellous than that of Singapore. Melbourne, peopled by the most energetic of races, is fed by the produce of one of the most fertile of continents. It is the emporium of the southern world, and besides its natural riches exports a special product which deranges the ordinary course of trade. Singapore, peopled by a mixture of Chinese and Malays, has scarcely any natural productions. It exports no gold, and no food. A few spices, and a little gamboge, comprise all the assistance it derives from the island of which it is the capital. Yet in thirty years its trade has risen till it rivals that of first-class cities. In 1820, it contained a few fishermen's huts; in 1836, it had a trade of three millions sterling. Ten years more, and this commerce had risen to 5,900,000*l.*, and it was believed that the prosperity of the port had reached its culminating point. It had scarcely commenced. The Strait Times publishes the official return for 1853-54, and it appears that in seven years the trade of Singapore has increased 27 per cent., or to Rs. 8,23,75,000. The actual figures are in dollars:—

Exports . . . . .	dol. 16,696,583
Imports . . . . .	19,958,974
Total . . . . .	3,66,55,557

Nor is this all. The trade of the port in 1852-53 was only 2,90,24,000 dollars, and the increase in one single year has been nearly eight millions of dollars, or nearly two millions sterling. The increase has been confined almost entirely to the European trade, to which there appears to be no probable limit. The port is the only one in Eastern Asia absolutely free. The population with which it deals is almost boundless, and we see no reasonable ground for questioning that it may continue to increase at the same rate for another quarter of a century. By that time Singapore will have become what nature has destined it to be, the emporium and clearing-house of Eastern Asia.

The Straits Times attributes this enormous expansion in part to the Governor of the settlements. We fail to perceive his influence on the course of trade, but the mere fact that Colonel Butterworth has done nothing to check this growing prosperity, is a sufficient proof that he comprehends the duties of his position. Only two events can now seriously injure Singapore. The first is a recurrence of the Chinese disorders, which will inevitably paralyse trade, and the second is the adoption of a free-trade policy by the Dutch. One trembles to think that the Government of Java may one day be entrusted to a Sir Robert Peel. The Dutch, however, have learnt nothing during the 200 years which have elapsed since they shut the trade of Japan, and the contingency will scarcely increase the anxieties of Singapore.—Friend of India.

THE CASE OF LIEUTENANT PROCTOR.

Lieutenant A. Proctor, of the 39th N.I., has been tried for the wilful murder of two Burmese. The court-martial finds him guilty only of manslaughter, sentences him only to three months' imprisonment, and adds even to that light punishment a recommendation to mercy. The Commander-in-Chief refuses to confirm the sentence, and refers the whole affair to the Supreme Government.

The entire proceeding seems to us to reflect little credit on our military system. It is a fresh instance of that determination to make war upon peace principles, and to save the few at the cost of the many, which is crippling the efficiency of our armaments in the Euxine. Late in 1853, Lieutenant Proctor was posted, with a detachment of the Arracan battalion, in a place called Htiendah in the disturbed district. He was surrounded by a force commanded by Moungyee, three times his strength, and supposed to be closing in for an attack. So far as we can recall facts which occurred nine months since, he received information that spies were in his neighbourhood, and two men answering to the description were caught under suspicious circumstances. Lieutenant Proctor, aware that his force might be destroyed if its position and strength were accurately known, shot them. For this he has been tried as a deliberate murderer. Such a proceeding appears to us calculated to destroy for ever the confidence of every officer in separate employ. It compels every man placed in independent command to work with a halter round his neck. It is an universal law of war that the spy is liable to death, and harsh as it may seem, it is not unjust. The law rests on the simple principle of self-defence, and also on the doctrine, that it is better for one man to perish, than for many to be slaughtered. Thus, if Lieutenant Proctor had been betrayed to his vigilant assailants, a hundred lives might have paid the penalty of mistaken mercy to a couple of scoundrels. But perhaps the men were not spies? We will accept even that possibility, though we believe it to have no foundation. Then they died innocent, but that fact does not make Lieut. Proctor guilty. The judge may be innocent, even though, deceived by false evidence, he sends an innocent victim to the gallows. It is one of the stern necessities of warfare, one of its inseparable evils, that the commanding-officer must be in such cases the sole judge. Whether field-marshal or ensign, whether grey with the experience of battle-fields, or wholly untried, he must, if he has no superior, decide for himself. It is this habit of unfettered decision, which makes the Indian Edwardes, Herberts, and Nicholsons, efficient partisan leaders. For the future, when betrayed, the officer must pardon the betrayer,—an act which might be Christian, did it not involve the lives of those who depend upon his guidance. According to the present precedent, he can only choose between death for his men, and the gallows for himself. We hold Lieut. Proctor entitled not simply to acquittal, but to exemption from trial, not because his act was morally right, and not because he was innocent of murder, but because he exercised a power necessarily intrusted to him by the special law of warfare, and the general law of self-defence.

We must anticipate one more objection to an argument which we acknowledge to be stern. We were not at war. We were not fighting an enemy, but endeavouring to suppress dacoity within our own territories. The argument, plausible as it may appear, has no foundation in fact. When armed soldiers are sent against armed foes, and attack and defend on the principles which regulate campaigns, martial law alone can be attended to. If not, on what principle are the dacoits slain? They ought to be arrested, and perhaps held to bail!

Though we thus acquit Lieut. Proctor, we do not include the Court which tried him in the same verdict of not guilty. They tried him for murder, and found him guilty of manslaughter, yet inflicted a punishment which would have been too light for an aggravated assault. They perhaps believed, as we do, that the deed was justified by a stern necessity. That was a reason for acquittal, but not for an inadequate retribution. Either Lieut. Proctor committed manslaughter, or he did not. If he did, the sentence displays a contempt for human life, and for the ordinary principles of justice. If he did not, even the light punishment is simply a judicial oppression.—Friend of India.

THE INDIAN MARINE.

The reign of the present Governor-General has been one of military reform. The Military Board has been curtailed of powers which it used only to obstruct. The engineering department has been reorganized under separate and responsible chiefs. The commissariat has been placed under a single head, furnished with a new system of accounts, and relieved from the fetters of a traditional routine. A Military Code has been commenced, and will shortly be carried to completion. The Clothing Board has been abolished; clothing colonels have been compensated for ceasing to be tailors, and the arrangements for military carriage have been increased in efficiency and diminished in cost.

The task of reforming the Indian Marine remains to be accomplished, and is worthy at once of the economist and the statesman. While it adds little to the effective strength of the Government, its cost is a matter of importance even to an imperial revenue. We have before us a detailed statement of the expense of every portion of the Marine, office by office, service by service, throughout India, and in each Presidency. In the year 1852 it stood thus:—

	Cost.
Bombay .. .. .	£182,328
Scinde .. .. .	24,614
Bengal .. .. .	188,779
Madras .. .. .	9,528
England .. .. .	88,782
Total .. .. .	£487,031

That is, the Government expends on its marine half a million sterling a year, exclusive apparently of the original cost of all its steamers. Meanwhile the organization is imperfect, the steamers less efficient than they might be made, and the entire department inadequate to the increasing demands upon its strength. It is divided into two branches, employed on duties which are identically the same, yet which have no connection with each other, and no unity either of system or control.

On the Bombay side we have, first of all, the anomaly that the Government of India, which is responsible for the revenue, does not watch over this portion of the expenditure. Ships are built because the Court of Directors deem it right to build them. The Governor-General cannot interfere in the contracts for the Assaye. He can only reprimand when thousands of logs disappear no man knows whither. The officers are practically promoted, rewarded, and disgraced by a commodore over whom the Government can exercise no effective control. Partly from the smallness of the service, partly from real grievances, and partly from the atmosphere in which they are condemned to live, a feeling which approaches discontent constantly makes itself manifest among them. It is not without foundation. Their pay is scarcely on the Indian scale; their promotion is wretchedly behindhand; their nominal rank only serves to render their practical subjection to the royal navy more irksome and humiliating. They are in the position in which the Company's officers were placed before the great Indian reform, when they could never practically attain a higher rank than that of captain. And, lastly, they have not those opportunities of distinction which enable the royal navy to submit patiently to bad pay, and ministerial favouritism. Their service is confined to the seas, where the prestige of the empire maintains a perpetual peace. In the few opportunities which offer, their services scarcely meet with the reward which becomes brave men, or a grateful Government. The personal efforts of the Governor-General secured for Capt. Rennie a local recognition, but his companions obtained for their Burmese sufferings only money, and even the fortunate exception gained nothing valuable at home. The steamers may be kept in order. We dare not, with Sir H. Leeke's thundering diatribe before our eyes, say that they are not. The public knows only that they never could carry the mails, that it is a question whether one or two of them are seaworthy or not, and that in a pressing emergency the whole set cannot carry a dragoon regiment 3000 miles in a high wind. Badly organized, badly paid, badly promoted, and—admirably managed, this force costs us a quarter of a million. We ask any plain speaking officer of this navy, if our statements are even tinged with exaggeration. We at least have no local prejudices or partialities, no hostility to Sir H. Leeke, and no interest in decrying a force, which ought to be rendered worthy its position as a portion of our military strength.

In Bengal, matters are no better, though for different reasons. On this side we have efficient control over the expenditure, and only the anomaly that war duties and war discipline are required of merchant vessels. We have a naval service which is bound by naval rules, yet amenable only to the common law. The steamers are, it is said, to be manned with Europeans. We all know what kind of Europeans are likely to be picked up in the flash houses of Calcutta, for wages less than those of ordinary seamen. They are doubtless brave men. They are possibly good sailors. But they are not good seamen, except under iron discipline, and in the Bengal Marine there is no guarantee for discipline except in the character of the officers. If a sailor knocks down a captain, the captain may try him for assault; if he knocks the sailor down the sailor may retaliate; if he shoots him, he may be hung for murder. Let any one who knows the difficulty of keeping order in a merchant vessel, in ordinary times, and with high wages, fancy the position of a merchant-captain, who tries to maintain military discipline among a gang of underpaid Europeans, swept up from every port in Asia.

Even partial discipline depends upon the selection of the officers, and that selection is too frequently made upon principles radically wrong. It is not only good seamen and experienced navigators that are required. If they are to be efficient, they must be able to secure the respect of Europeans. If they are gentlemen, the advantage, otherwise useless, helps to maintain discipline. If they are dark coloured, the defect, otherwise unimportant, destroys their control over their subordinates. The superintendent of marine disposes absolutely of all patronage. He perhaps does his best, but he should be protected by fixed rules from the pressure of applicants who have services to show, but who for other reasons are ineligible. Lastly, as we have said before, this service, which fights and carries mails, as the Indian navy fights and carries mails, has no connection with that navy; and with none of its rank, none of its obligations, and none of its discipline, is better paid. An Indian major might change places with the captain of the Maulmain packet, and be enriched by the exchange.

There are two remedies for this state of affairs which seem obvious to all men. If the whole force were consolidated into one navy, and placed under one commodore, responsible solely to the government of India, many of the most prominent grievances would be abolished. The financial secretary would speedily check the "tendency to expense in that direction." Steamers could be built at Rangoon as readily as at the Isle of Dogs, and at less expense. A contract with Maudslay would secure better engines than the Court of Directors have hitherto contrived to purchase. The service would be larger, and with quicker promotion and more work, the existing dissatisfaction would speedily disappear. If a portion of the China seas were assigned to the Indian navy, irresponsible as it would be to Joseph Hume, the Balinese might find piracy an occupation less profitable than dangerous. On the other hand, the Bengal marine would obtain the advantages it desires, the strict control it needs, and the discipline without which the local knowledge of its officers loses half its value.

If this cannot be effected,—if year after year our naval efforts are to be hindered by the inadequacy of our means,—if we are to spend a quarter of a million on a navy to bring us despatches from Bushire,—if we are to see our naval officers doing half the work in Burmah, and obtaining only a portion of the reward, then we say deliberately, abolish the whole mockery at once. Let the empire take its fleet from the royal navy, as it takes its Europeans from the royal army, and confess that for once ministerial haphazards have surpassed the matured arrangements of the company. —Friend of India.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.

A correspondent, who writes under the signature of SUB-JUDEx, argues very justly that the boon (?) lately granted to the Uncovenanted Service by the Court of Directors, of being allowed to claim a superannuation pension after thirty-five years' service is, so far as the judicial department is concerned, no boon at all, and indeed it appears to us, as we have before stated, that to offer any man a pension, after thirty-five years' service in this country, is a mockery, because not above three men out of a hundred of the servants of the Company will ever live to complete that period of service, and two of those three will obtain the medical certificate necessary to enable them to claim their pensions at the conclusion of thirty years' service.

Had the Court of Directors really wished to confer a boon upon their uncovenanted servants who, taken all in all, are as valuable servants as any they have, they should have dispensed with the production of a certificate of incompetency to perform further duty, at the expiration of thirty years' servitude, and have granted two-fifths of allowances as a superannuation pension after twenty-five years' service, allowing to members of the judicial department a reduction in the period of service proportionate to that which is now permitted to them. We agree with our correspondent that the time is favourable for the urging of their claims by the members of the uncovenanted judicial service, but in doing so we would caution them not to ask for too much, and to take care that their memorial be concise and clearly expressed. Governors have not leisure to read long petitions, or to unravel the meaning of the petitioners when such is doubtful, and many hundreds of petitions have been rejected simply because they were lengthy or indefinitely worded.—Hurkaru.

THE LONDON MAIL of July 8th arrived at Calcutta August 15th (per Pekin).

TRANSFER OF CHANDERNAGORE TO THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT.—The Citizen reports that orders have been received for the transfer of Chandernagore to the British Government. The cession, it is said, will be effected by the beginning of 1855. The prize is a strip of territory near Karikal in the Madras Presidency.

PRIVILEGE LEAVE.—The question of accumulating privilege leave has been settled in favour of the civil service. The Court of Directors, on the recommendation of the Governor-General, have permitted their servants to take after 11 Months .. .. .	1 Month's leave.

This will not of course interfere with the extra leave on half-pay. Should, therefore the geographical limits be abolished, the civilian may, every three years, betake himself for six months whithersoever his fancy may incline. For the last three only will he be fined, and for the entire six his appointment will be retained.

ACCIDENT TO DR. TOKE.—We regret to state that letters just received from Dinapore, mention the occurrence of a sad accident, which resulted in fracturing the thigh of Dr. Toke, the esteemed superintending surgeon of the Dinapore Circle. From the accounts that have been communicated to us it would appear that Dr. Toke was taking walking exercise on the public road or drive, when he was suddenly knocked down by an ungovernable horse, ridden by an officer who was unable to rein him in, and the consequence was as above stated. We are happy to be able to add, however, that when the last accounts left, Dr. Toke was doing as well as could be expected.—Morning Chronicle, August 11.

INDIAN GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY. — The profits of the I. G. S. N. Company for the past six months exceed those received in the previous six months by Rs. 30,000.

OPIMUM.—The revenue board have advertised 53,175 chests of opium to be sold during 1853. We fear the board are pressing on too fast and too far. It may be true, as Sir J. Bowring believes, that there is in ordinary times no limit to the desire of the Chinese for opium, but there is a limit to their ability to pay for it. Besides, the present year is not the time for incurring so vast a risk. All China is disturbed, trade fluctuates, and if Mr. Campbell's figures are to be believed, we have lost thirty lakhs already. That we raise three millions of revenue from the drug is an anomaly. When anomalies are pushed to their logical consequences, they cease to exist.

ASIATIC IDEAS OF THE WAR.—The interest with which the war movements in Europe are now viewed in India is beginning to take the form of excitement, not only amongst the English, but also the native population. The Shea sinks his sectarian prejudices, and asks, with as much anxiety as if he were of the more orthodox faith, whether the Roos are being beaten by the Toork, and the grinning leer with which the Mahomedan used to ask in 1841 and 42, whether there was any fresh news from Kabul, has become an expression of warm admiration of the gallantry of his English master in aiding the Moslem of Stamboul against his natural foe the Roos. They can perfectly understand why we do so, for they have not forgotten the not-very-old tradition that by invading Afghanistan, we were defeating Russian intrigues, and they cannot divest themselves of the impression that our Kabul disasters had a close connection with the hatred borne us by Russia. But the difficulty is to reconcile them to the fact of France, which they look upon as the natural enemy of England, and whose invasion of Egypt is not unknown to them, having joined the British Government in assisting the Toorks. That they cannot understand. It is most satisfactory to observe the improved feeling which has come over our subjects in India generally, and in Bombay in particular, where, we are told, that, not only have the Parsees and Hindoos, but also the Mahomedans of the Presidency, united in one common voice with their Christian brethren, on the day appointed as a day of fast and humiliation, in imploring the blessing of God on the success of our arms. Had a saint risen from the dead, and prophesied this ten years ago, he would have been laughed to scorn by many, even of the sensible, members of the English autocracy in India. Yet it is a fact, and a very cheering one.—Lahore Chronicle, July 26.

PATRONAGE.—The Englishman states that the patronage of the following officers, hitherto attached to the Government of Bengal, has been vested in the Governor-General:—"Superintendent of Nizamut affairs, and ditto of Mysore princes, marine surgeoncy, secretary to the superintendent of marine, two assistants to the master attendant, naval store-keeper, registrar of seamen, deputy registrar of seamen, officers of Bengal marine, archdeacon, ecclesiastical registrar, assistant protector of emigrants, geological surveyor, assistants to surveyor."

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF has published an order, raising every European regiment in India to ten companies. Hitherto there have been but nine, and the order will ultimately add 3,000 rank and file to the European army in India.

THE NORTH-WEST BANK has declared a dividend at the rate of seven per cent. per annum on the operations of the past half-year. Rs. 6,000 were carried to the Reserve Fund. It has been resolved to present the secretary, Mr. Tandy, with a piece of plate value 250*l.*, as an acknowledgment of his services to the institution.

THE RAJAH OF REWAH.—The Central Star reports that the Rajah of Rewah is in rebellion. He has refused to permit a bridge to be built over the river passing through his territory. It is believed that a force under the command of Col. Lloyd will be sent against him. We can scarcely believe even an Indian prince capable of such insanity.

COL. GOODWYN'S plan for a bridge over the Hooghly has been referred to the Court of Directors.

DELAY IN RECEIPT OF OVERLAND LETTERS IN PEGU.—A correspondent of the Hurkaru, writing from Rangoon, complains bitterly of the delay which occurs in the transmission of Overland letters from Calcutta to Pegu. They are frequently seven, eight, and nine days later than is at all necessary; mails are despatched in the slowest vessels, and the inhabitants are irritated by laches in their files. There is some natural exaggeration in all this, but the arrangements are scarcely yet perfected.

KUMAON TEA.—Upwards of one thousand chests of Kumaon tea was brought to the hammer on the 23rd August. Each chest contains eleven pounds, and five tons of tea have thus been produced on plantations, where five years since there were only a few straggling sickly plants.

THE COMMAND OF THE MEERUT DIVISION.—We have heard the command of the Meerut division, now vacant by the removal of Major-General the honourable George Anson to the Madras Commander-in-Chief, has been offered to Viscount Melville, just made a major-general by the Brevet, in a letter from the Horse Guards, giving him the option of continuing in command in this country.—Chronicle, August 4.

INDIGO.—A correspondent of the Englishman says, that indigo is grown in the Mooltan district, and is regarded as a certain crop. It might be cultivated to any extent were there any capital in the country.

DECCA.—We regret to state, that letters received from Decca mention the serious illness of Dr. Francis, the superintending surgeon of that circle, and add that the medical officer in attendance upon him entertains but slight hopes of his recovery.—The same letters state, that the Indigo manufacture throughout the Decca district is winding up with a failure, the country being entirely deluged, the rain still pouring down in torrents, and the produce of the plant in the vats most miserable and disheartening. We suppose, however, that the Decca planters are no worse off than their neighbours; and it is now fully ascertained and beyond a doubt, that the Indigo out-turn in Bengal this year will be much below an average crop. We wish the planters high prices for small stocks.—Ibid.

THE JUTE CASE.—The Englishman states, that the "Jute case," involving the question of the degree of carelessness which renders the captains of steamers liable for accidents, is to be appealed to the Privy Council.

SELF-CONCEIT.—It has been said that self-conceit is the primary cause of infidelity. The last paper read before the Bethune Society furnishes a laughable instance of the truth of the apophthegm. The essayist was lecturing on the responsibility of knowledge, and commenced thus: "With a just appreciation," he said, "of the intellectual and social triumphs of the human race since the formation of society, and of the adaptation of our nature for progress, howsoever vast, surely we would not covet the knowledge and excellence of the angelic nature. Indeed, a just appreciation of the nature of man leads inevitably to the belief that the angelic creation, if not a pure fiction to encourage the aspirations of ignorance, is not necessary for satisfying our cravings, as long as our own nature was susceptible of a happiness nowise inferior to theirs." That is, men are already equal to the angels, therefore angels do not exist. In other words, the educated Bengalee is a being of such surpassing intelligence, that it is impossible for anything to exist higher than himself.

THE BANK OF BENGAL has reduced its rates on private bills to 5, and on government acceptances to 3 per cent.

THE TOTAL EXPENSES OF THE TOURS of all the Indian Governors-General, Governors of the N. W. P., and the Commander-in-Chief, for the past eight years, has been Rs. 23,76,442. The sum is enormous, and not necessary to the due dignity of those high officers.

CURE FOR CHOLERA.—Dr. Larkin, civil surgeon at Ahmedabad, reports officially that he has administered sugar of lead in cholera cases with the best effect. So numerous were his cures that the popular alarm during a visitation of the epidemic was materially diminished. Dr. Larkin's pills contain two grains of sugar of lead, and one-twelfth part of a grain of opium.

DOST MAHOMMED.—The Lahore Chronicle affirms most positively that no communication whatsoever, of any kind, has passed between the British authorities and the Ameer of Cabul. One man did apparently present himself at Peshawur, but he had no credentials, and was not listened to.

THE DIRECTORS OF THE AGRA SAVINGS FUND have declared a profit on the operations of the past month at the rate of 28 per cent. per annum. This beats even the Oriental bank. The dividend, however, was restricted to 16 per cent., with an 8 per cent. bonus. The shares are scarcely purchasable.

THE DEATH OF CAPT. G. A. SURFLEN.—We regret to have to record the death of Captain G. A. Surfien, late master of the ship Seringapatam, now lying in the river. The immediate cause of the deceased gentleman's death, we believe, was paralysis, but he had been long ailing, and it is said that, for some time past, his recovery had been doubtful. He was only 27 years of age.—Maulmain Advertiser, July 31.

KISHNAGHUR.—By advices received from Kishnaghur, we learn that the new building for the Kishnaghur College is nearly completed, and that the sum of 72,000 Rs. has been allowed by Government for its construction.

ATTACK ON THE ADJUTANT GENERAL.—A correspondent has brought to our notice an article in the Mofussilite of the 17th ultimo, as containing a most unfounded attack on the Adjutant-General of the Army. The attack is a covert one, for neither the name nor the official designation of Colonel Tucker is mentioned. But there is no more difficulty in discovering the meaning of the following paragraph than there is in tracing it to its origin. After admitting the justice of the late order, which compelled certain superannuated brigadiers to resign their commands, the Mofussilite says:—"Because a younger officer can be made more useful—that is no reason why an older one should receive less respect. Long services and grey hairs have the first claims to courtesy and regard; and the feeling with which a communication on the subject of infirmities would be received all depends upon the manner in which it is made. A private intimation from the Commander-in-Chief to any veteran, that a change of air would probably be beneficial to his health, would be perfectly understood and thoroughly appreciated, whereas official communications, carried on with all the ostentation of brevet authority, in which it is doubtful to distinguish whether the Governor General, the Commander-in-Chief, or 'I' is most predominant, do not support the dignity of the state, and unnecessarily hurt the feelings of those officers who have rendered service long before the illustrious personage who communicates his own and the government views saw the light." We do not at all blame our contemporary for doing his best to soothe the wounded self-love of two or three worn-out old soldiers, who, having been brought up in the belief that the seniority system was to last for ever, naturally stand aghast at Lord Dalhousie's measures of reform, and still more at finding that they were to be the first victims of the innovation. But it was easy to let the brigadiers down gently, without injuring their cause and destroying any sympathy that the public might feel for them by so unjust an attack on the Adjutant-General. Of all public officials in India, Colonel Tucker is the last man to be charged with "the insolence of office;" he is notoriously the most accessible public functionary in the country, and if we had no other grounds than common repute, we might safely assert that the Adjutant-General is incapable of the conduct here attributed to him. But we are assured by a correspondent who has seen most of the correspondence which passed between army head-quarters and the superannuated brigadiers, that the utmost delicacy was shown by the Adjutant-General in discharging a duty which, though necessary, was doubtless unpleasant. Indeed, the word "superannuated" is hardly applicable, for one at least of the officers in question was assured, as we are told, that though his present state of health precluded his further employment for the present, yet, should his health be restored by a visit to England, he would, on his return, be held eligible for the command, not of a brigade, but of a division. We might make out a much stronger case if we chose to resort to recrimination, but such a course would be unkind.—Delhi Gazette, August 9.

OPIMUM.—The following is the result of the opium sale held at the Exchange Rooms, Aug. 9 :—

	Chests.	Highest.	Lowest.	Average.	Proceeds.
Behar .....	2,855	790	785	788-0-2½	22,49,775
Benares ....	1,170	830	815	821-11-8½	9,61,425

This shows an improvement of prices as compared with the July sales of nearly Rs. 7-8 for Behar, and but a trifle less than Rs. 11 per chest for Benares.

SURGEON RANKEN.—Surgeon Ranken, retired, memorialised the Court of Directors to grant the six annuities of the fund for 1833, which had never as yet been assigned, and about the existence of which there has been so much discussion. The Hon. Court replied that, as far as they were concerned, there would be no opposition, if the resources of the Medical Retiring Fund would meet the drain—which, we beg to say, they would.—Morning Chronicle, August 5.

MR. ARTHUR MALET will, it is said, probably succeed Mr. Warden as member of council at Bombay, and Mr. LeGeyt take Mr. Malet's place in the Legislative Council of India.

THE LADY NUGENT.—By the latest accounts from Calcutta it appears there is little hope of the safety of the Lady Nugent. A case containing soldiers' belts had been picked up at Amherst, supposed to be part of the freight of the missing ship.

COLONEL BIRCH.—Colonel Birch, officiating as secretary to the Government of India in the military department, has been appointed secretary in succession to Colonel James Stuart, C.B., who vacates on promotion. Colonel Birch is an officer of the most gentlemanly manners and disposition, with great tact and ability, and a very great experience of military subjects. This appointment is a subject of congratulation to the army at large.—Central Star, August 12.

H. M.'s 52ND REGIMENT.—What ails H. M.'s 52nd regiment—if it be a fair question, as the Irishman would say? In the course of last May, three of the barracks of this regiment, at Umbala, were burnt to the ground, and the three companies thus rendered houseless, were sent up to Subathoo and Kusowlee. The hospital has since suffered so much, that it may be said to have next to tumbled down, and, still more recently, the whole of the remaining barracks have been pronounced so unsafe, water having undermined the foundations, that it has been determined to locate the entire regiment at Subathoo, the whole of H. M.'s 32nd being concentrated at Kusowlee; it has followed, as a matter of course, that all the visitors and temporary residents, at both these stations, have been warned to hold themselves in readiness for instant departure, and the consequent excitement amongst them, at receiving such an intimation in the midst of the rains, may be more easily imagined than described. We should like much to know whether any enquiry has been instituted as to the origin of the fire in May, and regarding the singular fact that barracks, which stood the tremendous assault of the deluge of 1852, should have been suddenly found unsafe in 1854? We think it due to the distinguished officer who built them that enquiry should be made, as a mere matter of justice.—Lahore Chronicle, July 26.

MR. CHAPMAN.—The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has adopted an exceedingly wise course in ordering the publication of the quarterly reports of the Board of Examiners on the attainments of young civilians. The table which appears in yesterday's Gazette gives the result of the examinations of the 1st of April, 1st of May, and 1st of June. In glancing over the table we have been struck with the long list of attainments acquired by Mr. Chapman, whose zeal and diligence deserve prominently to be brought forward. That gentleman arrived at the Presidency in December 1852, and passed in Oordoo in January 1853, and in Bengalee in March of the same year; received two medals of merit,—one in Oordoo, and one for general proficiency and diligence. Passed for high proficiency in Oordoo in March 1853, in Persian on the 1st of April, in Bengalee on the 1st of July, in Hindoe on the 1st of September, and in Sanskrit on the 1st of November of the same year. Passed for a degree of honour in Bengalee on the 1st of February, 1854, and is now studying for honours. Diligence and perseverance like Mr. Chapman's are sure to obtain their reward.—Hurkaru, August 10.

MR. S. J. BECHER.—We understand that Mr. S. J. Becher, Civil and Sessions Judge of Azimgurh, meditates proceeding to England on furlough early in the ensuing cold weather.—Delhi Gazette, August 9.

BENARES.—A Benares correspondent writes :—" You may mention on 'good authority' that Mr. Frederick B. Gubbins, the energetic magistrate of this station, as a reward for his past services, is soon about to be raised to the judicial bench. The first vacancy likely to occur in the division is Azimgurh, as the present incumbent goes home this cold season on furlough. Dr. Cheyne, 42nd L.I., and Lieutenant Bax, of the 50th, proceed immediately on sick leave. Captain Rigby, of the engineers, has joined his appointment at Ghazepore."

LUCKNOW.—From a correspondent at Lucknow, we learn that it is contemplated by the king to erect a bridge over the Goomtee, on the plan of the pontoon bridge at Agra, which has been found to answer so satisfactorily. We trust that such may prove to be the case, as it will show that the potentates of this country are becoming alive to this really useful improvement. We should suppose that, if called upon, the present superintendent of the Agra bridge will give his assistance to the scheme, though it is said that the government intend to employ his services on a more extended field.—Mufussilite, July 31.

RAILWAY TRAINS commenced to run between Howrah and Hooghly on the 15th August. On the 1st of September they will proceed as far as Pundooah, and on the 1st of January, 1855, the official inauguration of the railway will take place, and the line will be opened to Ranegunge, a distance of 122 miles from Calcutta. The journey from Howrah to Pundooah, a distance of thirty-eight miles, is to occupy one hour and fifty minutes, inclusive of stoppages; so that the rate of travelling will be a fraction less than twenty, or, exclusive of stoppages, as nearly as possible thirty miles an hour. Thus when the whole line opens to Ranegunge, we may calculate that the journey thus far will be performed in about six hours, which will effect a reduction of from ten to twelve hours in the time occupied in the transit of the daks for Bombay and the North-western Provinces. The fares between Howrah and Hooghly are fixed at Rs. 3, Rs. 1-2, and Ans. 6, for the first, second, and third-class carriages respectively; being equivalent to 2 annas, 9 pie, and 3 pie per mile, for each description of carriage. Rather a contrast this to the speed and rates of dak travelling. A return ticket to Hooghly and back will cost Rs. 4, Rs. 1-8, or Ans. 8, according to the nature of the conveyance.

ROAD FROM RAJMAHAL TO TITALYAH.—Amongst the improvements about to spring from the energy of the Lieutenant-Governor, is to be, as we hear, a splendid road from Rajmahal, on the Ganges, where the first great terminus of the railway will rest, to Titalyah, with a view to facilitate the approach to Darjeeling for the European inhabitants of Calcutta. This will be not only a convenience but an essential benefit to that section of our community, as there is no doubt that Darjeeling is the natural sanatorium of Calcutta, and that the approach to it ought long since to have been opened as now intended. No one now speaks of Amherst to Parisnath, and the other place near at hand, that has ever been tried as a sanatorium for Lower Bengal. Cherra Poonjee is one of the most miserable and detestable holes even in India. This commencement of road-making is a useful and judicious one.—Morning Chronicle, Aug. 12.

MR. WYLIE.—Yesterday morning, Aug. 7, Mr. Wylie, the chief judge, who was absent for upwards of a month, owing to serious indisposition, resumed his duties. Immediately after he took his seat, Mr. Shircore, for himself and on behalf of his brother pleaders, addressed Mr. Wylie in the following words :—" With feelings of no ordinary gratification and pleasure, sir, we, the pleaders of this court, approach this bar, meeting as we do our respected chief judge after an absence of upwards of a month, on account of serious illness. We shall on this occasion only say that the Almighty has been very merciful to all of us in preserving your life and restoring you to health,—a life entirely devoted to do good to mankind in every sense of the phrase, and, without flattery, a life in all its relations a bright example for imitation; and we sincerely wish that it will long be preserved to you, to continue its happy course of usefulness, and to do good to its fellow-creatures." Mr. Wylie briefly replied that he was very thankful to Mr. Shircore and the other pleaders of the court for the handsome manner in which they have expressed their sentiments towards him, and considered that it was more than he deserved.

RUMOURS OF INCREASE OF THE ARMY.—There is a strong expectation throughout the army, that two more regiments of European infantry will be raised. A regiment of dragoons is also talked of, and further it is asserted that three of the extra corps of the line are to receive complements of officers, as it has long been reported they would. Rumour is as usual very busy in despatching forces here, there, and everywhere. There seems, however, little doubt that several royal regiments, which have not completed their tours of service in India, have been warned to hold themselves for service beyond sea.—Hurkaru.

LOSS OF THE CHIEF OFFICER AND EIGHT LASCARS OF THE H. C. LIGHT VESSEL "HOPE."—We learn with great regret that the chief officer (Mr. Kay) and eight lascars of the H. C. light vessel Hope are missing. They had gone to render assistance to the Beulah, and left that vessel on Monday to return to their own ship, and ever since have not been heard of.—Hurkaru, Aug. 7. Two of the men of the Hope's boat have turned up on the Balasore coast, but nothing has been heard of the rest of the crew, or of the chief officer, Mr. Kay; and it is much to be feared, that they have met with a watery grave.—Ibid, Aug. 8.

DR. FRANCIS.—We regret to observe a statement in a contemporary, to the effect that letters from Dacca announce that Dr. Francis, the superintending surgeon of the Decca circle, is so ill, that fears are entertained for his life. We sincerely trust that these apprehensions may not be verified.—Hurkaru, Aug. 5.

RETIREMENT OF MEDICAL OFFICERS.—A proposition is about to be made to exempt medical officers, who retire in anticipation of an annuity, from further payments to the retiring fund, if their subscriptions amount to half the estimated value of the annuity.

INVALIDING.—It is not many days back that it was announced that Lieut. R. Chauncy, 71st N.I., had passed for the invalids. Lieut.-Col. Colin Campbell has sent in his papers to be invalided, and now the Delhi Gazette tells us that Capt. W. O. Harris, 32nd N.I., is also about to invalid.—Hurkaru, August 12.

MR. CORNWALLIS TOTTENHAM.—The following is from a correspondent at Dacca, dated the 25th ultimo:—"I am sorry to inform you that our collector, Mr. Cornwallis Tottenham, is suffering so much from inflammation of the eyes and perostical asthma, that the civil surgeon of the district, Dr. Green, has recommended him to leave the station forthwith, and proceed without loss of time to the presidency, with the view of eventually going to sea, and that Mr. C. J. Davidson, the commissioner of the division, on the doctor's recommendation, has given him leave to go down to Calcutta, in anticipation of the sanction of the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. Mr. Tottenham, I believe, will leave the charge of the collectorate in the hands of Mr. Mackillop, the magistrate, who will discharge both duties till the receipt of orders from the secretary to the Government of Bengal."—Hurkaru, Aug. 5.

TESTIMONIAL TO MR. NEWMARCH.—A handsome silver tea-service has been presented to Mr. Newmarch by the attorneys of the Supreme Court at Calcutta. The testimonial is intended as an acknowledgment of his exertions in obtaining their recognition as advocates in the courts of the interior. Mr. Newmarch takes with him to England a petition, praying that the attorneys of this court may be enabled to practise as attorneys in England without further service. The boon would be a virtual abolition of the monopoly of the profession, and will not, we fear, be conceded.

RATES OF INTEREST AND DISCOUNT.—It was but the other day that we drew attention to the increasing favourable position of the money market and its probable effects. It will be observed, that our views were quite correct, and that the first symptoms appear in the Bank of Bengal, which has reduced its rates of interest and discount on private bills to 5, and on Government acceptances to 3 per cent. per annum. Fixed cash credits may be opened at 4, and loans on goods obtained at 5 per cent. per annum. Those who have been holding back their funds will now have cause to regret their not having heeded our warning.—Hurkaru, Aug. 12.

HER MAJESTY'S INFANTRY REGIMENTS.—We learn from a general order by the Commander-in-Chief, that, from the 1st proximo, her Majesty's infantry regiments in India are to be formed into ten service companies. Hitherto the number has been nine, and consequently nine captains only have been allowed to be borne upon the strength of infantry regiments in this country. The tenth captain, should he be in this country, could draw only his Queen's pay, and consequently he was generally allowed to vegetate at Chatham, in command of a serjeant or corporal, and three or four file, called the Depot Company. But as there is a reason even for roasting eggs, we presume there must be likewise one for this new arrangement, which will of course entail an additional charge for the maintenance of each Queen's infantry regiment in this country. There are, if we mistake not, somewhere about twenty-eight Queen's regiments of foot in India, an additional company to each of which would consequently give an additional force more than equal to three infantry corps of nine companies each; and this augmentation, therefore, would at once enable the Home Government, without impairing the strength of its present force, to diminish the number of Queen's regiments in this country by at least three. We are therefore inclined to look upon this order as in no small degree confirmatory of the rumour which has lately been spread abroad, that several Queen's regiments have been privately warned to hold themselves in readiness to march to a port of embarkation. Moreover, it appears to us that it almost settles the destination of those regiments. It does not seem very probable, we think, that the Government would increase, by one company each, the strength of all the Queen's infantry regiments in India, if the regiments now said to be under orders were to proceed only to Persia; for, their service over, they would undoubtedly return thence to this country; but not so if sent to Turkey. Upon a consideration of the whole matter, it appears to us that the regiments which have served their time in India will, as usual, be relieved, together with others whose period of service has not expired, and who will be ordered home without being relieved, in order to diminish the force in this country to the point decided upon by the home authorities; and that the diminution will be, as much as possible, counterbalanced by the addition of another company to each Queen's infantry regiment that may remain in this country after the measure of reduction shall have taken effect.—Morning Chronicle, August 7.

MILITARY ON-DITS.—The Delhi Gazette confirms the report that the regiments of Khelat-i-Ghilzie, Ferozepore, and Loodiana are to be fully officered.—The Commander-in-Chief will this year direct his tour to the north-west. He may be expected at Lahore in November.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

DELAY IN USING FURLOUGHS.

Fort William, August 4th, 1854.—No. 793 of 1854.—In order to prevent undue delay on the part of officers embarking for Europe on medical certificate, the most noble the governor general of India in council is pleased to declare that, in the event of an officer not leaving India within two months from the announcement of his sick furlough in Government general orders, if he belong to the Company's service, or within two months of his arrival at the presidency, with permission to proceed to Europe on medical certificate, if he belong to the royal army, he will incur forfeiture of Indian allowances of every description; except when physical unfitness for a sea voyage shall have prevented his departure, in which case his allowances will be continued to him, within the general limits of the absentee rules, for so long as the medical board shall pronounce it unsafe for him to embark on board ship.

2. This order does not dispense with the necessity for general leave to an officer to visit the presidency, preparatory to proceeding to Europe on medical certificate; nor does it imply that any officer shall have his regimental allowances continued to him to the date of embarkation, who by availing himself of the period above allowed for that purpose, in addition to previous leave, shall, on the whole, have been continuously absent from duty more than six months on private affairs, or more than two years on medical certificate.

THE RELIEF.

Head Quarters, Simla, Aug. 14, 1854.—(462). With the sanction of the most noble the governor general of India in council, the following movements of corps and detachments for 1854-55 are directed to take place on the dates and in the order specified:—

Artillery.

Head-quar. 3rd batt. Eur. foot art. from Benares to Meerut, Oct. 15.

3rd co. 3rd batt. Eur. foot art. fr. Umballa to Meerut, Nov. 1.

COURT MARTIAL.

LIEUT. ARCHIBALD PROCTER, 39TH N.I.

Head-Quarters, Simla, July 22, 1854.—At a general court-martial assembled at Prom, on Wednesday, June 14, 1854, and continued by adjournment until Saturday the 17th, Lieut. A. Procter, 39th N.I., and lately doing duty with the Arracan local battalion, was tried on the following charges, viz. :—

First.—That he, A. Procter, on Dec. 15, 1853, at Htiendah, he being then and there an officer serving in the territories of the E.I. Company at a distance of upwards of 120 miles from the presidency of Fort William, did feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, kill and murder one Nga Shoey Man, a native of Burmah.

Second.—That he, A. Procter, on Dec 15, 1853, at Htiendah, he being then and there an officer serving in the territories of the E.I. Company, at a distance of upwards of 120 miles from the presidency of Fort William, did feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, kill and murder one Nga Shoey Htoo, a native of Burmah.

Finding.—Guilty, to the extent of manslaughter.

Sentence.—To imprisonment in the common gaol at Calcutta for the period of three calendar months.

(Signed) G. A. SMITH, Lieut. Colonel, President, Commanding 47th N.I.

Prome, June 28, 1854.

Not confirmed.

(Signed) W. GOMM, General,
Commander-in-Chief, East Indies.

Head-Quarters, Simla, July 19, 1854.

Recommendation.—The Court beg leave unanimously to recommend the prisoner most strongly to the merciful consideration of his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief on account of the trying position in which he was placed, and a belief that the crime was committed under a mere error of judgment, also in consideration of the long period of his arrest.

Lieut. Procter will remain in open arrest pending the orders of the Supreme Government.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Aug. 18).—The demand for British Cotton Piece Goods has again fallen off, contrary to expectation, and the amount of business done considering the season of the year, has been limited. The arrival of many vessels from Great Britain with heavy supplies, which have added considerably to our already large stocks, have induced dealers to hold back for a time in the hope of being able to supply their wants on more favourable terms, and if they continue in their determination, it is almost certain that a fall in prices will be the consequence. We have no change to report in the market for metals, with the exception of Copper, which has experienced a further improvement. Sheathing having been sold at as high a price as Rs. 62 a maund.

MADRAS.

IMPROVEMENT IN NATIVE AGRICULTURE.

THE Madras Government, as will be seen elsewhere, have taken up the subject of improvement in native agriculture. Lord Harris deals with the question in an earnest and liberal spirit, and if good intentions and personal exertion can effect changes for the better, we may look upon them as already accomplished. But we hail the present movement merely as an omen of better days in store. No national benefit can result from it, for the elements of good farming in southern India have yet to be created. To use the language of Leadenhall Street, "it is but a wild speculation;" the offer of money prizes, and the dubious aid of collectors, cannot atone for the evils of over-assessment and the want of fixity of tenure. The people of Madras do not thrive, simply because it is impossible. No labour is wanting on their part to make the country, if not a Paradise, somewhat less like a desert; but the task is beyond their strength. Coaxing and flattery will not help the matter. The blame for this result must be laid on Nature—or, perhaps, the Court of Directors.

We feel assured that the Governor has had the greatest assistance, and the most unbounded promise of support to his project, from the subordinate members of the administration. Perhaps we can call to his recollection a story of the dark ages, which may suggest a useful idea in connection with the scheme. We are told that a powerful magician raised a demon, one of the class of beings which the world then as now termed spirits of evil. He was set up to perform mighty tasks, and succeeded without effort; but it was found that unless constant work was provided for him, he was likely to turn and rend his employer. So the latter, for fear of unpleasant consequences, exercised him further in making ropes of sand, and throwing chains over the clouds, and the tale goes, that he was rendered harmless from that day forward.—Athenaeum, July 20.

EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES OF CONSULTATION, DATED 14TH JULY, 1854.

1. The attention of the Right Honourable the Governor in Council has been recently engaged in the consideration of the efforts made in past years for the promotion of objects affecting the improvement of the agricultural and manufacturing industries of this country, and a review of the proceedings already on record in connection with this important and interesting subject has satisfied him that although a willing and generous desire has been manifested by Government to encourage and support individual or combined exertions directed towards the development of the resources of the country, the success which has attended such efforts has not been satisfactory. Such has been the case with the operations of the Madras Agri-Horticultural Society, whose laudable attempts to introduce the culture of staple agricultural products of commercial value have been liberally aided by Government by the offer of pecuniary prizes and medals for successful competitors at their annual exhibitions. So little apparent benefit, however, had been derived from this, that the Government were at one time disposed to decline any further contributions.

2. To give the matter over as hopeless, however, seems to his Lordship in Council inadvisable, and would only form a source of future regret. It is doubtless disheartening to see the prizes offered for competition carried away year after year by the same individuals, and they merchants of European descent, while little or no emulation is excited among the natives, who have remained indifferent to the efforts made in their behalf. At the same time, it should be remembered that the trial hitherto made has been of short duration, embracing a period of very few years that the efforts have been rather desultory than combined or continued, that the Government have taken but a secondary part in them, and that they have almost entirely been confined to the Presidency. It cannot, therefore, be surprising that so little has been achieved.

3. It appears to his Lordship in Council that a comprehensive movement on the part of Government would be more likely to be attended with important and rapidly beneficial effects, for it is clear that in the present state of the country, where the objects of such movements are little understood and much less appreciated by the natives, the efforts of private individuals or bodies of men, however well directed, can hardly be expected to influence the great mass of the people. The Government alone, from its position, is fitted to take the initiative, and to impart the necessary impulse, and the effort should be general, generous, and long continued, to insure success.

4. The object should be to encourage useful productions of all kinds in agriculture, manufactures, and in arts.

5. As regards the first of these branches of industry, it seems, from past experience, almost useless to hold any meetings in Madras for the exhibition of agricultural products. Our operations should, on the contrary, be directed exclusively to the provinces and to the native producers, who should be made to understand the object in view, and its intimate connection with their interests. It is idle to expect, in the present state of things, that the native ryot will send his produce to the Presidency to compete for the Government prizes. Local exhibitions, and prizes awarded on the spot, can alone produce a spirit of discussion and emulation, with their concomitant results. This course was, indeed, authorized by Government in 1845, but there is reason to believe that the object was never properly and widely known in the provinces, and that the subject has been lost sight of, the order remaining a dead letter in most districts to this day. To insure success, the subject should be taken up in earnest by the local authorities. Meetings should be regularly held in every collectorate, under the direction of the collectors, who would best know, from their knowledge of the general features and capabilities of their districts, for what productions they were most fitted, and for what articles it would be most desirable to offer prizes. From the exhibition taking place in the provinces, and the respective merits of the products brought forward being examined and discussed, and the prizes awarded to the successful competitors, amidst a concourse of their own friends and neighbours, the best possible effect may be expected to be produced.

6. The Government also observe that the prizes offered should rather be pecuniary grants than medals, which latter confer a mark of distinction possessing no attraction in the eyes of the generality of the natives, and than which money donations are likely to act as far better incentives to exertion. This, indeed, is in accordance with the views of the Hon. Court of Directors, as conveyed in a recent despatch, dated 6th July, 1853.

7. These prizes will, as heretofore, be given by Government, leaving it optional with private individuals, who may be so inclined, to add any extra prizes for particular purposes.

8. It might be found in some cases more advantageous to hold a combined meeting for two or three adjoining collectorates. For example, a meeting might be held at Wallajahnuggur, the resort of natives trading with the interior, for the districts of North Arcot, Salem, and Chingleput, at which the collectors of those districts might be present with their establishments, and some of the influential landholders of their districts, and this being within easy reach of the presidency, might be attended by the merchants of Madras, as well as some of the officers of Government.

A similar meeting might be arranged by the collectors of Tanjore, South Arcot, and Trichinopoly, at some central spot, and also by the collectors of Bellary, Kurnool, and Cuddapah; but such details should be left to the discretion of the collectors.

9. His Lordship in Council considers that it would also add to the effect of the plan if a general meeting were to be held annually for general competition, in which prizes of a higher class should be distributed, and which might be attended with good effect by the higher officers of Government; but it could, perhaps, be brought into operation only by degrees, as the success of the initial measures rendered those of a more comprehensive nature necessary.

10. The primary object to be held in view encouraging agricultural experiments should be, to avoid the prize being given away to speculators, who may raise small quantities of produce which is too often over-nursed during its brief growth, and affords no criterion of the facilities for making it a staple product of the country. The prizes should always be given to bona-fide farmers, and where the produce exhibited is sufficiently large in quantity to show that the superior product can be raised extensively. It will also be desirable, in the first instance, as suggested by the Hon. Court of Directors in their late despatch, No. 24 of 1854, dated 30th May last, that attention should be directed to such subjects as, from their abundance or easy cultivation, are likely to become valuable as articles of commerce; and further, that specimens of any new products, or of such others as may be exhibited possessing peculiar merit, should be sent to England, in order that their value in the market may be ascertained.

11. The main cause of the failure hitherto of efforts such as those under notice in this country is clearly to be sought in the absence of a steady, certain demand for a superior raw product at a more remunerating price than the inferior article will yield the ryot; but under the increased attention which is now being paid to the general communications of the country, and the prospect of the railways coming into operation at no distant period, it is anticipated that the adverse cause above referred to will at least be partially removed, and that great success will attend similar future efforts.

12. While his Lordship in Council is averse, as already stated, to the continuance of the annual show and the distribution of prizes for agricultural produce, &c., in Madras, it occurs to him that an exhibition of arts and manufactures might be established with advantage in the Presidency. It is observed that there is already a School of Industrial Arts in Madras, to which the Government have extended their aid, founded by the praiseworthy exertions of Dr. Hunter, with the object of affording the natives the means of acquiring useful handicrafts, of improving the manufacture of various articles of domestic and daily use, and also, by developing the natural resources of the country, of creating a local supply of several articles in general demand which are now almost entirely imported. These objects would be materially advanced by the proposed exhibition; and considering the well-known docility of the natives, the Governor in Council is induced to think that, under proper encouragement, they would make rapid progress, and much good might be effected. He accordingly resolves to establish an Exhibition, to be held at the Banqueting Hall early in next year. Such an Exhibition might probably be made to pay a portion of the expenses incurred by allowing early admissions before it should be thrown open to the public.

13. With the foregoing enunciation of his intentions and views, his Lordship in Council resolves to call upon the Board of Revenue to issue the necessary instructions to the local officers, and in communication with them arrange the necessary details regarding the local exhibitions for agricultural prizes, and lay before Government, at an early date, a complete scheme for giving effect to those views.

14. He likewise resolves to appoint the undermentioned gentlemen to form a committee in Madras, at which his Lordship will himself preside, who will make generally known the wishes of Government regarding the proposed exhibition of arts and manufactures in the Presidency, and draw up a scheme of all the minor and subsidiary arrangements necessary for carrying out this object:

Honourable J. F. Thomas, Esq.
W. A. Morehead, Esq.
W. U. Arbuthnot, Esq.
Major J. Smith.
Mr. A. Hunder.
Mr. E. G. Balfour.
Mr. H. F. C. Cleghorn.
Mr. G. Smith.

15. His Lordship in Council desires to take this opportunity of expressing his regret that nothing should have as yet been done under this Presidency for acquiring an extensive and practical knowledge of the inexhaustible sources of mineral and vegetable productions of the vast territories under his Government.

16. At present a small pecuniary contribution to the Botanical Gardens, which are supported by private subscriptions, comprises all that is done in Madras, whilst an educated horticulturist and garden are supported at Ootacamund.

17. At Calcutta, Bombay, and, it is believed, in the North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab, botanical gardens are kept up at the sole expense of Government, and the Governor in Council has no hesitation in stating that a similar establishment ought to be supported here, and that in addition to the gardens at Madras and in the Neilgherries, with their respective curators, an establishment, not less than two able and experienced botanists and mineralogists, of sound practical knowledge and science, should be kept continually moving about the country, in order that a thorough knowledge of the rich and varied productions of Southern India in these important departments of nature might be rapidly acquired and turned to account. This object, it is evident, cannot be accomplished by the amateur exertions of men not fully masters of the science, nor practically acquainted with the arts and manufactures of Europe. The views of such men will be as likely to mislead as not, and they will never be received with confidence by capitalists, and will never, therefore, lead to any practical or successful results. Of the importance of thus bringing Western science and appliances to bear upon the dormant natural resources of the country, and the ultimate benefits which may be expected to accrue from such researches, there can hardly be a doubt, and the Governor in Council, therefore, trusts that the Honourable the Court of Directors, to whom these views will be communicated, will be pleased to approve of the proposition, and sanction the expense of the employment of competent men from Europe for carrying out the objects indicated.

True extract.

H. C. MONTGOMERY.

Chief Secretary.

MADRAS ENGINEERS' DRESS.

Coat.—Scarlet, double-breasted; the buttons on the breast to be placed at equal distances, and two inches asunder; the width between the rows being three inches at top and two inches and a half at bottom; cuffs and patch of collar of garter blue velvet; the collar half blue and half scarlet; skirt ornaments embroidered upon velvet; white Kerseymere turnbacks and lining.

Epaulettes.—Gold, of the same pattern as for the infantry; the distinction of ranks to be in the progressive size of the bullion, and in the devices. The stripe upon the strap of captains and subaltern's epaulettes to be of garter blue. The strap of the epaulettes of field officers to be without stripes. A silver grenade, the same as worn by the artillery.

Buttons.—Gilt, with three guns raised in the centre, encircled by a garter surmounted by a crown and the motto, "Madras Engineers."

Hat.—Cocked, without binding; the fan or back part, nine inches; the front seven and a half inches; each corner five inches; black ribbon on the two front sides.

Loop.—Of three quarter inch gold lace, with regulation button and black silk cockade.

Tassels.—Flat netted purl head; gold crape fringe, an inch and five-eighths deep, with crimson crape fringe underneath.

Plume.—White swan, five and a half inches long from the stem to the end of the feathers, and the whalebone quite stiff.

Trousers.—Dark blue, with a stripe of gold lace of the same pattern as worn on the coat, one and a half inch wide down the outward seam; or white linen, according to the season, and to fasten under the boot with straps one and a half inch wide.

Boots.—Ankle.

Spurs.—For field officers and adjutant only yellow metal, curved neck, two inches including rowels.

Sword.—Infantry regulation.

Scabbard.—Black leather, with gilt mountings; when on mounted duty, steel; field officers, brass.

Knot.—Crimson and gold cord and acorn.

Belt.—Russia leather, one and a half inch wide, with two stripes of gold embroidery; carriages embroidered on one side only, and gilt rings for slings.

Plate.—According to regimental pattern.

Sash.—Patent net crimson silk, with bullion fringe ends.

Stock.—Black silk.

ENGINEERS' UNDRRESS.

Jacket.—Blue cloth, with seven black silk braid loops in front and two rows of olivets, stand up collar sloped in front, pointed cuffs, and edging of broad and narrow black silk braid all round the jacket—collar and cuffs; back seams of jacket and sleeves to be edged with braid of the same description, terminating at the waist in two small olivets; no shoulder strap or cord.

Field officers to be distinguished by an embroidered crown or star, or both, according to rank, at each end of the collar.

Forage Cap.—Blue cloth made up on leather and encircled with a black silk oak leaf band, one and three-quarters of an inch wide, with a scarlet edging round the crown, embroidered regimental badge surmounted by a grenade in front, black leather peak and chin strap.

Trousers.—Oxford mixture cloth, with a stripe of scarlet cloth one and three-quarters of an inch wide down the outward seam; or white linen, according to the season, with straps.

Boots, Spurs, Sword, Scabbard, Knot, Belt, Plate, Sash, Stock, and Gloves.—The same as in dress.

Cloak.—Blue cloth, lined with scarlet shalloon, walking length; clasp ornaments at bottom of collar.

Note.—Officers of engineers are permitted to wear the red silk waist belt referred to in paragraph 1, page 6, at undress evening parties, or on other occasions not on duty or parade.

Officers of engineers doing duty with the Sappers and Miners, are to wear a scarlet shell jacket of the following pattern, and dark blue trousers with scarlet stripe.

Jacket.—Scarlet shell, with half collar and pointed cuffs of garter blue velvet, without lace, and an edging down the front and round the bottom; a row of fourteen small regimental buttons down the front; shoulder-straps of three gold cords plated, with a silver embroidered grenade on the looped end.

THE HON. MR. THOMAS.—Yesterday's Athenæum intimated that the Hon. Mr. Thomas will leave this country at the expiration of the usual period of five years from the date of his entering council, the Hon. Court having negatived his application for an extension of his term. We are glad to hear this for several reasons. Such prolongations of office are unfair to the civil service, whose promotion is thereby stopped, and should be allowed only when distinguished merit or public expedience warrant an exception to the rule, which cannot be predicated in the case of Mr. Thomas. He is a man of more, perhaps, than average abilities, but has never done anything to entitle him to special marks of favour, and too much reason exists to suspect that his counsels did not conduce either to the usefulness or popularity of the two last administrations.—Spectator, July 19.

IN THE MADRAS PRESIDENCY the total land assessment is 360 lacs of rupees, levied on twenty millions of acres supposed to be actually under cultivation; and the average rate per acre on the ninety millions of acres of the total area, culturable, cultivated, and barren, is therefore six and one-third.

INDIAN PRODUCE.—The interruption of British commercial relations with Russia, and among other things the consequent insufficiency of hemp, flax, &c., obtainable in the English market, has given rise to a free discussion here on the capabilities, &c., of India to supply the necessary demands. Of the capabilities of the soil, there exists not the slightest doubt; in fact, over many parts of India the hemp and flax have been for years wasted; and it is certain, that were but sufficient care used in the preparation, they might be rendered most profitable articles of export.—Athenæum.

MILITARY ON-DUTY.—The 50th and 35th regiments N.I. at the Presidency, had received instructions to hold themselves in readiness to proceed to Secunderabad and Hurryhur respectively; the former on the 22nd September, and the latter on the 22nd October next.—The C troop horse brigade artillery had arrived from Rangoon in the ship Defiance, after a long and tedious passage of forty-one days. The men appeared in good health and spirits, and much rejoiced at once more returning to quarters. This fine troop have lost one officer and twenty-seven men since they left Madras for Rangoon.—Lieutenant Welliton, of the artillery, recently commanding the detachment at Bassein, was about to return to England on sick certificate. We have not heard who is appointed to the station in his room.—A guard, consisting of fifty rank and file, under the command of Lieut. Macdonald, of the 35th regiment N.I., left the presidency at the end of August for Bellary, in charge of treasure for that station.

WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' FUND.—The twentieth annual meeting of this fund took place in August. A large number of resident subscribers were present. R. W. Norfor, Esq., was called to the chair, and after making a few prefatory remarks, called upon the secretary to read the report for the past year. Mr. Carstairs read the report. The receipts of the fund during the period embraced in the report were: Widows' Branch, donations, Rs. 4,199-12, subscriptions, Rs. 26,309; Children's Branch, donations, Rs. 1481-10; subscriptions, Rs. 13,928-4; interest on funded property, Rs. 20,402-11-6; or together, Rs. 66,258-5-6; which, with a balance of Rs. 325-1-0 in the hands of the treasurer at the date of the last report, amounted to Rs. 66,583-6-6. The disbursements were: pensions paid in the Widows' Branch, Rs. 15,907-7-11; ditto in the Children's Branch, Rs. 5379-10-4; secretariat and collecting departments, Rs. 1200; contingent expenditure, Rs. 137-3-7; amount invested in Government securities, Rs. 43,039; premium, interest, &c. on this investment, Rs. 617-14-8; or together, Rs. 66,281-4-6. The balance in the treasurer's hands at the closing of the annual account was Rs. 302-2-0. The funded property which remained deposited with the Government agents, the report went on to say, now amounted to Rs. 4,63,281-11-1, including the investment above mentioned.

THE HONOURABLE SIR LAWRENCE PEELE, Knight, Chief Justice, and the Honourable Sir Arthur Buller, Knight, senior puisne judge of the Supreme Court of Calcutta, landed Aug. 23 from the steamer Bentinck. Salutes of seventeen and fifteen guns respectively were fired on the occasion.

THE QUEEN v. THE REV. J. ANDERSON.—Supreme Court, Aug. 22.—This was an application for a writ of Habeas Corpus to bring up the person of a young Hindu lad, aged fifteen years, on the ground that he was under illegal restraint, in the custody of persons holding the Scotch Mission House. A rule nisi had been issued against Mr. Anderson as the party in whose immediate custody the lad remained. Sir C. Rawlinson, in giving judgment, said, "It appeared to him that Nagalinga was perfectly competent to elect for himself, and the rule must therefore be discharged." The boy expressed himself desirous to remain with Mr. Anderson. The police were on the alert to prevent any disturbance from the natives, and Mr. Anderson drove down unmolested to the Mission premises with Nagalinga in his carriage.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

BOMBAY:

BOMBAY ENGINEERS' DRESS.

Coatee.—Scarlet with two rows of uniform buttons, ten in each row, at equal distances, the distance between the rows three inches at top and two inches and a half at bottom. Prussian half collar of garter blue velvet, with plain gold lace one inch and a half wide round the velvet at each end; plain round cuffs two inches and three quarters deep, of garter blue velvet, scarlet slashed flap on the sleeve, with three gold lace loops and large buttons on waist, white kerseymer turnbacks and skirt linings, skirt ornaments a grenade embroidered on blue velvet.

Epaulettes.—Field officers—plain gold lace strap: solid crescent, embroidered badge of the Queen's cypher; the bullion of colonel and lieut.-colonel is to be three inches and a half deep, that of majors three inches; captains, gold lace strap with narrow blue silk stripes, solid crescent, bullion smaller than that of major, and two inches and a half deep; silver embroidered grenade; subalterns the same as captains, except that the bullion is smaller.

Feather.—White swan of staff pattern.

Cap.—Black beaver six and three-quarters inches deep, and a quarter of an inch less in diameter at top than at bottom; patent leather top turned over at the edge to the breadth of five-eighths of an inch and stitched round; a band of the same, double stitched, encircles the bottom of the cap, a black patent leather peak, two inches and three-eighths deep in front, and another an inch and a quarter deep behind, a gilt star plate, with ornament of a plate two and a quarter inches in diameter, encircled by a laurel wreath, and having three guns in the centre, surmounted by a crown in front of the cap and gilt scales on the sides.—Ball tuft, red worsted. (To be worn, instead of the cocked hat, by all officers attached to the corps of Sappers and Miners.)

Trousers.—Oxford mixture, a stripe of red cloth one inch and three quarters broad, down the outward seam, or white linen, according to season.

Boots.—Ankle.

Spurs.—For mounted officers only, brass, with necks two inches long.

Sword.—Infantry regulation.

Scabbard.—Black leather, with gilt mountings; for mounted officers, steel.

Knot.—Crimson and gold, with bullion tassel.

Sword-belt.—Russia leather, with two stripes of gold embroidery, carriages embroidered on one side only.

Plate.—Gilt, with an embossed ornament of a lion surrounded by the words "Bombay Engineers," the words encircled by a laurel-wreath, and surmounted by a crown.

Sash.—Patent net, crimson silk, with bullion fringe ends.

Stock.—Black silk.

Gloves.—White leather.

Shell jacket.—Scarlet with prussian collar, and pointed cuffs of garter blue velvet, or row of ten small regimental buttons down the front at equal distances, with button holes on a false flap, and two buttons on each cuff.

Shoulder straps.—Formed of gold-cord five-eighths of an inch in circumference twisted double, with a small figure at bottom and a small regimental button at top.

Frock coat.—Blue single breasted with eight regimental buttons down the front, and two small ones on the cuffs; folding collar.

Waist belt.—Black patent leather two inches wide, with slings and regimental plate.

Forage cap.—Blue cloth, with scarlet piping round the crown, and with band of scarlet cloth, two and a quarter inch wide, with leather peak in front, and the corps' device with gold grenade above it in embroidery in front.

Cloak.—Blue—lined with scarlet shalloon, with clasps and regimental buttons, walking length, collar lined with red silk velvet.

An oilskin cover is permitted to be worn during the rains both with dress cap and forage cap, and a white cover when on working parties and on the line of march.

Two epaulettes to be worn by every officer.

HORSE FURNITURE FOR MOUNTED OFFICERS.

Saddle cloth.—Dark blue cloth, two feet ten inches in length, and each flap one foot ten inches in depth; with one row of gold lace five eighths of an inch wide and scarlet cloth edging.

Bridle.—Of black leather, bent branch bit, with gilt bosses having the crown above throat band and roses of garter blue.

Collar.—White.

Holsters.—To be covered with black leather.

REGIMENTAL MEDICAL STAFF.

To wear the uniform of the regiment with the same exceptions as are laid down for regiments of the line.

THE LONDON MAIL of July 8th arrived at Bombay August 8th (per Auckland).

RUINS OF BRAHMINABAD.—Mr. A. F. Bellasis, of the Bombay civil service, has examined the ruins of Brahminabad, a city in a deserted channel of the Indus, in Scinde. He found them full of relics of a higher civilization. There were pieces of stained glass, and ribbed glass, quantities of cornelians, ivory balls, ivory cups, articles of agate, and beautiful cameos on agate and cornelian:—"Many of them are perfect gems of art, and like the intaglios of Rome are polished on the inside of the device—an art, I believe, now lost—some that were found had upon them a bull, and others a lion, some merely a name in Arabic, and some in characters resembling the Devanagree or Sanscrit; most of these appeared cut in ovals and circles, and would be well suited for the purpose of a signet ring,—others were ready cut into these shapes, but without any inscriptions or device, as if the engraver kept an assortment for the choice of his customers, who had only to express their wish—what device, what name—and the hand of the cunning artist was prepared to make any engraving ordered."

SALT.—The Sindian calls attention to the very extensive deposit of salt in the neighbourhood of Kurrachee. He gives few particulars, but believes that salt could be shipped to Bombay at less than half the price of the article manufactured in the presidency.

THE EXCAVATION OF THE EASTERN NARRA, near Roree, is rapidly proceeding. It will cost 50,000*l.*, and will restore fertility to a large tract. The government, therefore, is not neglecting works of irrigation in Scinde.

A REMARKABLE EPITAPH.—The Sindian republishes the following remarkable epitaph. It was found on a tomb at Tatta, which is supposed to have been erected over a European adventurer, who had penetrated even at that early date into Scinde:—

"Here Lyes the Manes of Edward Cooke, who was taken out of the world, in the Flower of his age, a Person of Great Merit, and Much Lamented by all his Friends, Learned in many Languages of Great Humanity, a Sound Judgement, and a generous Disposition, who Departed this Life the 8th of May, 1733.

Etatis Sua 21.

As blooming Lillies Grace the Field,

So for a day the Shine

Like him to God, so the Yield

Their Selves but not their names resign.

To whose Memory his Servants erected this tomb."

CAPTAIN PORTER, I.N., proceeds by the mail to Aden, to succeed Captain Montrou as senior naval officer at that station.

INDIAN NAVY.—A committee, consisting of a member of Council, the Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy, a member of the Military Board, the master attendant, the military paymaster, and the assistant superintendent, has been ordered by the Court of Directors to assemble with as little delay as possible, to inquire into the grievances, and report upon the state of the Indian Navy. When the proceedings are closed, they are to be sent home direct for the consideration of the home authorities. It is generally supposed that the committee will take four months to make the requisite inquiries, and make out their report for the Court of Directors.

CANAL AND IRRIGATION COMPANY.—The share books of a joint-stock company for cutting canals of irrigation laid before the London world in May last, were opened on the 17th of August in Bombay, and in twelve days time 450,000*l.* worth of shares have been applied for. This, added to the stock claimed at home, is considerably in excess of the half million of capital originally contemplated, and if shares are allotted to all applying for them, the stock will require to be increased to a million—the great bulk of this will, in all likelihood, be set down in India before the present mail reaches London.—Bombay Times.

THE NITH.—The ship Nith, Thomas Spence, commander, which left Bombay on the 28th inst., put back again on Saturday, having sprung a leak from the boisterous weather she encountered at sea.—Telegraph, July 31.

THE COTTON SPINNING AND WEAVING COMPANY.—Again we are delighted to chronicle the success of the Cotton-Spinning and Weaving Company. We understand that the premium has risen to fifteen hundred rupees, on the thousand rupees already paid up on each share; and such has been the demand for them, that the former opponents of the scheme are now most willing purchasers through the medium of agents. There are, we hear, numerous influential Europeans amongst the shareholders.—Telegraph, August 3.

CAPT. HAINES.—In Bombay the principal topic of conversation has been the trial of Capt. Haines for embezzlement of public money; which has terminated in a full and honourable acquittal. Immediately on the verdict of "Not Guilty" being pronounced, there were loud cheers in the court, joined in by a great part of a numerous body of spectators. The judge, Sir Charles Jackson, inquired of the Advocate General if he intended to proceed on the remaining indictments of the charge. On the Advocate General informing his lordship that he now abandoned the prosecution, a similar verdict on the remaining indictments was recorded. The prisoner on hearing the verdict burst into tears, and on the judge ordering his discharge, he was liberated by proclamation. They are now going to prosecute him on the Civil side of the Supreme Court. Their proceedings were most summary; their victim, being unable to find bail for the deficiency—Rs. 2,81,000—was immediately incarcerated. It is generally believed that the Court of Directors will order his release, Capt. Haines having offered to resign the service, give up his pension, join some of our large steam companies, and give up the half of his pay as a commander to wipe off the debt. Having made an offer of this kind, we really cannot find anything to justify Government in their present proceedings.—Telegraph and Courier.

CAPT. HAINES is at present in the county jail as a debtor to Government.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.

Head-Quarters, Poona, Aug. 18, 1854.—With the sanction of the Right Hon. the Governor in Council the following reliefs and movements of native cavalry and infantry regiments will take place during the ensuing cold season:—

24th reg. N.I.—From Sattara to Ahmednuggur.—Ditto, ditto.

26th reg. N.I.—From Ahmednuggur to Sattara.—Ditto, ditto.

WIDOW OF CAPT. H. W. BRETT, ART.

Bombay Castle, Aug. 22, 1854.—The Hon. the Court of Directors have been pleased to admit Mrs. E. Brett, widow of the late Capt. H. W. Brett, of the artillery, to the benefits of Lord Clive's Fund.

IMPORTS (Bombay, Aug. 30).—Cotton Piece Goods.—Although a steady business has been done under this head, it has not been of that magnitude which might be expected at this season; liberal supplies have come in within the last ten days, to the largest and firmest holders, to which probably may be attributed the support which the market has received; but it is evident that with a continuance of large supplies importers will not be able to hold their ground.

CABUL.

The following letter from our Cabul correspondent is dated 27th July, 1854:—

I mentioned in my last communication that owing to the repeated solicitations of Zaheer-ool-doulat at Herat, it was proposed that Gholam Mahomed Khan, mokhtar, should proceed from Cabool and persuade the Candahar chiefs to restore the provinces reaped from Herat, failing which, an army should be marched to besiege the Ahmed Shahee. Sirdar Gholam Haidur has set aside this plan, and it has been now resolved by the ameer that a considerable force shall at once march from here and take post at Kelat. After placing the Cabool force in this menacing position in the neighbourhood of Candahar, a message will be forwarded to the chiefs there to give up the Herat territory immediately, and in case of a refusal, the army march and besiege the city without loss of time. As soon as the crops are gathered, and the pay of the soldiers distributed, the resolution will be carried into effect, at least so it is said. However, I believe that it may undergo a change like its predecessors, and that the ameer may never go to Kalat at all.

From Candahar the news has reached this that Sirdar Sultan Alee, son of Kohindil Khan, has been treated with great consideration by the king of Persia, who has given him 5,000 ducats, and 2,000 muskets, 60 khurwars of gunpowder, and 60 fihurwars of lead (each khurwar is about 11 Indian maunds) in weight; carriage has been sent from Candahar to bring the stores, and meet him on the road. The Persian ambassador had come on to Candahar, and stated that, he was the bearer of a firman from H.M. to the ameer of Cabool, advising him to leave Kilat-i-Ghilzie to the Candahar chiefs, not only on his account, but for the sake of right and justice, as that fortification originally was dependent on Candahar.

The ameer has also received news that the English authorities at Shikarpoor have made a treaty of alliance with the Biloch chief of the Kalat-i-Naseer, and are thinking of establishing military posts within his territory somewhere about Shawl.

The misunderstanding between the sons of the Ameer, namely, Sirdars Gholam Haidur Khan and Sher Alee Khan, is daily increasing. Hafizjee, son of the Meerwaiz, has joined the latter and forsaken a part of the former, to whom Sirdar Sooltan Mahomed Khan has, through the intrigues of Surwur Lohaneer, promised his cordial assistance, and sworn on the Koran not to desert. Some time ago he entered into similar engagements with Mahomed Azum Khan.

Sirdar Peer Mahomed Khan said to the Ameer the other day in court, that if his Highness would give him the charge of the district of Lahogurd, he would add to the present revenue, to which the Ameer replied that he had no objection to meet his proposal provided he would make his (the Ameer's) son, Sirdar Mahomed Azum Khan, a deputy governor under himself. This suggestion incensed Peer Mahomed to such a degree that he loudly accused the Ameer of treating and considering him like Nazur Khair-oolah, whom he made Nawub at Lahogurda, appointing his son as governor, and now, by doing the reverse, he wished him to be insulted by his son, who would in fact count him as his deputy, instead of being so himself. To this the Ameer made no reply, and the wrath of Peer Mahomed Khan was appeased.

Abdool Ghayas Khan, on hearing of the demise of his father, Nawab Jubbar Khan, had returned to Cabool from Bulkh, with his cavalry. The Ameer is very angry with him, for his return from such an important post without the permission of his Highness, and has not, therefore, sanctioned the payment of his arrears.

The Persian ambassador has arrived here, and you shall hear in my next of his proceedings and designs at this court. He did not leave Mushid before the Kokan merchants, the secret agents of the Russian general (of whose arrival and departure I informed you many months ago) had seen the Ausuf (Governor of Khorassan and Mushid) and passed on to Khiva. This I have heard from one of the confidential servants of the ambassador.

On the arrival of the ambassador, the Ameer mentioned in court that it would be not unwise to inform Major Edwardes, directly or indirectly, of the arrival of this plenipotentiary, though he knows well it will be communicated to that officer by his own news-writer, who is established at Cabool clandestinely, under the superintendence of Mahomed Osman Khan (Neezam-ool-dowlah).

The report of the death of Mahomed Afzul Khan is unfounded. There was an annual fair held in the vicinity of Bulkh, on which occasion it appears that some of the Bokhara horse (Alamans) had crossed the Oxus and joined it in the guise of spectators. At the termination of the fair they plundered the traders to the amount of several thousands and escaped without being pursued. The Ameer on hearing this despatched a very angry letter to Mahomed Afzul Khan for his carelessness.

Nazir Khasir-oolah has sent word that the chief commissioner of the Punjab has written to him to join his camp in October when his claim upon his late agent Ahmad Khan will be decided. On this the Ameer remarked that if his case goes beyond Peshawur, he will be involved into numerous difficulties and expenses, being a stranger, while the brother of Ahmed Khan will triumph, on account of his long residence, knowledge, and acquaintance in Cashmere and the Punjab.

When the Ameer the other day was buying shawls and "longees" to distribute amongst the heads of the force, which is now under preparation as the relief for Bulkh, he asked one of the merchants how affairs were going on at Peshawur. He answered that the Ameer would shortly hear that Peshawur had been visited by great calamities. Why so? the Ameer interrogated. The merchant said, firstly, death caused by numerous plagues; secondly, the dearth of provisions; thirdly, that all the husbands have lost all power over their wives since the arrival of the English; and fourthly, neither the daughter nor the son is under the control of their parents; and lastly, people in the country rob and plunder each other once or twice every week. This story made every one present join the Ameer in laughter.—Delhi Gazette, August 16.

CHINA.

The LONDON MAIL of June 8th arrived at Hong Kong July 25th (per Pottinger).

VICE-CONSUL WADE.—A notification, dated 12th July, in the North-China Herald, informs us that "Mr. Vice-Consul Wade having applied for leave to resign the vice-consulship of Shanghai, in order that he may be enabled to accept the office of interpreter of Chinese customs in this port, his Excellency her Britannic Majesty's Plenipotentiary, &c. &c., has seen fit to accept his resignation, and to appoint Mr. Horatio Nelson Lay to discharge provisionally the duties of vice-consul, until the pleasure of her Majesty shall be known." The appointment of such a mere lad (observes the China Mail) to the onerous office of vice-consul, sufficiently displays the dearth of competent members in our diplomatic staff in China. Mr. Lay is, we understand, a fair Chinese scholar, but, it is to be feared, with scarcely sufficient experience for such a responsible situation.

BRITISH AND FRENCH VESSELS OF WAR.—Admiral Sir James Stirling is still at Shanghai, waiting the assembly of his fleet, after which he will proceed to Kamtschatka, whither H. M. steamer Encounter had preceded him on the look-out for the Russian fleet; and Admiral Laguerre, in H. I. M. frigate La Jeanne d'Arc, left Hong Kong for Shanghai on the 2nd instant, to join the expedition. There must now be at Shanghai, the Winchester, Grecian, Barracoota, Rattler, and Styz; at Amoy, the Bittern; at Canton, the Comus; at Hong Kong, the Spartan and Racehorse.—China Mail.

HOW YOUNG BENGAL WAXED GALLANT, AND WHAT HE GOT FOR IT.—In all that has been said or written of the advance of Young Bengal in civilization, of his progress in moral and mental improvement, or of the development of his natural history, there is one interesting fact which we do not remember to have seen mentioned, and without which all delineation of his "traits of character" must be incomplete. Who does not know that for the gallons of milk and water which his ancestors drank per diem, Young Bengal has substituted for himself beverages more exhilarating and ardent; or that he loves to luxuriate on food more stimulating and substantial than the gods and goddesses of the Hindoo Pantheon ever tasted; or that he has exchanged the half-nakedness of the primitive dhootee for genuine drill unutterables and japanned boots; or that, in place of the huge, seedy, lumbering conveyance in which his father and grandfather were wont to travel through the streets of Calcutta with whole establishments of domestics with pawn-box and hooka and silver sticks, he has set up an expensive stud of splendid horses, and that the best turnouts and finest cattle to be seen on the strand belong to Young Bengal? All this is now a matter of common notoriety; and it is even known that Young Bengal sometimes aspires to the graces of the "light fantastic" at Dupuis' soirees. But it may not be generally known that for some time past Young Bengal has betrayed a strange tenderness of feeling towards others of the softer sex than the ladies of the zenana, whom he has hitherto been accustomed to, and who are not accustomed to shoes or stockings. This feeling on his part has operated in various ways, and led him to the commission of many peculiar freaks, and into ridiculous positions. One of the commonest modes in which, when pantalooned and booted and surmounted by a skull cap, and perhaps bestriding a fine horse, he displays his personal charms and gallantry at the same time, is by ardently following the carriages of ladies on the Strand and staring at them. Generally his conduct passes unnoticed, and sometimes if observed, it is put down to the account of his headish ignorance. Young Bengal, however, ventures sometimes a step further in his impertinence, and in proportion incurs great personal risk as the cases mentioned below will illustrate. Some time ago the wife of a highly respectable gentleman of this city experienced a great annoyance from Young Bengal pursuing her carriage and staring at her, and attempting to establish a communication with her. The annoyance being repeated more than once, she mentioned it to her husband, who speedily put an end to it by the summary process of making Young Bengal's back acquainted with a horsewhip. The other case happened the other day in the Eden Garden. The European maid-servant of a gentleman whose name need not be mentioned, while out with the children, had the misfortune repeatedly to encounter Young Bengal, who on one of these occasions gave a marked token of his amorousness à la distance by throwing a letter to her. She picked it up and showed it to the gentleman in whose family she was employed, and disclosed the whole circumstances of the case to him. The upshot was, as might be anticipated, that the gentleman adopted precisely the same means as in the former case to suppress the nuisance. It is very likely that other instances of a similar character have occurred, but it is to be hoped that Young Bengal will be warned by the above examples, and take care to avoid the personal consequences to himself whenever he may feel himself under impulses of a tender nature.—Bengal Hurkaru.

HUMANITY IN CEYLON.—At Galle, a poor Cinghalese man, who had, by falling from a tree, sustained a compound fracture of the leg, was conveyed into the fort in search of medical assistance. The poor maimed wretch was borne about through the streets, appealing to one practitioner after another for relief; all his appeals were to no purpose,—he had not the wherewithal to pay. The limb was unset and undressed. The patient, after losing a whole day in the fort, was sent out of it in the evening with the promise (I believe) from a private practitioner that he would visit him the following day; but the merciful hand of death intervened during the night, and released the sufferer from this hard world. This, Sir, is only one out of many similar instances, to the occurrence of which I am prepared to bear witness when duly called upon. This is a state of things very deplorable, arguing want of knowledge or strange apathy in some official quarter that there should not be (on politic and economic grounds, to say nothing of Christian charity, in a nation holding itself so very high in that particular as the British), some public provision by which able professional help might be insured, on the occurrence of casualties such as these, among the poor Cinghalese population! A man shatters an arm or a leg,—has his hand blown off by gunpowder, is run over by a carriage or sustains a serious concussion,—he is borne about the fort in a maimed, or mutilated, or senseless condition, but not having the means of feeing the doctors, he is turned away from their doors and left to perish.—Ceylon Observer.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL, LONDON,

TUESDAY, October 3, 1854.

MODIFICATION OF MILITARY FURLOUGH REGULATIONS.

AN important extension of the new indulgence to absentees in regard to staff appointments is, we understand, to be accorded. Under the old rules, absence involved the forfeiture of those appointments absolutely, with the whole of their emoluments. This was modified when the rules were revised, and the wishes of the service are now about to be gratified by further concession. Staff officers absent on sick certificate, are to be permitted to retain office or employment for fifteen months, and to enjoy half of the staff allowances for six months. The rule is to apply to all officers holding staff or detached employment, whether such employment be military, political, or civil. Officers of her Majesty's service will be treated as those in the Company's service, in regard to allowances and tenure of office.

Having received some inquiries on the subject, we may mention what we should have thought would scarcely have required notice, that, in estimating the length of military service, two years' absence may be counted as such in twenty years, three years in twenty-five, and four years in thirty.

NAVIGATION OF THE RIVER GODAVERY.

WITH a view to ascertain the practicability of improving this river, and the requisite cost, a survey was some time since commenced. It was temporarily suspended, but, as the friends of the commerce of India will rejoice to hear, is about to be resumed. It is believed that something may be done at a moderate expense, and more at a greater outlay, should the Government of India be disposed to incur it, which it is to be hoped may prove to be the case. The extension of our interest in this quarter, by the late acquisition of Nagpore, presses the matter imperatively upon the notice of the State; and if the men of Manchester could be persuaded that, in one instance at least, the Government of India is neither asleep nor steeped in deadly animosity against all improvement, this would be worth something for the sake of novelty. We do not, however, hope that such a result would be produced. "It is easy to find a staff to beat a dog with," says the proverb; and if the systematic abusers of the Indian Government, British and local, had to-day all they call for, they would to-morrow declare that they had got nothing, and would bellow as lustily as ever for something they had never dreamt of before. But still the facilities of obtaining a supply of cotton,—the staff of life to them, though the instrument of death to their miserable dependents,—would be promoted. The resources of India would be developed, and we are not to abstain from doing good because it may "bring grist to the mill" of the unthankful or the unworthy.

NEWSPAPER POSTAGE IN INDIA.

THIS was the heading of an article in our last, and we should not have returned to the subject at this time, were it not that among our extracts from local papers there is one which, as it indicates a change very different from that announced by us, might possibly give rise to misapprehension or surprise. The true solution of the difficulty would probably suggest itself to many of our readers, but for the benefit of those to whom it might not occur, we will explain the matter here. At the date of the passing of the Postage Act quoted in the newspapers just received, the decision of the Home authorities was not known by the Government of India; consequently, the members of the Government acted as well as they could without it, and the result was the levy upon newspapers of the amount of postage reported. When in possession of that decision, there can be no doubt that they will, without delay, retrace their steps, and give to the public the advantage which it has pleased the Home Government to sanction. The business now rests in India, not here; and unless we greatly mistake the character of the local legislature, no time will be lost in conceding a boon which it has now full power to confer.

MEDICAL SERVICE OF BOMBAY.

IN our last we announced a small augmentation of the medical establishment of the Madras presidency. We are now able to state that the sister presidency of Bombay is also to have some addition to its medical officers. The number of those officers was some time since 185, of which number 53 were surgeons, and 132 assistant-surgeons. With reference chiefly to the wants of Scinde and Aden, as well as of the additional European regiment, the number was subsequently enlarged. It is now to be further increased by adding two surgeons and five assistant-surgeons,—seven in the whole.

RETIREMENT OF MEDICAL OFFICERS.

SOME doubts being afloat as to the length of absence that may be counted as service for the retiring pension, by medical men in the employment of the East-India Company, we are induced to state what is the rule on this subject. A medical officer retiring, after a period of not less than seventeen nor more than twenty years, may count one year and eight months of furlough and leave; under twenty-five years, two years' furlough and leave may be counted; in twenty-five years, three years; and in thirty years and upwards, four years.

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of the East-India Company was held at their house in Leadenhall-street, on Wednesday, the 27th of September, 1854.

Major Oliphant, the Chairman of the Company, took the chair.

The Minutes of the last Court having been read,

The Chairman said, I have to acquaint the Court, that certain accounts and papers presented to Parliament since the last General Court are now laid before the Proprietors, in pursuance of the Bye-Laws.

The titles of the documents having been read,

The Chairman said, there has further been laid before the Proprietors an account of the superannuations granted since the last General Court to the servants of the East-India Company in England. I have also to inform the Court, that a copy of Sir George Clerk's Report relating to Scinde, dated the 28th of April, 1848, with an appendix, has been laid on the Proprietors' table.

Mr. Lewin.—Although the Report has been laid on the table, it has since been taken away.

The Chairman.—It has been taken away for the purpose of being printed, by order of the House of Commons.

Certain papers relating to the establishments at Haileybury and Addiscombe were also laid before the Court.

BYE-LAWS.

The Chairman.—I have to inform the Court, that this Court has been made special for the purpose of submitting for adoption the alterations in the Bye-Laws of the Company, recommended in the Report from the Committee of Bye-Laws, which was laid before the General Court on the 21st of June.

The Report of the Committee was then read.

The different sections of the Bye-Laws which it was proposed to alter, in order to adapt them to the provisions of the recent Act of Parliament for the government of India, were then read, and the alterations were considered and adopted seriatim.

On sec. 2, c. 3, being read, which ordains that the Bye-Laws shall be read in the first Court of Directors and first General Court after every annual (now altered to bi-annual) election,

Mr. Jones asked whether that law was, in fact, ever observed?

The Chairman.—The practice is to read the Bye-Laws "short." (A laugh.)

On sec. 2, c. 6, being read, which ordains that at the first Court of Directors after every election a chairman and deputy chairman shall be chosen by ballot,

Mr. Lewin asked whether the ballot spoken of alluded to a ballot by the Directors or by the Proprietors?

The Chairman.—It is a ballot by the Directors, in their own Court, and not in the General Court of Proprietors.

On sec. 4, c. 6, being read, which ordains that no director shall tender any ship to the Court in which he is interested; and that any interest which he may acquire incidentally is to be reported to the Court of Directors, and disposed of within twelve months, "or in default thereof, such director shall be liable to be removed from his office." This section was altered by the addition of the following words: "If elected thereto by the General Court."

The like words were also inserted in sec. 7, c. 6, which ordains that if any director shall take any fee, present, or reward, upon any account relating to the affairs of the Company, he shall forfeit to the use of the Company double the amount so received, be liable to be removed from his office, and be incapable of holding office or pension under the Company.

Mr. Lewin.—How is the penalty to be enforced?

The Chairman.—I am really not aware that any particular power is necessary for that purpose. I presume it must be enforced by a conviction being obtained through the process of the common law, which process any person might prosecute.

Mr. Lewin.—I very much doubt that. I think this to be a very imperfect bye-law. In all Acts of Parliament where penalties are pronounced, means are provided for enforcing them.

On sec. 1, c. 7, being read, which ordains that if any member of the Company should endeavour to obtain a vote for the election of a director by violent or corrupt means, and be declared guilty by a General Court, he shall be incapable of holding office, and if a director, be further liable to be removed from his office; the words "elected by a General Court," were inserted after the word "director."

On sec. 7, c. 7, being read, which ordains that in all elections to be annually (altered to bi-annually) made, each proprietor voting shall give in a list containing not more than six names of persons qualified to be directors;—

Mr. Lewin asked whether the Court of Directors would retain the power of recommending directors as at present?

Mr. Clark.—I do not see what that has to do with the Bye-Laws.

Mr. Lewin.—I think it has a great deal to do with them.

Mr. Jones.—I think it to be a very important question.

The Chairman.—The question before the Court now is, that this bye-law be altered as proposed by the insertion of the word "bi-annually" instead of "annually;" and as to the question which the hon. proprietor has put, that has not to be considered by the Court.

Mr. Lewin.—Why, the real question relates to the power of the Proprietors nominating Directors.

The Chairman.—If you have any amendment to propose, be good enough to propose it in due form.

Mr. Lewin.—I will move an amendment. I propose that this clause be agreed to, provided the Directors resign the power of nominating according to the present practice.

Mr. Mangles.—I think I can set the hon. proprietor right in a very few words. The Directors by no means, in their capacity of Directors, recommend anybody. The Directors, as Proprietors, have as much right as the hon. gentleman to recommend—not as directors, but as co-proprietors.

Mr. Jones objected to the argument of the last speaker.

Mr. Lewin repeated his amendment.

Mr. Jones seconded it.

The amendment was put and negatived, and the section, as originally proposed to be altered, was agreed to.

Amendments of a similar character were then inserted in several other sections, and the body of Bye-Laws were finally approved of and adopted.

Mr. Jones said he wanted to propose that all Parliamentary papers should be placed on the Proprietors' table, without the necessity of their being previously moved for.

The Chairman.—They are so already.

Mr. Jones asked why, then, it was necessary to keep moving for papers?

The Chairman.—All papers printed by order of Parliament relative to the affairs of India are invariably obtained by the Directors, and are by them laid before the Proprietors.

THE PUNJAB.

Mr. Jones then rose to move, in pursuance of notice, for a list of the confiscated estates, with their respective annual values, of the chiefs whose property has been absorbed by Government since the annexation of the Punjab. One of the Parliamentary papers referred to by the Chairman related to the affairs of the Punjab; and there was one portion of their conduct which he considered recognized a principle of a very objectionable nature, and one that was greatly opposed to the general prosperity; he (Mr. Jones) considered the absorption of the estates of the nobility of the Punjab as an act analogous to the confiscation of the nobility's estates in this country in the times of the civil wars. We had seen in Ireland what had been the effect of an absentee system. Now this was the system which was being enforced in the Punjab by the confiscation of these estates. The gentlemen who manage these estates do not consider the permanent well-being of the farmers. It was true they have, at the end of ten years, expended a million of money in the construction of canals and roads, but they make no future provision for the commonalty, who are their factors and labourers. The 100,000*l.* a year which is set aside for national works in the Punjab was insufficient for the progress and advancement of the population. But if the nobility had been left in possession of their estates, it would at least have had the effect of keeping the population in a state of comfort. If there was reason to find fault with this nobility, then deprive them of their estates; but if you do that, do not also take the kingdom for yourselves, when the ruler has not been in the wrong, but only in the minority. If, on the other hand, the Maharajah did wrong, take his estate from him, and do not make war on individuals; making both parties suffer is contrary to every principle of British law. When he (Mr. J.) saw the Queen of England receiving at her palace the young Maharajah, he could not conceive how these confiscations could be justified; and when that young prince saw upon the brow of the Queen the Koh-i-noor which, when in power, was his own property, he could not understand what must be his feelings. Knowing the mercy that had been extended, in the present reign, to the descendants of those Scottish chiefs whose estates were confiscated, one would expect that a similar indulgence might well be shown to those who fought for themselves and their native princes in the Punjab. Surely there is nothing very wrong, in these days, in a man being guilty of perfidy and rebellion, when the Emperor of the French is countenanced by the sovereigns of Europe. The British Parliament had been utterly ridiculous in its attempt to attract notice to Indian affairs. He had seen it stated that when the President of the Board of Control made his final exposition of Indian affairs to Parliament, there were only twelve members in the House to listen to him. He (Mr. Jones) thought that if members of Parliament are so negligent in the discharge of their duties, it is the more incumbent on the Court of Proprietors to take care that proper attention be paid to Indian affairs.

Mr. Lewin, in seconding the motion, said, no doubt the annexation of the Punjab has been attended with much individual wrong, and that cases of most gross and infamous injustice had been perpetrated in that country. In some parts of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Jones's) speech he did not concur, for he (Mr. Jones) had been advocating the aristocratic principle. With reference to the Koh-i-noor diamond, he knew very well that at the time it was presented to the Queen many persons were surprised, not so much that it had been offered to, as that it had been accepted by her Majesty. It was perfectly clear that there never was a more infamous piece of plunder than in the case of the Koh-i-noor. He was sorry the hon. gentleman should have alluded as he had done to the Emperor of the French; he (Mr. Lewin) regarded Louis Napoleon as not only one of the greatest, but one of the best men whose names will live in history, for he has exercised with the utmost possible moderation the enormous power at his command.

The Chairman.—Gentlemen, you have heard the speeches of the mover and seconder, and I conceive you will consider that there is no necessity for giving these papers.

The motion was then put and negatived.

DISARMAMENT OF THE INHABITANTS OF THE PUNJAB.

Mr. Jones asked whether it were true that the arms of the inhabitants of the Punjab have been taken from them, and if so, on what conditions?

The Chairman.—Orders have been issued by the military authorities, that the defences of every fortified place in the Punjab which is not occupied by British troops should be totally destroyed, and that effectual measures should be taken to deprive the population of the means of reviving tumult and war. The people have been disarmed, because it is impossible that they can be allowed to go about with weapons in their hands which may at any moment be used against the British forces.

THE SCINDE PAPERS.

Mr. Lewin said, at the last quarterly meeting he moved for certain papers relative to the Government of Scinde, and although those papers were at that time refused, the Board of Control, he believed, had since authorized their production. He must complain, however, that after a lapse of three months, the papers in question are not upon the table of the Court. He was most anxious that those papers should be produced, because they would fully vindicate the conduct of the late Sir Charles Napier in the administration of Scinde.

The Chairman.—The hon. proprietor is aware of the reason why the papers were not given on the last Court day; but I wrote to the Board the same evening to ask the President to allow the papers to be laid on the table. That was granted; two or three days afterwards the very papers were moved for in the House of Commons, and the President of the Board sanctioned their production and their being printed. I will make inquiries on the subject, in order that the papers may, as speedily as possible, be placed in the hands of the Proprietors.

Mr. Lewin said he could not but observe that the Minute of the Duke of Wellington, which told against Sir Charles Napier, was produced with the greatest alacrity; but when the other papers, which were known to be in favour of Sir Charles Napier, were asked for, they were not only very reluctantly granted, but a great portion of time had been lost in laying them before the Proprietors. He (Mr. Lewin) had, however, seen one of those papers, which speaks of Sir Charles Napier's Government in the most eulogistic terms.

Mr. Jones thought the reason given last Court-day for not granting the papers was, that Parliament had refused them.

Mr. Clark.—I rise to order. There is no motion before the Court.

Mr. Jones would conclude with a motion. The reason was, that the papers had been refused in Parliament. To ask the President of the Board of Control to permit the papers to be produced to the Proprietors appeared to him rather infra dig. after the high eulogy the hon. baronet (Sir J. Hogg) passed on the great privilege this Court possessed of calling for whatever papers it pleased. He moved, "That the papers be now presented."

The motion, not being seconded, dropped.

The Court then adjourned.

CRUELTY IN HIGH PLACES.—We alluded in our last to an affair at Hyderabad, in which the commanding officer of a native regiment did not figure to advantage. We are enabled to lay before our readers the following circumstances:—An ensign of the corps, when on a pic-nic in the neighbourhood, unfortunately had his leg broken. The lieutenant of police considerably offered him the use of his house, and thither he was carried. His own residence is small, hot, has no punkah or taties, and is but poorly furnished, whereas his kind friend's is cool and airy, and affords, moreover, the opportunity of society and good attendance, so essential to an invalid. The major in command, however, contrary to the advice of the medical officer, refused to allow him to remain anywhere but in his own quarters. The surgeon of the regiment pointed out the danger which would attend removal, and the consequences likely to ensue from the patient's being removed at such a period. The commanding officer obstinately insisted on his orders being carried into execution, and directed the ensign's removal. Some good friends, however, laid the matter before the brigadier, who, with proper feeling, countermanded the major's order, and permitted the ensign to remain where he was. This was consequent on a medical committee reporting that it would be injudicious removing him. All who love humanity must rejoice that the commanding officer received this mortifying reproof,—for nothing can excuse an officer, however exalted his rank, exhibiting such a contemptible display of authority in an instance like the present, where the life of a fellow-creature, although his military subordinate, was in jeopardy. We could never expect to find associated with such barbarous ill-feeling, any of those noble qualities which are the proverbial attributes of the British soldier. —Sindian.

BOOKS.

A Selection from the Writings, prose and poetical, of Henry William Torrens, Esq., B.A., Bengal Civil Service, and of the Inner Temple. By JAMES HUME, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. Calcutta and London, 1854, Lepage and Co.

Of Henry Torrens, a brilliant star among brilliant contemporaries, everybody has heard. The son of a distinguished military officer, having passed through the various means of preparation afforded by private tuition,* a private school, the Charter House, and the University of Oxford (to say nothing of a French academy), he was, after an unsuccessful attempt to study the law, installed in the Foreign Office, where he remained till the temptation of a Bengal civil appointment diverted him from western to eastern diplomacy. His career in India is well known, and his presumed connexion with the Afghan expedition has brought his name into a notoriety not enviable. In relation to this, the preparatory memoir of Mr. Hume, the editor of the present collection, calls attention, and the subject demands it. We cannot enter into the question here, but "hear both sides" is an admirable injunction, and we recommend those who have read Mr. Kaye's publication to read this.

With regard to this collection of "Fugitive Pieces," we have to observe that most of them are of a light character, and very amusing. The specimen which follows is supposed to be written by a noted grievance-monger.

I.

"I was looking for a grievance, I was looking for a voke,
I'd exhausted all the English, found the Irish all bespoken,
I was hunting an oppression up, that might be made to pay,
When a kind friend whispered 'India,' and at once I steamed away—

But the treasure-mine of gammon,
I avow it,—'twas my fault,—
I had quite forgot to cram on,
And 'tis Aylwin's turned up—SALT!

II.

"I inspired the Chuckerbutties, I beworded the Town Hall,
But the wise ones shrugged their shoulders, and the gain was none at all:
The boys and fools applauded, and I got but their applause,
And their answer when I named the cash, was, 'Think, dear Sir,—the Cause!'

Oh! 'twas humbug's Eldorado
At my feet lay, ne'er o'erhalt,—
And that Aylwin!—what he may do!—
It's a fortune, is that salt!

III.

"I have got (a mere reversion) the Safara Raj to do,
(The proceedings all in Persian, and the man a dreadful screw),
Bengal landlords proved a failure, and my business very dull,
So for want of aught more gullible, I took the great Moghul—
But I missed the real ticket,
Like a chap concerned in malt,—
And there's Aylwin gone to stick it Into MANCHESTER (!) for Salt!

* It is not often that such subjects afford much for notice, but the following historiette is so remarkable, that we cannot refrain from extracting it:—
"His first tutor was Mr. Raiton, a tall and gaunt Cockermouth man, an usher in Mr. Maxwell's school at Parson's Green, near Fulham, who came daily over to Mulgrave House to instruct him in the first mysteries of the Latin grammar. His mother had early sown good seed in his mind, and, by her astonishing powers of infant tuition, had prepared the ground for the ample crop which years and study were afterwards destined so fully to develop. Raiton, in truth, was hardly worthy of his pupil: but he nevertheless made so favourable an impression on Henry's parents, that he was encouraged by them to set up a school, with the promise that Henry and his next brother, Arthur (three years and a half his junior), should be the first pupils. To Bromington, therefore, the boys proceeded, Henry at the age of nine and a half, Arthur at six; and a year later, the school increasing with extraordinary rapidity, a larger house at Brook Green, near Hammersmith (Eagle House), became necessary, to provide for the swelling numbers. The influence of Henry Torrens' father, now a general officer, a Commander of the Bath, the colonel of a regiment, and Military Secretary to the Duke of York, materially aided the progress of the Cockermouth schoolmaster; and Raiton (a bachelor, and of the simplest and most sparing personal habits) made a rapid fortune. The school had soon increased to little short of one hundred scholars, and Raiton finally retired to Cockermouth with a fortune of 100,000*l.*, a sum unprecedented in scholastic annals." An eminent member of the present Cabinet, then representative of Cumberland, said he constantly asked himself, in reference to his public conduct, "What will they say of this A. Cocker-mouth?" and the inquiry long continued to be returned upon him by a leading Opposition paper. We may wonder whether Mr. Raiton ever put the question to himself, equally noted for humour and unscrupulousness.

IV.

"With his piecegood plausibility, and rhetoric in twist,
With his sugar (in a paper), and his cotton (in a list),
His statistics, and his cyphers set in columns long and tall,
And he flaunting at the top of them, the greatest one of all—
"Tis enough to set one frantic
To see such a what d'ye call't
Take my line, the true romantic,
In his pamphlet upon Salt!

V.

"But 'tis done! I'll give up business, for a sharper chap than I
Sweeps me out of my profession, like a wiper, on the sly—
And no more my words, Oh! Exeter, shall echo through thy hall,
For an Alwyn beats the Thompson,—aye—and smiles upon his fall!

Oh! the rich Peru of humbug!
Yes—I missed it—all my fault—
Voiceless henceforth—tongueless—rhymeless—
Tears are—drat it!—Alwyn!—SALT!
(Sobs, weeps, and ultimately dissolves in brine.)"

The Hand-Book of British India: a Guide to the Stranger, the Traveller, the Resident, and all who may have business with or appertaining to India. By J. H. STOCQUELER, author of "The Life of the Duke of Wellington," "The Military Encyclopedia," "The Memoirs of Sir William Nott," &c. &c. Third edition, with numerous alterations and additions. London, 1854, Allen and Co.

This work is, we presume, called a "Hand-Book" with reference to its size. In other respects it deserves a far higher designation. Everybody has heard of the "Iliad in a Nutshell." Here we have an encyclopædia of India in a pocket volume! It contains as much as almost any but Indian statesmen could desire to know of the country, and even for such there is much that would be found important and interesting. After reading it, a feeling of wonder as to how so much useful and entertaining matter could be got within so small a space comes over the mind. To those about to proceed to India, whether in a civil, military, medical, ecclesiastical, or commercial character, and to the parents and friends of those destined for India in any capacity, the book is indispensable. There is nothing like it. Those who have seen former editions only, will have no adequate conception of this till it shall be before them.

It is really a new work, and its comprehensiveness is among its most noticeable features. History, Medicine, Manners and Customs (Native and European), Government, Commerce, Manufactures, Law, Literature, Public Institutions, Private Society, the peculiarities of the different presidencies and of various parts of India, together with the productions of each; the comparative prices of articles of necessity here and in India; everything, in short, from the highest to the lowest which can by possibility be the subject of inquiry, here finds a place; and whether inquiry be prompted by interest or by mere curiosity, no one will search for information in vain; it is sure to be found, brought down to the latest available date; and thus our more recent acquisitions,—Scinde, the Punjab, and Pegu,—great public works, as railways, the electric telegraph, the college at Roorkee, the Ganges Canal,—find place. Another advantage is, that notices of what are termed the Eastern Settlements—Penang, Singapore, and Molucca, and also of the magnificent island of Ceylon—are included within the work; Kashmir, moreover, though not British, receives attention; and thus the work is rendered a complete guide to the East, China only being excepted.

ON THE ORNAMENTAL AND THE USEFUL.—The managers of the Military Orphan School at Kidderpore have appointed Mr. Emmanuel as teacher of music in the place of Monsieur Valadares Père, who hitherto held the situation. The change has been effected at the special desire of the Kidderpore pupils, who urge two very important objections to Mr. Valadares, he being, in the first instance, too old for them, and secondly, of too dark a complexion. Such powerful causes could not be left disregarded, and the managers, with their usual gallantry, and out of consideration for the wishes of the young ladies, complied with their requests. We only trust that the young ladies, sensible of the attention, will prove their gratitude by presenting each of the managers with a crochet-worked smoking cap or a pair of slippers, to be worn at the monthly meetings. Perhaps at some future period the young ladies may find out that the managers would have established a greater claim upon the gratitude of the pupils, had the ladies, instead of being allowed to occupy their time in playing on the piano and singing Beethoven's "Adelaide," been taught to cut out and make up their own dresses, and to make pastry, and manage a house.—Bengal Hurkaru.

Capt. Samuel Thornton, R.N.
Brodie McGhie Willcox, Esq., M.P.

The marked success which has attended the operations of this Society justifies the Directors in calling the attention of the public to the superior advantages held out to all classes desirous of affecting Assurances upon their lives.

The subjoined scale of rates is framed with the greatest care, and will be found to be as MODERATE AS IS CONSISTENT WITH PERFECT SECURITY.

Annual Premium required for the Assurance of £100 on a single Life, with participation in Profits:—

20	£1 18 8	35	£2 14 11	50	£4 5 6
25	2 3 3	40	3 3 0	55	5 5 10
30	2 8 10	45	3 12 2	60	6 13 2

Tables for Policies to be effected in India have been especially prepared from the records of the East-India Company, on the experience of mortality in that country.

During the last thirteen years, the reduction of Premium on Policies entitled to participate in Profits has averaged more than 44 per cent., and in the last four years it has been declared at 45 per cent.

An annual division is made of one-fifth of the ascertained profits of the five preceding years; the other four-fifths being set apart to enter into the average of succeeding years.

Of the sum annually divisible, 75 per cent. is apportioned to Policy-holders who have paid six annual Premiums, either in a Reduction of subsequent Premiums, or as a Bonus added to the Policy. The remainder is apportioned to the Shareholders.

Assets of the Society, upwards of £600,000.—Amount of Policies in force, £1,000,000.—Annual income arising from Premiums, exclusively of interest on the invested capital, exceeds £120,000.

Weekly Board-day, Thursday, at 1 o'clock.

Committees sit every Tuesday and Saturday, at 12 o'clock, when Policies requiring despatch may be effected.

Allen's Maps of India, &c.

DRAWN BY JOHN WALKER,

Geographer to the East-India Company.

A New Map of India;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorates, and the Position and Boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in case, £2.12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

•• The object kept in view in compiling this Map, has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all Stations—Civil and Military—are inserted, as well as those of all Towns and places of note, likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various Districts and Collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The Railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for Reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been shunned.

A General Map of India;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Hon. East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2.12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

Map of India;

From the most recent authorities. On two sheets—Size, 2 ft. 10 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 1s.

Map of the Routes in India;

With Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS invigorate the system and promote health.—Mrs. Reynolds, of Burton, had been a great sufferer, for many years, from a complication of Nervous Diseases, so that her constitution had become very much impaired, which affected both her mental and physical powers; her strength also was completely prostrated. Change of air, change of scene, and every available remedy was resorted to without any beneficial effect whatever, as she appeared to be sinking fast. Holloway's Pills were commenced at this critical period, and by this unrivalled medicine Mrs. Reynolds speedily derived temporary relief, and ultimately a permanent cure was effected, and she continues to enjoy excellent health.

Sold by all vendors of medicines, and at PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY'S Establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

UNDER THE IMMEDIATE PATRONAGE OF THE COURTS OF EUROPE, THE ARISTOCRACY, AND THE UPPER CLASSES.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL is a delightfully fragrant and transparent preparation for the Hair; and as an invigorator and purifier beyond all precedent. In dressing the hair, nothing can equal the effect of Rowlands' Macassar Oil, either on natural or artificial hair, rendering it so admirably soft that it will lie in any direction, producing beautifully flowing curls, and imparting a transcendent lustre.—Price 3s. 6d., 7s., family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' KALYDOR for the skin and complexion is unequalled for its rare and inestimable qualities. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek; the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms; its capability of soothing irritation, and removing cutaneous defects, discolorations, and all unsightly appearances, render it indispensable to every toilet.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or, Pearl Dentifrice.—A White Powder, compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the Oriental Herbal. It bestows on the Teeth a pearl-like whiteness, frees them from tartar, and prevents premature decay. It induces a healthy action of the Gums, and renders the Breath sweet and pure.—Price 2s. 9d. per box. "Beware of spurious imitations!!!" The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS'" preceding that of the article on the wrapper or label. Sold by them at 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

"ALL is peace in the Indian peninsula from Peshawur to Travancore." Thus speaks an overland Bengal paper; and after this the reader will not expect much matter of an exciting nature. The interest not long since created by the progress of events in the eastern part of Asia has been transferred to the western, and on 'Change and at the clubs, the Turks and Russians occupy the place lately enjoyed by the Burmese. Pegu is quiet; so is the North-West. Where then are we to look for the elements of disturbance? We must look beyond the British dominions. It is not improbable that ere long we may find some cause of anxiety in the Punjab. The health of Gholab Singh is in such a state as to raise the question, what is likely to follow his decease—whether he is to exemplify the saying of a great European politician, "After me the deluge."

Gholab Singh has, it said, a very unpopular son and a very popular nephew, and, as one of the papers observes, we may naturally suppose them "quite prepared to do a little orientalism towards each other." Indeed, we apprehend it would be doing them gross wrong not to suppose this. What will be the end, no one can foresee; but if the beauties of Kashmir should ultimately become British subjects, how many "swords would spring from their scabbards!"—or rather, many pens would emerge from their boxes to dilate upon the horrible wrong committed. We can wait these results, however, with perfect equanimity. Oude is always at hand to afford as much of mischief as may be desired. Outrage is ever prevalent, and an event announced to us by the present arrival renders it almost certain that the progress of that unhappy country will be from bad to worse, unless something analogous to revolution should arrest it. Colonel Sleeman, the late resident, has been rendered unable to remain at his post by a severe attack of disease, and it is feared, from the nature of the complaint, that he will never be in a condition to return. Here, the question, what is to become of Oude? presses itself upon notice. Shall it be absorbed into the territory nominally as well as actually British, or shall the Anglo-Indian Government occupy it, and administer its affairs in the name of the king; the latter receiving an allowance sufficient to enable him to amuse himself in the rational way which delights him? One of these results would seem inevitable; perhaps the latter plan might accomplish all that is desired, and it seems more in accordance with the obligations of treaties. Something, how-

ARRIVAL OF MAILS.

The Oriental, with a mail, left Calcutta Sept. 5th, Sand Heads 6th, Madras 10th, Point de Galle 15th, Aden 27th, and arrived at Suez Oct. 4th.
The Auckland, with a mail, left Bombay Sept. 11th, and had arrived at Aden.
The Singapore, with the China mail, left Hong-Kong Aug. 22nd, Singapore 31st, Penang Sept. 2nd, and arrived at Point de Galle Sept. 9th.
The mails thus brought were taken on to Alexandria; they arrived at Malta Oct. 10th (per Indus), and Marseilles Oct. 13th (per Vectis).
The Indus, with the remainder, may be expected at Southampton Oct. 20th.

DEPARTURES OF EACH MONTH—MAILS FROM LONDON TO INDIA, CHINA, ETC.

Via Southampton (from London), at 8 o'clock in the morning of the 4th and 20th. It is advisable to post letters in London on the previous evening; if that day be Sunday, then on the evening of the 3rd and 19th; if Monday (of course) before 8 o'clock on that morning.

Postage, letters under  $\frac{1}{2}$  oz. . . . . 1s.
" " 1 oz. . . . . 2s.

Pre-payment is optional, but out of London it is the most certain to insure early despatch; and it will be preferable to affix stamps rather than to pay in money.—Newspapers, free.

Via Marseilles, on the 9th and 25th; if either of these days be Sunday, then on the 10th or 26th.

Postage (must be in stamps), letters, under  $\frac{1}{2}$  oz. 1s. 10d.
" " "  $\frac{1}{2}$  oz. 2s. 3d.

" Newspapers, 3d. each.

* * * The Marseilles mails of the 9th and 25th overtake the Southampton mails of the 4th and 20th, at Malta; they arrive in India together.

ever, must be done to deliver this part of India from the miseries which have so long afflicted it. It is a duty both to England and to Oude to interfere: the honour of the British name and the happiness of Oude alike demand such a step.

A commission has been organized to administer the newly acquired territory of Nagpore.

The Nizam's dominions continue to maintain their established character, and to compete with Oude for superiority in disorder and crime. Throughout the British dominions, even in the wildest parts of them, something like order and justice prevails. In the Native states, injustice and outrage constitute the rule; the reverse of these ever marks the exception. Let the carpers and cavillers at the British Indian government take these facts and make what they can of them.

As articles of commercial intelligence, it may be mentioned that coals are reported to be obtainable from Ava, and lead from that country has actually been imported into Calcutta.

From the Presidencies there is, as from the rest of India, but little intelligence. In Calcutta, the newspaper rates of postage seem to excite much discussion. We may hope that by this time it is set at rest. Another subject of domestic interest is the sentence on Lieutenant Procter. This had been submitted by the Commander-in-Chief to the Governor-General—we know not why—and his lordship has ordered, indeed, that Lieutenant Procter should be released from arrest, but has prefaced the order by remarks severely reprehending the conduct of that officer, and directing his removal from the Arracan battalion.

The general impression seems to be that Lieut. Procter has had hard measure dealt to him; and we cannot say that such impression appears to us erroneous. Would not Clive, under the circumstances, have acted as Lieutenant Procter has done? Would he for thus acting have been brought to a court-martial, and been convicted and punished? And if in his early career such a thing had happened to him, where would have been the British Indian empire?

The offence, however lamentable the consequences, was at most but an error in judgment, and a slight reprimand would have been a sufficient punishment, if any were required. We are not sure, however, that Lieut. Procter merited any reproof. Spies, we believe, are not considered anywhere to be entitled to much favour.

From Madras we have nothing to report, except that the case of Lieutenant Procter seems to excite as much interest as at Calcutta. The finding and sentence of the court, with the extra appendages, seem to be approved nowhere.

Bombay affords us nothing but the like unanimity on the aforesaid subject; and it may be added, that the feeling against the commission appointed to inquire into the conduct of Sir James Brooke seems equally general. The Bombay Times observes, that the expense of the commission will be from twelve to twenty thousand pounds, and of the results every one in India is satisfied already; adding, that "the harmless fishermen of the London philanthropists were a set of blood-thirsty miscreants," whom Sir James Brooke did well to destroy.

The Governor-General and the governors of the subordinate governments are at the chief seats of their respective duties.

Scinde is to have a little Chobham, as Bombay has already had at Poona. The force is to assemble at Kurrahee early in the cold weather.

The Ceylon papers furnish as much information as usual. What is the average amount we will not say, as it might subject us to the imputation of unpoliteness, impertinence, and we know not what, which would shock us.

China affords nothing very important, or to much purpose. The following account of the reception of Sir John Bowring at Fuh-chau is from the China Mail :—

"Sir John Bowring arrived on the 20th in the Rattler, having left Shanghai on the 6th, and visited Fuh-chau and Amoy on his way down the coast. We understand that the reception of his excellency and his suite at Fuh-chau-fu on the 14th instant was in every respect satisfactory, and this is the more important, as our commercial relations with that capital and its neighbourhood are developing themselves on a very large and promising scale. It is said that more than fifteen millions of pounds of tea have been contracted for, and are likely to be shipped during the present season from Fuh-chau. Wang, the viceroy, has been hitherto most inimical to foreigners, and has repudiated all intercourse with them; but as he is in direct communication with the emperor and the court of Peking, the establishment of amicable relations between the British plenipotentiary and his Chinese excellency is a fact well worthy of record, and may lead to valuable results. Many communications as to the forms of reception, we are told, took place between the prefect and other subordinate mandarins, with the British functionaries at the consulate; and after much discussion and some delay, it was ultimately arranged that Sir John Bowring should be received with the highest honours, and treated in all respects as the equal of the viceroy. A long suite of chairs, bearing Captain Mellersh, of H. M. S. Rattler, Messrs. Lay and Medhurst, Mr. Gingell, the acting consul, and other functionaries, accompanied the plenipotentiary; and on reaching the vice-regal Yamen, a salvo of artillery welcomed their arrival. The grand central doors were thrown open, and the viceroy advanced to the outer entrance to receive the British minister. What passed within is of course among the secrets of diplomacy, but we are informed Sir John Bowring has expressed himself well pleased with the results of the interview. At its close, the viceroy accompanied Sir John Bowring to his chair, and a second salvo of artillery announced his departure; and in the afternoon of the same day, the viceroy, in all the panoply of state, returned at the consulate his excellency's visit. We augur well for the future from so propitious a commencement of diplomatic relations at the capital of Fok'ien. Sir John Bowring's reception by the admiral and the Taotais of Amoy, on the 18th, was not less satisfactory.

The Friend of China says :—

"Canton is still in a state of siege, and it is difficult to tell when a crisis will arrive. At present, there is no doubt but the Imperialists, badly as they are armed and drilled, are much more efficient in the field than the raw insurgent levies; and if funds can be raised, the chances are that months will elapse before the city can be taken. Should money and powder fall short, however, the place will fall, with the help, it is likely, of the Imperialist soldiers themselves. To check the supplies, then, is the most effectual means of helping things to a speedy finish; and well would it be if foreigners resolved on leaving the port for a season, and on settling in Hong-Kong, where Government have large empty houses in the shape of barracks and officers' quarters on the south side of the island."

In the China Mail, however, we read as follows :—

"Meanwhile though all trade at Canton is for the present stopped, the city itself remains in possession of the Mandarins. The foreign factories are guarded by a strong force of British and Americans, and the Comus, Supply, and Queen are anchored close to. The effects of this state of disorganization are beginning to be felt in Hong-Kong itself, where provisions have risen in price at least fifty per cent., and the supply of market produce is likely to be stopped altogether, unless some means are adopted to put down the pirates that intercept the traders on their passage to the colony. A large fleet of fifteen sail has been cruising for the past fortnight near Tam-koon-tow, the fishing-station whence the colony is supplied, and during the greater portion of that time Sir William Hoste in the Spartan has been gallanting at Macao. In his absence, we understand that the boats of the Racehorse have, or were to have, been despatched in search of the junks; but we hope the intention has not been carried into effect, as it will only lead to a needless sacrifice of the lives of the seamen. Nothing but a steamer should ever proceed on such expeditions, and we are glad to learn that the Rattler is for the present to remain on this station for such purposes."

It is not often that extracts of such a nature as that to which we are about to call attention appear in this part of our publication; but all relating to Japan is at present so interesting, that we cannot refuse it a place here:—

"The American clipper-ship Lady Pierce, Captain Burr, fitted up at San Francisco in a most costly manner for a 'peace expedition' to Japan, arrived with her owner, Mr. Silas E. Burrows, at Hong-Kong on the 14th August. Mr. Burrows describes his visit as having been attended with the most pleasurable and satisfactory results. We have been favoured by him with the following notes from his private journal:—The Lady Pierce arrived in Jeddo Bay fifteen days after Commodore Perry had left, 'as a token of amity and peace, and without any preparations for war,' and the high Japanese officers said the visit was much more pleasing to them than that of Commodore Perry, who had with him 'too many big guns and fighting men.' The Japanese, however, expressed the utmost regard for the Commodore and his officers. The ship had been supplied at San Francisco with every comfort and luxury likely to gratify and interest the Japanese, who were surprised to find such an elegantly furnished vessel used as a private gentleman's yacht. Her dimensions were taken by artists, together with delineations of her guns, tackle, &c., the authorities saying the emperor intended to have two vessels built on the same model. On board was a Japanese seaman, the sole survivor of a crew of fifteen men belonging to a junk which had been blown out to sea, and was picked up near the Sandwich Islands after having drifted about for seven months. This man, named Dee-ye-no-akee, was received with the most lively demonstrations of pleasure by his countrymen, who listened with much delight to his graphic description of his rescue from the junk, and kind treatment by the Americans, especially on board the Lady Pierce, in which he had been, by the kindness of her owner, permitted a free passage to his native country. The Japanese, especially the lower orders, were profuse in expression, by words and gestures, of their gratitude to Mr. Burrows, who seems to be of opinion that Dee-ye-no-akee, a man of fair talents, is likely, by his account of American manners and customs, to accomplish more than hosts of ambassadors towards forming and cementing an intimacy betwixt the Japanese and foreigners. Shortly after the arrival of the Lady Pierce at Uraga, orders were received from the capital that Mr. Burrows should be supplied with everything he might require, and received with 'similar hospitality to that displayed towards Commodore Perry.' With a party of the Uraga officials on board, the Lady Pierce proceeded to within ten miles of Jeddo, and her owner expressed a desire to anchor off that city; but this was objected to by the officers, who said, 'It is not good—Commodore Perry did not go there, and we hope you will not.' During the stay of the vessel, every part of her was crowded with visitors, who were profusely regaled with the refreshments with which the vessel had been provided, fresh oysters and peaches being their favourite delicacies, with champagne as a beverage; and although at one time there must have been several thousands in and around the ship, and though everything, silver-ware included, was thrown open to their inspection, not a single article was stolen. Large presents of silk, porcelain, lacquered ware, &c., were made in the name of the Emperor to Mr. Burrows, who, however, was requested to give publicity to his determination, that henceforward, in accordance with stipulations in the treaty, no foreign intercourse whatever would be permitted with Jeddo, but that all vessels must proceed either to Simoda or to the other ports thrown open to American trade. From Jeddo Bay, therefore, the Lady Pierce proceeded to Simoda, under the pilotage of three men sent on board by the authorities, and escorted by a government cutter manned by two officers and twenty men, who had received orders to render every assistance that might be required. During the entire stay of the vessel, no guard was placed over her, nor was any restriction put upon landing, of which Mr. Burrows twice took advantage while in Jeddo Bay, and on both occasions was received with every mark of courtesy. He is, however, of opinion with the officers of the U. S. squadron, that no extensive foreign commerce can possibly, at least for many years to come, be carried on with Japan. He says he applied for coal, and was told at first that 'Government had determined not to dispose of their sea-coal'; but, after reference to Jeddo, he was informed that he might have as much as he required at 1 dollar 65 cents per picul, or 28 dollars a ton; such coal as he saw at the dépôt being of a very inferior description to that sold in Oregon at 8 dollars a ton. Mr. Burrows says the Japanese are fully aware of the present disturbed state of China, which they impute entirely to the effects of foreign intercourse; and considers the enormous prices fixed upon such commodities as he desired to purchase, a certain index that fear alone dictated their emperor's acquiescence in the demands made by Commodore Perry. He likewise asserts the Japanese to be a nation of atheists, denying the existence of a God, and selecting as an object of worship either the spiritual emperor at Meaco or any other Japanese. He was told by the interpreters that formerly their religion was similar to that of China, but that the belief in a Supreme Being had latterly been entirely discarded; and they professed to be much shocked on Dee-ye-no-akee declaring his belief in the Deity, to whom, and not to the spiritual or temporal emperor, he said his successful supplications for, and thankful acknowledgments of, deliverance from the drifting junk had been directed."

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA, REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

H.M.'s TROOPS.—Assist. Surg. R. B. Wigstrom, H.M.'s 14th Lt. Dragoons, at Bombay, Sept. 8.

MADRAS.—Lieut.-Col. G. A. Baillie, 52nd N.I., at 33, Eastbourne Terrace, aged 89, Oct. 10; Maj. E. T. Cox, 2nd Nat. Vet. bat., at Chicacole, Aug. 28; Assist. Surg. A. Cheyne, 3rd Eur. reg. at Bellary, Aug. 21; Lieut. C. Holland, 4th N.I., near Coimbatore, Aug. 30.

BENGAL.—Assist. Surg. C. Forbes, 66th, or Goorka regt., at Rawul Pindee, Aug. 21; Assist. Surg. A. M'Lean, at Debroogh, Upper Assam, Aug. 8; Lieut. E. Whelan, 4th N.I., at Peshawur, Aug. 14; Lieut. C. J. Farrington, 45th N.I., at Secunderabad, Aug. 17; Brevet Major J. Ferrier, 48th N.I. at Malacca, July 24.

BURMAH.

The following is from our Burmah correspondent, dated Thyet Myoo, 10th August:—

"You will excuse me for the shortness of this communication when I assure you that there is not a word of news here—even rumour is silent. The weather is now really enjoyable, and we are determined to take advantage of it, as you will perceive from the account of a cricket match, which came off at this station on the 7th and 8th instants. I do not think you could play cricket in Bengal in the month of August. All is quiet here, and the state of health pretty good. I have really not another word to say."

The following is from a correspondent at Myanoun, on the Irrawaddy, dated 15th August, 1854:—

"There is very little news from this part of the world. Our conquest has indeed been an easy and a successful one, and everything daily tends to place it on a firmer footing. The country is becoming more quiet and settled, and the people more contented with our rule and the effective protection afforded to them when compared with that which they received in the Burmese time, or even last year, before our arrangements were matured. During last rains the whole river was covered with dacoit lounges, carrying from twenty to forty robbers, and though all merchant boats sailed in fleets, under the protection of our gun boats, there was scarcely an instance in which some of them were not cut out, and carried off, or plundered. During the rains not a single dacoity that I am aware of has taken place, and boats pass up and down day and night. There have been a few dacoities in the country, but most of these have been committed by the notable Moung-Goung-Gyee—a man whose whole existence has been passed in this occupation, and who, it is said, defied the endeavours of the Burmese to check his iniquitous career. He dared not for his life return to Burmah Proper, as there are some old scores against him to be paid off, so it is more than probable that he will fall into our hands when the season again admits of the field being taken. Major Nuthall with his Peguers pretty well broke his back just as the rains set in, and since then the energetic assistant-commissioner, Captain D. Brown, has diverted him from mischief (until something more effectual can be done) by constant dours after him.

"Notwithstanding the wise predictions of my Lord Ellenborough, and his still more wise declamations against the boundary, I see not the remotest prospect of the war being revived, or of disputes or inconvenience arising from the line of demarcation we have chosen.

"The king is evidently a man in advance of his age, and knows and understands full well the advantages which are likely to result to him and to his country by maintaining a friendly intercourse with our government. He has not only entered into a contract to supply our commissariat with all the wheat and grain produced in his country, but is most anxious to supply our steamers with coal, and has sent down large samples for trial. What stronger evidence could we have of his perfect resignation to his misfortune in losing the better half of his territory, and of his desire to profit by that misfortune. Until very lately a belief was general in the country that we should soon abandon it; but since so much activity has been displayed throughout the country in constructing roads, towns, cantonments, and other public works, this belief has quite vanished, and the Burmans have no longer any hesitation in taking service with us, or in rendering us any required assistance, from fear of the revenge that might eventually befall them.

"Trade is going on with great vigour. Hundreds of boats laden with merchandize pass the frontier every day, and our revenue is of course benefitting by it. I hear that the monthly average custom duties at that place amount to Rs. 14 or 15,000, and that in one month about 1½ lac worth of paddy and rice passed up. Does this, I must ask the Friend of India, appear as though the Burmese were not dependent upon Pegu for their staple article of food?"

"Next month a mission is expected from Ava en route to Calcutta, where of course they will be received with all honour, and after recent events be viewed as the lions of the day. Their object is not known. But it is supposed to be to obtain mutual commercial advantages, and I should not be surprised to find a treaty arise out of it.

"Tranquillity and prosperity prevail throughout the length and breadth of our newly-acquired territory, and one would almost believe we had possessed it for the last twenty years. All this is due to the administrative abilities of our estimable commissioner and his judiciously selected deputies, and may they reap their reward."

We believe the Zenobia, on her way from the Andamans, will call in at Rangoon to convey the Burmese ambassador and followers to Calcutta. The embassy had already come down to Meaday when the Tenasserim left.

As every Indian negotiation must begin and end with a present, the representative and relation of his golden-footed Majesty will of course bring one for the Governor-General; but we are curious to know of what it will consist. A hundred years ago, when Ensign Lester, in the character of Ambassador Extraordinary to the Court of Ava, had an interview with Alompra, it is said he left his shoes and sword outside the audience room, and upon entering the presence knelt down and shekhoed three times. On that occasion the Lord of the Golden Umbrellas was pleased to recognize Mr. Lester as the representative of the Hon'ble John, who was then a timid youth, and to bestow upon the envoy a present consisting of 24 Heads of Indian corn,

18 Oranges, and
5 Cucumbers.

Private letters from Rangoon mention that the king of Ava is sending down a special embassy, which is to come up to Calcutta with a view of having a personal conference with the governor-general. It is said that it is headed by the king's brother, and is to make its appearance in our metropolis with all possible pomp. The object of the embassy is reported to be the establishment of relations of permanent peace and amity with the British government. The ambassadors will bring with them some peace offerings in the shape of a collection of precious stones, armour, and other valuable articles. If the report turns out to be correct, it will be a most convincing proof of the success of Lord Dalhousie's policy with regard to Burmah.—Hurkaru.

BENGAL. OUDE.

The public will learn with a feeling of deep regret that the official career of Col. Sleeman is in all probability closed. Forty-six years of incessant labour have had their influence even on his powerful frame, and on the evening of August 7th he became alarmingly unwell. He had in fact received one of those terrible warnings believed to indicate the approach of paralysis. He has obtained leave, and may proceed to the Hills, but it is scarcely probable that after so serious a shock he will again venture to face the fatigues of office, and the incessant anxiety of a residency in Lucknow. With Col. Sleeman will depart the last hope of any improvement in the condition of this unhappy country. Though belonging to the older class of officials, Col. Sleeman has never become Hindooized. He has appreciated the misery created by a native throne, as well as the celerity sometimes produced by the commands of an absolute master. He has sternly and even haughtily pointed out to the king the miseries caused by his incapacity, and has sometimes extorted from his fears the mercy it was vain to hope from his humanity, and the redress it was futile to expect from his sense of justice. In one very recent instance, even the resident was baffled. We shall relate the occurrence as it happened, as one of the incidents which make up the daily history of a kingdom larger than Ireland, and more populous than Belgium. Opposite a road which runs by the bank of the Goomtee, visitors to Lucknow see a little dirt-coloured mosque. Near this mosque resided a poor Hindoo, named Kishen Lall, with his wife and three children. A man, well known as a dependant of one of the most powerful eunuchs of the court, marked this Kishen Lall as a victim, seized him, and demanded a bribe of Rs. 50 under penalty of death by starvation.

For three days and nights the unfortunate Hindoo suffered all the tortures of hunger, and at last, worn down by suffering, promised if he were allowed to eat to pay the money. He went to his house and began his preparatory ablutions, when his guards became impatient, and began to beat and insult him. Driven to despair, the wretched Hindoo at last entered his hut, covered his wife and children with clothes and dried cowdung, wrapped himself in a quilt, and set fire to the whole. The guards looked on quietly as the flames ascended, and in a short time the man, his wife, his children, and his house were reduced to a heap of ashes. So far the story is merely one of those instances of oriental cruelty to which the world has become accustomed. Told of a Wallachian peasant, or a Neapolitan patriot, it would excite a thrill of indignant horror, which we cannot expect to be wasted on a subject of the "just and magnificent Mahometan princes." The sequel, however, remains to be told. The crime was never avenged. The house was near a great thoroughfare. It was almost within view of the palace, but the dependant was all powerful with the Eunuch, the Eunuch was all powerful with the king, and no notice whatever was taken of a crime, which even in St. Petersburg the worst of the Czars would scarcely have dared to commit. At last the urgent remonstrances of the resident produced some effect. The king would not punish, but he could pretend some slight interest in the trifling affair. The Eunuch's dependant was seized, and placed in open arrest for three months, after which, in consideration of his services, he will probably receive some post of honour. All the ordinary excuses for such acts are in this case wanting. The king could not plead ignorance, for he was distinctly informed of the truth by the only man who has access to him, whose word is worthy of a moment's belief. He could not plead powerlessness, for the offenders were the soldiers of his own officers in his own capital, and at his absolute disposal. Such is the daily life of Oude. Let any of our English readers imagine London handed over to every caprice of every courtier, military riots every week, official murder too common for record, marriage processions cut down in open day, and respectable citizens and their wives burnt alive, because they could not offer as bribes more than they possessed. Imagine, moreover, the sole hope of redress to lie in a monarch, who first refuses to listen, and then when convinced against his will, subjects a criminal to a sentence insufficient to punish a drunken private. How long would the right of property possessed by that king in his subjects remain unquestioned?

In India, on the other hand, so determined is the respect of the British Government for international law, that we are compelled to descend to argument to justify the termination of this state of affairs. We hold distinctly that in such circumstances there is a higher law which over-rides all parchment stipulations, and that, as there is a degree of oppression which justifies insurrection, there is also a degree which justifies the intrusion of force from without. If war be justifiable, as Lord John Russell said, to punish such crimes as were committed against the Madiai, conquest is justifiable to punish such deliberate oppression as characterises Oude. There is, however, no necessity to appeal even to principles like these. We have a written treaty at our back, and it provides specially for sequestration. Political sequestrations are perpetual, and with Oude governed like Mysore, and fast advancing to prosperity, the government may await the extinction of the royal house of Oude. From first to last, from the vizer who slaughtered the Rohillas, to the king who married the mehtranee, the princes of this line have been in all save energy, what the English populace believes the Czar Nicholas to be.—Friend of India.

THE NEW POSTAGE ACT.

After six years of argument, difficulty and delay, one great reform is complete at last. The postage stamps have been prepared and distributed, the Act has appeared in the Gazette, and from the 1st October a system of cheap and uniform postage will be in full and satisfactory operation. From that day a letter weighing a quarter tola, i. e. a single half-sheet of ordinary paper, without envelope, may be sent from Peshawar to Calcutta, or from Kurrachee to Tounghoo, over the entire extent of this vast empire for half an anna, or three farthings. The letter postage is more liberal even than in England or America. Unlike the former country, we have to contend against the disadvantage of enormous distances, and unlike the latter, weight is an important element in the question. An extra ton or two matters nothing to a locomotive. It is all important to a department which considers a carriage post a triumph of administrative energy. Natives write habitually on the lightest paper. The poorest European can afford the solitary anna for a half tola letter, and thus expense ceases at once and for ever to be a restriction on Indian correspondence. The fondest wife may talk to the most affectionate husband every day all over India, and the expense of their joint correspondence will not be equal to the pay of an additional servant. The benefit comes home to every household, and this single act will do more to render the administration popular than a folio of laws.

From the same date every newspaper can be conveyed over India for two annas. The varying rates have been rendered uniform, the circles of 200 and 400 miles have been abolished, and a Calcutta newspaper will cost no more in Lahore than in Burdwan. The uniformity is an improvement, but the boon is considerable only to ourselves. It is still too heavy to admit of the general circulation of the metropolitan journals, and even to ourselves the advantage comes embittered by a most gross injustice. For years we have endeavoured in vain to obtain the concession of one half-tolah in addition to the 3½ tolahs at present given. It has been steadily refused, and although we contrived to increase our size, it was only by ordering paper specially manufactured for the journal. In the teeth of this refusal, and of the court's explicit declaration that any favour shown should be granted to the local press, the postage on English papers is one-half our own.

An Indian paper is charged two annas for three and a half tolahs, while an English journal is charged the same price for nearly double the weight (six tolahs). It is from no dread of competition that we protest against this arrangement. Even if English journals could ever supply the wants of the Indian community, the postage would still be prohibitory beyond the presidencies. But we object to the principle. We are refused the uniform one anna, because of the burden to the mails. The English papers, which burden them much more heavily, are charged at a lower rate. Weight, then, is not the great element in the question. Perhaps it is quality, and the English journals are considered better educational instruments than Indian newspapers. We will concede that assumption, and then ask why the Government has granted to the worst section of the native press a uniform anna postage. Absurd as it may seem, this has been done. The Probhakur, a vernacular daily journal in Calcutta, weighs less than half a tolah. The proprietor has only to add the word "salam" to the address, and he will be charged letter postage, that is, a uniform one anna. The heavy and excellent English journal is charged little. The light and worthless Bengalee paper is charged less.

The Indian journals, which unite both the recommendations, are weighed down by a taxation which is felt to be heavy even by the Europeans in India, the most liberal community on earth. The Mahomedans may spread treason by their lithographs at an anna a week, while the native is debarred from his corrective in the shape of an English journal. The principles of free trade are applied to the poison, and heavy tariffs only to the antidote. Argument, however, has long since been exhausted, and we must either take the law into our own hands, as we might have done nine months since, or await in sullen silence the return of the Court of Directors to the ordinary principles of justice. The fault does not rest with the authorities in India, and the just indignation of the public is not diminished by the fact that wherever the home authorities have not interfered, the rates are liberal to profusion. Books, for instance, not weighing more than 120 tolahs, or 3 lbs.—e. g. a volume of Macaulay,—may be sent for 2 annas a pound. The rates for banghy parcels are equally light; and, in short, the liberality of every provision but one is beyond all Indian precedent—Friend of India.

THE IMHOFFS.

So rapid has been the growth of the Indian empire, that we are apt to forget how small an interval intervenes between ourselves and its founders. Warren Hastings is now a historical character, yet there is a lady alive who saw him after his duel with Francis, and the grandson of his second wife has just died at Kurrachee. The Sind Kossid, who announces the occurrence, adds some facts elucidatory of the history of this family. They appear to correct Mr. Gleig and to confirm an apparently rash assertion in Macaulay's Essay. The Baroness Imhoff, who subsequently became Mrs. Hastings, had two children by her first husband. One of these was Sir Charles Imhoff, the other, says Mr. Gleig, "was unfortunate, and died early." This is a mistake. He settled at Midnapore, where he died in 1799, thirty years after Hastings's voyage from England, on which he met the Franconian baron and his wife. He appears to have been possessed of considerable property, which he left to his natural children, with a contingent reversion to his mother. One of these children, a hopeless vagabond, wandered over the north-west, and at last died at Kurrachee, where his father's will, from which these facts are extracted, came into the possession of Captain Ashburner. It is difficult to imagine whence the property of the younger Imhoff was derived, except from his mother, and the circumstance may perhaps account for an apparent discrepancy in Macaulay's narrative. Mrs. Hastings, he more than hints, took bribes to a very large amount. Hastings most certainly never profited by that money, and his poverty seems at first sight almost incompatible with the statement. It is, however, quite possible that it was devoted to this "unfortunate son," a possibility not diminished by the exceeding affection with which he speaks in this will of his mother.

Glancing over Mr. Gleig's narrative, we find a fact which enables us to correct another mistake, which once crept even into this journal, and has been repeated all over India. The tablet discovered at Moorsshedabad was imagined to be the only proof that Hastings was ever married in early life. It is not so. The marriage is mentioned by Mr. Gleig, who adds that the lady was the widow of a Captain Campbell, who, when Fort William was attacked by Surajah Dowlah, fled with the cowardly Governor Drake to Fultah. She brought Hastings two children, one of whom survived long enough to be sent to England for his education.—Friend of India.

THE SCHOOL OF INDUSTRIAL ART.

The example of Dr. Hunter at Madras has been followed in Calcutta, and the School of Industrial Art is now in full operation. The narrative of the progress of the undertaking will display at once its utility, and the minute practical difficulties which impede all such enterprises in India. Early in the present year, Mr. Pratt, under-secretary to the Government of Bengal, determined to carry into execution a plan long since matured. The project was to establish an institution, which should be at once a school of design, and a laboratory, where experiments could be made for mechanical improvements. In England, a few speeches would have been made, and a few articles written, and if funds had been forthcoming, the school would have marched at once. In India, it is far otherwise. The money difficulty is of trivial importance. Calcutta is always ready to give, and any man of reputation can always collect any sum required for a philanthropic object. There remain a host of petty practical difficulties, which must be removed one by one by the personal efforts of the projectors, those projectors being in almost all cases men weighed down by business. It was resolved to begin by teaching drawing and modelling. It was necessary to find teachers. In England, a philanthropist oppressed by that difficulty would put an advertisement in the Times. In Calcutta, he must wander about everywhere, pester all his friends, endure coldness and insouciance with immovable good temper, and succeed, if he does succeed, by dogged pertinacity. In the present instance, by unusual good fortune, teachers were obtained. M. Augier was engaged on a salary of Rs. 120 to teach the elements of drawing. A Belgian artist of considerable ability also offered to teach the first principles of modelling, without remuneration. His offer was of course gratefully accepted, and the committee secured also a native modeller, who is remarkable for his skill in taking likenesses, and who has been employed to model the couchant lions in front of Government House. So far all went well, but there remained two great difficulties, curiously trifling in themselves, but illustrative of the state of Indian society, and the exactions of philanthropy from individual energies. Modellers need for their work plaster of Paris, and instruments. There is more plaster of Paris in India than in the department of the Seine, but no one knew where to look for it, there was none in Calcutta, and even if discovered, the facilities of transport were more than doubtful. It was proposed to import it from England, from China, from Madras, but at last, we believe, it has been obtained in the Rajmehal Hills, sufficiently near the river for easy transport. Then came the instruments. Calcutta turns out some of the finest jewellery in the world. Its workmen complete those exquisite works in inlaid ivory, which Europeans, ignorant of the secret of their construction, believe to be marvels of patient labour. Nobody, however, could make a spatula. Trial after trial failed, and the founder of the school, after organising committees, raising funds, corresponding with half India, and rousing an apathetic community, found himself obliged to hunt the bazaars for some one who could tell a "true" from an imperfect instrument.

All difficulties gave way to pertinacious energy. Teachers were obtained, materials were discovered, and even the ivory knives were set right. Casts were promised from Somerset-House, and an engraver will ultimately be imported from England. It remained to obtain scholars, and to their delight, the committee found their exertions scarcely required. The passion for instruction, which is perhaps the most marked, as it is certainly the most hopeful feature in the Bengalee mind, overcame the dread of personal exertion. Natives of the highest class were found ready to toil with their hands, and to descend to labours hitherto considered menial. The hours were arranged so as to allow of their attending the classes after school, and when the institution opened, besides eight-and-twenty East Indians, it numbered dozens of natives. Among them were eleven Bramhuns. Time will show the degree of success to which natives can attain in these departments. It is certain, however, that they have produced works displaying considerable sense of beauty. If the doctrine of the Pre-Raphaelites that art is the perfect imitation of nature, be correct, the imitative faculty of Southern Asiatics should be greatly in their favour, while the popular idea that Bengalees are deficient in imagination rests upon no proof, and is opposed to many recorded facts. We may never see a Bengalee Canova. A Bengalee Callot or Fuseli is more than a possibility.

Nor has the purely industrial portion of the school been forgotten. Experiments in brickmaking, and improvements in all kinds of clay manufacture, are rapidly progressing. It is hoped that the school will create an entirely new description of pottery, and that this article, which is always in demand, will be furnished to the people in forms that must induce new ideas of refinement. Strange to say the potters will not enter the school. They are embarrassed by the necessity which fetters education in the manufacturing districts of England. Their work is purely mechanical, it is in incessant demand, it scarcely tasks the muscles, and the children can earn wages so easily that their parents will not give them up. The work must be done, and the information acquired, by men who would scarcely touch a potter, yet there seems every probability of ultimate success. The lads are diligent, the interest of the natives is strongly excited, there are funds in hand, and the Industrial School may be considered fairly in operation.

We have purposely abstained from drawing any deduction from these facts. Our object has been to narrate, and not to moralize, but not the less do we believe the success of this school an important step in advance. Perhaps the greatest evil in native society is the belief that labour is dishonourable. An English gentleman is always moving, and thinks himself as little disgraced by working at a lathe, as by experiments in the laboratory. A Bengalee gentleman sits. He does nothing else; and to awake him from this physical apathy, is in its way almost as important, and far more difficult than to arouse his intellectual powers.—Friend of India.

THE CASE OF LIEUT. PROCTER.

We republish in another column the final decision of the government of India in the case of Lieut. Procter. That decision has been accepted by the majority of our contemporaries, and we regret that we cannot concur in so nearly unanimous a verdict. The arguments employed appear to us erroneous as regards the general question, and severe as regards the individual case. To the statement of facts we have nothing to object. It scarcely differs from our own, and, where it differs, is doubtless the more accurate of the two. The arguments, however, which are deduced from that statement appear to involve two most important principles. Lieut. Procter shot two spies. The government does not question that they were spies, or assert that espionage is a lawful pursuit, but considers that the penalty was too heavy. They might have been confined, for "whatever danger might be involved in their presence as spies had been counteracted, for they were already in his power; the Governor-General in Council considers it to be utterly idle to say that safe custody could not be found for them only in death." The Governor-General in Council can scarcely have perceived the terrible breadth of an argument like this. It is applicable not only to Lieut. Procter, but to all military operations whatsoever. There is only one possible contingency under which an officer in the field, possessing power to shoot spies, might not have the power to place them in confinement. That contingency is a mutiny so general, that he must use his own hand and his own pistols. Mutiny in the field is not among the vices of the Indian army, and this order, therefore, abolishes a military law as old as organized warfare. Spies are to be confined, and not put to death. We do not question the possibility of conducting military operations under this additional restriction. We do not even question the right of the Supreme Government of India to compel its own officers to make war on a system unknown to the remainder of mankind. But we do question, and strongly, the justice of laying down a new principle, however sound, or however merciful, and punishing an officer who has never heard of it, for obeying the law it is intended to supersede. That the spy shall die,—that he is a criminal, and not a prisoner of war, is an universal military principle. It sprung from the innate chivalric feeling of mankind,—it was acted upon by the greatest of modern captains,—it appeared necessary to the most merciful of patriots,—and it is now a fixed law even of European warfare. It may be a harsh and stern law. Most warlike rules are harsh and stern; but the officer who obeyed it is as little to be blamed as the judge who, before Sir Samuel Romilly's reforms, hanged the starveling who had pilfered a loaf. Both performed a terrible duty, enjoined by the law which both were equally bound to obey.

In the individual case, however, it is said, the death of these two spies could have no beneficial effect, and therefore that just reverence with which all good men regard human life, should have restrained Lieut. Procter. We yield to no one in reverence for human life, but pity for individuals is not always the truest mercy. Doubtless, these men, being in chains, could give no information to Moung Gee, and the danger from their individual acts was reduced to nothing. But they were shot, first, because death is the accepted penalty of military espionage, and secondly, to deter other spies from assisting Moung Gee. Supposing them only confined, that brigand chief might justly say to his followers, "Try again. If you come back with news, we shall be victorious and you rewarded. If not, it is but a few days' confinement." The next couple, unwatched by Capt. Smith, might have brought back accurate intelligence, the dacoits would have closed in, and two hundred lives might have paid the penalty of an excellent but erroneous humanity. We did not hang Ashur Singh a week ago, because we feared danger from him, or because we hoped thereby to call the captain of the Clarissa back to life. He also might have been fettered, till further danger became a physical impossibility. Nevertheless he was hanged, first as vengeance for the crime committed, and secondly, to prevent other convicts murdering other Capt. Johnstones. Lieut. Procter with the same views carried out a law equally just, but which unavoidably left him in the invidious position of accuser and judge. He may have committed a crime. If he were not absolutely satisfied of the men's guilt, he did commit one, but it is one which must rest between himself and his God, and for which he was responsible to no earthly tribunal. He broke no civil law. He violated no military regulation. He did the best that was in him to do, and that that best was cruel, is only another proof how much war is opposed to our natural instincts, and to our Christian feeling.

Lastly, it may be argued that the government has exonerated him from the military penalty. It admits that Lieut. Procter had a right to do as he did, but considers that in exercising that right he shewed a want of humanity, discretion, and sound judgment incompatible with high employ. He is, therefore, removed from his staff appointment. We shall not question the justice of the measure, because we hold government justified in removing any officer in whom it has ceased to place implicit confidence. But we question its expediency. It is a punishment inflicted, because an officer took upon himself a heavy responsibility, rendered necessary by his position. The Governor-General in Council protests against the assumption that he intends to increase responsibility, and no one has a better right. Lord Dalhousie supported Major Edwardes' promise to the Sikhs, approved Sir F. Currie's few acts of independence, and upheld General Godwin against popular condemnation. It is this very fact which increases our surprise, that in this instance he should have added to the fear of responsibility, he is usually so anxious to diminish. It is not simply the punishment to which we refer, but the dishonour. Lieut. Procter goes back to his regiment, not only a dismissed but a disgraced man, pronounced guilty of a heavy offence by the one authority which India really respects. Officers dread the pen which not only condemns but brands them, and many a man who would risk his commission for his duty, will not risk a reprimand like this. He will remember that he is to be judged, not by military law, but by a system of ethics which he does not know, and which may possibly be changed. To refuse the responsibility may increase the danger of his life, but to accept it is to run the risk of official condemnation. It is in human nature for the officer to accept the danger which he can face, and perhaps beat back, and decline the risk over which he can have no control.—Friend of India.

SECRECY OF THE EAST-INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

A correspondent of the Central Star makes a statement which has roused the virtuous indignation of our contemporary, which is nothing less than that the punishment for any railway employee, who may be found to communicate information to the press regarding railway matters, is instant dismissal. If this be true, we cannot but concur with the Cawnpore paper in reprobating such a regulation; for where such exists, the natural conclusion must be that there is something to be concealed, something of which the managers wish to keep the press and the public ignorant, from an apprehension that the disclosure of it would bring down upon them the censure of the one and the disapprobation of the other.

We would hope that the statement of the Star's correspondent is, at least, somewhat exaggerated; though we must admit that there are grounds for supposing it to be correct, as we know, from experience, that it has, until lately, been exceedingly difficult to obtain any information regarding the progress of the railway works, and what has been obtained has been so contradictory, as to render it of little value. But, on the other hand, as we cannot divine any reasons for keeping the public in the dark with reference to the progress of this great work, in which every individual of the community is more or less interested, this makes us inclined to doubt the correctness of a report which, if unfounded, ought to be met by a positive contradiction from those upon whom it reflects.

The railway company wants money, and it will never get any in India, unless the plan followed with regard to the electric telegraph of from time to time reporting progress be adopted. Secrecy begets suspicion, openness engenders confidence, and that is what the people of India do not yet feel in the railway speculation, and until they do, not even the Government guarantee of 4½ per cent. for their money will tempt them to invest capital in railway shares. We are told that a great impulse is shortly to be given to railways in India, and we hope it will be given at once, for it is high time; and unless it be so, few of us will ever travel by rail to Delhi; and yet with the money to carry on the works, we see no obstacle to the line being completed from the City of Palaces to that of the Great Mogul by the expiration of the time agreed upon. By commencing in many places at once the entire line might be finished, with the exception perhaps of bridges over the Soane and Jumna, where steam ferries, similar to that we are to have upon the Hooghly, would, we consider, suffice for the present at least, even if it should not be found better to be content with them, and give up the idea of bridging these great rivers altogether.

The distance from Calcutta to Delhi by railway will be close upon, if not quite 1,200 miles, and four steam ferries, of which one would be at the commencement, and a second at the termination of the journey, would offer but trifling impediments to travelling; indeed the loss of time and the trouble caused in crossing them are hardly worthy of being taken into account in so long a journey.

The cost of bridging the Soane has been variously estimated, and, we believe, it is generally admitted that the smallest sum for which a bridge could be erected is one million of pounds sterling. We imagine that a stream ferry of the very best description could be provided for a few thousand pounds, probably for about the sum in excess of the estimate that the bridge would cost, in which case the whole amount of the estimate would be saved, and this sum would suffice, at the rate of 6,000*l.* per mile, the highest estimated cost of a railway above Allahabad, to construct a line 166 miles in length. The advantages that would arise from an extension of the trunk line or the construction of a branch line of the above extent would more than compensate for the absence of a bridge over the Soane.—Hurkaru.

The LONDON MAIL of July 25th arrived at Calcutta on August 28th (per steamer Bombay). The Bentick left Suez on September 22nd, en route to Madras and Calcutta, with the mail of September 9th.

EXAMINATION OF CIVILIANS IN THE LANGUAGES.—In consequence of a report by the Board of Examiners of the inability of Mr. G. E. Watson, an unpassed civil servant, to qualify himself for the public service by proficiency in two of the native languages within one year and three months, the period prescribed by Government regulations, the Hon. the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal has granted him a further period of a half-year; but he has been warned by his Honour, that failing to pass within this second period, his name will be removed from the Bengal civil list, and he will be required to return to England.

SHAHPUR—MARCH OF INTELLECT.—An opulent respectable Zemindar of the above district, on the 13th August, celebrated the marriage festival of his daughter with great pomp and ostentation. When the bridegroom came to tie the marriage knot and take her away, the young lady had disappeared, taking with her what gold and jewels she was furnished with on the occasion of her marriage. The new Jessica's aged parents sought her to no purpose—the bridegroom and his party waiting in the grand hall fitted up for the occasion. The next morning the matrimonial party returned disappointed and disgusted. After a few days this young lady, together with her paramour, was apprehended. Her age is between fifteen and sixteen, and she is remarkably handsome, as the Punjabee women generally are. The Darogah and police used every threatening and conciliatory means to induce her to go to her parents and enter the matrimonial alliance; but she has determined to have the man of her choice or no one. She says she cannot possibly marry a man whom she does not love—consequently the matter has been handed over to the deputy commissioner for his decision. As Young Bengal who so often advocates female education and remarriage of widows, it is surprising he does not try to persuade his countrymen not to be tied to unseen females—"for better and for worse." It is well worthy of their notice to recommend courtship prior to marriage as well.

MR. LAWRENCE, the Chief Commissioner of the Punjab, has returned to Murree. Mr. Lawrence quitted Lahore on Monday evening by dāk, accompanied by his military secretary, Major Macpherson. He will probably not return until the arrival of the Most Noble the Governor-General in the Punjab.—Lahore Chronicle, August 23.

SUBSCRIPTIONS IN AID OF SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' WIVES.—Our readers will be happy to learn that sums realised and paid into the Bank of Bengal, in aid of the fund for the families of the soldiers and sailors engaged in the present war, fall but little short of twenty-two thousand rupees. As might have been anticipated, the military have contributed largely; the collection at Barrackpore, upwards of Rs. 2,300, being by far the largest; next in order follows St. Paul's Cathedral and St. John's Church, and then some of the larger stations in the Mofussil.

THE MUSSOORIE SCANDAL.—The Delhi Gazette, in reference to the Mussoorie scandal, states, that Mr. C. C. Jackson, commissioner of the Meerut division, has drawn up a statement of the case, in which he entirely exonerates Mrs. Bignell from blame, as regards the charges of intoxication. This is a result upon which the lady may justly be congratulated, for Mr. Jackson is well known to be a most impartial and clear-headed man; one likely to form a correct judgment upon any case submitted for his decision. Mr. Jackson's opinion has been indorsed by Capt. Ryley, of the 5th cavalry, and Capt. Mill, of the artillery.

THE 3RD BENGAL FUSILIERS.—This regiment has for some time attracted our attention, and we have regarded with feelings of admiration the happy state of mind of its officers, the discipline of its commandant, and the organization of its interior economy. The 3rd Fusiliers are a body that will yet adorn the pages of history with their deeds, for scarcely had the regiment's virgin colours floated over the bayonets of its brave men, than the battle and the victory of Chandernagore was emblazoned upon them by the finger of fame. The storming of Gibraltar, the taking of Ehrenbreistein, would not stand for a moment in comparison to the deeds that were done on that glorious day, when Chandernagore fell, and the victorious standard of that corps was planted upon the ramparts of a hitherto supposed to be impregnable fortress. We have been given to understand that three officers are under arrest; we mention no names, nor will we say why the pinions of their liberty have been clipped. Joking apart—how is the organization of this regiment going on? There must be something wrong about it, when it is whispered in military circles that everything is not going on right in the battalion. We are acquainted with one or two officers in it, and we feel no hesitation whatsoever in saying that its junior captain, the "boots" of the centurions, is a zealous officer and a first-rate gentleman. We repeat we are not speaking now ironically, although the colonel deserves richly to be hauled over the coals of journalism, for permitting his men to infringe the laws of nations by besieging Chandernagore, a settlement belonging to the Emperor of France, and our ally against the Russians in the present war. Taking a survey of the names of the officers we were struck by the numbers of subalterns with P. H. to their names. Could this have been an idiosyncrasy of Lord Dalhousie, appointing orientalists to rule over British soldiers? Another mistake committed in the organization of this corps is that it is not well officered. If the military authorities (amongst whom we rank the Morning Chronicle) imagine that English or Irish, or Scotch soldiers can be kept in as good order as a battalion of sepoys, we tell them they are mistaken; and it is scandalous, yes, verily scandalous! to see how the 3rd Europeans are officered. Leaving the field officers out of the question, there are twelve captains in the regiment; of these twelve captains one is in commissariat, the second in civil employ, the third in the pay department, the fourth in the department of Public Works, the fifth "on medical certificate," the sixth present with his corps, the seventh is in the department of Public Works, the eighth commands the Behar-station guards, the ninth holds a staff employment in the 18th irregular cavalry, and the tenth is in civil employ!!!! So that only two captains, one of whom is Robert Patton, are undertaking the duties of the rest, bearing the brunt of regimental routine, while the other Lotharios are revelling in the ease and comforts of staff and civil appointments. Of the lieutenants, who count twenty strong, one has been accommodated with lodgings, free of expense, by her Majesty, in an institution called (genteelly) No. 1, Chowringhee, two more are gone home to England on sick certificate, three more are in "civil employ," whilst two more are holding staff appointments, one in a regiment of Irregular cavalry, and another in the Gwalior contingent!!!! If this is the way a regiment of English soldiers is to be officered, we must not feel surprised at such glorious exploits occurring as the surreptitious occupation of French settlements, and we are only astonished the 3rd Bengal fusiliers have not yet conceived the idea of marching down to Calcutta, and shying stones at the windows of Government-house.—Citizen, Aug. 25.

CAPTAIN W. EDWARDS, 18TH N. I., has obtained leave of absence to 20th January, 1855, to visit Lahore and the presidency preparatory to applying for permission to retire from the service. Captain Edwards, who is thus designated in G. O. C. C., obtained his army majority by the recent brevet, and will retire on the pension of a lieutenant-colonel.

CAPTAIN N. W. MAINWARING.—Captain N. W. Mainwaring, 73rd N.I., deputy superintendent second division Ganges canal, has sent in his resignation, and wishes to rejoin his regiment. He has grieved his application upon the plea of ill health; but we have no doubt that any one acquainted with the late and present goings of that division of the canal will be able to form his own opinion as regards this excellent officer's resignation.—Indian Standard, August 11.

COLONEL R. HOME has resigned his appointment on the brigade staff of the army, and has been succeeded by Colonel H. F. Caley, nearly as old a soldier as himself, the former having entered the service on the 1st January, 1804, and the latter on 14th of April, 1807.

SUB-ASSISTANT COMMISSARY GENERAL LIEUTENANT JOHN LEVEN, 62ND N.I., has been appointed to act in the audit branch of the Commissariat Department during the absence of Mr. Dowleams, whose services the Government of India have placed at the disposal of the Central Committee for the Paris Exhibition, of which he is the secretary. With a view, however, of not depriving the auditor of commissariat accounts entirely of the services of his head assistant, it has been arranged that Mr. Dowleams shall attend the audit office every alternate day.—Hurkaru.

SURVEY DEPARTMENT.—We have been given to understand that the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has increased the allowances of Mr. E. G. Birch, superintendent of survey in the third or eastern division at Moorshedabad, from Company's Rs. 8,400 to 12,000 per annum, subject to confirmation by the Governor-General. By this arrangement the salaries of the superintendents will be equalised, the controller of surveys only drawing the higher rate or Company's Rs. 23,000 per annum.—Hurkaru.

NATIVE LANGUAGES.—The Delhi Gazette gives the result of the last half-yearly examination in the native languages, and we regret to observe that the number of officers who have passed is very small. Only three officers, one of the artillery and two of the 21st N.I., have passed the interpreter's examination. In Hindostanee the number who have passed is twenty-seven, five second lieutenants of artillery, and one of engineers, a cornet and a lieutenant of cavalry, and nineteen officers of native infantry, of whom three belong to the 17th and two to the 8th N.I.

POPULARITY OF THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT IN THE PUNJAB.—The Lahore Chronicle records a fact which speaks highly for the popularity of the British Government in the Punjab; nearly all the regiments of the Punjab irregular force have volunteered to serve wherever they may be required to go, but more especially in Persia or Turkey.

NUMERPORE, Aug. 8.—An experiment is being made here in turning the waters of one of the numerous lakes in pergunnah Mahobha of this district to some account for the purpose of irrigation. If successful, probably some 12,000 beegahs will be brought into cultivation. The Government have also called for reports on all the lakes and sheets of water, old bunds, &c. in this district, and in Banda, and seem determined to make use of them. The Jeitpore bund has been repaired at a cost of 2,000 rupees. Very little was or is known about the many sheets of water scattered about the neighbourhood of Jeitpore and Mahobha in the district of Humeerpore, but the Lieutenant-Governor being of a curious disposition has made up his mind to ascertain something about them. These proceedings show a disposition, at any rate, to develop the resources of the country—and it is the misfortune of the Indian Government, that the good it does and is doing is rarely known to the public for some time after the completion of the work in progress.—Mofussilite, Aug. 14.

MR. WYLIE.—We regret to state Mr. Wylie, the first judge of the Small Cause Court, was absent from his seat yesterday, again stricken down by illness, which, no doubt, has been occasioned by the extent of business that has fallen to his share since he rejoined the court on the 7th instant. An immense number of cases, which came up for hearing during his recent illness, were reserved for his special decision; a great many others, which the officiating judge was not able to hear, were also postponed to a future day; and all those several accumulations, together with the regular cases of each day, occupied his attention from the first resumption of his seat until yesterday, up to five, six, and seven o'clock each day. He has never been able to leave the court before five o'clock, and when it is considered that he is even still scarce recovered from his late dangerous illness, it seems a matter of regret that measures have not been adopted to lighten the weight of his labours, and thus guard against risk to a life so highly valued by the community.—Hurkaru, Aug. 31.

THE BENGAL PILOT SERVICE.—We are informed that the branch pilot, J. W. Roberts, has retired from his duties on pension, and that Mr. Acting Branch Pilot W. Jackson will soon be confirmed in his acting rank.

MAHARAJAH GOLAB SING.—Letters received from the Panjab mention the serious illness of our friend and ally, the Maharajah Golab Sing, whose health is represented to be in such a condition as to cause grave anxiety to his family and those about him, and must also be a matter of some interest to the British authorities. There is scarcely any room to doubt that the death of this remarkable and able man will, whenever it may occur, involve us in an immediate interference in the affairs of his heirs, and of the countries he governs. It is hardly probable that the succession to his throne and dignities will be effected in a peaceable and orderly manner, with a very unpopular son—Runbeer Sing—and a very popular nephew—Jawahir Sing—waiting events, and, we may naturally suppose, quite prepared to do a little Orientalism towards each other whenever the opportune moment shall arrive. Whatever may be the estimate formed of Golab Sing's character and career, there can be no doubt that he is an abler and a wiser man than any that is likely to succeed him, and that, consequently, his death will be a calamity to his kingdom, unless, indeed, which is far from improbable, it should result in its falling into the hands of the British.—Morning Chronicle, August 23.

MANAGEMENT OF THE STATE OF NAGPORE.—The following, we are informed, are the arrangements made by the most noble the Governor-General of India for the management of the state of Nagpore, now declared by the honourable the Court of Directors to be a part of the British possessions:—One commissioner, on a salary of Co.'s Rs. 60,000 per annum (inclusive of personal allowance); one personal assistant to commissioner, on a salary of Co.'s Rs. 10,800 per annum; two deputy-commissioners, at Co.'s Rs. 1,500 each per mensem; two ditto ditto, at Rs. 1,200 per mensem each; one ditto at Co.'s Rs. 1,000 per mensem; eight assistant commissioners, salaries from 700 to 500 per mensem each; nine extra assistants, salaries from 500 to 150 per mensem each.—Hurkaru.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—We are informed that a separate establishment for the electric telegraph is to be kept in Government House and at Alipore to enable the Governor-General and the Lieut.-Governor to hold direct and confidential intercourse. The dialogues, if published, we think will be rather amusing. Let us suppose a very troublesome Omeedwar politely referred to Government House by the Lieut.-Governor. He drives off, but before he can reach it the message has preceded him. "That troublesome fellow C— has been bothering me all breakfast time to give so and so to his friend—I have referred him to your lordship!" Answer. "When he comes, I will tell him very sorry the place is disposed of."—Englishman, August 25.

MYMENSING.—We extract the following from a Mymensing letter:—"On the morning of the 14th August the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal arrived at this station, and was received by all the European and native gentlemen of the district. The steamer was anchored off the Cootee Ghat at 11 A.M., and a small boat was sent by the Lieut.-Governor to convey to the steamer the judge, the magistrate, and the joint magistrate, who were waiting on the bank, and after an interview of few a minutes they were brought back to the shore; next the collector and the deputy collectors were treated the same. At 3 P.M. the principal sudder ameen, the sudder ameen and moulvee paid visits with their certificates of good character. At 5 P.M. his honour, accompanied by the secretaries, inspected the jail, and at 6 P.M. returned to the steamer. On the 15th instant, at 10 A.M., he paid a visit to the magistrate's office, inquiring into different things as he was passing through; next he proceeded to the collectorate, and took his seat at the western side of the verandah for a short time and looked into the mode in which business was transacted. During this he put several shrewd questions to Messrs. Pogson and Wyatt, deputy collectors, and then left the collectorate for the judge's office, where he remained for a long time and received a mass of petitions. Several zemindars were also introduced to him. At 5 P.M. he inspected the English school, and was much pleased with the institution. On the 16th he remained till 4 o'clock in his steamer, and in the evening drove to the judge's residence, where he passed the night, and on the morning of the 17th instant left Mymensing for Dacca."

RAMPORE.—The Lieutenant-Governor of Agra has approved and confirmed the heir apparentship of Nuwab Mahomed Saeed Khan, on his eldest son Yousoof Ullly Khan, which event the Nuwab announced by a salute of eleven guns, and grand entertainments and presents to his dependents. All the native princes, since the publication of the Most Noble the Governor-General's recent minute regarding the absorption of native states, are greatly alarmed, and think that his lordship will annex every principality in India. Hence rejoicings at Rampore.

DR. O'SHAUGHNESSY was on his way to the presidency. His health has been restored, and he intends to superintend the construction of the telegraph from Calcutta to Prome.

THE ANUNDONATH LIBRARY.—A correspondent of the Englishman mentions that the Lieutenant-Governor laid the first stone of the Anundonath Library at Beaulah on the 5th instant. This library, to be erected in accordance with a scheme originally suggested by Mr. H. V. Bayley, has been endowed by the munificence of Kour Aundonath Rai, who, besides a gift of Rs. 12,000, has devoted Rs. 350 annually for the maintenance of the institution.

NEW PLAN TO CHECK ASSASSINATION.—A correspondent of the Englishman mentions a new plan adopted by the commissioner of Peshawar to check the constant assassinations. A sentry belonging to the 10th cavalry was murdered. The headmen of the neighbouring villages were therefore ordered to produce the murderer within three days, or pay a fine of Rs. 1,000. This is the ancient Saxon system, under which the hundred was liable for all the crimes committed by its inmates.

AGRA AND UNITED SERVICE BANK.—This well-managed and prosperous concern has, it will be seen, declared a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, out of its profits of Rs. 4,41,252, for the last half-year. The balance, equal to Rs. 3-13-10 per cent. per annum, has been applied in part to make up the reserve fund to ten lacs.—Agra Messenger, August 26.

PERMISSION TO FAMILIES OF OFFICERS TO RESIDE AT HENZADA.—The Gazette of Sept. 2 contains an order permitting the families of public servants to join them at the station of Henzada in Pegu. If we continue to receive such accounts of the tranquillity of Pegu as have reached us during several months past, we presume that it will not be long before a like boon is granted to the Government servants at other stations. If the visit of the embassy from Burmah should lead to the conclusion of a satisfactory treaty, possibly the restriction against the families of those employed in the new province joining them may be altogether withdrawn.

UNPOSTED ENSIGNS.—It has been brought to our notice that while the number of ensigns "doing duty" is becoming very large, the many vacancies in regiments of native infantry, caused by the removals to the 3rd European regiment and otherwise, are remaining open for an unreasonable length of time. The delay in filling up these gaps is, we believe, felt as something of an evil and a hardship by the corps in which they exist; not merely because additional duty is thereby thrown upon the few subalterns present, but also and chiefly because of the detriment occasioned to regimental institutions, which depend so much on the support of a certain number of members, as for example the mess and the band. It is to be hoped that we shall soon see an extensive posting in general orders.—Agra Messenger, August 19.

WRECK OF THE "ROB ROY."—Government yesterday despatched the Zenobia steamer to the Andamans to relieve the crew of the Rob Roy, and if possible to get the brig off. It is expected the Zenobia will be there by Friday. The Rob Roy is stated to be high and dry, and if the weather prove favourable, it is hoped both vessel and cargo may be saved. The cargo consists of 805 chests of opium, and is insured for about nine lacs. Nearly all the insurance offices in town have suffered more or less, those who have been doing business at reduced premiums having the largest risks, and consequently being the hardest hit. Forty-eight of the crew are on shore, well armed, and it is supposed able to defend themselves, and protect the vessel against any attack on the part of the savages. Those gentlemen are not opium-eaters, they prefer lascars, and would probably take nothing more than such iron and copper as they could conveniently detach. We have received the following details from a friend:—"Clipper Rob Roy, it appears, left this port about the 27th ultimo, and went to sea on the 29th, soon after which she must have experienced the very heavy weather that occurred at the Sand Heads, and which extended some distance down the Bay of Bengal on the 31st ultimo and 1st current. We understand that she was three days without an observation; and the fury of the storm must have swept her towards, and finally on, to one of the Andaman Islands, where she struck on the 2nd instant. The captain, his wife, and a portion of the crew left in a boat for Rangoon, and were exposed four days and nights, before being picked up by a ship. As soon as the natives discovered the wreck, they came down in a body, and shot arrows at the crew, who, in self-defence, were obliged to fire upon them. This is neither the first nor second time we have heard of our shipwrecked sailors being treated in this manner by these savages, and as we have no power over the wind and waves, and know not how soon another disaster like the present may again occur, we think it behoves our Government to give some consideration to the protection of our mercantile interests. Vast teak-forests are said to abound in these islands: it might pay Government to colonize them."—Englishman, Aug. 23.

AN AMERICAN CLIPPER, the Typhoon, of 1,600 tons, has made the passage from the Isle of Wight to the Sandheads in eighty-five days. This is one of the most rapid voyages on record.

THE LADY LAWRENCE FUND is, we are happy to observe, progressing favourably. The sum already subscribed amounts to Rs. 8,023, of which Rs. 3,320 has been paid. Dr. C. Hathaway, the secretary to the committee, will receive contributions.

THE INDIA GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY has earned during the past half-year Rs. 94,238, or a profit of Rs. 71,521. Of this sum, Rs. 30,000 have been devoted to increase the reserve fund, and a dividend declared at the rate of Rs. 8 per cent. per annum. Shares are at present Rs. 200 above par.

THE "LADY NUGENT."—The pilot of the Pekin was taken out to sea when she last left. He has returned, and reports that the Pekin passed near the island of Preparis, to the north of which are situated the rocks called Cow and Calf; and on one of them was clearly observed the lower mast of a ship lying in a slanting position, and over it was spread out a sail, as if it was intended for a screen or tent. It was proposed to put out a boat, but the commander was unwilling to run the risk, particularly as he had seen it publicly announced that the Lady Nugent was all right. The steamer passed near enough to distinguish men, and even smaller objects, had there been any on the rocks, but none were seen.—Hurkaru, Sept. 2.

COLONEL TUCKER.—The recent advancement of the adjutant-general of the Bengal army to the rank of colonel, consequent upon his being nominated an aide-de-camp to the Queen, is said to have given dissatisfaction in military circles in the north-west. Considering how highly Colonel Tucker distinguished himself in the Punjab campaign, and how well he has discharged the responsible duties of his office, we were not in the least surprised to see him selected as one of the recipients of royal favour; and we think that the officers of the Bengal army ought to be gratified that the officer holding the highest military appointment in the army has received a rank, which, in our opinion, should always be bestowed upon the individual occupying the situation. It is true that Colonel Tucker has superseded thirty-five lieutenant-colonels, of whom twenty-eight hold that rank regimentally; but this is a trifling amount of supersession compared with what has occurred in numerous previous instances, and in this case is not likely to be fraught with the consequences which will result from others, because we do not believe that Colonel Tucker intends to take any command. He certainly would not accept a brigade, and should he, as it is reported he will, proceed to England shortly, we doubt if he would return to India for one; we even question if he will ever come out to take a division. If a new system of brevet promotion is to be introduced into the India armies, and advancement to high rank out of the regular course by seniority is to be made the reward of distinguished services and high qualifications, we shall be quite satisfied so long as the selections are as well made as in the present case; and the Bengal army need not complain if the next elevation involves no more supersession than the present, and the officer selected for promotion has as good claims to consideration as Colonel Tucker possesses, and has, like him, served upwards of thirty years.—Hurkaru.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.—Lord Dalhousie has done more for the Uncovenanted Service, and for the natives employed in that service, than any of his predecessors. One of them bestowed the office of commissioner of the Sunderbuns on Roy Omacant Sein, and another made Baboo Russomoy Dutt judge of the Small Cause Court; but for him it was reserved to open a number of coveted appointments to the worst-paid and hardest worked body of the servants of the state. During his administration, and with his express sanction, the offices of assistant accountant general and assistant civil auditor, in the Bombay presidency, have been conferred on native gentlemen. In our own presidency, he has bestowed the office of clerk assistant to the legislative council on Baboo Prosono Coomarr Tagore; that of junior magistrate on Baboo Huru Chunder Ghose; that of assistant collector of customs on Baboo Nongender Nauth Tagore; and now, according to a contemporary, we have a fresh instance of his liberality in the appointment of a native to the office of third assistant to the accountant general, on a salary of Rs. 800. We have no idea for whom this last honour is intended, but have no doubt that a fitting individual will be selected, because the natives are good accountants, and are much more likely to distinguish themselves in that line than as judges or magistrates. It would be unreasonable indeed to expect a man who has been bred up in a different walk of life to give entire satisfaction in an office of account the moment he has been installed into it; but there are many native gentlemen who have been professionally bred up as accountants; and who have already rendered good service in the financial department, and it is among these, we presume, that the choice will lie.—Hurkaru.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE HOOGLHY.—The Englishman says, that a good substantial bridge upon iron boats could be erected across the Hooghly in a few months, and for five lacs of rupees. The estimate is about three times that sum; but the bridge is becoming a necessity. The passage of the river from any of the lower ghauts to the railway station occupies more time than a trip of twenty miles on the rail.

ACCOUNTANT'S OFFICE.—Under instructions from the Court of Directors, Government has called for a return of the establishment of the several branches of the accountant's office. It is said that the system of military accounts is to undergo a change, and the number of assistants is to be increased, as the Court requires that the accounts be more promptly closed than they hitherto have been.

THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR, N. W. P.—It is decided, we are told, that his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor will spend the next hot season at Nynee Tal. It is not so certain, however, that he will in the meanwhile visit Agra, as his cold-weather tour in the Saugor territories may lead him away from this region.—Agra Messenger, August 12.

A NEW JOINT-STOCK COMPANY.—The Hurkaru mentions that a new joint-stock company has been started. It proposes to establish a new bullock-train between Calcutta and Lahore. The capital is to be one lakh of rupees, divided into 200 shares, of Rs. 500 each. The profits are expected to be enormous, but the company depend upon Government giving up its own train. A bullock train, well managed, must pay, but we question if the competition of the government train is very dangerous. Unless the servants of that establishment can be brought under better regulation, it will soon be condemned as a public nuisance. The grand trunk road is nearly impassable. The carts are so large that, unless the drivers will go on one side, nothing else can pass, and the drivers positively refuse. They are Koompani-ka-noukur, and will make way for nobody but sepoys.

RESIDENT AT LUCKNOW.—Sir Henry Lawrence and one of the Ramsays are spoken of to succeed Colonel Sleeman as resident at Lucknow; Sir Henry would hardly, we think, accept the acting appointment; Major George Ramsay is the only one of the name who could expect so high a post, and being resident at Nepal, and acting resident at Nagpore, there would be nothing to carp at if he were sent to Lucknow.

DEPARTURE OF MESSRS. PRINSEP AND DEVEREUX TO SINGAPORE.—We yesterday omitted to mention the departure, on Thursday evening, of Mr. Prinsep and Mr. Devereux to Singapore, in order to open that preposterous commission regarding Rajah Brooke, which will not be a warrant to the inhabitants of the Straits of the vaunted wisdom of Parliament. This will be a very pleasant trip for the commissioners. It will give them a breath of fresh sea air, and serve as an excellent "constitutional." But we imagine there is no sane man in this quarter of the globe that does not laugh at the humbug (yes, the proper and righteous phrase is humbug) of this proceeding.—Hurkaru, Aug. 19.

EXTRAORDINARY CHESS-PLAYING.—A correspondent of the Englishman notices a native chess-player, named Koonja Beharee Chatterjee, who can play four games at once, without seeing the boards. This is, we believe, a feat which has been accomplished by only one European professor, Philidor, and was considered dangerous even by him, from the excessive tension of the mental powers.

GOVERNMENT is going to construct an efficient steam-ferry between Calcutta and the railway terminus at Howrah; the machinery for the boats has been ordered in England, and nearly two years back the Military Board, now happily defunct, was directed to commence the ghâts. Under the new system, we may hope they will be begun at once, and completed quickly.

A PESHAWUR letter, dated the 23rd instant, affords the annexed extract:—"The following force moved out last evening towards Michnee to coerce two Yagi villages in that direction, who have refused to pay tribute to Cesar—two Horse Artillery guns, three companies of the 4th N.I., one squadron irregular cavalry. The whole under command of Major Chamberlain. You shall know the result of the operations. We have had an unusually dull and hot season at Peshawur, dearth of news, or excitement of any sort—prickly heat excepted—having been its chief characteristics. I hear the mountain train is to be stationed at Rawul Pindee, a false military position surely for a battery of that description, whose services should always be available on the frontier at a few hours' notice."—Delhi Gazette, August 30.

ASSAM.—Gold has been discovered in Assam, so says a correspondent, and to make assurance doubly sure the commissioner, Colonel Jenkins, is going to depute one of his assistants, Captain E. T. Dalton, he believes, to report on the same. The sum of Co.'s Rs. 1,000 has also been directed to be disbursed in anticipation of the sanction of the Governor-General for the expenses incidental on the same.—Bengal Hurkaru, Aug. 22.

CAPTAIN DOUGLAS, of the artillery, is said not only to have discovered the secret of the construction of the Congreve rocket, but to have improved upon it; it is added, that he has been ordered to Meerut to exhibit his discovery before the permanent committee of artillery officers.

AN INCIDENT AT THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S TABLE.—The other evening there was a capital scene at one of these entertainments, which created much amusement among those assembled. When the time came for rising from table, and after all that stupid staring that is exchanged between those who are to give the signal had been gone through, up rose the entire company, led off by the Governor-General, when suddenly the entire throng was electrified by loud shouts of "Come back, come back," from behind. You may guess the sensation and surprise that was created by a voice, of stern command, applied to the Governor-General and his hundred guests. The multitude turned round to see the cause of the uproar, which was explained by the sight of the Bishop of Calcutta standing alone in his place at table, and calling loudly on the godless multitude to return and join him in saying "grace" after the feast, which was done amidst the irrepressible smiles on the part of the entire company. This incident broke the habitual dullness of the evening, the society being indebted for the only moment of amusement or hilarity to the pious old prelate, who reminded them in the above pointed manner of their duty to the Giver of all things.—Delhi Gazette.

COALS FROM AVA.—We would recommend to the notice of the agent of the Peninsular and Oriental Company the following extract from the letter of the Englishman's Rangoon correspondent:—"It is satisfactory to state that the Bentick steamer steamed down from Prome her last trip on coal sent from Ava. What an immense saving to Government will be caused should coal be found in abundance up the country. It is at present brought to Rangoon by vessels direct from Aberdeen and London." It would be well worth while to send for a large sample of these coals, so that their quality may be tested, for if they are as good as English coals for the purposes of sea-going steamers, we presume that they might be laid in at all the coal depots of the P. and O. Company in the Bay of Bengal, and some other parts of the Indian waters at a cost so much under that now paid for fuel, as to make a material difference in the profits of the Company for the coming year, and do away with any excuse for a further increase of the charges for passage and freight. Should the coal fields of Burmah be of large extent, and their produce of good quality, they may yield a revenue to the Lord of the White Elephant, which will in a measure atone to him for the loss of the fair province of Pegu, and he may in the end find that the presence of the British on his present frontier will be an advantage to him by causing a demand for many of the products of Burmah for which there has hitherto been no market. To India the advantages derivable from the discovery of superior coal in such a locality would be very great, as with such a fine river as the Irrawaddy upon which to convey it to Rangoon the cost of transport would be light. Should Burmah become the field from whence we derive our supplies of coal for all the sea-going steamers which are continually crossing the Bay of Bengal, Rangoon will also in a few years become one of the most important seaports of the eastern world.

THE LATEAL SYSTEM.—We hear that Mr. Fergusson, the magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs, lately convened a meeting of the Zemindars of his district, and urged upon them the advisability of giving up the latal system, and submitting their disputes to the decision of arbitrators. He pointed out to them, that by such a course not only would the public peace be preserved, but they would be saved the expense both of keeping up fighting men, and carrying on law-suits, which can advantage no party concerned in them. He is said plainly to have told them that unless they would attend to his advice, he would be reluctantly compelled to appeal to government to pass such Acts as would enable him to take measures for the suppression of the disgraceful practices now prevalent in Bengal, and that they, the Zemindars, would eventually suffer in purse, possibly even to the extent of ruin, while in some cases loss of liberty would probably result from a perseverance in their present courses. We think it would be well if others of the Bengal magistrates were to follow this good example, and warn the Zemindars, and also the Indigo planters, who keep up fighting men, of the expediency of coming to some arrangement for giving up this bad habit, and settling their differences, if possible, out of court, if not by an appeal to law. Fights attended with loss of life are now so frequent in Bengal, that it cannot be supposed that the legislative council will fail to pass some stringent enactment on the subject. This crying evil has increased to such a magnitude that it requires to be put down with a strong hand; and this we feel certain it will be unless those most interested are timely wise, and use the remedy, which it is still in their power to apply, and which Mr. Fergusson has so plainly and so consider-ately pointed out to them. In the north-western provinces we hear little or nothing of these fights, which are of daily occurrence throughout Bengal, especially in the immediate vicinity of Calcutta; and we trust that the legislative council will lose no time in striking at the root of the evil, by passing an Act, which will bring all concerned, but more particularly the instigators of them, within the reach of the law, and subject such to most severe penalties.—Hurkaru.

MILITARY ON DITS.—We understand that Captain C. C. Robertson, of the 11th regt. N. I., is to be appointed assistant to the commissioner and Governor-General's agent at Nagpore. This will cause some slight promotions in the army commissariat, as Captain Robertson's acceptance of the above situation will oblige him to resign his office of assistant commissary-general, which he has hitherto held with so much credit.—The 10th Hussars will, it is now stated, remain at Kirkee for some time longer, ere the regiment proceeds home.—There is likely to be great promotion in the 18th regt. N.I. Major Brown, and Brevet Majors Edwards and Davidson, the three senior officers being all in treaty regarding selling out, and all likely to retire by January next.—We are given to understand that Captain R. Fagan, the superintendent of civil buildings at Lahore, has been, or will be, appointed to the charge of the buildings at the new Sanatorium of Dalhousie on the Chumba Range. His duties will commence about the 1st of October.—Colonel G. Campbell will, it is said, succeed Colonel A. Wilson, as commandant of artillery at Dum-Dum.—It is believed that the chief engineer has recommended the separation of the appointments of garrison engineer and barrack-master in Fort William, and the bestowal of the latter situation, with a suitable salary, on some old and deserving subordinate of the department of Public Works.—Lieutenant-Generals Sewell and McNeill will, it is said, have to vacate their divisional commands at Madras, in consequence of their promotion; no exception will, as once supposed, be made in their favour.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

THE BREVET.

Head-Quarters, Simla, Aug. 22, 1854.—1. The extensive brevet which has recently taken place has had the effect of removing, by promotion, from the staff of the presidencies of Bengal and Madras various superior officers of her Majesty's army, many of whom have served with much distinction, proudly recorded, in the active operations of the armies of India; and all of whom have rendered essential service in the exercise of divisional and brigade command through the period that has since elapsed.

2. Sir William Gomm is desirous of recording his sense of the cordial assistance which he has received generally at the hands of those distinguished officers throughout the term of his holding the Indian command; to which assistance, in co-operation with that tendered in a corresponding spirit by superior officers of the Hon. Company's forces, he mainly attributes the sound state of discipline and perfect readiness for any service, in which the entire army of India is seen to stand at this day.

3. To Lieutenant-General W. H. Sewell, C.B.,
Lieutenant-General R. Macneil,
Major-General Viscount Melville, K.C.B.,
Major-General J. Scott, C.B.,
Major-General W. H. Breton, and Major-General the Hon. T. Ashburnham, C.B., the Commander-in-Chief desires to express his personal regard and an earnest wish that prosperity and distinction may attend each one in his future career of service.

FAMILIES OF PUBLIC SERVANTS IN BURMAH.

Fort William, Sept. 1, 1854.—With reference to G.G.O. of 6th July, 1853, the Most Noble the Governor-General in Council is pleased to notify that the families of public servants are now permitted to join them at the station of Henzada, in Pegu.

COURTS MARTIAL.

LIEUT. JAMES OWEN PENSON.

Head-Quarters, Simla, Aug. 1, 1854.—At a general court-martial assembled at Chinsurah, July 13, 1854, Lieut. J. O. Penson, 3rd Eur. reg., was tried on the following charge:—

For conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances:—

1st. In having, at Chinsurah, on June 5, 1854, proceeded in a state of intoxication to the residence of Lieut. E. D. R. Ross, of the same regiment, and boisterously endeavoured to obtain admission to the house, although informed that Lieut. Ross was from home, and that Mrs. Ross was ill and confined to her room.

2nd. In having, at Chinsurah, on the same day, proceeded in a state of intoxication to the quarters of Capt. R. Patton, of the same regiment, and there conducted himself in an offensive and insulting manner to Capt. Patton and to Ens. McPherson, also of the same regiment, and made a threatening gesture with a stick towards Ens. McPherson.

3rd. In having, at Chinsurah, on the same day, proceeded in a state of intoxication to the quarters of his commanding officer, Lieut. Col. J. C. C. Gray, and there behaved with great disrespect to Lieut. Col. Gray.

Finding.—Guilty of the charge, with the exception of the word "boisterously" in the 1st instance, of which they acquit him.

Sentence.—To be dismissed.

Approved and confirmed,

(Signed) W. M. GOMM, General, C.-in-C. E.I.

Head-Quarters, Simla, July 29, 1854.

The name of Lieut. Penson will cease to be borne upon the returns of the 3rd European regiment from the date of publication of this order at Chinsurah, of which a report is to be made to the adjutant-general of the army, and to the assistant adjutant-general at the presidency.

LIEUT. A. PROCTER, 39TH N.I.

Fort William, Aug. 21, 1854.—The proceedings of the general court-martial held at Promé on the 14th of June last, for the trial of Lieut. A. Procter, 39th N.I., and doing duty with the Arracan local battalion, have been submitted to the Supreme Government by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

Lieut. Procter, on Dec. 15 last, caused two Burmese, who had been caught in his camp, to be shot to death by a party of the Arracan battalion. He was accordingly tried on a charge of murder, was found guilty of manslaughter, and was sentenced by the court-martial to three months' imprisonment in the gaol of Calcutta, but was strongly recommended to mercy.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief refused to confirm the sentence, and ordered Lieut. Procter to remain in open arrest, pending the orders of Government.

In a case of so much importance, the most Noble the Governor-General in Council has deemed it necessary to record the following observations, and to promulgate them for the information and guidance of the officers of the armies of India.

The effect of the finding of the court-martial, and of the refusal of the Commander-in-Chief to confirm the sentence, is to exempt Lieut. Procter from the punishment contained in the sentence, and from all other punishment by law.

The most Noble the Governor-General in Council has carefully studied the proceedings and the evidence before the Court; and although the finding of that tribunal has practically exempted Lieut. Procter from punishment, his Lordship in Council finds it impossible to regard that officer as free from blame or guilt.

Lieut. Procter was in command of a detachment of 125 men of the Arracan battalion, in the district of Tharawaddy. The greater part of that district was in a lawless state, overrun by bands of armed men under the orders of Moung Goung Gee, by some of whom Lieut. Procter expected to be attacked. The Burmese headman of the village had informed him that two spies were to be despatched from the camp of Moung Goung Gee to that of Lieut. Procter.

On Dec. 15 (on which day Lieut. Procter had been reinforced by a company of the 10th N.I.), two Burmese were seized in Lieut. Procter's camp. They were declared to be the spies expected. Whereupon Lieut. Procter, within an hour after they were taken, tied them up, and had them then and there shot to death, himself giving the word of command.

The Governor-General in Council cannot but regard this act as justly calling for the severest condemnation of the Supreme Government.

Lieut. Procter's plea, that the destruction of these men as spies was justified by the custom of war, is, in the opinion of Government, utterly untenable.

Admitting to the fullest degree Lieut. Procter's allegation, that his detachment was in the midst of hostilities—that armed marauders or insurgents were in his vicinity, and were expected shortly to attack him,—and that the men whom he seized were actually spies from the insurgents' camp;—his act will, in the eyes of Government, still stand wholly without justification.

The destruction of these two wretches averted no danger from his force,—it could exercise no material influence on his opponent. Whatever danger might be involved in their presence as spies, had been counteracted, for they were already in his power; the Governor-General in Council considers it to be utterly idle to say that safe custody could be found for them only in death.

The words employed by Lieut. Procter in his defence before the court-martial, "You may make it the moral of my court-martial—never assume responsibility, even for the purpose of saving bloodshed," are calculated to be effective as declamation before a Court, but that they did not convince the court-martial of his innocence, is plainly apparent from the Court's verdict; which, although it declared Lieut. Procter not to have committed murder, and convicted him of the crime of manslaughter, which he did not commit, yet pronounced his conduct culpable to the extent of feloniously taking life. Such declamation, however, when tested by facts, is void of all solid substance.

The act of Lieut. Procter, in destroying these men, was not necessary to the safe custody of two bound prisoners among 200 soldiers. It did nothing for the safety of his detachment. It could not possibly have averted attack at the moment; and the supposition cannot for an instant be admitted, that it would influence the chief Moung Goung Gee to abstain from his opposition thereafter.

There was, therefore, no call for Lieut. Procter assuming the responsibility of the immediate death of these men.

The Government of India must ever value highly the exhibition of energy, determination, and absence of undue fear of responsibility in the officers of the army. But all these qualities may be possessed and displayed in the highest degree, without the commission of any such act as that for which Lieut. Procter has been arraigned before a court-martial.

The Most Noble the Governor-General in Council protests against the condemnation of it being represented as a discouragement on the part of the Government, of the exercise by the officers of the Indian army of a spirit of resolution, and of readiness to meet the responsibilities of every position in which the course of their service may place them.

Lieut. Procter was selected for detached employment with the Arracan battalion. His conduct on this occasion requires that that distinction should be taken from him.

The Most Noble the Governor-General in Council accordingly requests that his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will be so good as to remove Lieut. Procter from the Arracan battalion, and remand him to his proper regiment, the 39th N.I., releasing him at the same time from arrest.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Sept. 4, 1854).—The market for British Cotton Piece Goods remains quiet and dull, dealers keeping back with the expectation of obtaining their wants on more favourable terms. Large arrivals are expected next month, which will probably bring down prices considerably. In Metals very little has been done this week, and prices are almost the same. Though the demand for Copper does not seem to be so brisk as some time ago, yet holders are firm.

MADRAS.

PERSECUTION IN TRAVANCORE.—A NARRATIVE.

The government of Travancore has achieved one more claim to extinction. Not content with retaining a hundred thousand human beings in slavery more horrible than that of Cuba, with neglecting the remonstrances of the Court of Directors, and with arresting a monk, protected by a British passport, it has commenced a steady persecution of all Protestant converts. The narrative will display in a strong light the utility of the native principalities, for whose permanence the men of Manchester display so laudable an anxiety. From time immemorial, a sect of Christians, styling themselves Syrians, have been settled in Travancore. The sovereigns of that country, though more Hindoo than the Shastras, have still perceived the wisdom of conciliating an important section of the population. The Syrian Christians, therefore, have been invested with some special privileges, and exempted from many special annoyances. Whatever their caste originally may have been, their conversion raises them into a separate rank. They are legally exempted from imputed pollution, and the exemption confers privileges like those obtained by an Irish Catholic convert in the time of Charles the Second. They are permitted to walk on the public roads, to pass by a consecrated pagoda, to post their letters in the post-office, to purchase food in the open market, to build houses within sight of temples, to enter a court of justice, and to accept any public office they may obtain.

They are, in fact, a constituent part of the population, have held occasionally high office, and swarm about the lower tribunals of the country. Their converts are entitled to the same privileges as themselves, and though an instinctive prejudice may still affect them in their birth-place, a removal settles all questions of religious rank. The privileges enjoyed by the Syrians have not been refused to the Roman Catholics. A native of that profession was, seventy years since, Premier of Travancore, and the two creeds have invariably been treated as on an equal footing. All these privileges, Protestant converts also have hitherto invariably enjoyed. They are of the religion of the paramount power. They are peaceful and industrious subjects. Even the Syrians themselves support their claims, and admit them to an absolute equality. These privileges, however, have been destroyed in a day. A Christian convert of one of the slave castes happened, while passing near a pagado, to meet his former master. This man with all the pride of a noble, added to all the pride inherent in one of the sacerdotal order, represented the crime to the Dewan. The Dewan immediately issued this order to the police. "Though an Illaver become a Christian, he must not cease to be an Illaver, therefore, you must not allow cherian and other converts to the Christian religion to pass by the gate of the temple, but must compel them to go through the fields." The effect of this order is to throw all Christian converts not from the highest castes, back into the position of human chattels. The position of a serf before the abolition of villeinage, of a "mere Irishman" in Cromwell's time, of a Jew in the Roman Ghetto, or of a Rayah in the Pashalik of Damascus, is one of dignified peace, compared with that of a low caste man in Travancore. He is under the operation of a Five Mile Act, which runs everywhere, and can never be repealed. If he desires to move, he must wade through the slush of the paddy fields, for his appearance on the road is pollution. If he has correspondents, he must smuggle the letters into the post office as he best may, but he must not go there, under penalty of all the insults a rabble police can venture to inflict.

He may have the wealth of a Mntty Lall Seal, but he can purchase nothing in the public market. He may have the administrative ability of Mahommed Reza Khan, but he cannot hold even the humblest office. If he is defrauded, he cannot obtain redress in a public court; and if his testimony is required, it is taken through grated bars as if he were a dangerous wild beast. Human beings can exist under almost any circumstances, and it has become the habit of the lower classes in Travancore to submit to this organised oppression. But even this poor palliation is wanting to the unhappy Protestants. They have been thrown down from a position exempt from these insults, and, in addition to the physical discomforts endured, they feel as Ottomans would feel, if ordered not simply to admit their rayahs to equality, but to change places with them.

The missionaries, of course, remonstrated against this innovation. Equally as a matter of course they obtained no reparation from the resident. We are always unwilling to accuse, but there is a limit to forbearance, which General Cullen has long since passed. We question whether during the long connection of this officer with Travancore, he has performed one act which a British public can regard with pleasure. From the maintenance of slavery to the persecution of the Christians, we have always found him ready to throw a mantle over the misdeeds of one of the worst of native tyrannies.

The missionaries appealed to the Government of Madras, then administered by Sir H. Pottinger, and on the 14th February, 1854, the reply was forwarded to Travancore. The Government refused redress. It not only declined to compel the Dewan to revoke his anti-Protestant order, but declared that any "sudden or violent departure from past usage would be disapproved." As we can scarcely expect such a statement to be believed, we will quote the exact words of the minute of consultation. After recapitulating the facts, dilating on certain discrepancies, telling missionaries and Dewan that they are "equally unworthy of belief," and reprimanding the C. M. Society for making distinctions among their converts, the Government proceeds:—

"Considering, however, the very large body of Christians, certainly, if not of Mahomedans, in Travancore, the Right Honourable the Governor in Council deems it advisable to instruct the resident to point out to the Travancore Sirkar, that whilst any sudden or violent departure from past usage would be disapproved, the British Government would expect that the utmost toleration practicable should be exercised towards Christians and Mahomedans, and their liberty or status as any other Christians be as little interfered with as possible, and that all restrictive usages and regulations should be gradually relaxed as has been done by the British government in the neighbouring district of Malabar."

From the day when the Madras Government refused to declare war on Tippoo, its dealings with native states have been distinguished for their over-cautionness. The present case might have furnished only a new illustration of that fact, but the Government was not content. It actually turned round on the missionaries themselves, and severely reprimanded them for their audacity, in endeavouring to prevent native oppression by a legal appeal to the legal British authority. Again we scarcely hope to be believed, and again we quote the ipsisima verba of Sir H. Montgomery:—

"The Governor in Council thinks that the assumption of the missionaries to act as the patrons of their converts and to advocate their cause when there is any contest between them and the local authorities is objectionable, and he accordingly directs that this practice be explicitly prohibited, and that the Resident be desired to communicate this resolution both to the Dewan and the missionaries, and to act upon it himself in all instances where applications may be made to him personally in behalf of Christian converts."

The British Government is not only not to protect the unfortunate Christians, but to punish its own subjects who venture to represent that the case is a hard one. On this principle Cromwell not only should not have interfered for the Waldenses, but should have reprimanded the ministers who made a collection for their benefit. It is quite possible that the Secretary to the Church Mission displayed some little asperity in his remarks, but Englishmen were wont to have some sympathy with a generous anger against oppression, and some belief in the sincerity of men who plead warmly and strongly for the poor.

Our tale is told. It needs little comment, and no illustration. The Dewan has of course paid no attention to the mild representation of the Government. Protestant Christians are still turned off the road; Catholic Christians still walk on it as they please; and the only result of the entire proceedings is to deepen the conviction in the public mind that Travancore must be placed under the Government of India.—Friend of India.

THE MADRAS AND CALCUTTA TRADE.

Why is it that the trade of Calcutta is so much greater than our own? That capital flows in abundance to the one presidency, and can find little or no employment in the other? That the Bengal ryot lives in "sluttish plenty" whilst the Madras peasant aimless and hopeless pines in starvation? These questions have engaged the attention of some of the keenest intellects, and warmest hearts that ever lived in India, and if one could ransack the shelves of the various public offices in Madras, we should find that on every question of public concernment, floods of light have been thrown—that every defect in the system of Government has been pointed out, and every remedy that can be devised has been suggested; but as every man has to work out his own scheme of social existence, to live, and love, and learn for himself, so the rulers of British India have each one begun at the beginning, as if the past was all chaos, out of which order had to be continually evoked; no class of mortals under the sun, have ever done so much of profitless labour.

In 1815, the Court of Directors vaunted in the following words, their complete possession of the information needful to legislate for this presidency.

"By the survey and other statistical reports which have been drawn up from time to time by some of the ablest of our revenue servants on the Madras establishment, we have been put in possession of a most valuable mass of information concerning the actual condition and probable resources of the territories dependent on the presidency of Fort St. George, the various tenures by which property is held, the different modes in which the revenue of the sovereign has been collected, the state of society, and the customs, manners, and opinions of the inhabitants. Certain it is, that our acquaintance with the provinces under your presidency is much more limited."

Forty years have rolled away since the above confession was made, and Madras has still to be legislated for. We are still waiting for a Cornwallis in the South, whose fatal impatience of further reports shall give the people a permanent property in the soil, and thus loosen all the bonds of industry. We want some one actuated like him by a desire to render taxation as little burdensome as possible; to interfere no more than need be with the sources from which the wealth of the subject is derived; to fix a definitive rate of assessment; avoid meddling with the details of agriculture, and extend the inducements to cultivate the land. A review of the comparative agricultural statistics of the two presidencies, will exhibit those startling contrasts which must in time arrest the attention of the home authorities, and secure us ample, though tardy justice.

The lower provinces of Bengal subjected to the permanent settlement of the Marquis Cornwallis comprised, Bengal, in area 82,099 square miles, the ceded lands 9,043, making a total of 91,142 square miles in the Soubah of Bengal; Behar 51,973 square miles, Orissa 6,102,—altogether a total of 149,217 square miles, being about 9,000 miles in excess of the area of Madras.

Various estimates were made as to the extent of cultivated land, and whilst all agreed that fully two thirds of the surface was culturable, yet the amount of actual tillage was disputed, some supposing one third, others one-half; Mr. James Grant, the able statistical inquirer, calculated the productive portion of the Bengal area as equal to 100,000 square miles, which at 500 acres to the culturable part would give 50 millions of productive acres.

Sir Edward Colebrooke, proceeding on a different basis, estimated the actual cultivated land required for the food of the people at 95,000,000 of bigahs, or about 32 millions of acres, and as his calculation is one full of interest at the present time, we give the details of it, with the values of the estimated produce of that area.

"From what has been stated as the daily consumption of a family, an average of nine maunds a head may be deduced for the annual consumption of grain. The use of wheat and barley in some provinces does not materially affect the calculation.

"Four seers of coarse flour are estimated for the daily consumption of a family consisting of six persons. This is equal to six maunds of flour annually for each person; or nearly seven maunds of wheat. The consumption of barley is reckoned at very little more. The practice of throwing away the water in which rice has been boiled, accounts for the greater consumption of rice compared with that of wheat and barley.

"In England, a quarter of wheat is reckoned sufficient for the annual food of a man: and the whole quantity of bread corn, raised in Great Britain, has been computed at 14,000,000 quarters. Since a quarter of wheat weighs on an average about 480 pounds, that estimate does not materially disagree with ours. But millet, and other small grains (which constitute the principal food of the poor, and which are not equally nourishing with white corn), will increase the average.

"Several sorts of pulse are raised for cattle, but bear a small proportion to the general tillage: for the cattle are mostly supported on pastures, or on chaff and straw. Corn is imported from several of the countries which border on Bengal; but the exportation exceeds the imports; we therefore estimate the produce consumed by 30,000,000 persons, at 270 millions of maunds; or at 300 millions after adding grain consumed by cattle; to this again add a seventh for seed, and the whole produce in grain will be 342,857,140 maunds, a very moderate produce from tillage estimated at 94,793,100 bigas.

"But the Indian husbandry, mixing in the same field, corn and other articles of a very different nature every object must be included in the computation, to compare the produce with the quantity of land: and, for that purpose, the grain must be stated at its money value. This we take from the average of many inquiries (in the course of which the cheapest and dearest provinces have been compared) at the following rates.

Maunds.	Rupees.
150,000,000 of rice, wheat and barley at 12 annas....	112,500,000
60,000,000 of millet, &c..... 8 annas....	30,000,000
90,000,000 of pulse..... 10 annas....	56,250,000
	198,750,000
Seeds reserved for the following season, 48,000,000 maunds.....	28,380,000
	227,130,000
Oil seeds.....	12,000,000
Sugar, tobacco, cotton, &c.....	70,000,000
Sundries.....	20,000,000

Gross produce of land..... Rupees.... 329,130,000

"In a subsequent inquiry we shall have occasion to show this to be moderate in proportion to the expenses of husbandry, or to the aggregate amount of rents for the tillage estimated at 95,000,000 bigas."

The gross jumma, or rent, or revenue, or land tax, for the whole area of Bengal, comprised in the 140,000 square miles or 97,000,000 of acres, only amounted to Rs. 275,59,000, being at the rate of about 5 annas per acre; but on the productive area of 100,000 square miles, or 64,000,000 of acres, about 7 annas per acre; and on the cultivated area of 32,000,000 of acres, requisite to raise sufficient food for the people, the rate of assessment may be calculated at 14 annas per acre; but the most important of all averages is the rate of assessment on the value of the gross produce of that area, viz. total assessment, Rs. 275,59,000, and total value of gross produce, Rs. 3,291,30,000, was only 8 per cent.

In the Madras presidency the total land assessment is 360 lacs of Rs. levied on 20,000,000 of acres supposed to be actually under cultivation; and the average rate per acre on the 90,000,000 of acres of the total area, culturable, cultivated, and barren, is therefore 6½ annas; but on the actual cultivated land it is 23 annas, or double the Bengal rate for the area required for raising the food of the people, and four times the rate of assessment levied in Bengal on the area actually under cultivation.

The most indefensible of Indian taxation is the assessment on the value of the gross produce of this presidency. The rates of assessment have universally been fixed throughout Madras solely with relation to the capabilities of the land; and the invariable calculation is about 45 per cent. for the wet, and 33 per cent. for the dry cultivation, and if we assume 40 per cent. as the average proportion taken by government on the whole produce of the land, we shall not, with reference to the commutation rates at which the produce was valued in former years, over-estimate the amount of assessment now levied by government. In Madras, then, the value of the gross produce is 900 lacs of Rupees, with a collected land revenue of 360 lacs, whereas in Bengal the value of the gross produce on 39 millions of acres was calculated at 3291 lacs of Rs., the rate of assessment in Bengal being 8 per cent., and in Madras 40 per cent. on the gross produce.

It may be said that the value of the gross produce of Madras is rated too low, but we appeal to all who have any knowledge of the low acreage produce of the largest portion of the Madras Presidency, whether any one can safely estimate its average value at a higher rate than 7 Rs. per acre, instead of about 12 Rs. per acre as in Bengal? The relative amount of land rent levied in two portions of the same empire may therefore account for the strange fact that Madras has, if not fallen back, certainly not advanced, whereas within 20 years after the Bengal permanent settlement was effected, it was admitted by Mr. Dowdeswell and Sir E. Colebrooke "that vast tracts of land have been reduced to cultivation in one part of the country or another, that estates which only yielded to the proprietors a surplus produce of 10 or 12 per cent. on the Jumma, now yield them a surplus produce of 30, 40, or 50 per cent. giving grounds for reckoning the net income of Zemindars, upon an average, at an amount equal to half the assessment payable to Government. This indicates an improvement in the proportion of one-third of the former produce of the land;" and if at the present day we calculate the net income of the proprietors of Bengal at an amount equal to the Government assessment on the land, we shall not need to inquire further why a vast amount of trade is carried on the banks of the Hooghly, compared with which Madras derives but a pedlar's traffic. Well and truly did Mr. Seymour remark that the governor who succeeded Sir H. Pottinger has a noble field before him for distinguishing his own name, and an opportunity of doing more for twenty-two millions of people than most statesmen have ever enjoyed; this path is now open. The public mind is eager for improvement, and the petty opposition and difficulties that may be raised can easily be set aside by the strong will of an honest man.

In all questions relating to taxation, it is the relative incidence on the people and country which should be looked to, and not the actual amounts levied; for instance, in England, the gross value of the produce per acre, on the average of the whole cultivation, is usually calculated at £3 per acre, or say Rs. 25,000 per square mile of 500 acres to the square mile, but the average sum paid as rent or revenue is not calculated at more than £1 7s. or Rs. 6,170 per square mile, leaving Rs. 18,250 to be shared in by farmers and labourers. In Bengal, the gross value of the produce appears to have been Rs. 3,291 per square mile, of which the Government received Rs. 274, and the proprietors at the present day as much more, or Rs. 548 per square mile of 500 acres, leaving for the zemindars and labourers Rs. 2,745. In Madras, the gross value being 900 lacs on 20,000,000 of acres, or 40,000 square miles, about Rs. 2,250 will be the produce value of each square mile of 500 acres, of which Government takes Rs. 900, and leaves Rs. 1,350 to the cultivators and labourers, or exactly one-half the amount the Government of India allow their subjects to enjoy in another part of the same empire. It is somewhat difficult to realize the actual effects of the taxation on rent or land revenue; but as labour must after all be the real measure of value, the relative bearings in England, Bengal, and Madras, will be best understood by supposing the ratios in the three places reduced to the number of days' labour, instead of to the value of the produce created by the labour; and whilst in England, out of 25,000 days the people have to give 6,750, they have 18,250 to provide themselves with clothes, seed, &c.; in Bengal, out of 25,000 days' labour, they yield up 4,180, but enjoy 21,900; in Madras, on the contrary, out of 25,000 days Government takes 9,900, and only allow the ryots 15,500 days: with these inequalities, can any question be raised as to the cause of the poverty of Madras?—Madras Athenæum, August 22.

The LONDON MAIL of July 25th arrived at Madras on August 26th (per Bombay), having, it was stated, made the quickest passage on record. The subsequent Mail of August 9th reached the presidency on the 8th September (per steamer Bengal).

EXAMINATION OF MINERAL SPRINGS.—The authorities at Fort St. George have been instructed by the Government of India to collect specimens of the waters of every mineral spring that may be found in the presidency, and to submit them with other necessary information to the Medical Board for analysis by the professor of chemistry. This gentleman will receive a special allowance for the additional labour now imposed upon him in order to secure punctuality in the discharge of this duty. We are not informed of the object of the institution of this inquiry.—Circulator, September 1.

DEATH OF AN INDIAN PRINCESS.—On Wednesday last died Azeem-oon-Nissa Begum, aged 74 years. The remains of the deceased lady, who was the widow of His Highness Azeem-ood-Dowlah, late Nawab of the Carnatic, were conveyed with every honour from her residence on the Poonamallee-road, escorted by His Highness the Nawab's body guard and regiment of infantry, to the great mosque at Triplicane, where they were interred near those of His Highness, her late husband.—U. S. Gazette, Aug. 29.

ARRIVAL OF THE SHIP "NILE."—On Wednesday evening Mr. Green's ship the Nile, captain Nisbet, anchored in the roads, having made the voyage in seventy-four days from the Lizard Point. This is, we believe, the second shortest passage that has been made, the first having been also done by this ship last year. The Nile when within six miles of the lighthouse, was driven out to sea again by a very sudden and sharp squall which sprang up about half-past five p.m., and which carried away two of the royal sails the fore mizen-top-gilliant mast, and the flying-jib and jib-boom. The squall came on and was over in an instant, but it nevertheless crippled the vessel so much that the anchor was not let go until a quarter-past eleven o'clock at night, the ship for a long time refusing to obey her helm. The Nile has brought out a large batch of cadets for the Madras army, and several for the Bengal.—Athenæum, Sept. 9.

DEATH OF LIEUTENANT C. HOLLAND.—We regret to record the death, near Coimbatore, of Lieutenant Charles Holland, of the 4th N.I., holding temporary employment in the department of public works, under Captain Ludlow, of the engineers. The deceased officer was seized with cholera at the village of Vodram-macottah, on the 30th August, and expired the following afternoon. In Lieutenant Holland the public has lost a most able and energetic servant, and society one, whose unassuming manners and amiability of disposition, had endeared him to all with whom he came in contact.—Athenæum.

ABROGATION OF THE IMPORT TARIFF.—Friday night's Fort St. George Gazette announced the abrogation of the Madras import tariff, and the substitution for it of that of Bengal, at all the seaports of this presidency, from the 1st of October next.—Athenæum.

ABOLITION OF CUSTOMS DUTIES.—The Madras Athenæum publishes the following notification:—"It is hereby notified under authority from the most noble the Governor-General of India in Council that all Customs duties between the frontier of his Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad and the British Territories as well as in the Districts lately assigned by his Highness to the British Government have been abolished." Another great restriction, therefore, has been removed from the internal trade. The next step should be to prohibit the further issue of a debased currency.

THE C. TROOP HORSE BRIGADE ARTILLERY.—The C. Troop Horse Brigade Artillery arrived from Rangoon in the ship Defiance, on Saturday last, after a long and tedious passage of forty-one days. They were disembarked on Sunday evening, and as a temporary measure were marched into the Artillery Barracks in the Fort preceded by the garrison band. The men appear in good health and spirits, and much rejoiced at once more returning to quarters. We regret to say this fine troop have lost one officer and twenty-seven men since they left this for Rangoon. They proceeded to St. Thomas's Mount last evening.—Madras Athenæum, August 15.

INSALUBRITY OF JACATAILLAH—A correspondent of the Madras Athenæum writing from Jacatallah, on the Neilgherries, complains bitterly of the insalubrity of that sanatorium. He says, that in May and June 20 per. cent. of the men sent there died. The cause of death is malaria, accelerated by insufficient accommodation. Half the officers are living in tents, and the other half in mud huts, while the soldiers' barracks are penetrated by every storm.

MR. SMITH O'BRIEN, the world-known Irish patriot (says the Madras Athenæum writing from Jacatallah, on the Neilgherries, complains bitterly of the insalubrity of that sanatorium. He says, that in May and June 20 per. cent. of the men sent there died. The cause of death is malaria, accelerated by insufficient accommodation. Half the officers are living in tents, and the other half in mud huts, while the soldiers' barracks are penetrated by every storm.

THE NEW POSTAGE ACT comes into operation on the 1st October. It consists of seventy-one clauses, the whole of which no man is expected to read with attention. The postage on letters is, for a

Quarter	tolah.....	6 pice
Half	do	1 anna
One tolah		2 "
One and a half	do	3 "
Two	do	4 "

and for every tolah in weight above two tolahs, two annas additional; every fraction above 2 tolahs being charged as an additional tolah.

Indian newspapers not exceeding three and a  $\frac{1}{2}$  tolahs will be charged ..... 2 annas under six tolahs ..... 4 annas

For every additional three tolahs or a fraction thereof ..... 2 annas

Extras or supplements posted with newspapers are deemed to be a part thereof.

Newspapers may be sent by banghy parcels, and charged at rates accordingly.

The Times newspaper as now regularly issued, weighing fourteen tolahs and upwards, will be charged six annas, a provision for which we devoutly thank the legislative council, as fervently as the orthodox Mussulman would praise that natural law, which compels the pig in swimming, to cut his own throat. The Times costs fivepence in London and Madras, and will henceforth cost fourteen-pence in Poonamallee, and every other place outside the limits of the presidency. We hope the English press will, in due season, appreciate at its proper worth the policy of the Indian Government.—Athenæum, Aug. 26.

BANGALORE.—A letter from Bangalore mentions that H.M.'s 12th Royal Lancers have not yet been seen at a general parade, in consequence of having only recently received their saddlery, and it having been found necessary to condemn great part of the arms of the regiment immediately on arrival at Bangalore. Our correspondent mentions that new lances for the whole regiment are now in course of preparation and will soon be ready. The heads are being made up by old Arnachellum of Salem, the most celebrated spear maker in Southern India. The shafts are, we believe, of Trincomallee wood, which is probably the best material for the purpose after bamboo, though far inferior to that. Colonel Pole was very desirous, we understand, to have bamboo shafts for his regiment, and both the adjutant general and military board were, it is said, favourably disposed on the subject, but difficulties sprung up to prevent it. This is to be regretted, for every hog hunter will, we are sure, bear us out in the assertion, that a male bamboo, well seasoned and smoked, would prove both the toughest and lightest shaft that could be found. Thus there can be no doubt that shafts of this description would have been preferred by the men themselves to any others. As to there being any difficulty in procuring a sufficiency of seasoned male bamboos for the entire regiment, which is what they say at Bangalore, it is very probable that such may not be procurable in sufficient numbers for a whole corps at a moment's notice, but there can be no doubt that a certain demand would easily ensure as certain a supply, because no other spear shafts have ever been used by the native horsemen of the East, who have always been famous for their expertness with the weapon, and though their spears are often double the length of an English lance, they never found any difficulty in providing suitable bamboos in abundance. If, therefore, no other impediment exist to the introduction of bamboo shafts generally, they might surely be tried at first on a limited scale, say with a single squadron or troop, as an experimental measure. The 12th Lancers are described as remarkably well officered; they received several from the 3rd and 9th Dragoons, who had seen much service in Upper India, and some of their best and finest looking officers are from the ranks. Both the 12th Lancers and the 43rd Light Infantry are general favourites at Bangalore and get on very well with every body at the station.—U. S. Gazette, Sept. 5.

BELLARY, Aug. 22, 1854.—The terror and cholera-stricken detachment of the 3rd M.E. regiment was, by the advice of Superintending Surgeon Maxwell, marched into cantonment this morning. They were to have come in on Monday morning, but late on Saturday night were attacked by the Indian scourge. Two cases occurred which proved fatal during the night. The following morning poor Cheyne, the assistant-surgeon in charge, was attacked with two others. Towards afternoon, Cheyne requested to be sent into Bellary (and left the camp at a place called Booditali, about eight miles from Bellary) at 3 p.m. He reached Bellary at about eight, leaving only a very young assistant-surgeon of some three or four months' standing, and the apothecary, &c., with the camp. On Sunday night twenty-six cases were admitted to the hospital tent, thirteen of which died on Monday. Surgeon Patterson was sent out by post haste to the sufferers, and infused great confidence amongst most of the men; but alas! the scourge kept striding on. Surgeon Maxwell also went out to camp, remaining all day, using all his efforts to stay the plague, and after well examining the camp, advised their removal into cantonment. Arrangements were about to be made to break up the camp into three divisions, and send out a body of officers to take charge; but at the time poor Cheyne was being carried to his last home, some recruits, to the number of forty or fifty, came rushing into cantonment terror stricken, and reported the remainder had agreed (were they not ordered in) to come in of their own accord. Terror had got the upper hand of all discipline. Agreeably to Dr. Maxwell's advice they were marched in this morning: they brought some twenty or thirty cases in with them, four of which have since proved fatal; some are recovering, and some are in the last stage of the disease, but, thank God, no new cases have occurred. Poor Burge was attacked very severely yesterday morning, and little hope was given of him last night, but, I am thankful to say, he has improved very much to-day, but is far from out of danger yet. Too much cannot be said in praise of the medical staff stationed here (with but one exception), and I sincerely trust, now the men are under cover, that we shall soon be free from the dreadful scourge. Nothing it left undone that can be thought of, to ameliorate the condition of the men. I cannot give you an authenticated number of deaths that have taken place since Saturday night; it is over twenty considerably, but, I trust, under thirty; all hands are too much occupied just now to make out returns. A report has just reached here, that the colonel of the regiment has received orders to report the regiment as soon as it is in a fit state, to allow of its being removed to Secunderabad. I am sorry to be obliged to report that one of the senior surgeons of corps up here has been obliged to be put under arrest: more will appear eventually.—Spectator, Aug. 30. Further intelligence from Bellary, on the subject of the outbreak of cholera among the men of the detachment of recruits for the 3rd European regiment, acquaints us with the melancholy fact that about forty men had died, beside Assistant-Surg. Cheyne, and that some sixteen more were in hospital at the date of our advice. We are thankful to learn, however, that none of these last were bad cases, the disease having assumed a form much milder than it wore in the first instance, as it generally does. But this pleasant news of the dying away of the pestilence is qualified by an assurance that the 3rd Europeans are actually to march for Secunderabad, to relieve the 2nd E.L.I., toward the close of 1854, or at latest in Jan. or Feb. next. What exigency can be proved in the case, to demand the sudden transfer of a new corps, unfit for the duties of a station like that of Secunderabad? Not more than a fraction of the men are yet masters of their drill, the majority being raw recruits; and although admittedly fine materiel to work on, they have yet need for some time to come of the professional artificer's hand to mould them into military shape. They are progressing very well at Bellary, enjoying excellent health—with the sad exception above mentioned,—and distinguished by sobriety and good conduct. What they might become in the Deccan, however, if prematurely sent thither, is another question. Secunderabad is not the best locality for a young regiment. Temptations, we believe, particularly in the way of drinking, are much more rife there than at Bellary. It is said that liquor may be had for the asking, in the Nizam's country. Moreover, the move contemplated would be very unfair to the officers of the corps, who have most of them had double marches to make on joining, and have sold off their marching kit, expecting that the 3rd Europeans would remain at least three years in Bellary. If they be now called on to make a fresh start for a distant station, it will involve them, or at least many of them, in very serious difficulties. This point also is one that should be seriously weighed. None of them have derived any benefit from their transfer to the 3rd, with which they are hard worked, as must needs be under the circumstances, and their inclination of course matches their duty in that respect, as is always the case with British officers, but the willing horse should not be driven to death without a sufficient cause, and the absence of any visible one leads us to remonstrate against the measure. We do hope that Lord Harris will review all the bearings of the case, and alter the mistaken decision which is said to have been arrived at. There is a report in circulation, that the projected move of the Third has been decided on with a view to oblige a certain party, but we cannot think that his Lordship has any knowledge of that fact. It is well, however, that he should be aware of the prevailing impression, in order that he may guide himself accordingly and remove it. So far as we can judge the regiment in question ought not to be removed from Bellary at present.—Spectator, September 4.

MILITARY ON-DITS.—MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.—The 29th regiment N.I. is expected to arrive at the presidency on or about the 18th proximo, and the 45th regiment N.I. about the 20th October, and the 31st light infantry about January next. The 50th regiment N.I. will leave the presidency for Secunderabad on the 22nd September, and the 35th regiment N.I. for Hurryhar on the 22nd October next.—Madras Spectator, August 11.

RAIN IN THE RED SEA.

A RAINY DAY IN THE RED SEA—and "What of it?" says the general reader. "Why not a rainy day in the Red Sea as well as any where else?" Why not, to be sure! This is a question we shall not attempt to answer, only the event about to be adverted to is one of the rarest that can be imagined. It must be somewhat hard for the English, still more for the Bombay reader, to imagine the existence of districts where rain so rarely falls that they are set down in the map as rainless—yet there are many such on the globe, and one such is the district from the borders of Catch southward and westward by the entrance of the Red Sea, and so on to the shores of the Mediterranean, including the southern portion of Arabia and the north-eastern shoulder of Africa. On the 26th and 27th of July, a sand-storm prevailed in the Red Sea, betwixt the 18th and 26th parallels, or from near the Gulf of Suez to within a hundred miles of Gibbel Teer. The air was red and lurid, and heavily loaded with sand, so that the decks, sails, and rigging were thickly covered by it; the nearest land in the direction in which the wind was blowing was good seventy miles away. The heat was most oppressive, the thermometer rising as high as 92. At night there was lightning and thunder, with some showers of rain, and from the morning of Friday, the 28th, to the evening of Saturday, it rained almost incessantly betwixt the 13th and 16th parallels, for to this space it was confined. How far to the eastward or westward it extended did not appear.

The steamer Ganges passed through the rainy region on part of Thursday and Friday, in the same place where it was experienced by the Victoria on Saturday, the same general appearance being manifested to both on the two consecutive days; in both cases it cleared up as the volcanic region was approached in latitude 15.30. Two rain gauges were put on board the Victoria, and though they could not be managed so as to be made very trustworthy, as both gave nearly the same results, they were in all likelihood not far from the truth. They indicated a fall of an inch and a half in eight hours, the total fall probably amounting to about double this. During the rain the thermometer fell from 92 to 80; the sea all the while continuing at 88, or three degrees higher than it had been during the previous dust storm—leaning over the gangway one felt as if a steaming cauldron had been beneath. After the rain, the air exhibited that extraordinary transparency so rarely met with in arid countries where light is transmitted so imperfectly and irregularly. The shores of Africa and Arabia, and the mountains far inland on the opposite shore of the sea, were seen at once; some among the most conspicuous of the latter being at least 120 miles from the spectator, the eye sweeping a circuit of above 250 miles in diameter. The beauty of the numerous volcanic groups of islands, but more especially of the shores around Mocha, was something quite indescribable.

Near the Straits it was found that the temperature of the sea had sunk to 79, that is, to nine degrees lower than it had been twenty-four hours before. Here long bands and trails of discoloured matter, floating on the surface of the water, were visible, such as is usually described as fish spawn. They smelt like new-cut hay, and on specimens being taken up and examined by a magnifier, they astonished the observer by turning out to be the seeds and flowers of grass. The Arab pilot, a very intelligent man, without being beforehand informed of this fact, was catechized on this subject, and described them as being what they actually turned out to be. The muddy creeks and shores, he said, abounded with grass, the pollen or seed of which a rough sea or an unusually high tide floated away, the wind drifting it for many leagues out to sea. That collected in a handkerchief was found to yield a fine crimson-coloured dye, that filtered through paper became bright green; the anthers and the formed seeds, the latter very small in size, were almost equally abundant. This is not to be confounded with the colouring matter so often observed, not floating on the surface, but diffused through the water, and which is assuredly either spawn, vegetables, or animalcules, or probably, at times, all the three. The profusion of the red colour towards the Gulf of Suez is believed by Eherenberg, and in all likelihood correctly, to have secured for the sea its name. A sheet of a milky, or sometimes of a snowy hue, extending over about four square degrees of surface, is generally observed betwixt the 15th parallel and the mouth of the Persian Gulf. Singular to relate, though our ships have been passing through this region every month or fortnight for the past twenty-years, most of them with a medical man on board, we are, up to this moment, in total ignorance of the cause of a phenomenon so remarkable. An earthquake was experienced at Nattore, in Lower Bengal, and Calcutta, on the morning of the 26th; a second at Midnapore, on the morning of the 27th; a third at the same station, as well as at Kurra-chee, in Lower Sindh, at 6 A.M. on the 29th,—an instance of what so often occurs of volcanic and meteorological disturbances occurring together. There was a severer storm near Guardafui. Violent rain fell on these days all over the North-West Provinces, and there were showers, though this is their fair season, at Madras.—Bombay Times.

SUICIDE OF DR. WIGSTROM.

On Friday last, Dr. Wigstrom, of H.M.'s 14th Light Dragoons, killed himself by taking prussic acid. The unfortunate man arrived at Bombay with his wife from Ceylon, on the 21st ultimo,—having only been married a week previously, and took up lodgings at the Hope Hall Hotel. He is represented to have lived rather freely, and although he seemed at times cheerful and gay, yet his conduct on other occasions at the hotel, was such as to impress one with the belief that he was not quite in his senses. At six o'clock on Friday morning last, Mrs. Blackwell went into his apartments with a vase of flowers for Mrs. Wigstrom, of which he approved; and with his wife breakfasted in his own room that morning. A little before noon Mrs. Wigstrom ran into Mrs. Blackwell's room, and stated that she found her husband was in a fit. On going into his room, Mrs. Blackwell saw him in the dressing-room on his knees, with his head on his right arm, which was resting on a small bed close by. His eyes were closed, and he was insensible. All efforts to rouse him being unsuccessful, Dr. Lofthouse and Dr. Carter were called immediately to see him. They found him extended on the floor almost pulseless, and apparently suffering either from an epileptic fit or from poison. A strong smell of bitter almonds in the room immediately excited a suspicion that his death had been caused by prussic acid. On examining a medicine-chest which was on a table in the room, it was found that a small bottle of hydrocyanic acid, which was known to be in it, was missing, and shortly afterwards one of the servants found outside the window of the room the missing bottle broken. The usual remedies were applied, but before a stomach-pump could be procured, life was extinct, the unfortunate man having remained insensible to the last. Shaik Ali, the deceased's butler, said, that at eleven o'clock his master called to him, and asked him the time, when he went into, and shut the door of the room. On the table in the room occupied by the deceased, Dr. Lofthouse found half a sheet of letter-paper bearing the following inscription in the deceased's handwriting:—

"5m. to 12.

"The time is come for all explanations—they are at end.

"R. B. W."

Lieutenant Dunsterville and Dr. Downes met Dr. Wigstrom in Ceylon, and arrived at Bombay in the same steamer with him. The former gentleman stated that the result of his acquaintance with the deceased impressed him most strongly with the belief that he was not sane. He would make most extraordinary speeches condemnatory of himself, and compromising the position of those nearly allied to him. He appeared to be suffering from a mania respecting money matters, imagining that he had won large sums of money from his brother officers, which the Commander-in-Chief would not allow him to recover. Such statements were of daily occurrence; and it was also observed that whilst at a game of billiards, the deceased would play for some time apparently without regarding what he was doing, and when a good stroke presented itself, he would suddenly turn round and pocket his own ball. His conduct in several other respects also was so singular as to have attracted attention and remark. Dr. Downes and Mr. Rollins, a merchant, stated that their impression also was that the deceased was not sane. Under these circumstances the coroner's jury returned the following VERDICT.—Deceased committed suicide by poisoning whilst in a state of temporary insanity.—Telegraph and Courier, Sept. 11.

The LONDON MAIL of August 9th arrived at Bombay on September 5th (per Semiramis).

MR. R. W. LODWICK, assistant to the collector and magistrate of Poona, has been appointed assistant to the Accountant-General, on a salary of Rs. 850 per mensem.

MR. HUGH MALET, the acting sub-treasurer, is, we hear, to go home by one of the steamers in September. His intention is not to return after his leave expires, but to retire from the service.—Telegraph.

MR. JOHN LAW, C.S., collector of Dharwar, at present absent on sick-leave at the Neilgherry Hills, has resigned the service; and he will be allowed to retire as soon as he can come to the presidency. This is an old rule—and a stupid one it is. Could not an agent or attorney in Bombay sign for his pay, &c.?—Ibid.

PROFESSOR A. G. FRASER (of Poona), has been appointed by the members of the Parsee Punchayet, to succeed the late lamented Mr. Henry Green, in the appointment that gentleman held. The salary is Rs. 700 per mensem.

DEATH OF MR. MYERS BARR.—We deeply regret to announce the death of Mr. Myers Barr, of the Civil Service, youngest son of General Barr, formerly of this Presidency, and brother of our highly respected fellow townsman, Captain Barr, Military Paymaster. Mr. Barr only arrived in India a few months ago, and was as stout and fine-looking a young man as ever came to the country. He had been attached to the Tanna Collectorate for a short time, and was seized with fever at that station towards the end of last week. He was brought in to a friend's house in Bombay on Tuesday, but he never rallied, and expired yesterday. Sad to say this is the second son General Barr has lost in this country during the last twelve months.—Telegraph, August 10.

MISSION TO THE AFGHANS.—Two Missionaries will shortly be upon their way to Peshawar, to commence the Mission to the Afghans. Twenty-eight thousand rupees have already been subscribed for this object, ten thousand of which were given by one officer.

THE "FALKLAND."—The Honourable Company's sloop-of-war Falkland has received orders to prepare for sea forthwith; her destination is supposed to be Singapore and the China Seas.—Telegraph, August 23.

UPPER SCINDE.—We are informed that the Upper Scinde Brigadier, with his staff, is to be removed to Hyderabad, together with all the regular troops. Upper Scinde will, henceforth, be held only by the two regiments of Scinde Irregular Horse, and the two Belooch battalions raised by Sir Charles Napier. The command of Upper Scinde will be conferred on Major John Jacob, Sir Charles's protegee.—Poona Observer, August 16.

MAJOR PITT KENNEDY has devised a plan for connecting Kurrachee by railway with Bombay and Lahore. The line will run from Bombay to Baroda, thence to Kurrachee via Hyderabad, and thence via Mithunkote to Lahore.

THE Assaye, the H. E. I. Company's new steamer, will be ready for sea in October next. She is now taking in her engines.

FROM A RETURN OF MORTALITY for the town and island of Bombay and Colaba, for the month of August, 1854, we perceive that the total number of deaths has been 1,352. Of Europeans, there have been 34 natural deaths, and 2 violent; Indo-Britons and Indo-Portuguese, 11 natural; native Christians and Jews, 47 natural, and 1 epidemic; Mussulmans, 259 natural, 15 epidemic, and 3 violent; Parsees, 68 natural, and 3 epidemic; Jains, and all Hindoos, 849 natural, 44 epidemic, and 5 violent; others and unknown castes, 10 natural, and 1 epidemic. The total, 1,278 natural, 64 epidemic, and 10 violent.

COMMAND OF THE INDIAN ARMY.—The Sinde Kosrid has it on excellent authority that Lord Frederick Fitzclarence is to be the successor of Sir William Gomm in the command of the Indian army, and that Lord Melville takes his place at Bombay.

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. H. A. FRASER AND THE OFFICERS AND CREW OF THE "MEDUSA."

Commodore's Office, Bombay, Aug. 31, 1854.—The subjoined sentence of a court-martial assembled on board the H.C.'s ship Hastings, in Bombay Harbour, on the 25th, 26th, 27th, and 28th days of July, 1854, is published for general information.

At a court-martial, assembled on board the H.C.'s ship Hastings, at Bombay, on the 25th day of July, 1854, and by adjournment every day afterwards to the 28th day of July, 1854,—

The Court, pursuant to an order from Sir Henry John Leeke, Commodore, Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy, dated the 19th day of July, 1854, directed to Captain J. P. Porter, of the H.C.'s ship Hastings, and second in command in Bombay Harbour, having been duly sworn according to the Act passed by the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India, in council, on the 25th day of May, 1844, entitled, an Act for better securing the observance of an exact discipline in the Indian Navy, proceeded to the trial of Lieut. Hugh Alexander Fraser, together with the remaining officers and ship's company of the H.C.'s late steam-vessel Medusa, on the following charge:—

For that he, the said Lieut. H. A. Fraser, of the late steam-vessel Medusa, with the remaining officers and ship's company of the said late ship, on the 9th day of December, 1853, all of them being at that time in actual service and full pay, did, through negligence, run upon a sunken rock in the river Irrawaddy, about ten miles from Prome, the H.C.'s said late ship, thereby causing the said late ship to be wrecked and lost.

And having heard the narrative of the said Lieut. H. A. Fraser, of the circumstances relating thereto, and examined the remaining officers and ship's company (except of those absent on duty and discharged from the service) when the vessel was lost.

And having deliberately weighed and considered the said narrative and the whole of the evidence brought forward, the Court is of opinion that no blame whatever attaches to Lieut. H. A. Fraser, or any of the officers or ship's company of the said steam vessel Medusa, for their conduct and proceedings on the occasion of her loss, as it appears to the Court that all possible precautionary measures were adopted for her preservation, and the Court doth in consequence thereof adjudge the said Lieut. H. A. Fraser, the remaining officers and ship's company of the H. C. late steam vessel Medusa to be fully acquitted, and the said Lieut. H. A. Fraser, officers and ship's company, are hereby severally and respectively fully acquitted accordingly.

And the Court cannot separate without recording its approbation of the conduct of Lieut. H. A. Fraser, and the officers and ship's company, then on board the Medusa, in the exertions they made to save that vessel.

(Signed) H. J. LEEKE, Commodore,
Rear Admiral Commander in Chief of I.N.

IMPORTS (Bombay, Sept. 11, 1854).—The amount of business in which has been to a fair extent; the bulk of the transactions, however, having been brought about by the desire which a few of our largest, and hitherto apparently firmest holders have shown to realize, but it evidences a better feeling on the part of dealers who, with large stocks in hand, for which there is yet no outlet, are increasing their supplies. Under these circumstances it is satisfactory to notice that prices have been well supported, and with only firmness on the part of holders there is no reason to doubt a much improved state of matters as the season advances.
Cotton Piece Goods.—Prices for such as are wanted and light in stock have an upward tendency. Grey Shirting, 40 inches by 38 yards, has been taken to the extent of 13,000 pieces—6lbs. at rs. 3 8½ans., 6½lbs. at rs. 3 9ans. 6½lbs. at rs. 3 10½ans., and 7lbs. rs. 4 1½ans. to rs. 4 2½ans. per piece. Metals.—Only a moderate business has been done. Iron—British and Swedish Bar, Nail Rod, round and square, and Sheet, have all advanced in value, while Nail and Hoop are rather easier. Copper, there are no sales, but Sheathing, from being scarce, has further advanced in price about rs. 2 per cwt. Lead—Pig dull, Spelter the same, and slightly lower in price.

DISCOVERY OF GOLD IN NUGGETS.

The Moon Plains Diggings, Neura Ellia.

We have abstained from noticing from time to time as accounts reached us, the progress of these works as there was no new feature to report—the gold having continued in dust or small grains—now however that nuggets have been found we at once put our readers in possession of the fact. Yesterday reports reached Colombo that on the previous day, the bed rock having been reached, five or six nuggets were found in the washing, besides a larger proportion of gold dust than had previously been obtained.

We have always stated it as our opinion that such would be the result, and we have now before us the sections and diagrams of the gold regions of New South Wales and Victoria; the close similarity of the geological structure of the mountainous ranges in Ceylon and in those colonies is really wonderful, and would lead any one to believe, that if similar formations produce similar results, the production of gold in Ceylon will rival that of Victoria. Turning to another quarter of the world, we may mention that we were told yesterday that Mr. Davidson, formerly of Ceylon (of the firm of Gibson, Read, Davidson, and Co.), and now in California, had written to a friend, urging him to search for gold in the mountains here—from having noticed the same similarity in the structure of the Californian rocks and the Ceylon, that we have just mentioned as existing between them and the Australian.

At present the depth reached is but small (about 40 feet), and it was at about the same distance below the surface that the diggings ranged in Victoria for a considerable period; now, however, we hear of all the richest diggings in Australia being at a depth of 150, 160, and even 180 feet—and we trust similar results will be obtained here. We would recommend also, that a trial should be made on the Horton plains. They are some 600 feet higher than Neura Ellia, and it is clear from the formation of the country that the great body of water that at one time swept over those now elevated lands, passed in a direction from the Horton plains to Neura Ellia. It is probable, therefore, that by heading as near as may be to the original of the flood, richer deposits would be met with; and, certainly, by adopting this course the locality of where the gold exists in situ will be determined. These experiments should be at once commenced; and we much regret that there is no labour of the requisite character available; nor will the Governor do anything in aid of the discovery. Applications for assistance in any form are met by him with complete indifference; and requests that are granted, as of course, in aid of other operations here, have been refused in aid of the gold works. He cannot, however, prevent, though he may retard, the export of gold from Ceylon; and the colony, in the place of thanking him for assistance in developing the resources of the island, will in this, as in all other matters, look on him as an OBSTRUCTIVE rather than as a WORKING Governor. We repeat, GOLD, in nuggets, has been found at NEURA ELLIA.—Examiner.

The LONDON MAIL of August 9th arrived at Point de Galle September 5th (per Bengal), and the Cadiz proceeded on the 6th ult. to Hong Kong with the London Mail for China.

COLONEL BRAYBROOKE, of the Ceylon Rifle regiment, has obtained eighteen months' leave of absence to proceed to England on urgent private affairs. Captain Pally, of the 37th regiment, has been appointed staff-officer of Trincomalie.

PROBABLE RETIREMENT OF SIR GEORGE ANDERSON.—The Ceylon Observer says:—"It is now understood that Sir Geo. Anderson has requested that his successor in the Government of Ceylon may be named so as to relieve him in the month of February next. Lieut.-Genl. Bainbrigge will doubtless be relieved by his successor in the command of the forces immediately. A local journal has named Major General Reed as the choice of the Horse Guards."

THE SHIP Morayshire has been destroyed by fire about 250 miles from Colombo. The captain and crew made their way here in the long boat.—Ceylon Observer, Sept. 12.

MAJOR MACINTYRE v. THE LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.—Our reporter informs us that, when attending the court-martial assembled for the trial of Lieut. Thomson, 15th N.I., the president, one Major McIntyre, of the 78th Highlanders, objected to the reporter aforesaid sitting near the prisoner. Some of the members of the Court, however, being less factious and more men of the world, raised some little objection at this, which resulted in the doors being closed, and strangers, witnesses, and prisoner being ordered out, until the mighty subject could be discussed. On the doors being opened, it was found that the Court had decided the reporter might sit near the prisoner, and so the gallant president made nothing by his move. Some two years ago we were somewhat, but only deservedly, hard upon Major McIntyre, for the absurd and very bullying manner in which he brought a young ensign of the 78th, named Eltrington, to trial. We won't say that the gallant officer attempted this petty mode of venting his spleen upon our reporter by way of retaliation, nor will we be hard this time upon an old officer who has been thirty years in her Majesty's service. It is quite in our power to treat the major to a couple of columns about "the rights of man" and "the liberty of the press—that glorious bulwark"—and all the rest of it. But as we are strong we'll be merciful, and only request Major McIntyre, for his own sake, not again to meddle with the gentlemen of the press, or he may not get off quite so easily as he has this time. Hoping, therefore, that this reprimand will have the desired effect, we forgive the gallant officer this once, trusting he will not repeat the offence.—Bombay Telegraph.

EDUCATION IN INDIA.

NO. III.

WE have not forgotten this important subject, and we trust that our readers have not forgotten it either. The pressure of other matter has prevented our earlier resumption of a subject to which we now gladly return.

The affiliated institutions which are to be the feeders of the proposed universities are to be selected with reference to a single condition only—their capability "of supplying a sufficiently high order of instruction in the different branches of art and science in which university degrees are to be accorded;" and when we mention that those quoted in the despatch as illustrations, comprise Hindoo and Mahomedan establishments, native seminaries which appear to have no especial religious aspect, colleges of the Church of England, of the Church of Scotland, and of various classes of Dissenters from both, it will, we think, be admitted that the plan has not a rag of exclusiveness upon which an opponent can lay hold; and unless there be any (and we fear that there are still some) to whom the very name of Him in whom the Christian world glory and rejoice is a stumbling-block and an offence, it is not easy to see what can be objected to it. If one of the elder school of Anglo-Indians should say that it is reprehensible because it does not proscribe Christian schools and Christian teaching, his case is one for pity, not for argument.

To ascertain the quality of the instruction imparted in the affiliated institutions, those institutions are to be visited periodically by Government inspectors. Passing over the ornamental flourish about "a spirit of honourable rivalry," this inspection at first sight scarcely appears necessary; for if the youths from any particular institution were constantly to surpass those from all other institutions, it would be pretty evident that the seminary which sent out such pupils could not, in respect at least of the required studies, be a very bad one. But there are other parts of the plan which render inspection advisable, if not absolutely necessary. It is observed that the scheme of education in the Anglo-vernacular languages should provide for a careful cultivation of the vernacular languages; and in the Oriental Colleges for a sufficient instruction in the English and vernacular languages. And now we meet with the following paragraph which calls for some notice.

"It is to this class of institutions that the attention of Government has hitherto been principally directed, and they absorb the greater part of the public funds which are now applied to educational purposes. The wise abandonment of the early views with respect to native education, which erroneously pointed to the classical languages of the East as the media for imparting European knowledge, together with the small amount of pecuniary aid which, in the then financial condition of India, was at your command, has led, we think, to too exclusive a direction of the efforts of Government towards providing the means of acquiring a very high degree of education for a small number of natives of India, drawn, for the most part, from what we should here call the higher classes."

We answer this by another quotation from the despatch before us, and one not lying at a great distance from that just made, but being the commencement of the very next paragraph.

"It is well that every opportunity should have been given to those classes for the acquisition of a liberal European education, the effects of which may be expected slowly to pervade the rest of their fellow-countrymen, and to raise, in the end, the educational tone of the whole country."

This is a sound view. If you would raise a country in civilization, if you would diffuse among its people the advantages of education, begin, we would say, with the higher classes, and give to as many as possible of them a high measure of learning. It will descend to those immediately beneath them, will, in the language just quoted, "slowly"—and, be it remembered, all real improvement is slow in its progress—will "slowly pervade the rest of their countrymen, and raise in the end the educational tone of the whole country." Experience attests this. Taking our own country, for instance, we find the earlier efforts for the extension of learning were directed to that of a high character. Suppose that, instead of universities and grammar-schools, we had possessed national and Lancasterian schools, and nothing beside,—what would have been the condition of England now? To educate a few highly, will be found far more efficient, with a view to the ultimate education of the whole, than to impart to every individual in the multitude a modicum of elementary knowledge. It was, therefore, wise and well to divert a great part of the Government funds to institutions aiming at least to imbue their pupils with something more than the acquirements of a hedge-school.

Entertaining these opinions, we cannot concur in that avowed in the despatch, that it is "still more important" to convey useful and practical knowledge to the people in general, than "to train highly a few youths." We are not opposed to the education of the masses; probably we are more friendly to it than the majority of those who bawl most loudly in its favour. We would give them as large a measure of education as circumstances will allow; but we are not ready to sacrifice to this comparatively unimportant end the raising of a fabric of sound and liberal knowledge which shall be the intellectual light of the country for ages to come, constantly increasing in splendour and utility, constantly extending its brilliant effects, till the whole of India and all its people should be irradiated by them. In the mean time, we would protect and encourage vernacular schools, though they give no instruction calculated to elevate the mind and extend its power, and can give none such for a period not to be estimated; but they impart instruction useful in the details of ordinary life, to those who without them would know nothing, and therefore would constantly lie at the mercy of those who had by some means scraped up a trifling degree of knowledge. The wonder excited by Goldsmith's Village Schoolmaster because, amongst other things, "it was reported he could gauge," is not peculiar to the British Isles: everywhere the reputation of superior knowledge causes wonder; wonder is followed by reverence; the enjoyment of reverence leads to influence; and this chain of causes and effects is perhaps more complete in the eastern parts of the world than in the western. The natives of India are ten times as covetous, ten times as rapacious as the greatest money-hoarders in this country; but money is not there, as is unfortunately too much the case here, the sole ground of respect. Claims to veneration resting upon grounds quite distinct from the possession of wealth, are there pretty generally recognized: these claims involve neither merit nor utility, but they enable those who set them up, to lord it over their fellows in no measured style. Education would in time put an end to this, and in the meanwhile the distinction conceded to real learning, even though of moderate amount, would certainly be far preferable to that accorded to a moving mass of imposture and filth, demanding respect as a being of superior nature to those by whom he is surrounded.

There is, we may remark, in the despatch before us somewhat too much of the go-ahead style. Though admitting that at present the vernacular languages possess neither books nor schoolmasters, and hinting even at the poverty of the languages themselves, it seems to be thought that these deficiencies may be supplied in no very long course of time. We fear that the difficulties to be surmounted have not been contemplated in their full force. How many years have passed since the first missionary efforts were made? What are the present results?

We now come to a very important feature of the proposed system—grants in aid. Here we shall let the despatch speak for itself.

"The system of grants in aid which we propose to establish in India, will be based on an entire abstinence from interference with the religious instruction conveyed in the schools assisted. Aid will be given (so far as the requirements of each particular district, as compared with others, and the funds at the disposal of Government may render it possible) to all schools which impart a good secular education, provided that they are under adequate local management (by the term 'local management,' we understand one or more persons, such as private patrons, voluntary subscribers, or the trustees of endowments, who will undertake the general superintendence of the school, and be answerable for its permanence for some given time); and provided also that their managers consent that the schools shall be subject to Government inspection, and agree to any conditions which may be laid down for the regulation of such grants. It has been found by experience, in this and in other countries, that not only is an entirely gratuitous education valued far less by those who receive it than one for which some payment, however small, is made, but that the payment induces a more regular attendance, and greater exertion, on the part of the pupils; and, for this reason, as well as because school-fees themselves, insignificant as they may be in each individual instance, will, in the aggregate, when applied to the support of a better class of masters, become of very considerable importance, we desire that grants in aid shall, as a general principle, be made to such schools only (with the exception of normal schools) as require some fee, however small, from their scholars."

Here again we find something with which we can agree, and something from which we must dissent. We think, in the present state of India, grants in aid are advisable. We think, too, that as the funds of Government are not inexhaustible, it is desirable to require some contribution from parents or others on account of the scholars; but we denounce the miserable cant which, after being canted to death in this country, is now called upon to do duty in India,—that "an entirely gratuitous education" is "valued far less by those who receive it, than one for which some payment, however small, is made." What efforts are made in this country to obtain free education at schools and universities; and seeing this, can it be affirmed that there is any dislike for the gratuitous, or any very warm preference for payment? If men can procure gratuitous education for their children, they will procure it; and they would be great [fools if they did not. But with these things before them, how can men go on repeating such phrases as that above quoted, as if they embodied established truth, and not mere sophistry or something worse? There is one other point on which we will touch, and only touch,—the government inspection. Where a government bestows money, it has an unquestionable right to see that it be well applied. The expediency of inspection is no less clear than the right; for everywhere, and nowhere more than in India, are such funds likely to be perverted, unless a good look-out be kept. But judging from what occurs elsewhere, it is just possible that the inspectors might need a little inspection themselves. We do not mean to throw any doubt on their integrity—that is not our ground. But in England, where government aid is given, and consequently the right of inspection accrues, the inspectors are sometimes found to be something more than inspectors, namely, great nuisances. Overbearing men seek to become supreme comptrollers; men of little, peddling, contracted minds, to whom nothing is either great or small, but everything of equal importance, niggle at petty points of detail, being incapable of anything better; crotchety-mongers ride their hobbies, and those very troublesome persons, known as “active men,” will throw everything into confusion for the mere love of excitement, while a more calculating set of men will exert themselves to no good purpose, solely for the sake of impressing their superiors with a high sense of their value. All these possible evils beset a system of inspection; but inspection must, we fear, be had, and we can only hope that care will be taken to guard against them. Perhaps it might be dispensed with, if a rule were made that a school or college enjoying a grant for a certain time, and producing no fruit in the shape of well-trained youths, should be cut off from the list of recipients. We offer this with hesitation, but think it is worth a trial.

We have not said all that we are prepared to say on this most important subject of education; but our space wanes, and we must forego the execution of our intention of concluding our remarks in the present article.

THE MEDICAL SERVICE.

THE advertisement issued some time since as to the examination of candidates under the new system, for appointments as assistant-surgeons in the Indian service, has been re-issued, with some notes. The first of these notes struck us at first sight as indicating some improved views. It is to the effect, that candidates who, at the time appointed for the examination, may not have been able to attend an asylum for the insane, or an ophthalmic hospital, for three months, will not be excluded. This seemed well, inasmuch as it can be of no consequence whether an attendance for such a period as three months has been given or not. But that which follows mars all this; for, if successful in passing, the candidate will be required to produce a certificate before proceeding to India, of having in the mean time attended such practice; it is not said for what time, but we suppose it is the magical three months. Three months to accomplish a man in two of the most difficult branches of practice in either medicine or surgery!

IRON IN INDIA.

IRON, the most useful of metals, abounds in India. In the words of a scientific inquirer, “it is easier to tell where it is not than where it is to be discovered.” Yet India continues to be supplied with iron from England at an immense additional cost for freight and several profits. How is this? The enterprise of British merchants and the apathy of the Indian people, assisted by some false steps on the part of the Government, afford an answer to the question. Not long since, some interesting articles on the question appeared in the Friend of India, from one of which we propose to make an extract. It must be premised, however, that there was formerly a tax on iron. This tax it was proposed to abolish, and here our story is taken up by the Friend:—

“The Board refused to consent to the abolition, which was, moreover, bitterly opposed by the iron-dealers. They fancied that the duties acted as a protection, and the result proved that their anticipation was correct. The exportation of iron from Gwalior amounted at this time to about 50,000 bullock-loads, but the moment the protection was removed by the abolition of the duties, it sunk to 15,000 loads, and has never since recovered. The native manufacture was swamped by the importation from England, and at the present moment English iron is used to build bridges facing iron-mines. On the northern road from Almorah to Nynoe Tal, there is an iron bridge over a stream which flows downwards from Ramghur. It is built of English iron, and one end of the bridge actually rests on one of the abandoned Ramghur mines.”

Thus much for the unmixed evils of protection, of which we hear so much. Out-and-out free traders of course will be prepared to show that all this was for the benefit of India; and we leave them to do it. The manufacture of cotton fabrics in India has been destroyed by English competition, and this, we have been assured over and over again, is for the benefit of the former country, where, we suppose, starvation agrees with spinners and weavers. Perhaps the time may come when it shall be proved and admitted that free trade, like everything else, has its advantages and its drawbacks; but as the mere hint at such a thing is at this time little better than treason,—indeed, may be considered something worse than treason,—we are content with hinting, and are astonished at our own temerity in venturing so far.

Iron, however, is abundant in India, but its mines are for the most part closed, and in the few instances where worked, it is in a manner most rude. The subject deserves to be looked into, and we rejoice, therefore, that it has attracted the notice of the ruling powers, and that it has been determined to send out a staff of engineers, consisting of a mining engineer, a practical assistant, a smelter, and a working miner. The especial field destined for their operations is to be that of the iron districts of Kumaon and Gurhwal. We believe both countries will repay the cost expended on them. On Kumaon, where mines and forges are at work, we find the following in the article of the Friend of India, to which we have previously referred:—

“In the valleys of the Kotelar and the Khetsaree, in that district [Kumaon], according to a report before us, there are seven mines, affording ore for 146 forges. These forges support 627 families; and although the processes are rude and wasteful in the extreme, the profit appears to be sufficient. The extent to which the ore can be procured cannot be ascertained without experiment, but it exists over a range of hills thirteen miles long. No idea of its richness either can be obtained, for the miners work upon a system which would in Europe render the realization of a profit simply impossible. They excavate the ore without steel tools, draw it from the mine in barrows made of a dried cowhide, give it to their children to break up for the smelter, and throw away the dust. The iron remains in the furnace for twenty-eight hours, and the ‘blast’ is made continuous by the use of a series of buffalo hides, after a most primitive fashion. When one is emptied, another is squeezed, a process that would extort a groan from the humblest fireman on Crawshaw's establishments. The 'blooms' produced by this process are again refined by passing them through another surface, and heating them into bars fit for the market. The loss of ore in the process is very nearly ninety-one per cent., the exact proportion of bar-iron produced being to the ore as 8 1-5th is to 100. Moreover, to produce even this result, 19 pounds of charcoal are required to 2 pounds of iron, or about five times the proportion expended in the Swedish mines. Nevertheless, a profit is obtained, and we cannot but think that these mines once viewed by English miners, interested in success, iron might be obtained from them in large quantities. Fuel, which for a time at least may be considered exhaustless, exists within a distance of three miles; labour, though scarce, may be imported; and the greatest difficulty of all, the absence of a road by which to convey the iron when produced, is overcome by the native miners."

The want of a road might certainly be supplied.

OPENING OF AMERICAN TRADE WITH JAPAN.

The following interesting information has been received from Commodore M. C. Perry, commanding the United States' naval forces in the East India, China, and Japan Seas, dated—

United States Steam Frigate Powhatan, off Hakodadi, Island of Jesso-Japan, May 30:—

"I have examined the ports of Simoda and Hakodadi, which are to be opened to the vessels of the United States, and am happy to inform the Department that with respect to geographical position, convenience of ingress and egress, and commodiousness for all the purposes required, they cannot be surpassed. This is one of the safest and most convenient harbours I have ever seen for vessels of all classes, and it is sufficiently capacious to hold half the navies in the world.

"The authorities and people of the two towns and their vicinities have manifested much kindness and attention. The ships have been promptly supplied at reasonable prices with wood, water, and such other articles as the country could furnish. The singular abstinence of the Japanese from animal food, has never made it necessary for them to rear and fatten animals for market, and hence the scarcity of that aliment so necessary to the people of the western nations. It is quite probable, however, that they will hereafter be prepared to meet the demands of the vessels visiting the two ports. Poultry and fish, and, at the proper seasons, fruit and vegetables, may be obtained in reasonable quantities, and one or two ships could always be provided with a sufficiency for their wants.

"At both places the officers, and those of the crews who have been permitted to leave the ships, go freely about in town and country, and on fishing and shooting excursions, visiting the shops and the temples, and other places of interest, without the slightest hindrance or molestation, and are everywhere treated with kindness and respect, and especially by the country people. But one instance has occurred of annoyance to anyone; and this was at Simoda; and on its being represented to me, I demanded and received an apology from the prefect, who disavowed the acts of the officers who committed the offence.

According to arrangement, I am to meet one or more of the Imperial commissioners at Simoda, on the 15th of next month (June), to settle various matters connected with the proper understanding of the treaty. After this is accomplished, I shall return to Hong Kong, by way of Oho Sima, Loo Choo, and the ports of Ningpo, Foochow, and Amoy in China. The officers of my command have constructed several valuable charts of the harbours and coasts of Japan; and our collection of specimens of natural history and of drawings, sketches, &c. is rapidly increasing.

"One of the vessels in the squadron is now engaged in making a reconnaissance of Volcano Bay, a convenient anchorage about seventy miles from this port.

"Until this time, I have not had it in my power to institute in a thorough manner the researches and inquiries which the department has ordered in its instructions of October 26th, 1852, May 16th, 1853, and June 11th, 1854, with respect to the fate of our fellow-countrymen, supposed either to have been lost at sea, or to be still alive, and held in captivity in Formosa, or the islands of Japan.

"The authorities here have furnished answers to my several inquiries upon the subject, herewith inclosed, and I propose to send the Macedonian, accompanied by the Southampton, to Formosa, there to prosecute every possible research, and at the same time to examine the coal region of that island.

"As evidence of the good understanding subsisting, as well at this place as Kanagawa and Simoda, I may remark that the prefect, governor, mayor, and other persons of rank, visited this ship by invitation last evening, and were entertained by me at a formal supper.

"With great respect, I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

"M. C. PERRY,

Commander-in-chief United States Naval Forces, East-India, China, and Japan Seas.

"Hon. J. C. DOBBSIN, Secretary of the Navy, Washington."

The Utica (United States) Herald has been furnished with the following copy of the letter of the Japanese authorities to Commodore Perry on his return to the islands last winter:—

"The return of your Excellency as ambassador from the United States to this empire has been expected, according to the letter of his Majesty the President, which letter your Excellency delivered last year to his Majesty the Emperor of Japan.

"It is quite impossible to give satisfactory answers at once to all the proposals of your Government, since these points are most positively forbidden by the laws of our Imperial House. But for us to continue bigotedly attached to the ancient law seems to misunderstand the spirit of the age, and we wish rather to conform to what necessity requires.

"At the visit of your Excellency last year, his Majesty the former Emperor was sick and is now dead.

"Since his Majesty the present Emperor has ascended the throne, the many occupations demanding his care in the consequence thereof, are not yet finished, and there is no time to settle the other business thoroughly; moreover, his Majesty the new Emperor, at his accession to the throne, promises to the princes and high officers of the empire to observe the laws. It is therefore evident that he cannot now bring about any alteration in the ancient laws. Last autumn, at the departure of the Dutch ship, the superintendent of the Dutch trade in Japan was requested to inform your Government of this event; and a reply in writing has been received. At Nagasaki the Russian ambassador recently arrived to communicate a wish of his Government; he has since left that place, because no answer would be given to any nation that might communicate similar wishes. However, we admit the urgency, and shall entirely comply with the proposals of your Government concerning coal, wood, water, provisions, and the saving of ships and their crews in distress.

"After being informed which harbour your excellency has selected, that harbour shall be prepared, and this preparation it is estimated will take about five years. Meanwhile a commencement can be made with the coal at Nagasaki by the beginning of the next Japanese year (Feb. 10, 1855).

"Having no precedent with respect to coal, we request your excellency to furnish us with an estimate, and, upon due consideration, this will be complied with, if not in opposition to our laws. What do you understand by provisions? and how much coal? Finally, anything that ships may be in want of, which can be furnished by the productions of the empire, shall be supplied, the prices of merchandise and articles of barter to be fixed upon by Kuruhama, Kahei, Moiriyama Yenoski. After settling the point above mentioned, the treaty can be concluded, and signed at the next interview.

"Seal attached by order of the Imperial Commission.

"Rayel, 7th year, 1st moon, 26th day, Feb. 23, 1854."

LIEUT. G. MILLIGAN, of the Bengal artillery, has been appointed orderly officer at Addiscombe, in the room of Capt. W. Olpherts.

ALTERATION IN DEPARTURE OF MAILS.—The East-India and China Association have received an intimation from the Post Office, that in consequence of their representations regarding the inconvenience sustained from the present arrangements of the mail service between this country and Calcutta leaving too short an interval at Calcutta for the return of correspondence, the Postmaster-General has been in communication with the Admiralty on the subject. The result is, that new tables have been sanctioned, under which an extension of four days will be offered to the inhabitants of Calcutta for answering their correspondence; but the date when the alteration is to come into effect remains to be determined.

THE CHINA MAIL.—The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company have announced that direct communication with China by their steamers on the 20th of each month is for the present discontinued.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

East-India House, 9th August, 1854, and 4th October, 1854.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the annexed code of Regulations for the admission of Candidates at the first Examination, to be held in January next, for the appointment of ASSISTANT-SURGEONS in the service of the East-India Company, has been framed by the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, under the provisions of the Act 16 & 17 Vict. cap. 95, sec. 38.

REGULATIONS FOR THE ADMISSION OF CANDIDATES FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT-SURGEONS IN THE SERVICE OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

All natural-born subjects of her Majesty may be Candidates for admission into the service of the East-India Company as Assistant-Surgeons. They must, however, be between 22 and 28 years of age, and of sound bodily health.

They must subscribe and send in to Dr. Scott, the Physician to the Honourable East-India Company, before the 10th day of December, 1854, a declaration to the following effect:—

"I (Christian and surname at full length), a Candidate for employment as an Assistant-Surgeon in the service of the East-India Company, do hereby declare that I was years of age on the day of last, and that I labour under no constitutional disease or physical disability that can interfere with the due discharge of the duties of a medical officer; and I also attest my readiness to proceed on duty to India within three months of receiving my appointment."

This declaration must be accompanied by the following documents:—

1. Proof of age, either by extract from the register of the parish in which the Candidate was born, or by his own declaration pursuant to the Act 5 & 6 Wm. 4. c. 62.
  2. A diploma in surgery, or a degree in medicine, provided an examination in surgery be required for such degree, from some body competent by law to grant or confer such diploma or degree.
  3. A certificate of having attended two courses of lectures, of six months each, on the practice of physic, and of having attended for six months the practice and clinical instruction of the physicians at some hospital, containing at least on an average one hundred in-patients; or of having attended one course of lectures of six months, on the practice of physic, and clinical instruction for twelve months.
  4. A certificate of having attended for three months the practical instruction given at one of the public asylums for the treatment of the insane.
  5. A certificate of having attended for three months one of the institutions, or wards of a hospital, especially devoted to the treatment of ophthalmic disease.
  6. A certificate of having attended a course of lectures on midwifery, and of having conducted at least six labours.
  7. A certificate of having acquired a practical knowledge of cupping.
- Candidates may also, at their option, send in certificates of attendance at any hospitals, or on any courses of lectures, in addition to the above. Attendance on a course of military surgery is recommended.
- Candidates producing satisfactory certificates will be admitted to an Examination to be held in January, 1855.

The Examination will include the following subjects:—

1. Surgery in all its departments.
  2. Medicine, including the diseases of women and children, therapeutics, pharmacy, and hygiene.
  3. Anatomy and physiology, including comparative anatomy.
  4. Natural history, including botany and zoology.
- The examination will be conducted—
1. By means of written questions and answers.

2. By object examinations and experiments, when the subject admits of such tests.
3. By practical examination at the bedside of the patient, and by dissections and operations on the dead body.
4. By viva-voce examination.

The persons who shall be pronounced by the Examiners to be the best qualified in all respects, shall be appointed to fill the requisite number of appointments as Assistant-Surgeons in the East-India Company's service.

All Assistant-Surgeons are required to subscribe to the Military or Medical, and Medical Retiring Funds, at the Presidencies to which they may be respectively appointed, and to the Military Orphan Society also, if appointed to Bengal.

All Assistant-Surgeons who shall neglect or refuse to proceed to India under the orders of the Court of Directors, within three months from the date of their appointments, will be considered as having forfeited them, unless special circumstances shall justify a departure from this regulation.

Candidates may apply to Dr. Scott, 13, Stratton Street, for further information, if needed.

N.B.—The certificates and notices as to Examination herein contained, apply only to the Examination to be held in January next. Regulations regarding the requirements of Candidates for future Examinations will be issued after the first Examination.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

NOTE, 4TH OCTOBER, 1854.

Candidates who may not have been able to attend the practice of an asylum for the insane, or of an ophthalmic hospital, for three months previous to offering themselves for examination in January, 1855, will not be excluded from examination, but will, if successful in obtaining recommendation for appointments, be required to produce certificates of having attended such practice during the interval between the examination and the time of proceeding to India.

The Board of Examiners of Candidates for the appointments of Assistant-Surgeons in the East-India Company's service, give notice that, on the 8th January, 1855, they will hold Examinations at the East-India House, for the selections of Assistant-Surgeons. The selection will be made according to merit, and it is expected that about thirty appointments will be awarded.

J. D. DICKINSON, Deputy Secretary.

East-India House, 4th October, 1854.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY do hereby give notice,

Allen's Maps of India, &c.

DRAWN BY JOHN WALKER.

Geographer to the East-India Company.

A New Map of India;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectories, and the Position and Boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 9 in. wide, £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3 3s.

*.* The object kept in view in compiling this Map, has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all Stations—Civil and Military—are inserted, as well as those of all Towns and places of note, likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various Districts and Collectories, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The Railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for Reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been shunned.

A General Map of India;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Hon. East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3 3s.

Map of India;

From the most recent authorities. On two sheets—Size, 2 ft. 10 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1 1s.

Map of the Routes in India;

With Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this Map are given the whole of the Military and Civil Stations, together with the principal Towns, the villages being omitted so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies.

A Map of the Western Provinces of Hindoostan;

The Punjab, Cabool, Sind, Bhawalpore, &c.; including all the States between Candahar and Allahabad. On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 3 in. high. 30s.; or on cloth, in a case, £2; or on rollers, and varnished, £2 10s.

Map of India and China, Burmah, Siam, the Malay Peninsula, and the Empire of Anam. On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 3 ft. 4 in. high. 10s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1 5s.

Map showing the Steam Communication and Overland Routes

Between England, India, China, and Australia. Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 4 in. high; on cloth, in a case, 14s., or with rollers, and varnished, 18s.

Map of Arabia;

Compiled from all the most recent authorities, by order of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company.—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high; on cloth, in a case, £1 5s.

Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory.

On one sheet, 5s.; or on cloth, in a case, 6s.

Map of Afghanistan and the adjacent Countries;

On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

Map of China,

From the most authentic sources of information. One large sheet—Size, 2 ft. 7 in. wide; 2 ft. 2 in. high. 8s.; or on cloth, in a case, 11s.

Map of the Burman Empire,

Showing the annexed district of Pegu. One sheet, 3s. 6d.; or on cloth, in a case, 5s.

London: WM. H. ALLEN & Co., 7, Leadenhall Street.

This day is published, the 3rd Edition, in post 8vo., cloth lettered, with Map, price 9s.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS invigorate the system and promote health.—Mrs. Reynolds, of Burton, had been a great sufferer, for many years, from a complication of Nervous Diseases, so that her constitution had become very much impaired, which affected both her mental and physical powers; her strength also was completely prostrated. Change of air, change of scene, and every available remedy was resorted to without any beneficial effect whatever, as she appeared to be sinking fast. Holloway's Pills were commenced at this critical period, and by this unrivalled medicine Mrs. Reynolds speedily derived temporary relief, and ultimately a permanent cure was effected, and she continues to enjoy excellent health.

Sold by all vendors of medicines, and at PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY'S Establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

UNDER THE IMMEDIATE PATRONAGE OF THE COURTS OF EUROPE, THE ARISTOCRACY, AND THE UPPER CLASSES.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL is a delightfully

fragrant and transparent preparation for the Hair; and as an invigorator and purifier beyond all precedent. ### SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

ALL the Calcutta papers complain of the want of matter of stirring interest; and well they may. But for a brush on the Peshawur frontier, India would have been altogether without excitement. The inhabitants of two villages in the Michnee Valley had a strong objection to paying revenue—an objection not unfrequently entertained in Europe, and universal throughout India. It operated so powerfully, however, in the villages referred to, that it became a matter of necessity either to forego the revenue or to resort to force for its recovery. The latter plan was of course adopted, and thus we became plunged into a very little war. The expedition dispatched against the refractory villages was under the command of Colonel Cotton, H.M.'s 22nd. The details of the proceeding will be found in another part of our paper. It may suffice here to state, that the expedition was entirely successful, but unfortunately, and most unfortunately, looking at the paltry nature of the affair, success was not achieved without some loss. The first of the villages resisted, and Lieutenant Brownlow, of the 1st Sikhs, and Lieutenant McDougal, of the 9th Native Infantry, were wounded dangerously; but the latest accounts represented both as doing well. The second village offered no resistance, and therefore caused no farther loss.

In regard to Dost Mahomed, the Delhi Gazette, in some prefatory remarks on a letter from Cabul, which, in compliance with old custom, we shall present to our readers, says:—

"The Dost, it appears, will make no formal advances to a mere British Commissioner at Peshawur, and unless he can treat with due dignity, will not treat at all. If our Government is in earnest in its professions of friendship for the ruler of Cabul, it can surely afford to humour him in this matter. We may simply add that we can vouch for the authenticity of the letter from Dost Mahomed to Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan, extracts from which are given below. Our correspondent (who is not a hired news-writer, but an Afghan of rank) copied the letter with his own hand."

The following is the letter from Cabul:—

"Rahmut Khan Oorukzaiee writes from Peshawur to Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan for the information of the Ameer, that he has had an interview with Major Edwardes, and urged the importance of an alliance between the British and Cabul Governments. Major Edwardes replied, that the English were well disposed towards the Ameer, and inclined to treat him with all consideration and honour, but the Ameer had been the first to give offence, and it was now both fitting and necessary that his Highness, if anxious for a reconciliation, should take the initiative by direct advances. Rahmut Khan has accordingly begged Sirdar Mahomed Khan to urge on the Ameer the necessity of following this course. He himself was about to leave for Teerah, but would visit the Sirdar's camp if a personal discussion of the question should be thought necessary."

"Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan writes to his father, the Ameer, of a rumour that the Governor-General has ordered the troops of Peshawur, the Derajat, and Scinde, to be in readiness for service. This report is kept secret by the Ameer.

"The following is from the Dost's letter, in reply to Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan:—

"I fully understand the nature of the correspondence which has passed between yourself and Rahmut Khan Oorukzaie, and I have explained the same to my nobles and courtiers. They all approve of your conduct in advising Rahmut Khan to ask Major Edwardes to obtain from his Government plenipotentiary powers as a necessary preliminary to any formal intercourse, or any direct offer for the establishment of friendly relations.

"So long as Rahmut Khan takes no notice of this demand, I shall attach no importance to what he writes; since it will be plain to me that he has not mentioned the subject to Major Edwardes.

"My messengers bring me word from Shikarpoor, that the chief of the Kelat-i-Nazcer has entered into friendly terms with the British, and it is likely that they, the British, will gain some footing in the Kelat territory, if they do not even establish military posts there. I have accordingly made arrangements to be regularly supplied with news from that quarter.

"My brothers, the Candahar chiefs, have of late been acting most oppressively towards their nobles, several of whom have left Candahar in disgust and come to Cabul, where I have taken them into my service.

"The Ameer goes on to say, that Sirdar Sooltan Ali Khan has returned from Persia, together with the agent of the king of Persia, who had been deputed to his (the Ameer's) court, but was detained for a time at Candahar by the jealousy of Kohundil Khan. The conduct of Kohundil Khan, although it had brought nothing but disgrace and ruin upon himself, still continued to be provoking in the extreme; it was rapidly destroying all bonds of brotherhood between them, and was doing irreparable harm to the cause of Islam. He continues his outrages on the territory of Zaheer-ooldowlah of Herat, who will eventually be compelled to call in the aid of the Feringhees. The Ameer continues:—"Kohundil Khan has sent another agent to Persia complaining to the Shah that I am faithless to my engagements written on the holy Koran, regarding the fort of Kalat. He has even sent the very same Koran for the perusal of his Majesty. I have, however, written to Zaheer-ooldowlah not to sell Herat to the English, who so long as they serve their own interests never care for those of the other contracting party. He replies very justly that he fears my own Candahar brothers more than he does the English, and that if I neither reduce them by force nor divert their attention by sending an army towards Candahar, and so give him an opportunity of recovering his own territory, he will certainly throw himself into the arms of the first friendly power."

"The Ameer adds, that while many of his sirdars profess the greatest anxiety to march against Candahar, he knows that in secret they are the friends of Kohundil Khan. So much for the Ameer's letter to Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan at Khoorm.

"We hear from Merw that the Persian army there has mutinied for want of provisions and from general ill-treatment. The commander, Surteef Sooltan, fled to the Toorkmans, but was seized by the troops, and is now a prisoner in the hands of Meer Ahmud Khan Jumshaidce, the former governor of Merw.

"There is much discussion here as to the terms on which the Persian Elchee stands with the Ameer. The Elchee lately changed his quarters from the house of Mirza Mahomed Hoosain Khan to that of Khan Sherceen Khan, the Persian chief, and the wiseacres attach great importance to this move; some taking it as a sign that the Elchee is in high favour with the Dost, others that he considered his life in danger in his old quarters.

"The Persian Elchee, in a conversation with the Dost on the war in Europe, says that the English ambassador at Teheran has offered to attach to Persia the holy shrines of Nazuf Ashruf and Kurbala, provided the Shah will remain neutral. But shortly afterwards news arrived from "Peterpoor" (St. Petersburg), that the emperor was sending another mission to the court of Persia, with full powers to restore all the provinces wrested by Russia from Persia during the late war, provided the Shah will attack the Turkish provinces on the east. The emperor also communicates to the Shah the favourable result of the negotiations with Bokhara, Kokan, and Khiva; and engages on behalf of those states that they shall not again attack the Persian provinces and carry away slaves, provided the Shah will cooperate with Russia.

"Alee Murdan Khan has just arrived from Candahar with word that Kohundil Khan's son has come from Persia with a force of one thousand men of various nations, besides money and ammunition sent by the Shah. Among these new arrivals are several Russians, who have set about drilling and reorganizing the Candahar troops. From the same authority we hear of a decisive battle which has taken place in Kokan. The Russian force, which has been for some time encamped at Aka Musjid, marched to take possession of a place called Tajkund. It was opposed on the road by forty thousand Oosbegs; but the latter were defeated, and the country lies at the mercy of the Russians."

Madras is as amusing as ever, but we cannot find in the journals from that presidency anything sufficiently amusing to entitle it to notice or insertion here.

We turn to Bombay, but are struck with dismay at reading in one of its papers "the past fortnight has been a singularly uninteresting one," and in another, "Bombay has been particularly dull during the last fortnight." These editors must conspire, and we commend the above passages to the notice of some veteran inquirer into "literary coincidences." The word of promise at any rate is faithfully kept. "Nothing can come of nothing:" and so there is no intelligence.

Ceylon is seldom very bountiful of news for this portion of our Mail, and the present arrival does not furnish an exception.

The following from the China Mail, 7th September, excites some fears for the continued comforts of our countrymen at Hong-Kong. We hope they will turn out to be groundless.

"Hai-fung and Lok-fung, the chief cities of the districts from which the Hong-Kong poultry market is chiefly supplied, were attacked and taken by the 'insurgents' on Sunday last—probably by the large fleet that was lately plundering the fishing craft near Tam-koon-tow, and which, Mr. Caldwell was informed, had proceeded in that direction. The chief magistrate of Hai-fung was killed, and the assistant magistrate arrived in Hong-Kong last evening, and we are told, has chartered the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Tartar to bring his family to Hong-Kong. [The Tartar arrived back on the afternoon of the 8th.]"

With some extracts from the Friend of China, we close our budget.

"The siege of Canton continues, but insurgent prospects of success are not apparent. Up to within the last three days the beleaguers have had two camps, one in the valley north, the other south of the White Cloud mountain ridge. The camp on the south, in the vicinity of the Leper village, has been vacated lately—the imperialists reporting the movement as the effect of their arms, of course. It is believed that the rebels are concentrating for a grand attack, and are busily engaged in collecting supplies for their commissariat. There has now been no fighting for several days, and the imperialists are doing their best to diffuse opinions of the improbability of further attempts. Amongst other things they show reason for discouragement by circulating a report of the recapture of Nanking, as having occurred in the latter part of June last. The account is very circumstantial. The narrators, however, have overlooked one little circumstance. H.M.S. Rattler and Styx left Nanking early in July, when the city holders appeared as staunch and as saucy as ever."

"Having regular communication with the Canton bands, a large body of men hold the fort in the passage leading from Blenheim Reach to Canton, the leader of whom has assumed the functions of a police magistrate and summarily adjudicates in cases of crime brought before him. Several piratical junks anchored under the fort were ordered off the other day, and, on exhibition of an intention to stay, were fired into. The chief of this fort says that a large fleet of armed vessels under the rebel flag will shortly arrive at Whampoa, and exertions will be made to clear the river of pirates. Some vessels are to be seen in Anson's Bay, outside the entrance of the Canton river, otherwise imperialist men-of-war are not to be found between the Bogue and French Folly, Canton; if we may except a couple of armed west coast boats anchored (last week) off the entrance of a notorious pirate creek leading from Whampoa Town to the North River. Piracy is consequently of continued occurrence, and it is not safe for boats to pass down after sunset.

"H.M.S. Rattler and Racehorse have been doing good service in destroying piratical vessels in the vicinity of Hong Kong lately, and during the last week the Rattler has been cruising about continually between Fan-sy-ak (islets between Lintin and the main) and this port. A short distance from Fan-sy-ak, a week ago, the Ningpo schooner Enma, under English colours, was boarded by pirates, and the owner, Mr. Wadman, shot in the thigh. On her passage to Canton, a few days ago, the H. & C. Co.'s steamer Hong Kong was hailed from a mandarin boat in the river, and, on stopping, an officer of some rank came on board and requested Captain Gibson to convoy a fleet (half a dozen vessels) above Whampoa, alleging his apprehensions for their capture by some pursuing boats from Toong koon, which town the mandarin said he had just fled from. To give the applicant and his suite, for a consideration, passages to Canton, was all the favour that could be accorded.

"The town of Kowloon, opposite Hong Kong, the capture of which was told in our last Summary, was left by the bulk of the captors a few days afterwards; and on the promised payment of four hundred dollars was again taken for the imperialists by a party of filibusters from Hong Kong, on the 31st ultimo.

"There was an extensive fire at Canton, not a quarter of a mile from the factories, on the 30th ult., believed to have been the work of incendiaries.

"Of trade at Canton there is as little as was reported last Mail."

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA, REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

H.M.'s TROOPS.—Lieut. S. J. Lyle, H.M.'s 70th Foot, at Ferozepore, aged 25, Sept. 7; Lieut.-Col. W. L. Braybrooke, Ceylon Rifles, on board H.M.'s ship Vulcan, from wounds received in the battle of Alma; Staff-surg. J. Hawkey, at Hong-Kong, Sept. 2.

BENGAL.—Lieut. R. W. Anderson, 70th N.I., at Umballa; Maj. C. Baseley, 51st N.I., at Rawul Pindie, Sept. 7; 2nd Lieut. W. H. Bennett, 2nd Eur. Fus., at Prome, Aug. 22; Lieut. P. Darling, 24th N.I., at Cashmere, Aug. 29; Assist. Surg. G. T. Fogarty, 70th N.I., at Umballa, Sept. 3.

MADRAS.—Assist. Surg. T. L. Bell, at Hingolee, Sept. 6. [In our last number the name of Lieut.-Col. G. A. Baillie, 52nd N.I., was inserted amongst the casualties instead of Lieut.-Col. A. Baillie, of the retired list.]

BENGAL.

THE NIZAMUT OF BENGAL.

Many animal substances in a state of putrefaction appear to emit a light which startles the superstitious. We have been forcibly reminded of this natural fact by the Hurkaru's account of the recent festivities at Berhampore. The children of the Nuwab of Moorshedabad were permitted to visit the Lieutenant-Governor, and the procession which accompanied them realized the English idea of Oriental gorgeousness. Elephants and camels richly caparisoned, guards and eunuchs loaded with ornaments, silver chairs, and golden trellis-work, trappings covered with jewels, and hundreds of retainers clothed in scarlet, enabled the spectator to recall the belief of his childhood in the pictures of the Arabian Nights. The eldest child was carried in a silver chair; the two younger boys were borne on a platform surrounded by a trellis-work of precious metal. All three were loaded with jewels which a Marchioness of Londonderry might have seen with envy. The whole scene was rich in all the brightness of Oriental colouring, yet the blaze was, after all, only the phosphorescent glitter of decay. Even while it proceeded, the Nuwab was losing the last remains alike of privilege and prestige. The Supreme Legislature has stripped him of the one, and the Lieut.-Governor himself has destroyed the other. Hitherto it has always been considered that the Nuwab Nazim was exempt from the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts of justice. The belief rested upon no real foundation, and has repeatedly been productive of grave obstructions to the administration of the law. It was, however, tacitly admitted. The law was uncertain. The Government was unwilling to degrade the Nuwab, without due and sufficient cause. Successive agents, perhaps influenced by a not unnatural anxiety to prove that they were not "resting on golden cushions" upheld the privileges of the Nizamut. One magistrate tried to suppress the local slave trade of Moorshedabad. It was proved that the slaves were purchased by the Begums, the agent interfered, and the attempt failed. Then came a long scene of intrigue in the court, the true history of which is probably not known to man, and certainly will never be revealed. Lastly, the murder of the fuqueer and the slave filled the cup to overflowing. It was believed that strong suspicion of complicity might rest on the Nuwab, and his right to exemption under all circumstances was formally brought before the Government. It was, we believe, as formally denied. The privileges of the Nizamut rested on no treaty, and were guaranteed by no pledge. So far as they existed they were the free gift of the Government, without any value received, and might be resumed at any moment. Even as a free gift, they did not include an absolute immunity from punishment. The feeling produced by this occurrence was not diminished by the conduct and subsequent proceedings of the nuwab. He refused even to give evidence, threatened suicide, and finally, if popular rumour is to be believed, protected his delinquent officers to the utmost of his power. It became evident that these privileges, real or fictitious, were obstructions to the course of ordinary justice. The public voice demanded their abrogation. The Government, sensible that the privileges claimed were practically noxious, was sensible also that they were wrong in principle. Every native was induced to believe that the highest privilege of the highest noble was exemption from the authority of the law. The legislature appreciated the danger, and on the 29th July, while the festivities were proceeding at Berhampore, a bill was read a second time for abolishing the privileges of the Nizamut. By this Act all protection is removed, and every individual in the palace is liable to every process of court, served through the agent of the Governor-General.

The Legislature had performed its part. It was necessary for the executive Government, also, to announce its determination to enforce the laws, however high the rank of those who presumed to set them at defiance. This was effected by refusing to the Nuwab of Moorshedabad the honours usually paid to native rank. The Lieutenant-Governor refused to see him. He refused to visit him. He refused even to set foot in his palace, and, by visiting all other natives of condition, showed that the exclusion was intended only for the individual offender. The punishment was the more severe from the extreme tenacity with which this family cling to the insignia of their nominal rank. That it was thoroughly deserved will be admitted by all who know anything of the secret history of the pageant Court of Moorshedabad.

The personal punishment administered will be approved by the public. The bill will not be condemned, as far as it extends. It does not, however, extend far enough, for it fails to establish the principle it is so desirable to recognise. The Nuwab and his family are still, in seeming at least, above the ordinary law. There is still a wall between them and justice in the shape of a Government agent. If that officer is really desirous of accelerating the operation of the courts, he is reduced to the position of a highly paid bailiff. If, on the other hand, he holds with Mr. Torrens, that the Nuwab is the "titular sovereign of Bengal;" or with Sir G. Clerk, that barbarians should be pitied, and not coerced, he may interpose infinite delay. Why should not the Nuwab obey the law, as well as the Prince Consort or the Duke of Northumberland? The civil exemption signifies little. It is no more than is enjoyed by every peer in England, and by every member of the House of Commons. If a similar immunity were made universal, and the whole law of arrest abolished, nobody would suffer except perhaps attorneys and reckless tradesmen. But the Indian, like the English noble, should be responsible for every breach of the criminal law, and compelled, by giving evidence, to facilitate the operations of civil justice. We would make the magistrate's order as valid in the palace as in the hut, and allow a subpoena to run in the Nizamut, as well as in the house of the water-carrier. An exemption which the highest noble in England would not dare to plead, need not be granted to a native. If the Governor-General, or the Commander-in-Chief, the metropolitan or the chief justice, were summoned in the Supreme Court to give evidence, they would attend. If neither rank or public convenience, sacred functions or the respect due to the ermine, can save Europeans, why should the Nuwab retain privileges, granted because his ancestor was an unsuccessful traitor, alike to his own master and to his foreign ally. An opportunity has occurred of proving to the native community that the law is above all, and it should not be thrown away.—Friend of India.

STEAM COMMUNICATION FROM GOWHATTY TO DEBROOGHUR.

In January, 1851, the Governor-General's agent, North-Eastern Frontier, addressed the political agent of Upper Assam on the subject of the extension of steam communication from Gowhatty to Debrooghur. Captain Vetch, after collecting every possible information on the subject, submitted in April of the same year a very able and detailed report, expressing his firm conviction that the periodical despatch of a steamer from Gowhatty to Debrooghur would be beneficial alike to the country and to Government. He recommended that the steamers extending their trips to Upper Assam should be those leaving Calcutta in March, June, August, and November, that they should call at Tezpor and Sibsaur, and he clearly showed that a fair amount of freight upwards, and a full cargo downwards might be depended upon. He moreover alluded to the excellent quality of coal found in the upper parts of the valley in the vicinity of the Deeling, a large and navigable river flowing into the Berhampooter only thirty-two miles below Debrooghur, stating that coal in any quantity might be obtained at from four to five annas per maund; but that if the mines were worked on scientific and economical principles, a considerable reduction of the cost of fuel would ensue. He then reported that the Berhampooter throughout a course of 800 miles is perfectly navigable at all seasons of the year, and he finally pointed out the favourable impression in a political point of view, which the periodical appearance of a steamer in Upper Assam would produce. To these valuable details Captain Vetch adds some remarks well deserving of notice. "No one," says Captain Vetch, "will dispute the great fertility of Upper Assam, or that the soil and climate are not particularly well suited for the production of tea, sugar, moongah, silk, cotton, indigo, and other dyes, yet hundreds of thousands of acres fit for their cultivation remain waste in a country watered by the finest river in India, and in a climate which, as far as I can judge from upwards of twenty years' residence, is quite as healthy as the generality of India, and far more agreeable than that of Bengal." The cause of this he ascribes to its comparative inaccessibility by the ordinary mode of travelling in country boats, assuring us that during the rains a 1,000 maund boat cannot perform the trip from Gowhatty to Debrooghur, a distance of 250 miles, in less than two months and a half, whilst a passage from Calcutta to Debrooghur, would actually take as much time as a voyage to England round the Cape.

This valuable report was forwarded through Major Jenkins, the Governor-General's agent, to the superintendent of Marine, on the 10th of May, 1851, but the latter cut the matter short, by saying that as the proposed arrangement would not be profitable and entail additional expense, he did not like to propose the extension of the line, but that if it were shown that Government would attain thereby any political object of sufficient importance, he had no doubt that sanction for the extension would be granted. We have some strong doubts whether it was within the power of the superintendent of Marine to dispose of so important a subject without reference to Government, which is the only competent authority to decide on such a matter, and it strikes us that Government, under the circumstances stated by Captain Vetch, might perhaps have attached less weight to political consideration, and notwithstanding the extension of the line not being profitable, have nevertheless found it advisable to sanction it. The report, therefore, appears to have been shelved among the records of the Marine office, and in all probability would never have come to light, had not circumstances accidentally brought it forward. It is well known that the Assam Company for some time past, has strongly urged upon Government the establishment of a steam communication on the Berhampooter, and that Mr. Mills, in his official report of his visit to Upper Assam, very forcibly points out the advantages likely to accrue from such an arrangement.

It was therefore decided that the experiment should be tried, and the steamer Thames was consequently ordered to extend her trip from Gowhatty to Debrooghur. On the 14th of June last, the superintendent of marine reported the financial result of the experiment, which, together with the strong recommendation of Mr. Mills, induced the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to conclude that a regular communication might with advantage be set on foot between Debrooghur and Dacca by steamers expressly built and appropriated to that purpose, to be met by a similar line of steamers plying between Dacca and Calcutta. With a view to ascertain the probable expenses and returns of such steamer, the superintendent of marine, of the 22nd of June last, was requested to submit a report; but, in order to collect every possible information, the Governor-General's agent at Gowhatty was likewise addressed, and his reply has brought forth a copy of the original communications forwarded to the superintendent of marine in 1851. Here the matter rests until the report of the latter officer is received.

It is but natural that, before carrying out the undertaking, the marine authorities should be called upon to submit an estimate of the probable expense; it is but prudent that the Governor-General's agent at Gowhatty should have been requested to report his views on the subject; and we are by no means surprised that Mr. Mills's very able report should have revived the old proposal; but we doubt whether any of these gentlemen are able to afford much information on the most important part, by which the undertaking must be influenced—the probable returns.

It appears to us, therefore, that this information ought to be sought from the Chamber of Commerce and the Trade Association, as well as from the Assam Company, which, from various circumstances, would be able to furnish most ample commercial statistics bearing on this important question. The advantages resulting from the intended extension of the line are too apparent to need to be dwelt upon minutely, still, if its establishment is to be guided by entirely financial views, we fear that the chances for the immediate carrying out of the arrangements are somewhat unfavourable. The past history of inland and coasting steamers affords abundant proofs. Every line had to be undertaken by Government, and whatever the other advantages derived therefrom might have been, it is a fact that, in the beginning, each entailed a pecuniary loss. As Government, however, judged of the importance of steam communication, not by the map of the particular lines, but by that of India, the undertaking was persevered in, and finally yielded a handsome return. We hope these comprehensive views of Government will also be allowed to have due weight on the present occasion, and that, before another year elapses, steamers will ply on the Berhampooter as regularly as they do on the Ganges. Assam opens a splendid field for enterprise, and we have but little doubt that regular steam communication, backed by increased facilities for inland transport, will, in a few years, render the productions of Assam as well known in the London market, as at present are the indigo, sugar, saltpetre, and silk of Bengal. The 100,000 acres of waste land, alluded to by Captain Vetch, will be converted into rich fields, from which a due share of the profits will flow into the Indian Exchequer.—Hurkaru.

FACTS FROM PEGU.

The apophthegm, happy the nation whose annals are tedious, finds its best illustration in the history of modern India. Its provinces appear to come before the public only in the season of misfortune. If a famine is impending, or a half-subdued tribe rises in revolt, the journals are filled with anticipations of death, or records of the disaster. The desolation of Oude fills columns, while scarcely a paragraph is devoted to the prosperity of Mysore. We hear of Assam only when an inroad of the Nagas, or some development of the opium traffic, affords matter for a diatribe against the Government. Who knows anything of the silent growth of the North West in commercial wealth? yet every petty riot in a Mussulman city receives its full share of attention and remark. It is for this reason that the province of Pegu has almost slipped away from the notice of the public and its organs. An order or two admitting European ladies further into the interior, marks the gradual disappearance of even the possibility of an outbreak. A complaint or two of the condition of the Post-office shows, that in the opinion of residents there is no obstacle to the introduction of the appliances of civilized life. And this is all that we receive from a province, which scarcely two years since was watched with the interest with which men now watch the defence of Silistria, or the movements of Prince Gortschakoff.

Yet there is progress in Pegu, and that too of the kind for which even the most sanguine were not so speedily prepared. We are informed, and upon authority which has never yet failed us, that throughout the country there is not only peace but tranquillity. The dacoits seem for the present almost to have disappeared. No great robberies have occurred, and no villages have been attacked for weeks. The court of Ava seems to have discovered that war, open or concealed against such an enemy, is useless, and to be disposed to rely upon its fraudulent diplomacy. An envoy is coming down from Ava, is daily expected in Rangoon, and will probably make his appearance before the Governor-General himself. His mission, it is said, is to obtain from the Government a cession of the district of Mengdoon. From this tract the present monarch derived his former designation, and its capture is said to affect him as the destruction of Orange affected William the Third. It is regarded as a personal humiliation, and the king, it is considered, may be brought for such a price to consent to a written treaty. Some such document appears to be ardently desired even by the Government of India, and on apparently substantial grounds. It is sometimes necessary to succumb to the political superstitions of Europe, and among them is the belief that a written agreement is the fitting termination to a victorious campaign. The treaty also might enable us to secure certain commercial privileges, to obtain the complete navigation of the upper portion of the Irrawaddy, and to plant a resident at the court of Ava. It is a matter of doubt, however, whether such a treaty will be obtained, and whether even if extorted, the advantages it may secure are worth the purchase-money. It is believed by those best acquainted with the policy of Ava, that the embassy is a delusion. The envoy will proceed to Rangoon, and may visit Calcutta. He will receive all presents offered him, and will be like all other Asiatics, always courteous, will admire Calcutta and the steamers, and be astounded by the railway. He may even on behalf of his master, agree to minor conditions, to custom-house restrictions, or to a free navigation. But he will cede no territory. He will not acknowledge the conquest of Pegu, or submit formally to recognize its annexation. The extreme aversion of the court to any such concession has already been signally illustrated. The Burmese court fully believed that their refusal at Prome would be followed by an attack on Ava, and the downfall of the monarchy. Yet they still refused to sign. Such are the opinions of those best qualified to judge, though we cannot yield them our entire assent. We think it possible, that Lord Dalhousie may secure in Calcutta the treaty which was refused at Prome, and that the king may sign a paper which his subjects will not hear of, and which will be valueless, should he ever obtain an opportunity of breaking the promises it will contain. But the value of the purchase-money is a question of more direct importance, and also more easily decided. It is said that Mengdoon contains great seams of coal. A seam of good coal upon the Irrawaddy, in the present state of steam navigation, would be worth all the treaties Asiatic princes ever violated, and the subject should receive the anxious attention of the Government. It should not be forgotten, either, that the inhabitants of the province, which it is possible we may surrender, have been British subjects, that no paper stipulations will protect them from the vengeance of their master, and that that vengeance may give a shock to our prestige throughout Indo-Chinese Asia. It may also revive the fears of the Talines. Mendoon has been surrendered. Why not Prome? Kanoung, a district a little further down the river, is the place from which the heir apparent derives his title. He will one day become the sovereign, and he also may reasonably ask a similar concession to his personal dignity. It is true his request will be refused, but the Peguans are scarcely competent to decide on a probability of that description. Such considerations should, we think, induce the Government to pause before it suffers the god Terminus to march backward.

For the rest, our correspondents speak only of progress. Rangoon, in spite of innumerable difficulties, is improving under the auspices of one of the ablest officers on the commission. The lots in the eastern or lower end of the town, have been almost all taken, and at prices higher than those so severely condemned by the local journal. Brick houses are rising as fast as the boundless laziness of Burmese workmen will permit. The priests have received sites for their monasteries, and these, by a judicious moderation, have been exempted from taxation. Public works are advancing, though checked for the moment by the rains, and the lines of the most necessary roads have been marked out. Their construction has also commenced, and the dissatisfaction so often expressed by correspondents is caused not by tardiness, but by the wretchedness of the material employed. The bricks used in Pegu are worse even than those of Bengal. They crumble under comparatively slight weights, and no foundation for the road can be made in the alluvium. This defect might be remedied. A vast quantity of small boulders are to be found at low water in the bed of the river near Prome. They resemble English paving stones more than other geological production, and might be brought down by the river flats, or on rafts, in thousands of tons. Rangoon would then possess as good a material for metal-lings as Calcutta.

But one disaster appears seriously to have impeded the progress of physical improvement. The electric telegraph is for a moment at a stand. We confess we are somewhat at a loss to comprehend the policy of the local authorities with regard to this undertaking. They were well aware that Dr. O'Shaughnessy's cheap system had succeeded. They were aware also of the desire of the Government of India to secure uniformity of construction, to prefer speed to show, and economy to an elaborate but useless perfection. Yet in spite of this knowledge, they commenced preparations, which would scarcely have been reasonable in Germany or England. A special officer was appointed for the construction of the line, and a number of others selected to assist him. Lastly, we are positively assured, though we dare not vouch for a statement apparently so absurd, it was in contemplation to level the route, and to construct a road for the reception of the telegraph. The estimates, in consequence, were excessive, the Government of India has learnt from experience that cheapness and efficiency may be combined, and the scheme was negatived. There can be no necessity for giving to Pegu a line more finished than is required in India, and one correspondent, who can scarcely be misinformed, assures us it can be constructed for very little more than Dr. O'Shaughnessy's estimate. There is nothing to make it expensive. In a province covered with teak, posts can always be procured, there is water carriage for the wire, and commissioned officers will not construct the line one whit better than the trained privates of Warley.—Friend of India.

MR. WELBY JACKSON ON THE ADMINISTRATION OF BENGAL.

The Court of Directors have republished the report of the administration of the Punjab. They will exercise a wise discretion in republishing also Mr. Jackson's report on the administration of Bengal. It is at once the best proof of their own desire to listen to the truth, and the fairness of the servants they employ to ascertain it. Our repeated assertion, that the higher officials are the greatest radicals in India, need no further justification. Mr. Jackson is an old civilian, and civilians have been decried as men peculiarly impervious to the facts around them.

He was a sadder judge, and the sadder has been considered, like the Court of Chancery, the very hotbed of official conservatism. He was employed on an official tour, and it suits the opponents of the Government to declare that these official tours, like a director's dinner, are intended to make things pleasant. Mr. Jackson, a civilian, and a sadder judge, sends up, as the result of his official tour, a report which daguerreotypes every evil in Bengal. He has scarcely passed over an abuse, and is especially severe upon those which are created by the peculiar structure of his own service. Facts which any Government less honest would certainly conceal,—abuses which have escaped popular attention,—and charges to which we are only accustomed in the Englishman, are here described with all the gravity of official accuracy, and all the calm acumen of the judge. The whole are given to the world by the Government which Mr. Blackett believes incapable of impartiality. We question if an English cabinet would publish such strictures, or an English home secretary permit such freedom of animadversion.

Mr. Jackson divides his remarks into seven heads, but the last five are of less importance, and we shall confine ourselves to the two great subjects of the revenue, and the administration of justice. There is scarcely a sentence or a suggestion in the report from which we are able to dissent, and we shall therefore endeavour rather to analyse Mr. Jackson's views, than to controvert or approve them. And first as to the great question of the revenue. The perpetual settlement is at last admitted to be an irremediable mistake. The object which Lord Cornwallis had at heart was to create a wealthy class, and thereby to benefit the people. The first portion of that object has been attained, but the second remains more distant than before. The problem has been solved, but the corollary remains to be demonstrated, and from somewhat different data. We have in Bengal a great class of wealthy landholders. It is true, the ancient families, with their spendthrift ways, have perished, as the French seigneurie perished under the law of subdivision, and the Irish gentry under the Encumbered Estates Act. Their dependants and factors, intriguing officials and prosperous money-lenders, have superseded them on the land, but the wealth has only been transferred. There are fortunes in Bengal which an English peer, a Russian prince, or a Yankee steamboat proprietor need not despise.

We can point out one man whose estate is larger than Cumberland and Yorkshire, another who owned a province, and mortgaged it, and a third who has estates in eleven counties, and counts his tenantry by hundreds in each of the eleven. The assessment, originally heavy, has, except in a few exceptional cases, gradually become light. The waste land included in the estate has been cultivated, and new staples have occasionally been introduced. Mr. Jackson might have added that all sub-tenures have been swept away, that all profits have merged in that of the zemindar, and that petty estates have suddenly disappeared, absorbed in the vast properties around them. Thus far the "Settlement" has succeeded. In every other respect, as an aid to civilization, and an incentive to physical improvement, as a corrective of native vices, and a palliative of native oppression, it has utterly broken down. The zemindars have not become English landlords. They have not become even Turkish agas, a rough, kindly, half feudal aristocracy. They have become mere lords of the manor, leasing entire properties in perpetuity, and living on an immovable rent, which leaves them as little temptation as inclination to improve. Even this wealth is misspent.

The zemindars have made no improvements in agriculture, for the profit under this lazy system would go to the tenant, and they have effected no work of public utility. "Even the police, in the effective state of which every one is interested, receives no support from them, though such support is positively required of them by the law; on the contrary, one of the chief difficulties of the police is the control of these men who are bound to support it; they keep armed bodies of ruffians, who commit most of the crimes in the country: they have neglected the village watch, which they were bound to keep up, and have absorbed their allowances of land or money; they have objected to the survey of their estates, whereas it would be imagined that every honest landlord would be gratified by having the assets of his estate clearly fixed and recorded without any additional expense thrown on him." This is the system so earnestly desired by a clique at Madras. Meanwhile, this nominal tenure, useless for improvement, is all powerful as a check on progress. It renders all sub-tenures uncertain. A putnedar or under-tenant, may improve his property for years, and enjoy the profits for a period. The next zemindar, who never spent a penny on the land may be a spendthrift. His right of receiving rent goes to the hammer, and with it the leases of every subordinate holder, perhaps five deep. The new man is probably a money-lender, who regards his tenantry as mere machines; he instantly takes advantage of the mania for bits of land, splits up the "putnees," or holdings, and demands rack rents from twice the number of paupers. Some such process must have taken place when the great Jessore estate went the other day to the hammer. This peculiar tenure does not exist in England, but we think we can make its results intelligible. The family of the Stanleys have never, we believe, granted a lease, yet many of their tenantry are as ancient as themselves. "Suppose that on every demise of one of the race, the entire body of the tenantry were turned out, and the tenancy of the farms put up to auction. How much money would the new tenant spend in permanent improvements? This is the real, ever present, evil of our system in Bengal, which Mr. Jackson would remedy by upholding every lease sanctioned by the collector,—the very principle of the proposed new Sale Law.

The second evil is the relation of the cultivating tenant, cottier, feuar, or whatever the ryot may be called, to his superior. Under Act VII. of 1799, and V. of 1812, the first process for levying rent is to put the man in prison. To do this, it is only necessary to commit an act of perjury, and the claimant is a Bengalee. It is true, the ryot may give security, but it must be given at the Sudder station, which is perhaps fifty miles off,—some of the Dinagapore tenantry must be a hundred miles from justice,—and where is he to obtain security? The demand is a mockery, and thus the whole of the tenantry are given up, bound hand and foot to the landlord, that landlord an Asiatic, and that Asiatic a Bengalee. The consequences are thus summed up by the grave sadder judge:—"It is scarcely to be conceived how enormous is the extent of tyranny and oppression carried on under the present law; so much so, that zemindars and men of respectability have assured me, that almost all the claims enforced by those means are false; the ryots so well know the power of the zemindars that if they are really in balance, they never think of contesting the point." Yet there are thousands of such suits brought every year. The remedy suggested by Mr. Jackson is to confer the summary jurisdiction in such questions on the moonsiffs, and to refuse the warrant of arrest unless the claimant can prove his case there and then.

On the judicial question Mr. Jackson is equally explicit. We ourselves, who consider delay to be the one monster evil of our courts, have scarcely ventured on language so peremptory in its condemnation. The "harassing system of continual appeals, remands, and re-trials, and the whole string of appeals over again seems to open a vista of litigation, the termination of which is lost in the perspective." "The courts are objects of fear," they are useless to the poor, who cannot endure the expense; they are useless to the honest, who will not endure the harassing appeals; they are beneficial only to "the pleaders, who profit under any circumstances, in proportion to the length and quantity of litigation, and those who wish to enforce dishonest claims." Of the remedies Mr. Jackson suggests, many have since his visit been applied. Parties to the suit are now admitted as evidence, and witnesses must attend under a penalty, but the Government still fears to attack the interminable "record." Moreover, he would abolish appeal on questions of fact, would compel judges to supervise their subordinates, would create an examination for European as well as native judges, and would advise every civilian to retire after thirty-five years of service. There is, we believe, not one of these recommendations which will not meet with the approval alike of officials and the public. On one question only Mr. Jackson allowed himself to be shackled by his instincts as a sadder judge. He would retain the civil appeal. We believe it to be, next to the record, the greatest nuisance now existing in Bengal. In criminal cases we reluctantly confess an appeal is almost indispensable. In civil cases of great value, it is not very important, as the wealthy fight chiefly for amusement, and may as well find excitement in litigation as in more objectionable pursuits. It is the poor for whom we plead, and we believe that if every decision up to ten thousand rupees were rendered final, the poor would benefit. Much injustice might possibly be done, but even injustice is more just, than justice obtained after three years' delay, and at an expense exceeding the value of the claim. These then are the great points in which improvement is imperatively required. The defective condition of the tenure impedes the physical advancement of the country, and the defective condition of the civil courts harasses the people, renders property uncertain, and compels us to carry on commercial transactions in reliance solely upon mutual faith. Both subjects at the present moment are receiving the most anxious attention of the authorities. It is none the less necessary to keep perpetually before the public the real objects to be attained. It is not a new tenure that is required, but a modification of the present one. It is not a new civil system that we want, but the abolition of the excrescences on the old one. The body is healthy enough, but the surgeon's knife is required to pare away the ulcers. He cannot cut too deep.—Friend of India.

COL. MARKHAM AND LIEUT. CUMMING.

A Simlah correspondent of the Morning Chronicle gives an account of an altercation between the adjutant-general of Her Majesty's forces in India and Lieut. Cumming of the 32nd regiment, who has lately obtained permission to retire from the service on the sale of his commission, and the subsequent proceedings relative to the quarrel, which, if strictly correct, places the conduct of Col. Markham in anything but a creditable light, and calls for the reprehension of the press in no measured terms. If this is the style in which Col. Markham intends to use his newly-acquired authority, the sooner he is placed at the head of a brigade in Turkey, where he would be in his proper sphere, and deprived of the power of doing harm in India, the better.

We are somewhat surprised that the members of the Simlah cricket club should allow Colonel Markham to dictate who shall or who shall not play on the ground; probably for many members of the club it would be a dangerous proceeding to oppose such assumption of authority on the part of one who seems to have but small scruples about using the power his position gives him to crush a man who has offended him; but there must be some who have nothing to gain from his good will, nothing to fear from his enmity; and we think such will be wanting in self-respect if they do not take measures to evince their disapprobation of Colonel Markham's conduct, and to prevent him from again assuming an authority which belongs to the club as a united body.

Had the colonel been guilty of a similar breach of etiquette on the Calcutta cricket-ground, we feel certain he would have been quickly brought to his bearings, and probably have been given the option of playing with Lieutenant Cumming, or withdrawing from the ground.

Thus far as regards Colonel Markham's conduct to one who on the cricket-ground was his equal. With reference to his subsequent proceedings, in which he makes use of his superior rank and official position to persecute a gentleman whom he had insulted, it is worthy of the man who figured in the Smith and O'Grady affair, but whose gallant conduct and display of military skill at Mooltan had almost wiped out the memory of that youthful indiscretion, and caused the martinet to be lost sight of in the brave soldier and skilful commander.

We have written the above in full reliance that the account of the matter that has reached us is a correct one; and if we have been misled, shall, of course, be prepared to qualify our opinions according to the version of the business which we may hereafter receive. We shall watch the progress of this affair narrowly, for, as now represented to us, it appears to us to demand the interference of the press, which will, we hope, lift up its voice loudly against the perpetration of what cannot but, if correctly recounted, be regarded as an act of cruel injustice.

The Mofussilite gives, in an extra, an account of the altercation between Col. Markham and Mr. Cumming, at the Simlah cricket-ground, from a correspondent who witnessed the scene, and we are sorry to say that it is almost identical with that furnished by the correspondent of the Morning Chronicle, so we fear that there can be no doubt as to Col. Markham having been guilty of conduct which it would be vain to attempt to justify, and which renders him justly chargeable of being, what Mr. Cumming called him, a bully. There is but one course by which Col. Markham can recover the good opinion of all right-thinking men, that is, by apologising to Mr. Cumming and the members of the Simlah cricket-club, and obtaining the immediate recall of the order placing Mr. Cumming under arrest, and directing him to join a regiment to which he does not belong. If the members of the Simlah cricket-club do not call upon the offender to make the amende to them and their guest, and do not expel him from the club if he refuses, there can be little of the spirit of true Englishmen in them.—Hurkaru.

FLAX AND SILK IN THE PUNJAB.

EXTRACT FROM REPORT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF A MEETING OF THE AGRI-HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY OF THE PUNJAB, HELD ON TUESDAY, THE 12TH SEPTEMBER, 1854:—

Present—Major F. C. Burnett, H.A., Vice-President, in the chair; Major Drake, Deputy Judge Advocate General; D. F. McLeod, Esq., c.s., Financial Commissioner; R. Simson, Esq., c.s., Officiating Deputy Commissioner of Lahore; R. Temple, Esq., c.s., Secretary to Chief Commissioner; and the Secretary.

Read—The following communications, received since the last meeting:—

4th.—From H. W. J. Wood, Esq., Secretary to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, dated Calcutta, 21st August, 1854:—

"The sample of flax you last sent has reached me in excellent condition, and I have the pleasure to state that every one, at all conversant with the article, to whom I have referred for an opinion as to its quality, speaks in the highest praise of your flax, and that it would take a very prominent position in the home market.

"Messrs. Harton and Co. have been requested to convert what you have sent into sea lead-line to be tested as to its strength and durability."

5th.—From the same, dated Calcutta, 1st September, 1854:—

"The sample of silk, advised in favour of the 9th ultimo, has been submitted to the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce: and I have the pleasure to send you the following highly favourable opinion of the article pronounced by Mr. Edward Kilburn, to whom the sample was referred for valuation:—

"Bright colour, free and fairly clean, carefully reeled, but two skeins are somewhat cased, and the thread is rather slender.

"From the depressed state of the silk market at the moment it is difficult to name a value; but such, in May, was above Co.'s Rs. 12-8 per factory seer.

"All the elements for a first-class silk exist: the staple is good, and fresher concoctions would yield greater elasticity.

"With still more attention to the reeling, I consider the silk would rank with the product of the best Bengal filatures."

"The above is a very encouraging report from an admirable judge of silk, and I congratulate you on the result of your experiment in an article, which forms one of the most valuable staple exports from Bengal."

FLAX.—The sub-committee, appointed at the last meeting of the society, to draw up a proposition for flax arrangements, submitted, through the secretary, the following suggestions regarding the improvement in, and increase of, the cultivation of flax, or linseed plant, for the sake of its fibre, which they had drawn up in conformity with the wishes of that meeting. They begged they might be taken into immediate consideration, and that, if approved of, such portions as are founded on previous Government sanction, be circulated at once through commissioners, for the information of the agricultural community, with the view of inviting them to aid in the object in contemplation, and that the remainder, containing certain new propositions, be communicated to the local Government for approval, or submission to the Supreme Government, as the chief commissioner may think fit.

1st. It is to be made generally known that a premium of Rs. 500 has been sanctioned by the Supreme Government of India, to be given for the largest area of land that may be appropriated, in the Punjab and the Cis and Trans-Sutlej States, to the culture of flax, during the season of 1854-55, being not less than 25 acres in any one village.

2nd. A second premium, of Rs. 350, has been similarly authorized, for the next largest area so cultivated, being not less than 20 acres in any one village; and—

3rd. A third premium, of Rs. 200, is to be granted for the third largest piece, being not less than 15 acres in any one village; that is to say, the Government will award the first premium to any one landholder, or village community of landholders, who may, in his or their own village, cultivate, for the production of flax fibre, ground aggregating in the whole 25 acres, or as much upwards as the owners may choose.

The quantity of land so cultivated may be 30 acres, or it may be 60. It is for the cultivation of the largest quantity of village land, exceeding 25 acres, that the premium will be awarded.

With regard to the second prize, it is to be understood that though the quantity of land cultivated must not be less than 20 acres, it may be more than 25, the limit for the first premium, and, with regard to the third premium, that the cultivated ground may be any quantity above 15 acres, so that if one claimant should cultivate 60 acres, and no one more, he will receive the first prize; if another claimant should have devoted 32 acres to flax, and no one more, except the first claimant, he will receive the second prize; and if a third should cultivate 18 acres, and no one more, except the first and second claimants, he will receive the third prize.

Moreover, the Government of India have sanctioned the purchase, on behalf of the society, of the entire crop of merchantable flax, including the fibre, if of the required length, that may be produced in the Punjab, and to pay for it at the current market rate of the flax-seed, with 25 per cent. added for the fibre.

The conditions on which the prizes are to be awarded are as follow:—

The land of the claimants to be measured, under the directions of the deputy-commissioner of the district, and the claim to be forwarded, at the close of the season, under that officer's signature, specifying the exact quantity of land cultivated, the number of parcels, if more than one, which have been cultivated to make up the whole, the quantity of seed sown on the land, and the cost of cultivation, where it can be ascertained with accuracy.

Should it be discovered, on examination of the returns from the several deputy-commissioners, for the purpose of awarding prizes, that there are two claims, founded on precisely the same quantity of land, the premium may be divided between the two claimants.

It is to be a condition that not less than sixty seers of flax-seed be sown on each beega, cultivated with a view to competition; and that the growers be informed that Government is prepared to purchase the whole of the seed, and likewise the fibre, if of the proper quality, on the terms above stated, but that the authorities be instructed not to purchase such produce unless it measure, in the stem, three and a half feet in length or more, that it be well dried, and the seed just on the point of ripening, but not so ripe as to allow of its falling out of the pod by the way.

If the following instructions are strictly attended to, there is no doubt that the flax will all be of the required length of staple. Not less than sixty seers of flax must be sown broadcast, that is, with the hand, on each beega, as the thicker it is sown the longer will be the plant, and the more free it will be from branches, which are very injurious. The land must be thoroughly freed from weeds by repeated ploughings, previous to sowing; it must be well manured with the richest manure procurable, such as is given to land for tobacco, be smoothed, and divided into beds as for wheat. The seed must be sown between the 1st and 15th Nov., but not later. The flax land must be watered as frequently as wheat land, and the fields must be kept perfectly free from weeds until the flax is six or seven inches high. After that no more weeding will be required. The land selected should be light loamy soil; Kadir land is the best. When the seed begins to show signs of ripening, the flax must be pulled gently by the root, and laid on the ground to dry in rows. When thoroughly dry, it must be tied up in bundles as large as a man can conveniently span with both hands, and it can thus be easily measured. The seed can be stripped off (rippled) on arrival of the consignment at Lahore, and the final price be arranged according to the current rate of linseed in the Lahore market. That is, if the successful, or any other, competitor (all flax will be bought that is of the required length, whether a premium have been awarded for it or not) who may deliver flax, yielding 125 maunds of linseed, will if, as at present, the nerik, be Rs. 2-8 a maund, receive Rs. 312-8 for the seed, and 25 per cent., or Rs. 78-2 additional, as compensation for the fibre, or Rs. 390-10 in all.

During the coming season, the cultivators must be content to use the flax seed procurable in the bazaar: but they might be informed that, in the course of next year, the society expect a large consignment of flax-seed from Europe, which will be available to those cultivators who may be inclined to follow up these experiments. It must be especially impressed on them that during the Rubee of 1855-56 they must, on no account, use the same land for flax cultivation, which they have used for that product in the Rubee of 1854-55.

The deputy-commissioner is, further requested to purchase, on behalf of Government, and for the society, the whole of the flax that may be grown in his district, if the grower be willing to sell, when approved of by the talseeldar, or any person who may be deputed to examine the crop, provided the length of the stem be not less than three and a half feet, and the whole be thoroughly dry, so that no fermentation is likely to take place by the way. (If properly dried, it will move from any distance in good condition.) He will also carefully weigh, and send it to Lahore, at the charge of Government, with as little delay as possible, and, if required, make advances to the amount of half the probable out-turn of the crop, as estimated after it has been gathered. It is to be understood that successful competitors are to be paid for their crops as well as others, but that no cultivators are bound to sell, should they wish to dispose of their crop in any other manner.

It might be explained to the raeets that those, who are not successful in growing flax of the required length, will find a ready market for the seed in Mooltan, whence it will be conveyed to Sind for export to England.

It might be suggested, as a supplementary recommendation, that each deputy-commissioner, sending in claims on behalf of cultivators, should be requested to specify, as accurately as possible, whether any, and how much, flax has been cultivated in his district, previous to the distribution of these propositions, and how much may have been cultivated in consequence of their promulgation. These returns, it is presumed, can be easily obtained through the respective village putwarees. But it is, under any circumstances, most desirable that all cultivation, old and new, be entered in the returns required, which it would be well to obtain from every district throughout the Punjab, as well as the Cis and Trans-Sutlej states. The deputy-commissioners, in whose districts no flax cultivation is, or has been, carried on, should be requested to make a return to that effect, so that the Government and the society might, at one view, ascertain the immediate and future effect of the propositions now circulated.

It is further strongly recommended, as a new feature in the proposed measures for improving the cultivation of this important staple, that the society be authorized to hire, on behalf of Government, from thirty to forty begas of land in the immediate vicinity of their garden, for the cultivation of flax during the coming season, so as to admit of a comparison being drawn between the flax grown by the zumeendars and the plant reared under probably more favourable circumstances. The seed required for each beega, the purchase of which, it is hoped, the Government will also sanction, will be one maund and a half (at a cost of about 4 rupees); and land is obtainable at Rs. 20 per beega, for which sum the cultivators undertake to perform all agricultural operations, such as ploughing, watering, weeding, sowing, and reaping, for one year; a plan by which the grower can ascertain the expenses of his crop to a rupee. It is strongly recommended to the meeting, that in confident anticipation of the sanction of the authorities to this measure, which anticipation they venture to rest on the past liberality of Government, and the great importance of the subject, and also on account of the advanced state of the season, the secretary be at once empowered to make arrangements for obtaining land.

The Committee have no doubt that the Government will suffer no loss by this transaction, and feel confident that it may yield a considerable profit, after paying all expenses, as will be seen by the following calculation:—

To purchase of flax-seed for sowing 40 beegas of land, 60 maunds, estimated at 2-8 per maund .. .. .	Rs. 150 0 0
To cultivation of 40 beegas of land at 20 rupees .. .. .	800 0 0
To preparation of fibre, making of tools, &c., estimated at .. .. .	750 0 0
To freight of ten tons of flax to England, at 100 rupees per ton .. .. .	1,000 0 0
Total Co.'s Rs. ..	2,700 0 0

By 200 maunds of linseed, 5 maunds per beega, at 2-8 per maund .. .. .	Rs. 500 0 0
By 10 tons of flax, the average produce being estimated at half a ton per acre, at 40% per ton (the current rate in England being nearly double) .. .. .	4,000 0 0
By produce of Khureef crop, at an average of 5 rupees .. .. .	200 0 0
Total Co.'s Rs. ..	4,700 0 0

Leaving the very considerable probable balance of Rs. 2,000 to the credit of the account.

The committee feel assured that a wide circulation of these rules, and the sanction of Government to their new propositions, if approved of by the meeting, will be attended with the most beneficial results; and they would suggest that, in whatever form, or to whatever effect, they may be ultimately approved of and adopted by the society and the authorities, a translation of them be made in simple Oordoo, and printed for general circulation through commissioners and district officers.

Resolved unanimously, That the suggestions of the committee be most cordially approved of, and that a copy of the same be forwarded without delay to the chief commissioner, with a respectful request that he will be pleased to cause the authorized portions to be circulated at once, and to submit the portions not yet authorized to the Supreme Government, should he deem it necessary.

SILK.—In conformity with the directions of the August meeting of the society, the following paper has been drawn up, and is submitted for present consideration:—

It is now established beyond a doubt, that the silkworm can be reared through all the vicissitudes of a Punjab season. The common mulberry, on which the worm can be fed, is abundant in this part of the Punjab. The finer mulberries, such as Morus multicaulis and Morus Chinensis, are cultivable here, and have thriven remarkably well in the garden. The Governor-General in Council has, with much liberality, placed an efficient establishment, brought up from Bengal at a considerable expense, for the winding and reeling of silk, at the disposal of the Agri-Horticultural Society of the Punjab. The establishment have commenced working, and have produced silk, from the cocoons reared by the society, pronounced by competent persons in the local markets far superior to the silk imported from Bokhara and Khorasan, and for which, in token of their sincerity, they offer a higher price, for any quantity that may be produced. The opinion elicited from the Bengal Chamber of Commerce is also of the most favourable description, and should bring encouragement to further exertions. A small portion of the raw silk has even been converted, by Lahore weavers, into deereace, of a quality superior to the ordinary silk manufactured here; and everything augurs well, if the experiment be pursued with zeal and vigour, for the permanent introduction into a country, where new products are so much required, of a new and profitable staple. With reference to the favourable comparison now drawn between the Bokhara, the society's, and Bengal silk, and to a statement (put forth in the account of the silk manufactures of this country, which may be said to have originated the silk experiments of the Punjab) that Bokhara silk was considered much superior to Bengal silk by the Lahore weavers and dealers, it may be as well to state, in reconciliation of the apparent discrepancy, that the western had been preferred to the eastern silk, because it is much stouter: but that to make the Bokhara silk fit for the loom, it is necessary to re-wind it an expense of one rupee per seer, during which re-winding a loss of from three to five tolas of refuse is incurred. The silk, wound here after the Bengal fashion, is turned out of any thickness that may be required to suit it to the local market; and, by reeling, is produced so clean and even that it does not require to be re-wound, a fact which naturally and considerably increases its value in the eyes of the local purchaser.

The society propose, therefore, and beg most respectfully and most earnestly to recommend for the consideration of the local, and submission to the Supreme Government, that the following measures be adopted for the further advancement of a scheme fraught with advantages to a population who have hitherto devoted themselves too exclusively to the cultivation of cereal productions, and who are quite ready to adopt new articles of culture, if they can be shown to be profitable.

It should be borne in mind that, within the next two or three years (during which the people may reasonably look forward to the completion of at least some portion of the magnificent canal-works now carrying on in the Baree Doab under the auspices of a munificent Government), an immense tract of land will be brought within the reach of cultivation, by the fertilizing waters of the canal, but that the further increase of cereal productions, which may be the consequence, for want of other and more profitable objects being brought to the attention of the agriculturist, will be a positive evil to the cultivator, as no proportionate increase of consumption can be looked for for many years to come. On this anticipation alone, the society might with confidence rely for urging the absolute necessity that exists for stretching every nerve to introduce new and profitable products, the rearing and exportation of which must be attended with beneficial results to the cultivator, to the consumer, and to the Government.

It is now recommended, therefore, that the Government should offer, on the excellent plan suggested by the chief commissioner for the cultivation of tea in the Kangra hills, as recorded in the selections from the Punjab correspondence, graduated rewards for the production, by the people themselves, of silk cocoons on the following scale:—Rs. 250 as a first prize for the largest quantity of dried merchantable cocoons, exceeding 100 Company's seers of eighty tolas, that may be produced in the Punjab; the Government to become the purchaser, on behalf of the society, of the cocoons, at the rate of one rupee per seer.—Rs. 200 as a second prize, for the next largest quantity of cocoons, not less than 75 seers; and Rs. 150 as a third prize, for any quantity not less than 50 seers.

It is not necessary that the whole of the quantity for competition be given in at one time, but it is to be understood that the entire quantity of silk cocoons must be delivered, by the growers who are desirous to compete for prizes, in Lahore, before the end of October, 1855; the Government to purchase all the good cocoons that may be offered, at the rate of one rupee per seer, whether those who reared them obtained prizes or not, provided the cocoons are properly dry, of the current year's rearing, and of merchantable quality. It is recommended—

Further, that Major McGregor, the agent to the Most Noble the Governor-General at Moorsheadabad, to whom the society are already so materially indebted in every respect, in aiding them in their endeavours to introduce silk into the Punjab, be authorized to expend, at the proper season, that is, about the middle or end of February, 1855, the sum of Co.'s Rs. 250 for the purchase of eggs at Moorsheadabad, and that he be requested to forward them to Lahore, in the same manner as that already so successfully adopted by him on two previous occasions; that is, by letter dak, and free of charge to the society; the great majority of these eggs being intended for distribution among the local applicants, whose number is already considerable.

The society would recommend the above prizes for the year 1855, during which the silkworms can be fed on the common mulberry, which, in the opinion of Mr. De Verinne, the superintendent of the silk-winding establishment, is almost equal to the Bengal mulberry, and which abounds throughout the upper portion of the Punjab.

For the year 1856, they would strongly recommend that prizes in the following proportion be offered, with the view of promoting the cultivation of the better kinds of mulberry:—

1st. A prize of Rs. 500 for the largest piece of land, not less than 100 beegas, devoted to the rearing of Morus multicaulis, of which the society will, in February, 1856, should no unforeseen accident occur, be in a condition, even under present circumstances, to distribute some 300,000 cuttings, more than enough to plant 300 acres. (With the Morus Chinensis their operations must be limited for the present, as the quantity now under cultivation will not yield more than 4,000 to 5,000 cuttings in February, 1855.)

2nd. A prize of Rs. 350 for the next largest piece of land, similarly devoted, consisting of not less than seventy-five beegas, and—

3rd. A prize of Rs. 200 for the third largest piece of land devoted to the same mulberry, of not less than 50 beegas. The cultivation to be in one, or at most two pieces, the plants to be 2 feet apart each way, with 4-feet walks at from 16 to 18 feet from each other, and the whole in a healthy condition; the land to be measured, and the condition of the crop to be reported on, on or about the 1st of October, 1856.

In the meantime, it is most strongly recommended that the Government be solicited to permit the extension of the plantations of morus multicaulis, by the immediate appropriation of some 90 or 100 beegas of land in the neighbourhood of the society's garden to this particular cultivation, on the same plan as that suggested for the flax fields, by which plan the society would, at the end of 1855, be in a position to distribute any quantity of mulberry cuttings, for which indents might be received. The land in the vicinity of the society's garden is very favourable to the growth of the morus multicaulis. In order to secure a still greater variety of mulberry, it is further requested that Major McGregor be authorized to send up daily, during the months of January and February, 1855, by letter dak, and free of expense to the society (by any other conveyance they would undoubtedly perish by the way), small bundles of cuttings of the mulberry that commonly affords food to the silkworm in Bengal, with the view of ascertaining which of the three mulberry-trees is the most likely to succeed with advantage in these provinces.

The society would seize the present as an appropriate opportunity of expressing their sense of the readiness and zeal with which Dr. Jameson has aided them in their pursuits, as to him they are indebted for the plantations of the morus multicaulis that are now flourishing so vigorously in the garden. His further assistance in supplying cuttings of morus multicaulis and morus Chinensis is confidently reckoned on during the ensuing season.

In conclusion, the society would beg to be permitted to lay particular stress on the cultivation of silk in this country for the additional reasons that, as a valuable article of export, the rate of carriage hence to Calcutta, or freight to Bombay, would be very light, not two annas a seer, at the present rates of bullock train hire, so that it might be exported without being subject to the disadvantages under which more bulky and less valuable articles must labour; and, secondly, that its cultivation,—especially the rearing of the silkworms, and winding of the silk,—is peculiarly suited to a growing portion of the population of the Punjab, viz., the immigrants from Kashmeer.

It might be noted, finally, that the society's endeavours to introduce the silkworm into the Punjab, have already been noticed in terms of approbation by the public prints in England, where it continues still to be asserted, as it has been for many years, that the demand for silk exceeds the supply.

RESOLVED—That the above paper be unanimously adopted as a proposition of the meeting, and that a copy be forwarded, with as little delay as possible, to the chief commissioner, with a respectful request that he will be pleased to support the proposition, if he should deem it necessary to forward the same for the sanction of the Supreme Government.

The meeting then adjourned to Tuesday, the 10th Oct.

RANGOON.

The following is from a friend at Rangoon, under date Aug. 29:—

"Rangoon is on the tiptoe of expectation;—an embassy, consisting of the prince and state personages, being on their way from Ava and looked for daily. Major Phayre, our much-respected commissioner, has made extensive preparation for their reception. On the arrival of the Zenobia, now expected daily, this embassy, together with the commissioner, will leave for Calcutta. The supposed purport of the visit is said to be an attempt to persuade the Most Noble the Governor-General to resign all right and title to Bassein, giving up the port entirely to the Burmese. It is not very likely his lordship will accede to the proposition; still the visit will do no harm, and may be productive of great good. Coal seems to abound in Upper Burmah; several good samples have arrived from Ava. The price is somewhat exorbitant at present, but this will remedy itself. An agreeable break in the monsoon has just taken place; the rains this season have been very heavy and the weather very boisterous. The Nemesis returned last week from the wreck of the Rob Roy, bringing some 330 cases of opium and all the crew. She started again on the 24th, having the Henzei Queen schooner in tow. The last-mentioned vessel returned yesterday evening, being unable to make way against a head sea. This little vessel parted both hawsers about ten miles from the light ship, but could not beat up against wind and sea, and was glad to find herself off Rangoon once more. It would seem that this little schooner, about 100 tons, possesses a charmed existence, for if dirty work in dirty weather is to be done, this small craft is invariably called upon to do it. The large roofing (in an incomplete state) over the patent slip at the Government dock-yard fell in with a fearful crash last week, wounding several carpenters employed beneath; happily no lives were lost. The last report received from the general hospital in the stockade was "all doing well and out of danger."—Hurkaru.

THE LONDON MAIL of Aug. 9 arrived at Calcutta Sept. 13 (per Bengal).

THE HON. BARNES PEACOCK, legislative member of the Supreme Council, took his departure in the Madras steamer, being about to proceed to the Neilgherries on sick leave, his health having been but little improved by his trip to the Sandheads.

COL. OUTRAM has been appointed resident at Lucknow.

MAJOR OTTER, Persian interpreter to the Commander-in-Chief, will, it is said, go home with the Rajah of Putealah.

A MEMORIAL from the Delhi merchants who made advances to Government during the Cabul war, praying for a final settlement of their claims, is now before the Government.

LIEUT. SPEKE, OF THE 46TH N.I., who left in Oriental steamer, is said to propose spending his furlough in exploring Abyssinia, and making collections in Natural history.

Sir S. W. STEEL embarked on board the Tenasserim, Sept. 6, to return to Rangoon.

DR. FRANCIS, superintending-surgeon of the Dacca circle, has arrived at the presidency, but we regret to say in so precarious a state of health that his medical advisers do not consider it safe to send him to sea.—Hurkaru, Sept. 12.

SENIOR SURGEON H. CLARK, and superintending-surgeon G. Angus, are said to be about to retire from the service.

THE TRANSFER OF CHANDERNAGORE to the British will not, it is now said, take place until 1856, and it seems doubtful whether it will be made at all, the inhabitants having petitioned against the measure.

THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR of Agra is to join his camp at Futtighur about the 8th or 9th of Nov., and thence proceed on his cold-weather tour.

CAPTAIN RENNIE, of the Zenobia, is to have the command of the new steamer Assaye, when she comes round to Calcutta. The vessel is to be fitted up with a view to accommodate the Governor-General and suite whenever he goes out to sea.

THE NEW POST OFFICE—Colonel Forbes has given a design for the new post office, which is to be a splendid building after the model of the London Post Office; it is to be built on the site of the Poorana Permit Ghur, which is to be immediately pulled down, the public offices now accommodated in it removing to the four-storied house in the Esplanade.

MR. CRAIGIE, of the civil service, now out of employ, is to be restored to his appointment at Salarunpore.

CONSULS.—Mr. Edward Dunbar, Kilburn, has been appointed Prussian Consul, at Calcutta, and Mr. John Jarvie, Danish Consul at Singapore.

GENERAL STEELE AND CAPTAIN HOUSTON.—The question that led to the recent dispute between General Steel and Captain Houston has, it is stated, been referred to the Commander-in-Chief, to secure the issue of such orders as may prevent future misunderstandings of a like nature.

THE "CALEDONIAN."—There seems to be rough weather at the Sandheads. More than one ship is reported to have encountered danger, others are afraid to venture out, while some again are detained both in and out for want of pilots, and have to weather it out as best they can. The commander of the barque Ellen, just come in, reports, "the ship Caledonian was lost last Tuesday within two cables of me at 6.40 p.m., and I should say a great number of her people must have perished." The same commander likewise reports the loss of the schooner Island Queen, in Torres Straits, on the 24th July. All hands, however, were saved, part of them were taken on board the steamer Anne, and the rest were brought on to Calcutta by the Ellen. Two days before the Island Queen was lost, she passed a reef of which her commander gives the following account:—"July 22nd, 1854.—Noon, lat. obs. 16.40 S., long. chro. 148.6 E. (sights A.M. and P.M.) Course steered, N.W. 10 miles, 1.30 p.m. Breakers reported ahead, tacked and stood to the southward, finding ourselves in the bight of a crescent-shaped reef laying about S.W. and N.E. the S.W. end. Bearing W.N.W. kept to the southward till 3 p.m., having run about 8 miles body of the reef Bg. North tacked and stood to E.N.E. 5 p.m. cleared the N.E. end and Bg. N.N.W. kept away to north. The above may be the Bongainville's reef or another marked breakers, but if so, must be much misplaced, as their bearing on my chart are Bongainville's reef N.  $\frac{1}{2}$  W. distance 60 miles. The position of the above-named reef is lat. 16.36 S. long. 148 E. breakers, S.S.E. Distance 47 miles, and when we sighted it extended to the eastward as far as the eye could reach." Note.—The reef opens to the eastward.—Hurkaru, Sept. 16.

CIVIL.—Mr. C. C. Jackson having declined the appointment, Mr. Dick obtains a seat on the bench of the Sudder Court, N. W. P.; Mr. E. Tyler goes home, and the judgeship of Mynpoorie is offered to Mr. W. H. D. Routh. Mr. W. T. Lewis, Assistant Resident Councillor at the Prince of Wales' Island, has been sent to assume the duties of resident at Malacca, in the room of the late Captain Hay Ferrier. Messrs. Cust and Pearson, magistrates of Bandah and Allahabad, are said to be going home early in the cold season, and it is reported that Mr. Lowther, the Commissioner of Allahabad, will retire early in 1855. There is no truth in the report that an uncovenanted deputy collector at Allahabad had been suspended.

FIVE steam-vessels of 1,260 tons register and 230 horse-power are to be built for the use of the Bengal Government.

MR. LEDLIE, the Government translator and curator at Agra, is said to be about to retire on superannuation pension, and Mr. A. W. Woollaston is spoken of as his successor.

AGRA.—THE WEATHER.—We have had a fair quantity of rain during the week. It began with a remarkably heavy shower early last Monday morning. The temperature is in consequence considerably lower than it was lately.—Agra Messenger, Sept. 9.

THE DOORGAH POOJAH vacation is to be an unusually long one this year, the Government having, it is said, determined to close the public offices for fifteen days.

STEAM FERRY AT BENARES.—The Government is said to have ordered a steam ferry to be built for the passage of the Ganges at Benares.

THE EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY.—There is to be a change in the direction of the railway line between Allahabad and Agra; that surveyed last cold season is not to be adopted, being said to be too full of curves; the surveying must, therefore, we presume, be all done over again. If these gentlemen engineers, fresh from England, had condescended to seek information from such men as Lieut.-Col. Boileau, Captain Sharp, and other officers of the Company's engineers, who know every inch of ground in the Doab, they would not have had to do their work twice over. The following contracts are said to have been made for the railway.—Messrs. Hunt, Bray, and Emsley from the Kurrumnassa to the Jumna, and again from Cawnpore to Agra, with the bridging of the Jumna at Allahabad for seventy lacs of rupees, and Mr. Norris, under the guarantee of McKillop, Stewart and Co. from Allahabad to Cawnpore.—Hurkaru.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH IN BURMAH.—We hear that the electric telegraph line is during the ensuing cold season to be extended to Prome and Meaday, under the superintendence of Major J. S. Du Vernet, of the Madras establishment, and formerly attached to the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India. Major A. P. Phayre proposed to the Governor-General to allow Major Du Vernet a staff salary of Co.'s Rs. 800 per mensem, but his lordship considered his present salary and travelling allowance at the rate of Co.'s Rs. 150 per mensem sufficient remuneration. Three assistants have also been allotted to the major; these are Capt. Seymour and Lieut. Stewart, of her Majesty's 84th regiment of foot, and Capt. Magrath, of the Madras horse artillery. The staff salary of these officers has been fixed at Co.'s Rs. 300, with travelling allowance at Rs. 90 each per mensem. A temporary establishment of interpreters, clerks, and artificers, has also been sanctioned. Mr. Wickham, who first laid down the lines in Pegu, and is still doing duty in another direction, has been advised of this arrangement, and directed to co-operate with Major du Vernet, but they are to be independent of each other.—Hurkaru, Sept. 16.

CAPTAIN HOUSTON AND GENERAL STEELE.—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle relates a story which seems to require some additional confirmation. Capt. Houston, of the 2nd B.F., secured at Rangoon a passage to Calcutta on a Government steamer. His baggage was on board, and his card on the door, when the cabin was taken possession of by Brigadier Steele. Both officers were on private leave; and the story as it stands is not creditable to the superior. We have heard that the same circumstance happened to the general himself thirty years ago. In the first Burmese war he had secured a house at Rangoon for himself as deputy adjutant general of the Madras division. He was turned out of it by General, then Captain, Godwin, as adjutant general of the entire force, and perhaps still remembers the circumstance. The first story has been contradicted.

SUPPLY OF AGRA WITH PURE WATER.—The Agra Messenger publishes a scheme for supplying that station with sweet water. The station is believed to be about thirty feet above the level of the Jumna. The fall of the river is about one foot per mile. The course of the river is so devious, that a journey of thirty miles along its bank from Agra, still leaves the traveller only ten miles from the public offices. It is considered, therefore, that from this point a canal of ten miles might be cut, and the fall would be sufficient to supply the station.

A WARRANT has been issued against Captain Briggs, late ship's husband and store-keeper to the I. G. S. N. Company, who is charged with having embezzled 49 bolts of canvas, valued at upwards of a thousand rupees.

OPIMUM.—The prices realised for opium at the sale was for Behar Rs. 90, and for Benares Rs. 110 per chest less than those obtained at the August sale.

MEDICAL ATTENDANCE UPON FAMILIES OF PUBLIC SERVANTS.—An order, dated 25th August, declares that, "in pursuance of instructions from the Hon. the Court of Directors, the Most Noble the Governor-General in Council is pleased to notify, that it has been ruled, that civil surgeons in the service of the Honourable Company are entitled to remuneration for attendance upon the families of public servants, whether covenanted or uncovenanted. No distinction exists in this particular between covenanted and uncovenanted servants. They are both individually entitled to gratuitous medical assistance when sick, but their families have no claim to such assistance." The profession should go one step further, and fix the scale of fees the surgeon is entitled to demand. In the interior, there is practically no rule upon the subject. One man pays so heavily, that every one else appears stingy in comparison. Another pays so little, that the surgeon is driven either to reject it altogether, or to feel that he commits an injustice in accepting the heavier fee from a poorer man. A week's salary for the year seems to be about the usual rate, and some such scale should be fixed by the profession.

THE NAGPORE FORCE.—The organization of an irregular force for Nagpore has been ordered by the Government. The force is to consist of one horse field battery, one regiment of cavalry, and three regiments of infantry.

MILITARY ON DITS.—Col. Manson, formerly commissioner with Bajee Rao, is said to have been appointed to officiate for Col. Sleeman at Lucknow.—The Governor-General is said to have received permission to retain H. M.'s 98th regt. in India if their services are required.—H. M.'s 24th regt. is under orders to march from Sealcode to Peshawur to relieve H. M.'s 22nd regt., about to proceed to Europe, so that Colonels Boileau and Cotton, of the latter corps, appointed brigadiers in this day's Gazette, will not enjoy their appointments for more than a few months.—The Commander-in-Chief has recommended that Col. G. Brooke, C.B., commandant of artillery, should also hold the brigade command at Meerut.—The new system in the army clothing department is to come into operation on the first of January next.—H. M.'s 10th foot are said to be coming from Lahore to take the duties of the garrison of Fort William.—Major H. Marsh, of the 3rd light cavalry, has, it is stated, sent in his application for permission to retire from the service.—It is said that Col. Goodwyn is to relieve Col. Forbes of the charge of the Mint, and that the latter officer is to be the chief engineer of the Bengal Presidency, and consulting engineer to the Government of India.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

DESPATCHES FROM THE COURT OF DIRECTORS, &c.

Civil Furlough.

Fort William, Financial Department, Aug. 25, 1854.—The Most Noble the Governor-General in Council is pleased to direct that the following despatches from the Honourable the Court of Directors, and the rules passed in conformity with the instructions therein conveyed, be published for general information:—

Public Department.

Our Governor-General of India in Council.

1. By the provisions of Section 32 of the new Act for the Government of India, the prohibition of the receipt by our servants of any part of their Indian allowances while absent in Europe is repealed, and as the legal obstacle to carrying out our views for the complete revision of the rules for the grant of leave of absence to our civil servants under sick certificates, or on furlough, is thus removed, we lose no time in conveying our instructions on this important subject, a measure which we have long had in contemplation.

2. The present rules allow of the absence of civil servants from their stations under medical certificate within the limits of their Presidencies, for a period of two years with retention of office, but subject to a deduction of one-third from the salary thereof for the whole period of absence. They allow a civil servant to proceed under medical certificate to any place beyond the limits of the Presidency to which he belongs, but within the limits of the Company's charter, for any period not exceeding two years, without loss of office, but subject to deductions* from the salary thereof to the extent specified in the margin.

* If salary exceeds Rs. 2,000 per month, for the first year 1-8th, and for the second year 6-14th. If not exceeding Rs. 500 per month, for the first year 1-6th, and for the second 1-8th. If not more than Rs. 500 per month, no deduction for the first year, and only so much of the 4th as will reduce it to Rs. 500, if above that sum for the 2nd year 1-6th.

3. After having given our best consideration to the subject we propose to adopt the following rules in lieu of those which have been referred to. We do not think it necessary, adverting to the increased facility of communication which has been afforded by the improved means of transport, and which the construction of railroads in India will further increase, to maintain the restriction as to places and geographical limits which are now imposed by the regulations on officers absent on sick leave. We are disposed to admit any officer of this class to proceed to any place in India, in Europe, or elsewhere, as he may consider most conducive to the restoration of his health, and we intend therefore to impose no restrictions whatever as to the places to which he may resort.

4. The following conditions must in future attach to leaves of absence granted to servants who shall have resided ten years and upwards in India, and who may be declared by a sufficient medical certificate to require such leave for the recovery of their health.

1st. The total period of absence with the privileges hereinafter provided, shall not (save as specially excepted in para. 5 of this despatch) exceed eighteen months in the whole, nor shall it exceed fifteen months on any one occasion.

2nd. The office of the absentee will be considered to be vacated if he shall be absent beyond eighteen months altogether, or beyond fifteen months at any one time, such absence to be computed, if he shall proceed to a sanitarium within the presidency from the date of his arrival thereat, if to any place beyond the presidency but within the continent of India from the date of his reaching the limits of his own presidency, and if he shall proceed to sea, from the date of the sailing of the vessel on which he may have embarked, from any port in India, which is not more distant from his station than the ports of his own presidency, to the date of his arrival at any port within the presidency to which he belongs, or to any other port which is not more distant from his station than the ports of his own presidency.

3rd. The absentee will be entitled to draw a moiety of his salary, and the same will be paid to him during such period of absence, provided that he shall in no case draw a larger sum than Rs. 10,000 (1,000*l.*) per annum during that period. In cases in which the emolument of the absentee's office does not exceed Rs. 5,000 per annum, no deduction therefrom shall be made for the period of eighteen months, nor shall such a deduction be made in other cases as shall reduce the allowance below Rs. 5,000 (500*l.*) per annum.

4th. If the absentee be compelled by the state of his health, under due medical certificate, to remain absent for a longer period than eighteen months, or fifteen months, at any one time, he will, as before stated, vacate his appointment; but he will be permitted to receive an allowance at the rate of 500*l.* per annum for such further period of absence as shall not exceed the entire term of three years in the whole. At the expiration of that term, all allowance must cease until the servant's return to India.

5. If a civil servant, of more than fifteen years' service, after having been absent on sick leave for eighteen months in the whole, or for fifteen months at one time, at whatever period of his service such sick leave shall have been taken, shall be again compelled by the same cause to apply for leave of absence, your Government, and those of the subordinate presidencies, may, on special grounds, grant leave of absence for one further period not exceeding six months, during which the absentee may retain his office and half his salary, under the limits above enjoined.

6. If a civil servant, after fifteen years' service, shall be compelled by ill-health to apply for further leave of absence, he may be permitted, on special grounds, to obtain it; but his absence will involve the loss of office and salary; we shall, however, vest in your Government, and in the subordinate Governments respectively, a discretionary power to grant, in such last-mentioned cases, a sick absence allowance not exceeding Rs. 5,000 or 500*l.* per annum, for a further period not exceeding twelve months.

7. With regard to junior civil servants who may be compelled by sickness, certified in a similar manner, to quit their stations before the completion of ten years' residence, we have resolved to modify the existing rule by limiting the period of absence to eighteen months, or fifteen months at any one time. They will not retain their appointments, but we shall permit them to draw during this period an allowance at the rate of 250*l.* per annum, as at present; and if any junior servant, absent as aforesaid, be prevented by the state of his health, under due medical certificate, from returning to his duty at the end of the periods above named, he will be permitted to continue absent for a further term not exceeding eighteen months, with the same allowance.

8. A junior civil servant having enjoyed either of the above-named advantages will not be entitled to the leave of absence provided for servants of more than ten years' service, after he shall have attained that standing, but if after he has attained it, he shall be compelled again by ill-health to quit his station, and provided that his former periods of absence shall have fallen short of three years in the aggregate, he may be permitted, under medical certificate, to receive a further leave of absence for such a period as shall make up the entire length of absence to three years, and during that additional period he shall receive an allowance at the rate of 500*l.* per annum. He will, however, be entitled after fifteen years' service to the benefit of the special leave authorised to be granted according to paras. 5 and 6 of this despatch.

9. None of the above-mentioned rules will be applicable to members of council, each member may, however, with the special sanction of the Government, be permitted to be absent under medical certificate, for a period not exceeding six months, retaining his office and receiving half his salary, which shall be paid to him during such absence, but if his absence shall exceed six months his office will be vacated.

10. The privilege of retaining office and a portion of salary for a limited period under sick leave, will render it necessary that great attention should be paid to the medical certificates which may be produced by applicants for this leave. It is most essential to provide against any abuse of this privilege, and we desire that your immediate attention may be given to this subject with the view of such strict regulations being framed as may prevent certificates being obtained on insufficient grounds. You will forward to us the regulations that you may think requisite for this purpose.

11. It appearing that the existing rules with respect to the grant of leave of absence on private affairs for short periods work well on the whole, we do not propose to make any change in them. The maximum continuous period for which such leave can be granted (without loss of office) will therefore continue to be four months, viz. one month privilege leave, and three months "special leave" on sufficient cause being shown, as provided in the present rule.

12. We have on many former occasions adverted to the evils connected with the multiplication of acting appointments, and we rely upon your exercising the most vigilant attention that the repeated and particular instructions addressed to you from time to time upon this subject may be carried into effect, and especially those contained in our financial letter of the 3rd July, 1844, No. 11.

13. You will not fail also to recollect, that it is to be held as a principle not to be departed from, that no expense to Government is to ensue from the absence of officers from their stations, whether on sick leave, or on short furlough on private affairs, and you will therefore so regulate the sums to be paid to the persons holding acting appointments, as to ensure that the aggregate amount of official salaries and emoluments shall, on the one hand, be appropriated to the liberal remuneration of the acting officers, and, on the other hand, cover the expense of the sums paid to the absentees. We desire that an annual account may be transmitted to us, showing how this rule is carried out at each of the presidencies.

14. In place of the period of three years (in one term) for which the furlough is now granted, we have determined to concede to our civil servants the option of taking a furlough of three years, as at present, or of dividing the furlough into two periods, which may either be of one or two years respectively, or of eighteen months each, provided that, in every such case, the civil servant shall declare, on taking his furlough, whether he intends it to be for twelve, eighteen, or twenty-four months, in order that the Government may make its arrangements accordingly. In case of such division, the first furlough to be taken after a residence of not less than ten years, and the second furlough after a further residence in India of ten years, from the date of return from the first furlough. But civil servants returning on furlough to this country will continue, as at present, to vacate their offices.

15. Having thus regulated the periods of furloughs, we shall continue to grant for those periods the furlough allowance at present given, namely, 500*l.* per annum.

16. We shall not encourage the grant of extensions of furlough beyond the prescribed period; nor shall we, upon any ground whatever, permit the receipt of furlough allowance for any longer period than three years, under the rules above stated.

17. Civil servants who may have been compelled by sickness to quit their duty, under medical certificate, before completing ten years' residence, will be entitled to receive, during their furlough on private affairs, taken subsequently to their completion of that period of residence, the ordinary furlough allowance of 500*l.* per annum for three years.

18. In applying the foregoing rules in substitution of those now existing, periods of absence to the limit of three years, either on medical certificate or on furlough on private affairs, will count as service in India, in the twenty-five years entitling to the annuity, the present qualification of twenty-two years residence being retained. Periods of short leave, of absence on private affairs, taken in India, will count as service and residence, as at present.

19. In the above regulations, we have endeavoured to provide for the efficiency of the public service, while we have been anxious to extend every fair and reasonable allowance to our servants, and considering the present rules for the grant of leave to the Cape, &c., to admit of much abuse, which cannot fail to be disadvantageous to the public service, it is our desire that the new rules with regard to sick leave shall apply to all our servants from the date of their promulgation.

20. We entirely concur in the opinion expressed in paras. 5 and 6 of your despatch in this department, dated 3rd May, 1850, No. 21, that it is advisable to prescribe by rule, some period of service after which civil servants shall not be appointed to any new office, nor be permitted to retain office which they may have held for a period of five years and upwards, and we have resolved to establish thirty-five years as the period of service for the purpose in question. This rule must, as you suggest, be subject to exceptions in special cases, which are to be referred for our decision. In such cases, your recommendation will not fail to receive our prompt consideration. The above rule may be applied to every civil servant appointed to office after its promulgation, and to the case of every other civil servant to whom it relates, at the close of five years from the date of its promulgation.

21. We desire that the rules for the grant of leave of absence on sick certificate and on furlough, be at once modified in accordance with the views contained in this despatch, and that copies thereof be transmitted to us.

22. Military officers employed in the civil department will be subject to the rules laid down in our military despatch, dated the 30th December, 1853, No. 10, for the leave of absence and furlough to officers holding military staff appointments.

23. You will communicate this despatch to the governments of Madras and Bombay, and to the lieutenant-governor N. W. Provinces, together with copies of the rules so soon as they shall have been revised.

We are, &c.,

and eleven others.

OUR GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Par. 1. Since our despatch in this department dated the 5th of April, 1854, No. 23, on the subject of the civil furlough and absentee rules, was prepared, we have received your financial letter of the 16th December, 1853, No. 73, enclosing a memorial from several members of the Bengal civil service, praying for such modification of Section XI. of the existing code, as will allow of the privilege leave of one month in each year being accumulated at the option of the civil servant for two or three years, after which leave may be taken, at the pleasure of government, for either two or three months (as the case may be), without deduction from allowances.

2. Section XI. formerly provided for the grant of privilege leave on the terms now solicited; and the old regulation was altered in the year 1843, on the last occasion of the general revision of the absentee rules by your government.

3. We have no objection to modify the rule in accordance with the request of the service, and with your recommendation, and to authorise you, should you consider that the fund formed by deductions from the salaries of absentees will admit of this additional charge upon it, to grant privilege leaves free of all deduction, even in cases in which some expense may be occasioned by the temporary absence.

4. The Government of Bengal having, in their letter to you on the above subject, alluded to the question of deputation allowances, we refer you to paragraph 13 of our public despatch, dated 5th of April, 1854, No. 23, wherein we have authorised you to lay down such rules as will "ensure that the aggregate amount of official salaries and emoluments shall, on the one hand, be appropriated to the liberal remuneration of the acting officers, and, on the other hand, cover the expense of the sums paid to the absentees." We can, of course, have no wish that the state should derive financial gain in consequence of the absence of our servants, although we think it proper to insist that no extra charge shall thereby be incurred. Within that necessary limit, you may deal as liberally as you may be able, with the temporary occupants of the offices of absentees.

LAW OFFICERS.

5. Our attention has also been given to the question of including the law officers of the Company in the new Code of Absentee Regulations. On several occasions we have received memorials upon this subject, which we have treated in the Judicial Department, and so lately as the year 1852, a memorial was addressed to us by the law officers at the three presidencies, praying to be granted the privilege of a furlough to Europe.

6. We cannot extend to the law officers any boon which is not conceded to our civil servants, and as the retention of office during furlough on private affairs is prohibited, any rule for granting furlough to law officers would be inoperative.

7. As respects sick leave, the following is the only rule which has yet been applied to them. "Whenever your advocate-general or attorney may quit the presidency and proceed to sea, the local government is to appoint a competent person to act during his absence, the absentee receiving one-half of the salary for the period of his absence, not exceeding eighteen months, and the locum tenens receiving the other half for that period, and after its expiration the whole. In cases of absence a second time, the absentee is to receive no part of the salary, the whole of which is to be paid to the officiating advocate or attorney."

8. We have resolved to substitute for the foregoing rule, the rules which we have laid down for the grant of sick leave and short leave on private affairs to our civil servants, both as respects the periods of absence and the limitation of allowances during such absence. Leave will of course only be granted at the convenience of the Government, and no additional expense will, on any consideration, be incurred by the Government on account thereof. If any law officer shall quit his duty, save on leave under medical certificate, or on short leave on private affairs, he will be considered to have vacated his appointment.

9. We desire that rules may at once be framed in accordance with the views expressed in this despatch, and that the same be embodied in the new code, and circulated for information and guidance.

We are, &c.

ECCLESIASTICAL ESTABLISHMENT.

Our Governor-General of India in Council.

Para. 1. Having considered the position of members of our ecclesiastical establishments, in connection with the rules which we have lately laid down for the grant of furlough and leave of absence to our civil and military servants, we have determined that chaplains and assistant chaplains shall be entitled to take furlough on private affairs and on medical certificate on the same terms and conditions as military officers, with following modifications:—

1st. Chaplains being allowed to retire after twenty years' service, the period of furlough (private affairs) must in their case, be limited to the present term of three years. The furlough may, however, either be taken in one period, or be divided into two periods, whether of eighteen months each or of two years and one year respectively, and, if divided, the first furlough may be taken, as at present, after seven years' residence, and the second furlough after a further residence of ten years in India. As respects chaplains and assistant chaplains, appointed before the 11th January, 1854, when the period of services was only eighteen years, their second furlough, if they should exercise the option of taking furlough in two periods, will be available after a second residence in India for a term of eight years.

2nd. No furlough or leave of absence, whether on private affairs or on sick certificate, taken in Europe, or elsewhere out of India, in excess of three years, will be allowed to count as service in India, in the twenty years which qualifies chaplains for their retiring pensions.

2. The furlough pay of chaplains will remain as at present. With regard to their allowance during sick leave to any place out of India, we have resolved that, in accordance with the principle adopted for military officers, they shall receive salary (but at a rate not exceeding 600*l.* per annum) for the first six months of absence, and for the remaining twelve months an allowance equal to the furlough pay of their standing. If the leave be extended an allowance equal to furlough pay may be drawn for a further period of eighteen months.

3. You will communicate this despatch to the Governments of the subordinate presidencies.

We are, &c.

And eight others.

CIVIL LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Fort William, August 25th, 1854.—The following rules for the grant of leave of absence for regulating deductions from salaries and deputation allowances, and for limiting the period of service of civil servants, will take effect in all the presidencies and settlements under the government of India from the 1st October, 1854, in supercession of the rules of the 17th May, 1843.

CHAPTER I.

Rules for Application for Leave of Absence.*

Section I. No leave of absence from any office or station can be granted, but by the Government under which the employment is held, and on the application of the party requiring such leave, saving in such cases as may hereafter be specially excepted. The application must be made publicly through the regular channel in the department to which the applicant may belong.

Section II. The official allowances of the holder of a civil office quitting his station without leave will entirely cease from the date of his quitting until his return, or, in the event of his subsequently obtaining leave, to the date of such leave being granted to him.

Section III. No leave of absence shall have any retrospective effect, except in cases of severe illness, to be attested by medical certificate, conforming in every respect to the directions contained in Section V.

CHAPTER II.

Rules for Sick Leave.

Section IV. Upon application duly made, the government may grant leave of absence on medical certificate to any civil servant, to any place in India, in Europe, or elsewhere, as he may consider most conducive to the restoration of his health, without any restrictions whatever as to the places to which he may resort.

Section V. When an application for leave of absence is made on the ground of ill-health, it must be accompanied by a certificate and a statement of the case from the medical officer by whom the applicant has been attended, distinctly stating, from personal observation, the nature of the disease, the symptoms by which it is manifested, the period during which it has existed, as far as the knowledge of the medical officer extends, and the necessity for temporary removal to some other place in India, or in Europe, or elsewhere, as laid down in Section IV.; and in case of the applicant visiting the presidency preparatory to obtaining leave, the certificate must be counter-signed by the members of the medical board, on their being satisfied, on a perusal of the medical attendant's statement of the case, that the leave applied for is absolutely necessary towards his recovery. Should the applicant's medical attendant be of opinion that he ought to proceed to a sanitarium or other place without visiting the presidency, the certificate must, in the first instance, be counter-signed by the superintending surgeon of the division in which the applicant may be located, and afterwards submitted, with the statement of the case, for the consideration and counter-signature of the members of the Medical Board.

The certificate shall be given in the following form:—

"I, A. B., surgeon at or of ———, do hereby certify that E. F., of the civil service, is in a bad state of health, and I solemnly and sincerely declare that, according to the best of my judgment, a change of air is essentially necessary to his recovery, and do therefore recommend that he may be permitted to proceed to sea (or to such place as the surgeon may think proper, expressing it in the certificate)."

The following form shall be observed by the members of the Medical Board or the superintending surgeon, in counter-signing the surgeon's certificate:—

"We (or I) do hereby certify that, according to the best of our (or my) professional judgment, after a careful personal examination of his case, we (or I) consider the state of health of E. F. to be such as to render leave of absence for a period of ——— absolutely necessary (or highly desirable) for his recovery."

An application for extension of leave must, if the applicant be in India, be accompanied by a certificate to a like effect from the medical officer by whom the applicant is attended, together with a statement showing sufficient reason for the extension solicited; and such certificate must be counter-signed by the members of the Medical Board, or by the superintending surgeon of the division in which the applicant may be located, as the case may be, on perusal of the statement. In like manner, if the applicant shall have proceeded beyond the territories under the government of the East-India Company, he must furnish a certificate and statement to the required effect from a surgeon or physician, at the place of his temporary residence, by whom he has been attended, such attendance and the period of it to be stated, and the certificate to be counter-signed by the examining physician of the East-India Company if the applicant is in England, or if not in England, by the principal medical authority of the colony or country to which the absentee may have proceeded, or some sufficient reason stated for the want of such counter-signature if the certificate be not so counter-signed. The Medical Board or superintending surgeon, before counter-signing a certificate, as above mentioned, must either personally examine the applicant, or state some sufficient reason why they or he have or hath been unable to do so. When any of the required particulars are neglected, leave will be refused.

* This rule must be considered as superseding the rule under which commissioners of the land revenue and other officers have heretofore been allowed to grant leave of absence in Bengal.

Section VI. The following conditions will in future attach to leaves of absence granted to servants who shall have resided ten years and upwards in India, and who may be declared by a sufficient medical certificate to require such leave for the recovery of their health:—

1st. The total period of absence, with the privileges hereinafter provided, shall not (save as specially excepted in section VII. of these rules) exceed eighteen months in the whole, nor shall it exceed fifteen months on any one occasion.

2ndly. The office of the absentee will be considered to be vacated if he shall be absent beyond eighteen months altogether, or beyond fifteen months at any one time, such absence to be computed, if he shall proceed to a sanitarium within the presidency, from the date of his arrival thereat; if to any place beyond the presidency, but within the continent of India, from the date of his reaching the limits of his own presidency; and if he shall proceed to sea, from the date of the sailing of the vessel on which he may have embarked from any port in India which is not more distant from his station than the ports of his own presidency, to the date of his arrival at any port within the presidency to which he belongs, or at any other port which is not more distant from his station than the ports of his own presidency.

3rdly. The absentee will be entitled to draw a moiety of his salary, and the same will be paid to him during such period of absence, provided that he shall in no case draw a larger sum than Rs. 10,000 (1,000*l.*) per annum, during that period, in cases in which the emolument of the absentee's office does not exceed Rs. 5,000 per annum, no deduction therefrom shall be made for the period of eighteen months, nor shall such a deduction be made in other cases as shall reduce the allowance below Rs. 5,000 (500*l.*) per annum.

4thly. If the absentee be compelled by the state of his health, under due medical certificate, to remain absent for a longer period than eighteen months, or fifteen months at any one time, he will, as before stated, vacate his appointment, but he will be permitted to receive an allowance at the rate of 500*l.* per annum, for such further period of absence as shall not exceed the entire term of three years in the whole. At the expiration of that term, all allowance must cease until the servant's return to India.

Section VII. If a civil servant of more than fifteen years' service, after having been absent on sick leave for eighteen months in the whole, or for fifteen months at one time, at whatever period of his service such sick leave shall have been taken, shall be again compelled by the same cause to apply for leave of absence, the Government of India and the subordinate Governments may, on special grounds grant leave of absence for one further period not exceeding six months, during which the absentee may retain his office, and half his salary under the limits above enjoined.

Section VIII. If a civil servant, after fifteen years' service, shall be compelled by ill health to apply for further leave of absence, he may be permitted on special grounds to obtain it, but his absence will involve the loss of office and salary; the Government of India and the subordinate Governments will, however, respectively, exercise a discretionary power to grant, in such last-mentioned cases, a sick absentee allowance, not exceeding Rs. 5,000, or 500*l.* per annum, for a further period not exceeding twelve months.

Section IX. Junior civil servants, who may be compelled by sickness, certified as aforesaid, to quit their stations before the completion of ten years' residence in India, will be allowed to be absent for eighteen months in the whole, or fifteen months at any one time. They will not retain their appointments, but they will be permitted to draw during this period an allowance at the rate of 250*l.* per annum as at present; and if any junior servant, absent as aforesaid, be prevented by the state of his health, under due medical certificate, from returning to his duty at the end of the periods above named, he will be permitted to continue absent for a further term not exceeding eighteen months, with the same allowance.

Section X. A junior civil servant, having enjoyed either of the abovenamed advantages, will not be entitled to the leave of absence provided for servants of more than ten years' service, after he shall have attained that standing; but if, after he has attained it, he shall be compelled again by ill health to quit his station, and provided that his former periods of absence shall have fallen short of three years in the aggregate, he may be permitted, under medical certificate, to receive a further leave of absence for such a period as shall make up the entire length of absence to three years; and during that additional period he shall receive an allowance at the rate of 500*l.* per annum. He will however be entitled, after fifteen years' service, to the benefit of the special leave authorized to be granted according to Sections VII. and VIII. of these rules.

Section XI. None of the abovementioned rules will be applicable to Members of Council. Each member may, however, with the special sanction of the Government, be permitted to be absent under medical certificate for a period not exceeding six months, retaining his office and receiving half his salary, which shall be paid to him during such absence; but if his absence shall exceed six months, his office will be vacated.

Section XII. Civil servants who may desire to draw their allowances while absent on account of sickness under the above rules, will be required to give security in such amount and form as may be fixed by the Government for the refund of any excess that may be drawn either by the agent at the presidency or by themselves, in case of their coming under retrenchment.

CHAPTER III.

Rules for Short Leave on Private Affairs.

Section XIII. The Government may grant to civil servants leave of absence to any place or places in the continent of India, whether within the territories subject to the Government of India or not; or to proceed to the island of St. Helena, the colony of the Cape of Good Hope, or to any place situate between the 36th degree of north latitude and the 50th degree of south latitude, such place being likewise between the 30th and the 180th degrees of longitude east of Greenwich, excepting, however, any islands in the Mediterranean or Levant, and excepting all places within the said geographical limits which may form part of Europe, for one month in each year, without deduction from the salaries and emoluments drawn by such servants; such leave, however, will only be granted when the Government is satisfied that no inconvenience will arise from the departure of the officer seeking it. No second leave can be granted under this rule until the completion of eleven months from the expiration of the last leave; but servants not availing themselves of the indulgence, in any one year, may obtain, under the like conditions, leave of absence for two successive months, to commence at or after the expiration of twenty-two months from the termination of their former leave; and if two years elapse without enjoyment of the privilege, leave for three months may in like manner be granted at the expiration of thirty-three months from the termination of the last preceding leave; but no leave shall be granted under this rule for any period exceeding three months. If an officer shall not return at the expiration of the period of leave granted him under this rule, he shall forfeit all pay and allowances during the time of his remaining so absent without leave; and if he shall so continue absent for more than one month beyond the term granted, his office shall become vacant.

Civil servants absent from their stations under medical certificate cannot be admitted to leave under this rule in continuation of their sick leave; and if, while absent under this rule, they be granted extended leave under medical certificate, they shall be considered liable to the rules applicable to leave of absence on medical certificate for the whole period of their absence.

Civil servants who have been absent on medical certificate during any portion of a calendar year, are not entitled to leave under this rule during that year; but in determining the interval necessary to entitle a person to leave under this rule, no reference will be made to any intermediate leave of absence that may have been granted under section XV.

Section XIV. As a general rule, when leave is granted under Section XIII., such leave will be in one period only, whether for a whole month or less, and not in detached portions to complete one month within the year; and the term year shall be held to mean the calendar year, commencing with the 1st of January and ending with the 31st of December; but as an exception to this rule, it shall be discretionary with the several local governments, where good cause is shown for the indulgence, and it is attended with no public inconvenience, to sanction leave of absence under this rule to such parties as may not have occasion to apply for the whole at once, in instalments, not to exceed in the aggregate one month within the calendar year, on the understanding that no leave can be granted for any fresh calendar year until the completion of three months from the expiration of the entire leave or of the last instalment of leave taken in the past calendar year.

Section XV. The Government may, on sufficient cause being shown, grant to a civil servant special leave of absence on private affairs for three months, to any place or places within the limits mentioned in Section XIII., provided, however, that if any officer to whom such leave shall be granted shall be absent from his station for any period exceeding that to which he may be entitled without deduction, under Section XIII., the absentee shall, for the period in excess, draw no more than one-half of his salary and allowances. After an absence of three months (exclusive of any period which may be granted under Section XIII.) any office held by the absentee shall become vacant.

CHAPTER IV.

Furloughs on Private Affairs.

Section XVI. In the place of the period of three years (in one term), for which furlough has hitherto been granted, civil servants will be allowed the option of taking a furlough of three years as at present, or of dividing the furlough into two periods, which may either be of one or two years respectively, or of eighteen months each, provided that, in every such case, the civil servant shall declare, on taking his furlough, whether he intends it to be for twelve, eighteen, or twenty-four months, in order that the Government may make its arrangements accordingly. In case of such division, the first furlough to be taken after a residence of not less than ten years, and the second furlough after a further residence in India of ten years from the date of return from the first furlough; but civil servants returning on furlough to Europe will continue, as at present, to vacate their offices.

Section XVII. The furlough allowance granted during the periods mentioned in the last section will be at the rate of 500*l.* per annum, and the receipt of it will not, on any grounds whatever, be permitted for any longer period than three years.

Section XVIII. Civil servants who may have been compelled by sickness to quit their duty under medical certificate, before completing ten years' residence in India, will be entitled to receive during their furlough on private affairs, taken subsequently to their completion of that period of residence, the ordinary furlough allowance of 500*l.* per annum for three years.

Section XIX. In applying the foregoing Rules in substitution of those before existing, periods of absence to the limit of three years, either on medical certificate, or on furlough on private affairs, will count as service in India in the twenty-five years entitling to the annuity, the present qualification of twenty-two years' residence being retained. Periods of short leave of absence on private affairs taken in India will count as service and residence as at present.

Section XX. Military officers employed in the civil department will be subject to the Rules laid down in the Court's military despatch, dated the 30th December, 1853, No. 18, for the grant of leave of absence and furlough to officers holding military staff appointments.

CHAPTER V.

Rule for joining Stations.*

Section XXI. There shall be allowed to officers appointed to any new office the periods of one month, two months, or three months for joining, according as the distance may not exceed 300 or 600 miles, or be in excess of the last-mentioned distance. Officers not joining their station within the said periods respectively shall forfeit their salary for the time delayed in excess of the above periods; and if such excess shall exceed one month, the office shall be vacated, unless otherwise specially ordered by Government.

Section XXII. Upon the first appointment of any civil servant, who shall be reported qualified for public service by the examiners appointed by the Government, to any civil station, there shall be allowed for travelling expenses to the station an allowance at the rate of 8 annas per mile by the direct post road, according to the polymetrical tables of the post-office, the bill for which allowance will be passed by the civil auditor after the officer shall have joined the station; if required in advance, an order of the Government shall be necessary.

Section XXIII. The salary of office will be payable from the date only of the officer joining; but in case of junior civil servants, the salary of assistants will be payable from the date of their being reported qualified for the public service, unless forfeited under the preceding rules, through delay in joining the station to which they may be appointed.

Section XXIV. In case of a change of office, when an officer is appointed to a higher situation, he shall not draw the higher salary until he joins. For the period occupied in travelling, the Rule No. XXI., regulating the time and distance for joining station shall be applicable, and the officer will for the periods allowed in that rule respectively, draw out of the salary of the office he is about to join, a sum equal to that of his previous situation.

CHAPTER VI.

Rules for Deputation Allowances.†

Section XXV. The sum of Company's Rs. 52,200 per annum having been fixed, under the orders of the Court of Directors, as

* The time allowed for joining is computed from the date of the order reaching the officer appointed.

† This rule will equally apply in case of a political resident taking a leave of one, two, or three months, for which, in other classes, he would suffer no deduction. The excess above the maximum monthly salary will, in that case, be enjoyed by the person in charge.

the maximum salary of civil office for the offices of Government, under the situation of Member of Council, civil servants who may draw larger allowances than this annual sum as a consolidated, personal, and sumptuary allowance, in consideration of the necessary expenses of their position, will, in all cases of absence, be treated, in respect to deductions, as drawing only the allowance thus limited, and the excess above the monthly salary yielded by that annual sum shall remain as a local addition to the usual deputation allowance to be drawn by the officer performing the duties, to meet the necessary expenses of his position; provided, however, that in the cases of civil servants appointed to offices of the description referred to subsequent to the 2nd of June, 1854, the sum of Rs. 50,000 shall be held to be the maximum salary, under the Government Resolution, No. 563, of that date.

Section XXVI. Deputation allowances shall be granted to civil servants temporarily performing the duties of an office according to the following rates, and subject to the limitations and conditions hereinafter laid down:—

To civil servants not holding any substantive appointment, at the rate of 50 per cent. on the monthly salary of the appointment officiated in such deputation allowance, being in addition to the subsistence allowance of their respective ranks.

The civil servants holding an office of inferior emolument, when officiating in an office of superior emolument, at the rate of 20 per cent. upon the monthly salary of the appointment officiated in, all cases in which the salary of such appointment shall not exceed Company's Rs. 2,000 per mensem, and in respect to all appointments of which the salary shall be more than Company's Rs. 2,000 per mensem, at the rate of 20 per cent. upon Company's Rs. 2,000, and of 10 per cent. on the amount in which the monthly salary may exceed Company's Rs. 2,000, provided, however, that no lower rate of deputation allowance shall be given than Rs. 200 per mensem.

The deputation allowance shall, in all cases, be in addition to the salary of the substantive appointment held by the officer on deputation.

The above rates are granted provisionally, subject to future revision.

In the Punjab, Nagpore, and other places, where the appointments are by classes, the amount of deputation allowances payable at the above rates will be calculated, not upon the salary of the individual officer holding the substantive appointment in which the officer deputed may be temporarily officiating, but on the average rate of salary attached to the particular class to which the appointment may belong.

A civil servant acting for another shall have no claim to commission or fees, where any such sources of emolument exist. These shall be regarded as forming part of the income of the office to be relieved, subject to the prescribed deductions.

A civil servant acting in an appointment, the salary of which is to be reduced on the retirement of the present incumbent, will draw deputation allowance on the reduced salary.

An officer officiating in more than one appointment will be entitled to deputation allowance, regulated by the aggregate amount of the salary of the offices.

An officer appointed permanently to a higher situation, but prevented from joining his appointment by an order of Government, and detained to officiate in a situation of still higher emolument than the one to which he has been permanently appointed, will be entitled to a deputation allowance in addition to the higher salary to which he has been promoted.

Section XXVII. No civil servant temporarily officiating for another, shall draw an amount larger than the entire emoluments of the office in which he is officiating; and if the amount of the deputation allowance, according to the prescribed scale, added to the permanent emoluments of the officiating servant, would exceed the emoluments of the office in which he is temporarily acting, the excess shall not be drawn. But this provision shall not apply to the case of any officer deputed, for special reasons, to act in an office of inferior emolument to his own. In cases where an officer holding two appointments, on being deputed to officiate for another, shall be relieved only from one, he shall receive no deputation allowance, unless the emoluments of the office in which he is deputed to act exceed the united emoluments of his permanent appointments, and in that case the deputation allowance shall be limited to the difference.

Section XXVIII. No subordinate officer acting for his principal, or for any other person holding a superior appointment in the same office or establishment, at the same station, shall be entitled to any deputation allowance until after the expiration of one month, and then the allowance is not to be drawn in arrear. But a servant previously out of employment, or who may be deputed to act from a different station, shall be entitled to deputation allowance from the date at which he may enter upon the discharge of the duties on which he has been temporarily appointed.

Section XXIX. Civil servants, if deputed to act at a distance from the stations where they are employed, or if ordered by Government on special duty, shall be permitted to draw travelling allowances at the rate sanctioned in the case of a first appointment.

CHAPTER VII.

Rules for Limiting the Period of Service.

Section XXX. After thirty-five years' service, no civil servant shall be appointed to a new office, nor be permitted to retain an office which he has held for a period of five years and upwards, except in special cases, which are to be referred to the decision of the Hon. the Court of Directors. This rule will be applicable to every civil servant appointed to office after its promulgation, and to the case of every other civil servant to whom it relates at the close of five years from the date of its promulgation.

CHAPTER VIII.

Rules for the Grant of Leave of Absence to Law Officers.

Section XXXI. The East India Company's law officers may obtain sick leave, and short leave on private affairs, under the conditions presented in the case of civil servants, both as respects the period of absence, and the limitation of allowances during such absence. Leave will, however, only be granted at the convenience of the Government, and no additional expense will on any consideration be incurred by the Government on account thereof.

If any law officer shall quit his duty, save on leave under medical certificate, or on short leave on private affairs, he will be considered to have vacated his appointment.

CHAPTER IX.

Rules for Chaplains and Assistant Chaplains.

Section XXXII. Chaplains and assistant chaplains may take furlough on private affairs and on medical certificate; also short leave on private affairs, on the same terms and conditions as military officers, with the following modifications:—

1st. Chaplains being allowed to retire after twenty years, the period of furlough on private affairs is in their case limited to the present term of three years. The furlough may, however, be taken in one period, divided into two periods whether at eighteen months each, or of two years and one year respectively; and if divided, the first furlough may be taken, as at present, after seven years' residence, and the second furlough after a further residence of ten years in India. As respects chaplains, and assistant chaplains, appointed before the 11th January, 1854, when the period of service was only eighteen years, their second furlough, if they should exercise the option of taking furlough in two periods, will be available after a second residence in India for a term of eight years.

2ndly. No furlough leave of absence, whether on private affairs, or on sick certificate taken in Europe, or elsewhere out of India, in excess of three years, will be allowed to count a service in India in the twenty years which qualifies chaplains for their retiring pensions.

Section XXXIII. The furlough pay of chaplains will remain as at present. With regard to their allowance during sick leave, to any place out of India, they shall receive salary (but at a rate not exceeding 1,600*l.* per annum) for the first six months of absence, and for the remaining twelve months an allowance equal to the furlough pay of their standing. If the leave be extended, an allowance equal to furlough pay may be drawn for a further period of eighteen months.

By order of the Most Noble the Governor-General in Council,
C. H. LUSHINGTON,
Official Secretary to the Government of India.

NAGPORE IRREGULAR FORCE.

Fort William, Aug. 11, 1854.—The Most Noble the Governor-General of India in Council is pleased to direct that a force shall be embodied in Nagpore, which shall be denominated the "Nagpore Irregular Force," and shall consist of—

- 1 Horse field-battery.
- 1 Regiment of irregular cavalry.
- 3 Regiments of Infantry, of 8 companies each.

One European officer will be attached to the battery, a commandant, second in command, and adjutant, to the regiment of cavalry; and a commandant and adjutant to each regiment of infantry.

The senior officer, being commandant of a regiment in the Force, will be also commandant of the Force, and as such he will be allowed an additional allowance of Rs. (400) four hundred per mensem.

A medical officer will be attached to each regiment of cavalry and infantry.

The artillery and infantry will be entitled to hutting money.

No additional or extra pay will be granted to either artillery, cavalry, or infantry, while employed in any part of the British territories.

The native officers and men of the Force will be admissible to invalid and to wound and family pensions, according to the Regulations applicable to local and irregular troops.

Men who may be transferred from the line or irregular cavalry, will retain all pensionary claims to which they may be entitled at the time of transfer.

The full proportion of camp equipage will be attached to the artillery and infantry.

Extra batta at the same rates, and under the rules applicable to the Gwalior Contingent, will be allowed to the several grades.

BANKS OF BENGAL, MADRAS, AND BOMBAY.

Aug. 26, 1854.—The following Act, passed by the Legislative Council, received the assent of the Most Noble the Governor-General of India on the 26th of August, 1854, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

Act No. XXI. of 1854.

An Act to amend the Law relating to the several Banks of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay.

For the purpose of removing doubts, and of extending the powers of the chartered Banks of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, it is enacted as follows:—

1. The persons for the time being holding the offices of secretary and treasurer, or of secretary alone, or of deputy secretary of the Bank of Bengal, of the Bank of Madras, or of the Bank of Bombay, are hereby severally empowered, for and on behalf of the Bank under which they hold either of such offices, to indorse and transfer Government Securities standing in the name of the Bank, to draw, accept, and indorse bills of exchange, promissory notes, and Bank post-bills, connected with the current and ordinary business of the Bank, and to sign all other documents connected with such business.

2. It shall be lawful for any of the said banks to lend money on the security of shares in such of the incorporated Indian Railway Companies as hold a guarantee from the East-India Company with regard to interest: provided that no such loan shall in any case exceed in amount three-fourths of the paid-up value of the shares, on the security of which the loan is made; and in every case such shares shall be transferred to the Bank by which the loan is made, either absolutely or by way of mortgage.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Sept. 18, 1854).—The market for British Cotton Piece Goods remains without any signs of activity. In the face of the approaching holidays, dealers have not come forward freely, expecting a further reduction; and though importers are rather anxious to realize, they are partially checked by the decline in exchange. Business had therefore been transacted to a moderate extent, and in some instances purchases had been made on easier terms. Grey and White Shirtings continued in limited inquiry, but Figured Shirtings were almost unsaleable. Jaconets a shade lower without any improvement in the demand. There was not much doing in Grey and White Madapollams. Mull Mulls remained unaltered. A fair amount of business had been done in Book Mulls for the Burmah market. The other descriptions of goods continued without any alteration, the quantity disposed of being on a limited scale. In metals not much to report. Copper in steady demand, though the price was a shade lower. No change in Iron.

MADRAS.

COTTON CULTIVATION.—Mr. F. D. Meppen, superintendent of cotton cultivation in Mysore, in a letter to the Bangalore Herald reports most favourably of the result of his experiments. The foreign cotton produced in the province is of excellent quality, and so large are the orders which arrive in Mysore, that Mr. Meppen believes cotton will soon be one of the staples of the Nuggur division.

DEATH OF LIEUT. HOLLAND.—We regret to record the death, near Coimbatore, of Lieut. Charles Holland, of the 4th N.I., holding temporary employment in the Department of Public Works, under Capt. Ludlow, of the engineers. The deceased officer was seized with cholera at the village of Vodrammacottah, on the 30th August, and expired the following afternoon. In Lieut. Holland the public has lost a most able and energetic servant, and society, one, whose unassuming manners and amiability of disposition, had endeared him to all with whom he came in contact.—Athenæum, Sept. 7.

ANOTHER ENGAGEMENT IN THE DEKKAN.—There has been another serious engagement in the Dekkan, in which the forces under command of Brigadier Mayne has gained a most signal victory over nearly one thousand rebel rohillas. Our correspondent from the Dekkan informs us that between eight hundred and one thousand rebel rohillas having taken up a position near Aurangabad, Brigadier Mayne moved out against them with a combined force of cavalry, artillery, and infantry. He invested the fort and village they held on the 21st instant; but finding the place too strong to be taken without heavy guns, he confined his operations to a complete reconnoissance and to hemming in the enemy until they arrived. But the insurgents were not inclined to wait for the assault which would have been made on them on the 22nd. At midnight, on the night of the 21st, they sallied forth and tried to cut their way through the pickets. They were, however, woefully out in their calculations as to escape. The cavalry of the Hyderabad contingent are too good and efficient (even after having been in the saddle for thirty hours, and doubly outnumbered) to allow an enemy to escape them. In a wonderfully short space of time they collected on the point of danger, and notwithstanding the darkness of the night, the steady and compact body of the enemy, and the disadvantage of the ground, these incomparable horsemen succeeded in cutting up and completely destroying the greater number of the retreating rohillas. Never has such an example been made of these mercenaries, and too much credit cannot be given to Brigadier Mayne and to those under him. Captains Macintire and Abbott covered themselves with glory, charging through and through the enemy. The latter was himself severely wounded, and had two chargers disabled under him. The former was knocked off his horse which was also severely wounded. Lieut. Harrison's horse was also cut, that officer being in the thick of the fight. Brigadier Mayne's old favourite charger was cut down from under him, and the troopers' casualties numbered about twenty-five. The rohillas will assuredly never get again into a body or oppose our troops. And Brigadier Mayne deserves the full honour of having stopped the nefarious career which they and the Arabs have successfully pursued for so many years in the Dekkan. On the same day last year (or one day later) he destroyed the Arabs at Jeswunt-poor. Surely the Government will now recognize the services of himself and his officers and men.—Telegraph and Courier, Sept. 28.

THE 29TH N.I. from Trichnopoly, arrived at the presidency Sept. 16, and encamped on the Black Town esplanade.

THE 50TH N.I. will commence its march for Secunderabad on the morning of the 20th Sept.

THE LONDON MAIL of Aug. 25 arrived at Bombay Sept. 23 (per Victoria).

POONA.—THE CAMP OF EXERCISE.—The orders for forming a camp of exercise at Poona next cold weather are out. The force to be assembled here in November and December next will consist of the following:—The 1st troop of horse artillery with battery, but without camp equipage, will embark at Kurrachee about the 15th November for Oolwa Bunder, and march thence to Poona. The 2nd troop of horse artillery will march from Poona on the 15th December to Deesa, via Bhewndy, Surat, Broach, and Ahmedabad, and will reach Deesa on the 8th February, 1855. The 1st company 1st battalion, with No. 2 light field battery, will march from Sholapoor to Poona on the 10th November, and remain for exercise at this station until the 31st December, and then march to Ahmednugur. The 1st company, 2nd battalion, with No. 3 light field battery, will march from Ahmednugur to Poona on the 15th November, and remain here for exercise until the 31st December, and then proceed to Sholapoor. The 6th company 3rd battalion artillery (native), with bullock battery, will march from Sattara to Poona on the 15th Nov. for exercise, and will return to its station after the exercise is over. A portion of the Poona irregular horse—as many as can be spared for exercise—will proceed from Seroor to Poona on the 20th Nov. A wing of the 24th N.I. will leave Sattara for Poona on the 15th Nov. and after the exercise is over will proceed to Ahmednugur. A wing of the 26th N.I. will also leave Ahmednugur on the same date for Poona for exercise, and then proceed to Sattara. We shall thus have at one time in Poona the undermentioned troops of all arms:—Three troops of horse artillery, 3 batteries of foot artillery, head quarters of the sappers and miners, the 10th royal hussars, detachments of native light cavalry, the Poona irregular horse, Capt. Hunt's drill details, the 78th highlanders, the 3rd Europeans, the 4th rifles, the 19th N.I., wing of the 24th N.I., and wing of the 26th N.I.—Observer, Sept. 23.

DEATH OF LIEUT. E. J. WRENCH.—We regret to have to record the unexpected death of Lieut. Edward John Wrench, attached to the 1st comp. 1st batt. of artillery. He died at Sholapoor on the morning of the 2nd Sept., of brain fever, after an illness of only a few days. He was well liked by all classes, and his death—the second amongst the officers of his company within three months—has cast a gloom of sadness over the whole camp.—Telegraph and Courier.

THE SINDH SALT COMPANY.—We learn from the Sindian that a meeting of the shareholders of the Salt Company was held at the Bunder custom-house, to carry into effect the object of the prospectus. Our contemporary is glad to learn that the whole of the 200 shares have been taken up, and calls eagerly made for more.

MR. MARTIN GUBBINS.—We regret to learn that Mr. Martin Gubbins, who has just taken charge of the Meerut commissioner-ship, in place of Mr. Coverley Jackson, has become so seriously unwell as to render it probable that he will be allowed leave for two years on sick certificate.

THE WESTERN INDIA IRRIGATION COMPANY have now had 48,000 shares applied for in India, or assuming that no more than 10,000 are required for England, 8,000 more than the proposed capital, and all this has happened in six weeks, without the slightest influence or effort being used. They are now on the point of applying to Government, and of calling up their deposits with the strongest reason to feel confident in the results. The Irrigation field first to be examined is the rich tract lying betwixt the Nerbudda and Taptee, from the base of the highlands towards the sea along a line of about forty miles of canal, with a navigable river at each end. This tract was strongly recommended by Colonel Grant in 1849, and by Mr. Mackay in 1851. The survey is expected to be completed by the time the cold weather is over, and the works to be begun before the commencement of the rains. As the capital will only be called up as required by the contractors, and the canal be made available as it is cut, there is every reason to hope that dividends will be coming in, on the full amount paid up within a twelvemonth of the first call being made.—Bombay Times.

THE BARQUE MORAYSHIRE has been destroyed by fire; the crew reached Colombo.

CONSUMPTION OF ARRACK AND PORTER BY THE TROOPS.—The yearly amount paid now by the European troops under this presidency into the Canteens for arrack and porter is about 3 lacs of rupees, or Rs. 33½ per annum for each man, taking the whole at about nine thousand men; consequently, all their little savings must go in drink, which is a downright waste of money, if the doctrine of the political economist be correct; and we rather think it is, for it is laid down that "consumption on pleasures or luxuries, whether by the idle or the industrious, since production is neither its objects nor in any way advanced by it, must be reckoned unproductive," and the consumption of intoxicating liquors is certainly unproductive consumption. The sooner regimental Canteens are abolished, the better for the Government and soldier; and instead of them let us have coffee-rooms with good libraries, and schools and workshops attached to each corps.—Bombay Gazette.

ments better conceived or more fully carried out, as indeed might be expected in a force commanded by so excellent an officer as Colonel Cotton, of H.M.'s 22nd.

This severe lesson has taught the hill tribes that no place is inaccessible to British troops accompanied by guns, and the affair of Shah-Moisa-Khuil deserves a prominent place in the annals of our frontier warfare. You will in all probability hear of another business of the same nature being carried on to-morrow."

The annexed, dated the 4th September, arrived this morning: "On the 2nd September, the village of Saadeen, between Michnee and Shah-Moisa-Khuil was entirely destroyed without opposition by the force under Col. Cotton. Here, too, the work of destruction was most complete, its only tower was blown up, and every tree in the village felled to the ground. Two leafy veterans, of 100 years growth, were uprooted, and their giant limbs scattered to the winds.

Several of the wounded have died, but I am glad to tell you that both officers are doing well.

It is now ascertained beyond a doubt that the enemy's loss has been more severe than was at first supposed. On the 3rd the camp broke up to return to cantonments.

I hear of the Basseckhail people having been pillaging in our territory; even the Lahore Chronicle can hardly say just now that the frontier is in a state of perfect tranquillity.

Surely, under these circumstances, it is at least questionable policy to send the mountain train battery to Rawul Pindie, when their services may at any moment be required in the Peshawar valley and its neighbourhood.

P.S.—I am glad to tell you that Ensign Davidson, of the 4th, who led a company of Gordon's Sikhs up to the heights on the 31st ultimo, and succeeded to the command of the wing, bringing it out of action after Lieut. Brownlow was disabled, has been appointed acting adjutant of that regiment."—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 9.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.—The new schedules of fixed establishments have at length come up for discussion and two items have been disposed of. As far as the resolution of the council decides the question, the salary of future governors will be 5,000*l.* per annum instead of 7,000*l.* as hitherto; while instead of fixing the allowance for travelling expenses at 500*l.* per annum, an annual vote is to be taken for the expenditure actually incurred in travelling. The queen's advocate took an active and useful part in these discussions. He augured nothing but good from the increased powers granted to the council, and he thought the time had come for further enlarging the privileges of the legislative body. We wish Mr. Selby could indoctrinate his coadjutors in the government with his own liberal sentiments on this subject.—Ibid.

DEPARTURE OF COMMODORE PERRY.—By the Ganges, which sails to-day (Sept. 11), Commodore Perry takes his departure for the United States by the overland route. In last overland edition we published an Address from the crew of the flag-ship Mississippi to His Excellency, another has been published from his mercantile countrymen in Canton, together with the commodore's reply. The "Memorial" spoken of is, we understand, a handsome service of plate, to be manufactured in New York.—China Mail.

THE PLÉNIPOTENTIARIES.—Sir John Bowring, M. De Bourboulon, and Mr. McLane, the British, French, and United States Plenipotentiaries, have lately had several consultations, here and at Macao, on the subject, it is understood, of the revival of the treaties; and as their Excellencies intend shortly to proceed to the north in the Rattler and Pouchatan, we should not be at all astonished to learn, ere they return, that they had attempted to go on to Peking.—Overland China Mail, Sept. 11.

THE BISHOP OF VIETNAM.—We are told that Bishop Smith goes up to Shanghai by the Lady Mary Wood, with the intention of visiting Nankin, and would advise his lordship to take along with him his zealous coadjutor in rebel sympathy, the Rev. I. J. Roberts. A short residence among the "heavenly spirits" of the "holy city" will doubtless give them both exalted conceptions of the heavenly mission and work of their favourites; but if the question as to who is to be primate, &c., of all China should be brought before their divine highnesses at Nankin, we fear his lordship would stand but little chance against "Tai-ping-wang's" favourite "preceptor." Seriously, however, we do not think his lordship has really any expectation of going to the southern capital, though such a movement does very well to base a report upon. Mr. Roberts has now been at Shanghai a year or more, talking and writing about going to Nankin, while, if he really desired to go, he might have got there months ago. But, from his last report, it would seem he will now venture only in some foreign steamer, under the protection of a foreign flag. What confidence can such a man himself have in all the nonsense that he publishes? We sincerely wish that both the bishop and Mr. Roberts may take up their abode for a while at Nankin; for if that did not serve to cure them of their folly, it would unquestionably somewhat cool their belief in rebel Christianity. It is to be hoped, also, that in the event of both or either really proceeding to Nankin, they will confine themselves strictly to their own sphere, as it is but rarely, indeed, that any benefit accrues either in political or mercantile affairs from clerical interference.—Ibid.

EDUCATION IN INDIA.

NO. IV.

OUR remarks on that portion of the educational despatch not already passed under review will be brief.

An abuse in regard to stipendiary scholarships is noticed, which certainly demands a remedy. Stipends, it appears, are in some cases granted, "which not only exceed the cost of the maintenance of the student, but in many cases are above what he could reasonably expect to gain on entering the public service, or any of the active professions of life." This certainly ought not to be. To defray the necessary expenses of a promising scholar for subsistence and advanced education is well, but to give more looks like capricious extravagance. To such stipends the authorities in this country are opposed, and we think they are right. Such largesses bear no resemblance to the fellowships in our universities, the continuance of which we would defend to the death. By fellowships a number of studious men are retained at the great seats of learning, there to advance its interests by cultivating its various branches to an extent which the time usually devoted to education will not allow. We do not say that such institutions are not sometimes abused. What good is there in the world that is not? But they afford the means of enabling men who love learning to pursue it free from the annoyance of want, or the distractions of professional avocations; and in many instances their effect is highly beneficial. Such things, however, are not for India, unless private munificence should establish them. The authors of the despatch, after observing that—

"The amount of the stipendiary scholarships should be fixed at such a sum as may be considered sufficient for the maintenance of the holders of them at the colleges or schools to which they are attached, and which may often be at a distance from the home of the students,"—

thus proceed :—

"We shall, however, offer encouragements to education which will tend to more practical results than those scholarships. By giving to persons who possess an aptness for teaching, as well as the requisite standard of acquirements, and who are willing to devote themselves to the profession of schoolmaster, moderate monthly allowances for their support during the time which it may be requisite for them to pass in normal schools, or classes, in order to acquire the necessary training, we shall assist many deserving students to qualify themselves for a career of practical usefulness, and one which will secure them an honourable competence through life. We are also of opinion, that admission to places of instruction, which, like the medical and engineering colleges, are maintained by the State, for the purpose of educating persons for special employments under Government, might be made the rewards of industry and ability, and thus supply a practical encouragement to general education, similar to that which will be afforded by the educational service."

Now on this we may ask, How is the possession of "aptness for teaching," by those who have never taught, to be ascertained? "Aptness for teaching" is not a necessary concomitant of "aptness" for learning. Men of high attainments, men who master with facility every branch of learning which they attempt, are by no means invariably good teachers. The communication of knowledge, the control of the studies of others, require peculiar faculties which are often denied to those who can do much for themselves. In this country, in some of the parochial schools, and in other schools of similar character, there is a class of persons known as "pupil-teachers," to whom Government assistance is extended; but they are selected, we believe, with reference entirely to their own acquirements and inclinations, and not at all for their possessing "aptness for teaching." As to securing "an honourable competence," we have our doubts. The best that can be hoped for by a pupil-teacher in this country is to get the appointment of master of a National School, held at the pleasure or caprice of the individual or committee that presides over it, and rewarded, perhaps, with a salary of eighty pounds a year. Here, too, the number of pupil-teachers is such as to render it utterly unlikely that all should attain even to this but little enviable distinction. When the system was first introduced some years since, it was held out by the then President of the Council (the Marquis of Lansdowne), that those who were unable to gain scholastic appointments would have a claim upon Government, and might aspire to become excisemen or to fill similar offices. The emoluments of such offices are not more tempting than those of a National schoolmaster; but small as they are, we have not heard—and we know something of the matter—of any pupil-teachers being elevated to the service of the Crown in any capacity, however humble. We do not speak of this as a matter for blame or for regret, but only as fact. The prospects of pupil-teachers are not in this country very splendid, and we suspect that those of a similar class in India will not be much better: the "honourable competence" will not, we fear, be realized. The concluding passage of the last quotation is something to the purpose. For reception into the medical and engineering colleges at the public expense two qualifications should be required,—taste for the pursuit, and a fair probability of succeeding in it.

On the model schools and the normal schools we have but little to say. They proceed upon the principle—a most absurd one, that there is one good method of teaching, and only one. There are many good methods, and which among them is the best is a point which even the great instructress, experience will never enable us to decide. Good scholars, and even great scholars, have been produced under systems widely dissimilar—under all systems and under no system; and in the face of such evidence the advocates of uniformity continue to insist, with the greatest pertinacity, that there should be but one, and that one their own. We knew an instance where a Government inspector threw a flourishing school into confusion because the managing committee did not see the necessity for "parallel desks." Few readers, perhaps, will know what these things are, and it is not worth while, in our judgment, to occupy space in enlightening them on the subject. Not so, however, thought the inspector to whom we have referred. With him parallel desks were everything: a school without them was not good for anything, and could not be good for anything. Parallel desks were the man's first thought in the morning and his last in the evening; and if, as some have done, he had chosen his own epitaph, he probably would have wished it to be, "He consecrated his life to promote the general adoption of parallel desks;" though, perhaps, as he was a clergyman, he might have objected to the use of the word "consecrated." Such follies as these are the fruits of a principle which considers unity the one thing to be upheld—a principle which necessarily leads to the elevation of trifles into matters of first-rate importance.

The want of school-books occupies the next place:—

"Equal in importance to the training of schoolmasters is the provision of vernacular school-books, which shall provide European information to be the object of study in the lower classes of schools. Something has, no doubt, been done, of late years, towards this end, but more still remains to be done; and we believe that deficiencies might be readily and speedily supplied by the adoption of a course recommended by Mr. M. Elphinstone in 1825, namely, 'That the best translations of particular books, or the best elementary treatises in specified languages, should be advertised for, and liberally rewarded.'

With all respect for Mr. Elphinstone (and it is impossible to feel too much respect for him), we do not think that his plan of advertising for good school-books would produce them. It is like the prize-essay system, which has never produced anything but miserable, drivelling, and ridiculous pretension.

In the next paragraph of the despatch we read:—

"The aim should be, in compilations, and original compositions (to quote from one of Mr. Adam's valuable reports upon the state of education in Bengal), 'Not to translate European works into the words and idioms of the native languages, but so to combine the substance of European knowledge with native forms of thought and sentiment as to render the school-books useful and attractive.'"

Now without stopping to inquire into the soundness of this dictum, we may ask, How is the proposed "aim" to be carried out, and by whom, natives or foreigners? It appears to us one of those fine projects with which schemers often amuse themselves without looking at the difficulty—sometimes amounting to impossibility—of reducing it to practice. Such books may come forth in time, but it must be a great length of time before they can be furnished.

The following passage contains much food for thought, and some matter for commendation:—

"We shall not enter upon the causes which, as we foresaw, have led to the failure of that part of the resolutions which provided for the annual submission to Government of lists of meritorious students. It is sufficient for our present purpose to observe that no more than forty-six persons have been gazetted in Bengal up to this time, all of whom were students in the Government colleges. In the last year for which we have returns (1852), only two persons were so distinguished; and we can readily believe, with the secretary to the Board of Revenue in Bengal, that young men who have passed a difficult examination in the highest branches of philosophy and mathematics, are naturally disinclined to accept such employment as persons who intend to make the public service their profession must necessarily commence with. The necessity for any such lists will be done away with by the establishment of universities, as the acquisition of a degree, and still more the attainment of university distinctions, will bring highly educated young men under the notice of Government. The resolutions in question will, therefore, require revision so as to adapt them practically to carry out our views upon this subject. What we desire is, that, where the other qualifications of the candidates for appointments under Government are equal, a person who has received a good education, irrespective of the place or manner in which it may have been acquired, should be preferred to one who has not; and that even in lower situations, a man who can read and write be preferred to one who cannot, if he is equally eligible in other respects. We also approve of the institution of examinations where practicable, to be simply and entirely tests of the fitness of candidates for the special duties of the various departments in which they are seeking employment, as has been the case in the Bombay Presidency. We confidently commit the encouragement of educated in preference to uneducated men to the different officers who are responsible for their selection; and we cannot interfere by any further regulations to fetter their free choice in a matter of which they bear the sole responsibility."

Now we cannot withhold our assent from the opinion of the Secretary to the Board of Revenue, which was unquestionably just. With respect to preferring a candidate for a common-place appointment because he is educated, we doubt, or rather we deny, its propriety. He will not be the better servant because he has been highly educated—perhaps he will be worse; and therefore, to give him a preference on this ground, is injustice to his rivals. An examination into the "fitness of candidates for the special duties of the various departments in which they are seeking employment," is quite a different thing, and deserving of all approval.

Shortly after the passage just quoted, we find a notice of a darogah particularly "recommended for promotion, as having gained the respect and applause of all classes, who, though they may not practise, yet know how to admire, real honesty and integrity of purpose." We are heartily glad to hear of such a man; but we must again declare that education—merely secular education be it observed—does not make a man honest or just. If it find him an honest man, it does not impair his honesty; if it find him a rogue, it leaves him one.

The following is not quite what, according to our views, it should be, though it is not without good.

"But, however large the number of appointments under Government may be, the views of the natives of India should be directed to the far wider and more important sphere of usefulness and advantage which a liberal education lays open to them; and such practical benefits arising from improved knowledge should be constantly impressed upon them by those who know their feelings, and have influence or authority to advise or direct their efforts."

The words "usefulness and advantage" are not altogether those which we should have liked to see employed; at least they should not have stood without others, indicating the higher claims of liberal knowledge. Such knowledge deserves cultivation for itself alone, and its value ought not to be entirely estimated according to the answer given to the question, "What shall I get by it?" It may be that—in India more especially—the hope of pecuniary gain is the great spur to action; but the motive is comparatively a low one, and ought not to be set up as entitled to exclusive encouragement.

Some other points, on which we cannot dwell, are touched upon in the despatch; such as the admirable College of Civil Engineers at Roorkee—and we rejoice to learn, that it is proposed to extend the advantage of such institutions to other parts of India; schools of industry and design,—a fashionable hobby of the day; instruction in practical agriculture, which we have no doubt will produce some benefit to those employed to teach, but we believe will confer none on anybody else; for though we certainly do not underrate the value of agriculture,—the most important as it was the first of practical arts,—fields and farms, not schools, are the places for teaching it; on female education,—an object of some importance if rightly encouraged,—treated, we think, too much in ad captandum style; and a somewhat cold and seemingly reluctant permission for masters to converse with pupils, at the request of the latter, and out of school hours, on religious subjects.

A brief review of the state of education in the different presidencies concludes the despatch. In the course of this the following passage occurs:—

"In the North-Western Provinces the demand for education is so limited by circumstances, fully detailed by the Lieutenant-Governor in one of his early reports, that it will probably be long—[very long, we should say]—before private efforts will become energetic enough to supply the place of the establishment, support, and management, by Government, of places of instruction of the highest grade, where there may be a sufficient reason for their institution.

"At the same time, the system for the promotion of general education throughout the country, by means of the inspection and encouragement of indigenous schools, has laid the foundation of a great advancement in the education of the lower classes. Mr. Thomason ascertained, from statistical information, the lamentable state of ignorance in which the people were sunk; while the registration of land, which is necessary under the revenue settlement of the North-Western Provinces, appeared to him to offer the stimulus of a direct interest for the acquisition of so much knowledge, at least of reading and writing, of the simple rules of arithmetic, and of land measurement, as would enable each man to look after his own rights.

"He therefore organized a system of encouragement of indigenous schools, by means of a constant inspection by zillah and pergunnah visitors, under the superintendence of a visitor-general; while, at the head-quarters of each tahsildar, a school was established for the purpose of teaching 'reading and writing the vernacular languages, both Urdu and Hindi accounts, and the mensuration of land.' A school-house is provided by Government, and the masters of the Tahsili schools receive a small salary, and are further entitled to the tuition-fees paid by the pupils, of whom none are educated gratuitously, except 'on recommendations given by village schoolmasters who may be on the visitors' list.' A certain sum is annually allotted to each zillah for the reward of deserving teachers and scholars; and the attention of the visitor-general was expressly directed to the preparation of elementary school-books in the vernacular languages, which are sold through the agency of the zillah and the pergunnah visitors. We shall be prepared to sanction the gradual extension of some such system as this to the other districts of the Agra presidency, and we have already referred to it as the model by which the efforts of other presidencies for the same object should be guided."

The system introduced by Mr. Thomason was admirably adapted to meet the wants of the country, and the wants of the country called for the system: the system, therefore, prospered. In the lower provinces, circumstances are so different, that there would be small hope, we fear, of its answering there. The despatch, however, suggests, and we think properly, that in Bombay the New Revenue Settlement affords an opening for the introduction of Mr. Thomason's plan with prospect of advantage; and that in Madras, where the ryotwary system prevails, it might also be found available.

There is, however, one expression, near the close of our last extract, which staggers us. "We shall be prepared to sanction the extension of some such system as this to the other districts of the Agra presidency." Where is the "Agra presidency?" We had understood that the formation of such a presidency had by law passed some years ago been suspended, and that the suspension had been confirmed by the very last Act relating to the Indian Government. We must inquire into this.

Here, for the present, we close our remarks on the very difficult, but very important, subject of education in India. We may probably return to the subject ere long.

FURLOUGH REGULATIONS.

THE Governor-General in Council has published in a general order, which will appear in the usual place, the new regulations for furlough, sick leave, leave on private affairs, deputation allowances, &c., as applicable to members of the civil service, ecclesiastical persons receiving pay from the Company, and law-officers. They extend to the whole of British India. It will be recollected that the substance of the regulations for the civil service, as sanctioned from home, appeared in our publication, No. 242, dated 14th April last, and that in other places we have touched on ecclesiastical arrangements.

ADVERTISEMENT.

East-India House, 9th August, 1854, and
4th October, 1854.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the annexed code of Regulations for the admission of Candidates at the first Examination, to be held in January next, for the appointment of ASSISTANT-SURGEONS in the service of the East-India Company, has been framed by the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, under the provisions of the Act 16 & 17 Vict. cap. 95, sec. 38.

REGULATIONS FOR THE ADMISSION OF CANDIDATES FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT-SURGEONS IN THE SERVICE OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

All natural-born subjects of her Majesty may be Candidates for admission into the service of the East-India Company as Assistant-Surgeons. They must, however, be between 22 and 28 years of age, and of sound bodily health.

They must subscribe and send in to Dr. Scott, the Physician to the Honourable East-India Company, before the 10th day of December, 1854, a declaration to the following effect:—

"I (Christian and surname at full length), a Candidate for employment as an Assistant-Surgeon in the service of the East-India Company, do hereby declare that I was years of age on the day of last, and that I labour under no constitutional disease or physical disability that can interfere with the due discharge of the duties of a medical officer; and I also attest my readiness to proceed on duty to India within three months of receiving my appointment."

This declaration must be accompanied by the following documents:—

1. Proof of age, either by extract from the register of the parish in which the Candidate was born, or by his own declaration pursuant to the Act 5 & 6 Wm. 4. c. 62.
2. A diploma in surgery, or a degree in medicine, provided an examination in surgery be required for such degree, from some body competent by law to grant or confer such diploma or degree.
3. A certificate of having attended two courses of lectures, of six months each, on the practice of physic, and of having attended for six months the practice and clinical instruction of the physicians at some hospital, containing at least on an average one hundred in-patients; or of having attended one course of lectures of six months, on the practice of physic, and clinical instruction for twelve months.
4. A certificate of having attended for three months the practical instruction given at one of the public asylums for the treatment of the insane.
5. A certificate of having attended for three months one of the institutions, or wards of a hospital, especially devoted to the treatment of ophthalmic disease.
6. A certificate of having attended a course of lectures on midwifery, and of having conducted at least six labours.
7. A certificate of having acquired a practical knowledge of cupping.

Candidates may also, at their option, send in certificates of attendance at any hospitals, or on any courses of lectures, in addition to the above. Attendance on a course of military surgery is recommended.

Candidates producing satisfactory certificates will be admitted to an Examination to be held in January, 1855.

The Examination will include the following subjects:—

1. Surgery in all its departments.
2. Medicine, including the diseases of women and children, therapeutics, pharmacy, and hygiene.
3. Anatomy and physiology, including comparative anatomy.
4. Natural history, including botany and zoology.

The examination will be conducted—

1. By means of written questions and answers.
2. By object examinations and experiments, when the subject admits of such tests.
3. By practical examination at the bedside of the patient, and by dissections and operations on the dead body.
4. By viva-voce examination.

The persons who shall be pronounced by the Examiners to be the best qualified in all respects, shall be appointed to fill the requisite number of appointments as Assistant-Surgeons in the East-India Company's service.

All Assistant-Surgeons are required to subscribe to the Military or Medical, and Medical Retiring Funds, at the Presidencies to which they may be respectively appointed, and to the Military Orphan Society also, if appointed to Bengal.

All Assistant-Surgeons who shall neglect or refuse to proceed to India under the orders of the Court of Directors, within three months from the date of their appointments, will be considered as having forfeited them, unless special circumstances shall justify a departure from this regulation.

Candidates may apply to Dr. Scott, 13, Stratton Street, for further information, if needed.

N.B.—The certificates and notices as to Examination herein contained, apply only to the Examination to be held in January next. Regulations regarding the requirements of Candidates for future Examinations will be issued after the first Examination.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

NOTE, 4TH OCTOBER, 1854.

Candidates who may not have been able to attend the practice of an asylum for the insane, or of an ophthalmic hospital, for three months previous to offering themselves for examination in January, 1855, will not be excluded from examination, but will, if successful in obtaining recommendation for appointments, be required to produce certificates of having attended such practice during the interval between the examination and the time of proceeding to India.

The Board of Examiners of Candidates for the appointments of Assistant-Surgeons in the East-India Company's service, give notice that, on the 8th January, 1855, they will hold Examinations at the East-India House, for the selections of Assistant-Surgeons. The selection will be made according to merit, and it is expected that about thirty appointments will be awarded.

The marked success which has attended the operations of this Society justifies the Directors in calling the attention of the public to the superior advantages held out to all classes desirous of affecting Assurances upon their lives.

The subjoined scale of rates is framed with the greatest care, and will be found to be as MODERATE AS IS CONSISTENT WITH PERFECT SECURITY.

Annual Premium required for the Assurance of £100 on a single Life, with participation in Profits:—

20	£1 18 8	35	£2 14 11	50	£4 5 6
25	2 3 3	40	3 3 0	55	5 5 10
30	2 8 10	45	3 12 2	60	6 13 2

Tables for Policies to be effected in India have been especially prepared from the records of the East-India Company, on the experience of mortality in that country.

During the last thirteen years, the reduction of Premium on Policies entitled to participate in Profits has averaged more than 44 per cent., and in the last four years it has been declared at 45 per cent.

An annual division is made of one-fifth of the ascertained profits of the five preceding years: the other four-fifths being set apart to enter into the average of succeeding years.

Of the sum annually divisible, 75 per cent. is apportioned to Policy-holders who have paid six annual Premiums, either in a reduction of subsequent Premiums, or as a Bonus added to the Policy. The remainder is apportioned to the Shareholders.

Assets of the Society, upwards of £600,000.—Amount of Policies in force, £2,000,000.—Annual income arising from Premiums, exclusively of interest on the invested capital, exceeds £120,000.

Weekly Board-day, Thursday, at 1 o'clock.

Committees sit every Tuesday and Saturday, at 12 o'clock, when Policies requiring despatch may be effected.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS effected

another cure of Bad Legs, after fourteen years' duration.—Mrs. Gostley, of Dartford, was afflicted for fourteen years with bad legs, and she was repeatedly told that it was impossible she could ever be cured: eighteen months ago she became so much worse that her friends were obliged to carry her up and down stairs; at Guy's Hospital they refused to receive her except as an in-door patient, as it was feared amputation would be necessary. She then resolved to try HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS, and in the course of nine weeks, these remedies alone effected a sound and perfect cure.

Sold by all vendors of medicine, and at PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY'S Establishments, 244, Strand, London, and 80, Maiden Lane, New York; and by all European and native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL is a delightfully

fragrant and transparent preparation for the Hair; and as an invigorator and purifier beyond all precedent. In dressing the hair, nothing can equal the effect of Rowlands' Macassar Oil, either on natural or artificial hair, rendering it so admirably soft that it will lie in any direction, producing beautifully flowing curls, and imparting a transcendent lustre.—Price 3s. 6d., 7s., family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' KALYDOR for the skin and complexion is unequalled for its rare and inestimable qualities. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek; the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms; its capability of soothing irritation, and removing cutaneous defects, discolorations, and all unsightly appearances, render it indispensable to every toilet.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO; or, Pearl Dentifrice.—A White Powder, compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the Oriental Herbal. It bestows on the Teeth a pearl-like whiteness, frees them from tartar, and prevents premature decay. It induces a healthy action of the Gums, and renders the Breath sweet and pure.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

A LADY who has no real diamonds, sports false ones; a man who has no plate wherewith to ornament his table, dazzles our sense with electrottype. We are not sure that this is a good plan, but it is certain that in the world as it goes it is pretty generally pursued. The Indian papers, however, scorn it, and we think they are right; having no news, they do not pretend to have any;—they do not attempt to disguise their poverty, but tell us, in a straightforward way, that they have nothing, and leave us to make something of it, if we be able and choose to take the trouble. This is the general tone, but our ambitious contemporary the Delhi Gazette does not adopt it; he is full, even to overflowing, of the fact, or alleged fact, of a Russian force having appeared in the territories of the Khan of Kokan. Nobody professes to know anything certain about the extent of this force: whether it consists of ten men or ten thousand, or any number between, is a point left to the imagination of the hearer of the news. On the object of this irruption, if it have taken place,—and of the rumour, if it have not,—doctors differ. One paper supposes that the Russians have taken advantage of the old feud between Bokhara and Kokan to aid the former power against the latter. Another says, that the reports of Russian intrigue and aggression obviously emanate from the Russians themselves, as they increase their importance, while they, at the same time, provide employment for the native politicals and spies who disseminate them. On the nature of the country supposed to be invaded, there seems to be about as much difference of opinion: in one paper Kokan is styled “a petty and barbarous principality;” in another, the Delhi Gazette, it figures in the following attractive picture:—

“Kokan, the ancient Ferghana, as many of our readers know, and many do not, is celebrated in Indian history as the birthplace and patrimony of the emperor Baber. In that admirable work just published, Erskine's History of India under Baber and Humayoon, we are told that the country ‘possesses a rich soil, and lies in a temperate climate. Though exposed in summer to violent heat, and in winter to severe cold, it abounds in corn and fruits, especially those of warm countries, such as the peach, the pomegranate, almond, and melon. Its orchards and gardens were celebrated. Game is plentiful. The surface of the lower grounds is varied, while in the hills are delightful summer retreats, to which the inhabitants retire to avoid the heat of the weather. But though the country is in general fertile, it is intermixed with portions of ground that mark the neighbourhood of the desert.’ From this it would appear that the Russians have got into pretty comfortable quarters, from which it would be cruel to dislodge them.”

A letter from Cabool of course follows ; a Delhi Gazette without such a letter would be one of the greatest wonders of these wonderful days. The letter contains a translation of another, alleged to be written by Major Edwardes. On such matters it were, perhaps, better to allow our brother of Delhi to have his say in his own proper person.

"The subjoined letter from Cabul speaks for itself. Whether the letter bearing the signature of Major Edwardes be genuine or not, that officer knows best. Making every allowance for the disadvantages of a double translation, it is just the letter which we should suppose him likely to write under such circumstances, becoming, as it does in every way, his own position and the dignity of the British Government. We are sorry to be obliged to add, that there is further evidence of the authenticity of the letter. The style of the original Persian is said, by good judges, not to be immaculate; it bears traces of the fine Roman rhetoric of a British officer.

"But whether the letter be authentic or not, we can answer for it that it is the letter which Rehmut Khan sent, in Major Edwardes's name, to Mahomed Azeem Khan, and which was forwarded by the latter to his father, the Dost."

The date of the Cabool letter, which now follows, we may observe, is Sept. 19th.

"I have already informed you that communications had passed between Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan, the Dost's son, and the commissioner of Peshawur, on the subject of the establishment of friendly relations between the British Government and Dost Mahomed; and that Rehmut Khan, Oorukzaiee, of Peshawur, was the medium of these communications. Herewith I send you a copy of a letter addressed by Rehmut Khan to Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan, inclosing a letter from Major Edwardes to that sirdar. Both letters were sent here for the consideration of the Ameer.

"*Translation of a letter from Rehmut Khan, at Peshawur, to Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan.**

"I have received your letter, inclosing one for the Commissioner Saheb, to whom I have delivered them both. He read them attentively, and translated them into English literatim (hurfun ba hurfun). He told me verbally that the Governor-General and the Ameer of Cabul were august personages; that he, Major Edwardes, has great esteem for the Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan, and corresponded with him as a brother and a friend; but it would be better for the Sirdar to send him a letter from the Ameer, addressed direct to the Governor-General. He hoped that this would lead to an amicable understanding. This is what the Commissioner said to me.

"Now you know, Saheba, that the English are resolutely aiding the Turks, and have entered upon a crusade (jahad) against the Russians. If you will either come here yourself or send down one of your brothers, we shall speedily be upon good terms with the English. The gun which you write about shall be sent shortly.

"(Signed) REHMUT KHAN, Oorukzaiee."

"Translation of a letter from Major Edwardes, Commissioner of Peshawur, to Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan. Dated July 22nd, 1851.

"(After compliments.) Your friendly letter, requesting me to endeavour to negotiate an alliance between the respected Ameer, your father, and the British Government, and intimating that you will do your best to see amicable relations established, reached me through our mutual friend Rehmut Khan, Oorukzaiee. Your communication has given me infinite satisfaction, and I take pleasure in replying to it without hesitation or delay.

"You say you are very anxious that there should be an alliance between the Cabul and the British Governments. Believe me that my desire for the same is no less than yours. But this is an affair of states, and not of individual friendship. The rulers of the state of Hindustan and the state of Cabul are respectively the Most Noble the Governor-General Bahadoor and the respected Ameer Sahib. Before the Punjab war, a good understanding existed between the two states, and it was the Ameer himself who interrupted the friendship, joined the Sikhs, and became our enemy. This indeed excited the Governor-General's displeasure. But since this rupture a period of five years has elapsed, and I doubt not, that during this time the Ameer has regretted the breach between us. I cannot say that this period has proved sufficient to induce the Governor-General to forget the past entirely. But if the Ameer really desires that bygones should be bygones, it is but proper that, as he was the first to commence hostilities, he should now be the first to make friendly advances. Let his Highness, therefore, address a letter to the Governor-General, opening his heart, and stating his wishes. Let him send this letter by the hands of some trustworthy person, fit to conduct so important a mission. When the letter reaches me, I shall be glad to forward it to the Governor-General of India. I do not doubt that a favourable reply will be returned, or that his Lordship will display his friendship for the Ameer. If I had any doubts on the subject, I would not give such frank advice; because I do not for a moment wish that the name of the Ameer, or of any of his house, should suffer the smallest slight or degradation. On the contrary, I heartily wish to behold the honour of the Ameer and his government founded on the most solid basis. Should the Ameer think it irksome to write such a letter, be it according to his Highness's pleasure. But no friendly negotiations can take place until the Ameer writes himself to the Governor-General. It is a mere waste of ceremony and words to write to me.

"It was incumbent on me, in reply to your kind letter, to give you, in reply, a plain statement of how the matter stood, and what was best to do.

"(Signed) H. EDWARDES, Major, Superintendent, Peshawur."

"Mooftee Gholam Hyder, a friend of the Nazir Khairullah, has come from Peshawur, on behalf of the Nazir, to urge the Dost to send a letter to the Governor-General, when all will be satisfactorily settled. The Dost, after consulting with his sirdars, desired the Mooftee to wait until he should ascertain the exact nature of the correspondence which had been carried on between Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan and the Commissioner of Peshawur. He would then dismiss the Mooftee, with an answer for the Nazir. The Mooftee had also a secret interview with the Ameer, the nature of which, if I can ascertain it, I will communicate to you.

"Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan writes from Bulkh, that the King of Bokhara has sent an army towards Shibburghur, and that he is expected shortly to take the command of it in person. The Sirdar accordingly wants reinforcements from Cabul."

As all such gossip is in troublous times entitled to some attention, we may as well quote the following:—

"Some weeks ago we had despatched a trustworthy person to Bokhara to ascertain the truth of the various reports regarding the Russians, which have hitherto reached us, indirectly, through our correspondent at Cabul. Our Bokhara commissioner now writes from Bulkh, under date the 3rd Zilhij (28th of August), to say that the caravan for Bokhara has been delayed at Bulkh by the unsafe state of the roads, caused by the movements of the Obsbeg troops to meet the Russians, who are invading Kokan. Owing to the unsettled state of the country, the merchants of the caravan have sent a courier with a petition to the King of Bokhara, praying that an escort may be sent to meet them on the banks of the Oxus and conduct them to the capital. Our correspondent remains with the caravan at Bulkh until the return of the messenger; but he hopes to reach Bokhara by the Mohurrun, in which case we shall hear from him again in two or three weeks, and possibly to some purpose. His news from Bulkh is not, however, without interest. He states that Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan, the ruler of Bulkh, has received information from Kokan, by a special messenger, that the Khan of Kokan has sent an embassy, by way of Kashgar, to Peshawur, to inform the British Government that he is at war with the Russians, and to solicit its aid against them."

There is a good deal about Candahar and its chief, to which we have not room in this part of our paper to advert more particularly.

India proper is perfectly newsless. All seem to be asleep except those, and they are not few, who are keeping themselves awake by quarrelling. The subjects of quarrel appear generally to be very trivial; but that signifies not where men have made up their minds to get into a wrangle. Cricket and billiards, we suppose, were invented for amusement; but in India they appear occasionally to lose their power to amuse, unless well spiced by malevolent feeling. Such exhibitions of petty malignity may call to mind a passage in a Cambridge prize poem, which obtained some celebrity in the last century:—

"Oh, when will kings remember they are men,
And men that they are brethren?"

And induce a parody thereon, something in the following way:—

"Oh, when will officers remember they are gentlemen,
And gentlemen that they are Christians?"

The inquiry into the conduct of Sir James Brooke was opened, but the gentlemen who signed the petition against him have non mi ricordo memories: they can recollect nothing. A Dutch gentleman who had been five years assistant resident at Pontiniak, and who was on his way to Europe on sick leave, tendered his evidence. Being asked as to the character of the friends of the humanity-mongers on the west coast of Borneo, he said:—

"I know that they are pirates and robbers of the most atrocious description. I am convinced that Sir James Brooke has nobly done his duty. It only remains for his traducers to be aware of the scenes enacted on the west coast of Borneo, and they would find what sort of 'honest traders' they were. I am only surprised that a commission of inquiry should be deemed necessary where the extirpation of such a band of ruffians was in question, who had, in previous years extended their depredations so low as the Dutch possessions; for, prior to Sir James Brooke's settlement at Sarawak, such had been the fact; but such an event had not occurred since his accession as Rajah."

Of course the case broke down.

From China we do not learn much as to the war, or indeed anything else, except that fighting continues. The question, When will it end? is, we suppose, one which no living man would venture to answer with any approach to the positive.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA, REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

BENGAL.—Lieut. J. Brown, 27th N.I., at Agra, aged 27, Sept. 28; Surg. C. B. Francis, at Calcutta, Sept. 28; Lieut.-Gen. G. Hunter, c.b., at the Bridge of Allan, Stirlingshire, Nov. 11.

MADRAS.—Maj. W. E. Lockhart, 45th N.I., at Pondigal, Sept. 20.

BOMBAY.—Lieut. J. R. P. Dobree, 10th N.I., at Holton, Suffolk, Oct. 30; Lieut.-Gen. R. Whish, Art., at Clifton, Nov. 10.

CRIME CRUSHED BY STATISTICS.

The importance which we attach to the collection of statistics has frequently been ridiculed. Indian figures, it is said, are always dry, and usually incorrect. They can interest only minds of the smallest order, and in journals only occupy space which might be devoted to topics much more interesting, and somewhat less abstruse. If any reply were needed to such arguments, it would be found in the report of Mr. M. R. Gubbins on female infanticide in Agra. In a report written with singular force and clearness, that officer shows that in the metropolitan district of the North-west Provinces, throughout entire villages, no female child has ever been allowed to live. No man, moreover, has ever been punished for infanticide. Family pride and personal avarice, ancient custom and long-continued immunity have combined to blunt the consciences, and even to destroy the natural affections of the people. Mr. Gubbins, in less than two years, has almost totally suppressed the crime, and his instrument both of detection and prevention, has been a complete and reliable census. Even after Mr. Gubbins had become satisfied of the existence of the crime, he found it impossible either to prove or to prevent it. Everybody denied the charge. The people have not been so utterly deprived of moral consciousness as the races on the banks of the Nerbudda, and it was found that all referred the existence of the crime to a period anterior to the British rule. It was, moreover, difficult to act upon mere suspicion. To place an entire district under surveillance for such a purpose, is a feat from which the boldest magistrate might shrink. Even if physically possible, it would confound the innocent and the guilty, and produce a degree of popular exasperation increased by the general consciousness of innocence, and by the peculiar repugnance of Orientals to family investigations. Mr. Gubbins fell back on figures. Not having the fear of a perpetual settlement, or of Sir Herbert Maddock before his eyes, he compiled an accurate census of the suspected tribes. The result proved, on paper, either that female infanticide existed, or that the natural laws of population did not extend to Agra. He believed in the operation of those natural laws, and refused to pay any attention to counter-statements. He held that "the comparison of the relative proportion of male and female children was the surest test of the practice of this crime." His "decisions" as to the villages open to suspicion "were based upon the unerring results of a most careful census." Fortified by proofs, which, if accurately collected, cannot deceive, Mr. Gubbins prosecuted his inquiries still further. Zemindars were questioned, not in public, but when quietly seated by the magistrate, and after months of patient investigation, a large body of facts was brought to light. Mr. Gubbins was enabled by his statistics to discriminate the innocent from the guilty, to place his finger on the right clan, and the right section of that clan, and to create without oppression and without annoyance a system of surveillance which was fatal to the crime. His power was increased, as he has himself remarked, by being concentrated only on the guilty.

The preliminary fact, the certainty of the existence of the crime among a given clan in a given village, being thus ascertained, the next step was to take measures for suppressing it. The more frequent devices have been too often described for repetition. Generally the knowledge that the magistrate was watching the crime was sufficient, but the Thakoor was required to enter into engagements. The only novelty that we perceive introduced by Mr. Gubbins, is the employment of the agency of the village midwife. She is compelled to report every case in which her attendance is required, and thus a surveillance is exercised over the penetralia of the harem, even of the proudest Thakoor.

The result has been as gratifying to the statistician as to Mr. Gubbins, and to every man not utterly dead to the ordinary feelings of humanity. In the thannahs of Bah and Pinnahut, there are entire villages in which no daughter ever lives, "and in which such an event as the marriage of a daughter has never occurred." The horror suggested by that single sentence cannot be over-estimated. In these very villages there are now dozens of healthy female children, all born since 1851. In eight entire Thannahs, the increase in the birth of girls is 75 per cent. In some villages, the increase is upwards of 500 per cent. Thus in Futtehpoora on 1st May, 1851, there were only two girls alive in the village, and one of these had been preserved by a vow and the other by an accident. On 1st January, 1854, there were thirteen, an increase of 550 per cent. It may be suspected that the original number was suppressed, or that the police, willing to please the magistrate, exaggerated the number of the children left alive. Fortunately, the facts rest on European testimony, the wife of the magistrate having visited a native family, where the children were collected, and where she was a witness both to their number and to their tender age. The facts admit of no question whatever. Mr. Gubbins, by the aid of an exact census, has in three years raised the proportion of female children kept alive in a district as large as some English counties, seventy-five per cent. It would be impossible to pass a worthier encomium on his energy, or to produce a nobler vindication of statistical science.

Mr. Gubbins had not yet abandoned his figures. It was necessary not only to ascertain where to commence his preventive measures, but when to bring them to a close. If the surveillance were continued after a reform, the innocent would again be confounded with the guilty, and the Thakoor would experience no social benefit from abandoning a guilty practice. Moreover, the continuance of watchfulness would indicate ignorance on the part of the magistrate, and destroy the prestige created by his apparently mysterious intelligence. Again the census furnished an unerring test. As soon as the number of births of both sexes became equal, the "suspicion" disappeared, the surveillance was removed, and the Thakoor resumed their place as items of the ordinary population. Crime was crushed by statistics.—Friend of India.

THE COTTON FIELD OF PEGU.

The government of India has published a report by Mr. A. Price upon the great cotton field of Pegu. It is a meagre affair of some five pages, badly written, and containing but little detailed information. Yet it justifies everything we have said of the richness of the province, and raises sanguine anticipations of its ultimate prosperity. The two districts of Prome and Tharawaddy, comprising an area as large as that of Hooghly, form one vast cotton field, rich with the fat black loam which has made Broach the cotton field of Western India. Upon this soil cotton has probably been cultivated for generations, after the careless fashion peculiar to Asiatics. The indigenous species is the best, with an insignificant exception, which Mr. Price has seen in India, and much superior to the description best known in Bengal. Since the war, which interrupted all cultivation, it has been selling at Rs. 3-6 a maund, or 1d. per pound, a price at which it might be exported with a fair chance of contending with the cotton of the Carolinas. The natives, at least in Henzada, consider that the crop at that price is profitable, and express the utmost willingness to engage largely in the cultivation.

Such is the substance of the report, and meagre as it is, it proves that we have at last a fair opportunity of testing the capacity of India to compete with the United States. The districts are in many respects better circumstanced than those of Guzerat. In Broach, the cost of production is so great, as compared with the quality of the article produced, that the cotton enters the English market only in seasons when the American crop is unusually deficient. The demand, therefore, is intermittent, and an intermittent demand ruins cottiers without capital, and cultivators without foresight. In Pegu, a better description will pay at half the price. The cotton apparently may be sold at a profit in a full year, and the demand will be limited only by the character of the produce. In Broach, cultivation is checked by the difficulty of transit. The qualities which constitute a cotton-growing soil are unfavourable to the construction of the roads over which it must be borne. In Pegu, the presence or absence of roads will matter nothing to the cotton. The Irrawaddy flows along its whole length, and is always navigable for boats. The country is intersected with navigable creeks, and no part of the district can be at any great distance from water communication. Lastly, the country is a tabula rasa as respects legislation. The Government may introduce any tenure it pleases, and a tenure may be found which will render cultivation on a large scale no very hazardous operation. With cheap communication, cheap labour, and a rich soil, cotton ought to be grown like rice, in quantities limited only by the market.

To secure this result, however, the Government must consent to profit by its long and expensive experience. It must throw overboard at once all idea of a cotton farm, and all the theories propounded by men who receive salaries for carrying them to an unsuccessful result. The world is weary of these cotton experiments. They have cost lakhs of rupees, have worried every government in India, have buoyed up Manchester with erroneous anticipations, and have produced no practical result whatever, except a demonstration of their own uselessness. Dilettante little experiments, with "twenty pounds of exotic seed from the Agricultural Society," are all very well in their way. They may form a not ungraceful amusement for private individuals, but they will not cover India with cotton. The energy expended in forcing Sea Island cotton into Broach, would have covered that great district with roads, and after all, has been only thrown away. There is one sentence in Mr. Mackay's work on Western India, which is worth all the rest of that very unsatisfactory publication. The "indigenous cotton will do." It needs only to be cultivated with European energy, cleaned with European honesty, and made popular by European mercantile experience. Cotton must be cultivated as indigo is cultivated, with every process, except the first, directed by Europeans. We believe that in Prome it may be possible to secure this end. Let the Government obtain a full and fair report upon the capabilities of the district. Let this report be forwarded to the Manchester Chamber of Commerce with a map of the water communication, and accompanied by a proposal, as liberal as that which was recently accepted for working the iron mines of the Sonthal Hills. We would offer neither ryot-warree, or zemindari, or putwarree, or any other Indian tenure, but a simple English lease for as many years as might be deemed expedient. If Manchester will accept such an offer, the experiment must succeed. If the merchants refuse, if they still demand every assistance and refuse every risk, if they are determined to obtain the maximum of profit with the minimum of toil, the fault will be their own. The Indian Government has struggled to benefit them in its own way for years. It has been unsuccessful. Let it now leave them free to try their own plan, in their own way, secure at least of this, that the result of failure must rest with Manchester, and the profits of success must be equally divided.—Friend of India.

A GOLD CURRENCY IN INDIA.

The Government of India, it is said, have hit upon a device for getting rid of their accumulated gold. They have sent it to Constantinople, to pay the troops, while the court draws against it from the British Treasury. The device does honour to the training of the Board of Trade, but it illustrates an official perplexity, and a public inconvenience. India has no gold currency, and the views of the Government and of the home authorities upon the point appear to be irreconcilably at variance. Within the last two years, Lord Dalhousie, following the precedent of almost every governor-general, has pressed upon the Court of Directors a plan for increasing the gold coinage. It has again been negatived, and the reform is now to all appearance farther off than ever.

It cannot be permitted to rest thus. It is not purely an official question. It is not even one of those questions of currency from which the majority of mankind shrink, as from a discussion they are totally unable to comprehend. It affects most materially the public convenience. Of the many minor troubles of Indian life, we know none which presses more severely upon individuals than the absence of a sufficient currency, and the cumbrousness of that which is in use. We are perpetually under the difficulty which annoyed the Americans, when their National Bank was suppressed by General Jackson. The notes of private banks were useful only in the state in which they were issued, and there was no gold coinage. Travellers were therefore compelled to carry heavy bags of dollars from state to state, with great personal exertion, and no slight personal risk. It is just the same in India. If a man wants to remit a large sum from one station to another, and is unable to procure a Government order, he must send the specie in a cart, and guarded by an armed party. The notes of the bank of Bengal do not sufficiently supply the want. Strange to say, though they are practically a legal tender, the people in many districts will not accept them, or at any rate will not exchange them for their full value in specie. In the North-west the banians demand a discount, which is ruinous to remitters on a large scale, and as no treasure proceeds from Calcutta to Agra, Government orders are not to be procured, and the difficulty of obtaining specie hampers trade. We believe the question has been formally submitted to Government in connection with the railway. The case is almost the same in the great towns. One great cause of the credit system so ruinous to Calcutta tradesmen is the absence of a portable coinage. No man can carry five pounds worth of silver about with him. The consequence is, that it has become a habit of all Anglo-Indians not to carry money, and to make even the smallest purchase upon credit. The debt which would be paid on the counter in England is booked, and then neglected, and the purchaser finds himself a year afterwards oppressed by little accounts, which have accumulated to a most inconvenient amount. The tradesmen in Calcutta know perfectly well how large are the outstanding accounts even of small concerns, and how great is the public taxation by which they recompense themselves for the delay. All this might be gradually remedied by the introduction of gold, and one of the questions perpetually asked in society, and never in public, is, "why have we no gold coinage?"

The question has been answered in a series of articles in Allen's Indian Mail, which we have no hesitation in attributing to Mr. Prinsep. The difficulty is a singular one. The Court of Directors, or the gentlemen whose advice they ask upon such questions, persist in believing that the rules of political economy are applicable everywhere. They conceive that a thing is always worth its value, and that popular prejudice cannot alter the exchangeable price of the precious metals. Therefore they imagine that a gold coin comprising one-twelfth its value of alloy,—the English standard—is worth just as much as pure gold, minus that one-twelfth. In fact, for Indian coinage it is worth just nothing at all. The rules of political economy are upset by a popular prejudice. The people have a fancy—we can use no other expression—for pure gold, and they will not take the coin hardened by alloy. The cause of this prejudice seems unknown even to Mr. Prinsep. The only certainty is that it exists, that it has existed for two hundred years, that it enables merchants to melt down guineas, extract the alloy, and then sell the gold at a profit, and that it transfers to the Mint of Lucknow the profits which ought to be received by the Mint of Calcutta. The gold bullion of the country never goes into the Mint at all, and the revenue loses, while the people are deprived of a convenience. That there is no objection to government gold coin, as such, is proved by the exceeding popularity of the only pure coinage we ever issued, the old mohur of 1793.

The home authorities knowing all this, still steadily refuse to permit an issue of pure gold. They offer three objections to the change: first, that the standard will be different from that of England; secondly, that the gold will wear away with friction; and thirdly, that the value of the metal is subject to dangerous depreciation. As for the English standard, the coinage is required for local circulation, and is always worth its value as an article of trade. The second objection can be disposed of only in one way. It is not true, and the means of proving that it is not true are ample. The pure gold coinage of Akbar is still in existence. It has been passing from hand to hand for three centuries, and the loss of weight is absolutely inappreciable. The sovereign, on the contrary, wears out, and as far as there is any testimony on the subject, pure gold is even less liable to depreciation from this cause than the alloyed metal. The last objection would be a sound one, were we advocating a plan to make gold a legal tender. Nothing of the kind is necessary or possible. The interest on the debt must be paid in silver in any case; and undoubtedly there is such a possibility of depreciation from the new influx of the metal as may render it a fluctuating, and therefore imperfect, standard. But the home authorities are not asked to sanction any such proposition. All that is required is permission for the Mint to stamp pure gold in the shape of a mohur. It will be issued simply as gold, and circulate only at its market value. That value may rise and fall, just as that of iron may rise and fall, and with equally little effect upon the circulation of the country. If Jan Singh chooses to hoard it, he does so, subject to the contingencies which affect all other merchandise. Meanwhile, gold thus pure and thus stamped being in universal demand, and having a universal value, will, though not a legal tender, supply the place of a currency. No native merchant in Cawnpore, or any other station in the North-west, would hesitate to give its value for gold in silver, and remittances might be effected with one-fifteenth of the present trouble and the present hazard. The whole of the gold bullion of the country would be poured into the Mint to be coined, and the revenue would benefit by the seigniorage.

One other objection to this plan remains to be disposed of. It is one which we ourselves have frequently presented, but which we are now convinced contains a fallacy. It is said that gold is useless in India as a circulating medium. The inhabitants of the North-west and the South, who hoard their wealth, will absorb it as fast as it is issued. Its comparatively small bulk renders it easy of concealment, and it will be buried in place of its more cumbrous rival. We concede the facts, but what then? The revenue benefits by the coinage in any case, and the circulation is not impaired. For every ounce of gold thus buried, its value in silver must be exhumed. The silver currency is released, while the gold tokens are concealed. Besides, there must be a limit to this process, and the instant it is attained, the gold will circulate as freely as the cheaper metal.—Friend of India.

PROMOTION IN THE COMPANY'S ARMY.

The introduction of the important reforms recommended by the Commission appointed to report on the subject of promotion in the royal army, which we noticed last week, will of necessity involve corresponding changes in the Company's force. The great evil in the royal service, it has been already stated, is to be found in the advanced age of the senior officers, and the consequent difficulty experienced,—the field of selection being limited,—in obtaining a sufficient number of officers qualified, mentally and physically, for commands on active service. But great as this evil is at home, it is even greater in this country.

We have not the requisite data at hand to enable us to give the details of the Madras and Bombay armies, but we believe their condition will be found very similar to that of Bengal.

The report of the royal commission shows that the average age of the major-generals in the queen's army, previous to the recent brevet, was 65 years, but that of the major-generals in the Bengal army only just promoted by that brevet, exceeds 67 years. Again we find by the tables in the report, that the age of the colonels on full pay, not being general officers, in the royal army on the 1st January last, averaged very little above 52 years, whilst that of the regimental colonels, not general officers, in the Bengal army at same date, exceeded 65 years. The average age of the full pay lieutenant-colonels in the royal army was under 47 years, and that of the corresponding lieutenant-colonels in the Bengal army was close upon 55 years. The ages of the Company's officers as here stated are calculated on the hypothesis of their having entered the service when 17 years old, which we believe to be a fair average; if anything, rather under than over the mark. In the lower grades, the difference of age is still more against the Indian officer. Moreover, we find that the evil in the Company's army is gradually but steadily increasing.

Thirty years ago, when the prospects of the Indian army were considered very gloomy, previous to the relief afforded by converting the battalions of corps into separate regiments, the age of the senior officers was less, and the promotion more rapid than at present. By comparing the Bengal army lists at the commencement of 1824 and 1854, we find the following to be the relative average ages of the several senior regimental grades:—

Colonels .. .. .	60½	65
Lieutenant-Colonels ..	49½	55
Majors .. .. .	42½	48

These figures speak for themselves; and moreover it must be borne in mind that between the two periods under review, the proportion of colonels has been doubled, and eighteen regiments or battalions of the different arms, with their full complement of officers, have been added to the army.

If then extensive reforms calculated to accelerate promotion and increase the establishment of senior officers, giving a wider field for selection for commands, are necessary in the Royal army, how much more imperative is the call for corresponding changes in this country, where the army may be looked upon as constantly on service, where a single disaster might produce incalculable evil by sapping the invaluable prestige we still possess, where the wear and tear of constitution by climate and exposure is far greater than in Europe, where the difficulties and fatigues of command are unavoidably greater, and yet, with all this, where the age of the officers entitled to regimental and brigade commands considerably exceeds that of the corresponding ranks of the Royal army?

The question now naturally arises as to how far the remedies suggested for the Royal army are applicable to that of India. The proposed system of full-pay retirement already exists on a liberal scale, and that of half-pay is generally inapplicable to the Company's service. In seeking for the most appropriate remedy, we must look to the root or cause of the evil. One great cause of the slowness of promotion in the Indian service is to be found in the circumstance of no promotion being made in the room of colonels promoted to general officers, as is the rule in the British, and in fact in every other service. This unusual and anomalous system involves a loss to the Bengal army alone of sixty-eight steps in the higher grades, that being the present number of general officers; but a change in that respect, though much wanted, would not afford a sufficient remedy.

This latter extension is in fact necessary, to obviate an injustice that would otherwise press heavily on those officers who, having obtained brevet rank in former campaigns for service in the field, would immediately whilst still young men be promoted to major-generals, and lose both the advantages of regimentals and brigade commands.

What is chiefly required, is the grant of a fixed minimum establishment of general officers, as recommended by the royal commissioners. Their proposed list is nearly double the number of regimental commands, and the recent brevet,—which formed one item of their recommendations,—has increased that number by upwards of 100 additional general officers, which will leave a considerable supernumerary list. For the Indian army it might be sufficient to fix an establishment equal to the number of regiments in the service, which would give a minimum of 104 for Bengal, or 220 for all India. This would afford promotion by one entire grade to the higher ranks, increasing largely and beneficially the field for selection to brigade commands, which might then be advantageously open, as in the British service, to major-generals, if physically qualified.

The off-reckoning allowances, or the compensation for them, need not be extended beyond the existing amount, nor for the present, at least, granted otherwise than to the seniors; but it is a question if their future allotment to selected officers within a certain limit—say, for instance, the grade of general officers—would not afford the means of recompensing special good services, and inducing those officers who might feel conscious of small claims to such reward, if not by the right of seniority, to retire, and make way for younger and better men.

The application of the rule necessitating an actual service with a regiment, or on military staff or command for a period of three years, in the grade of lieutenant-colonel, previous to obtaining promotion to that of colonel, might be gradually introduced, to a certain extent, with advantage, more especially if lieutenant-colonels on civil employ were granted the rank of colonel at any period after three years' service in that grade, previous to and dependent on their retirement.

But the grand desideratum is the fixed establishment of general officers, with a clear understanding, strictly acted up to, that commands are never to be given to officers not fully qualified mentally and physically, and that the fittest men in the available list have the strongest claims, entirely irrespective of seniority.—Friend of India.

RESULT OF MISSIONARY LABOURS.

If the European population of the East owe no other debt of gratitude to the numerous missionaries, who have, from time to time, and in greatly increasing numbers, devoted their time, their talents, their health, and often their very lives, to the spiritual instruction of the inhabitants of Asia, but that which they have incurred for their philological labours, it would be difficult to cancel it. Naturally led to inquire into the dialects of the people amongst whom their ministerial duties have placed them, they have sought and won acquaintance with the numerous languages that pervade the continent of Asia, and have not hid their light under a bushel.

We owe to the missionaries of all denominations a perfect library of grammars, dictionaries, and biblical translations. They are fully aware that to impart Scripture teachings successfully they must perseveringly and carefully acquire that knowledge, which was miraculously imparted, with the self-same object, to the earliest disseminators of Christian truth, and preach the Gospel to every man in his own language.

The latest result of their efforts to disseminate useful knowledge is now before us in the shape of a "Dictionary of the Punjabi language, prepared by a Committee of the Loodesna Mission," and printed at the Mission Press, under the superintendence of the Rev. L. Janvier.

In a preface are detailed the various steps that led to the preparation of this most useful publication, which will, no doubt, soon be in the hands of every officer in civil employ in the Punjab, from which we gather that it was projected thirteen years ago, but that many obstacles intervened to prevent the accomplishment of a work, of the magnitude of which we can give the best idea, by stating that it contains, in 438 quarto pages, some twenty-four thousand words in a language which, within ten years, was next to unknown. The character used, and fully explained in the preface, is the Goormookhee.

Of the manner in which this self-imposed and most arduous task has been carried out, we can say nothing; but we feel assured that the industry, perseverance, and talents of the members of the committee, are an ample guarantee that the work has been well performed.—Lahore Chronicle, Sept. 16.

TEA IN THE PUNJAB.

It affords us much satisfaction to learn that the public auction at Almora, for the sale of the tea prepared in Kumaon, held on the 23rd August, has been highly satisfactory, most kinds having realized good average prices. The finest black teas (Souchong) were much in demand, and brought from Rs. 6 to Rs. 6-8 per seer, or from 6s. to 6s. 6d. per pound; Pouchong, Rs. 4 to 4-14 per seer; Young Hyson, Rs. 2 to 3 per seer; Hyson, Rs. 2-2 to 2-4 per seer; Hyson Skin, Rs. 1 to 1-5 per seer.

The second class green teas were much sought after by natives, and by them upwards of 100 chests (1,100 lbs.) were purchased, partly to retail, and partly for their own consumption, and partly to barter with the Bhotecas.

As in the Punjab, so in Kumaon, prizes for raw tea leaves, offered for sale at the factories, are about to be given, in order to induce natives more readily to undertake the cultivation, in addition to the high rate of Rs. 8 per maund paid for the leaves. The following are, we believe, the prizes to be offered:—

1. To the first person that brings 100 maunds of raw leaves, Rs. 300.
2. To ditto ditto 50 maunds, Rs. 100.
3. To the five first persons who bring in 25 maunds, the bond fide produce of separate gardens, each Rs. 40.
4. To the five first persons that bring in 12 maunds from bond fide separate gardens, each Rs. 30.

5. To the first ten persons that bring in 8 maunds from bond fide separate gardens, each Rs. 20.

Our readers, at least those who take in the Selections from the Public Records of the Punjab, may remember that similar prizes have been sanctioned for distribution amongst the natives of our Kohistan.

In Kumaon some of the plantations are yielding 12 maunds of raw leaves per acre!—Lahore Chronicle, Sept. 6.

THE FLOODS.

MIDNAPORE, SEPT. 27.—“We have just been visited with the heaviest inundation that has ever been known in this district, destroying all the ryots' crops, as well as a vast amount of other property, including cattle, &c., and I fear in many instances human life. In the month of Bahdoor, 1230, there was a similar rise of the river, but not within five or six feet of this present one. The Calcutta roadway was for several miles under water, and the dawks were stopped for some days. It commenced to rain heavily on the 23rd, with very strong gales from the E. S. East, and continued almost without cessation until the evening of the 26th. The river had by that time considerably overflowed its banks, when about 6 p.m., the water from the hill streams came rushing down in a perfect torrent, carrying away all obstacles to its progress, and spreading over the country for miles. It was pitiable to see the cattle, horses, stacks of grain, and in some instances a poor native floating helplessly down the stream, and to have no means of rendering assistance: but even had boats been procurable, they could not have stemmed the current. The following evening the magistrate sent all the boats obtainable, and with them parties of police, to render every possible assistance, and doubtless saved many lives. This has been a sad visitation on the unfortunate ryots within the influence of the flood, and also to the inhabitants of the station, as the best part of our Calcutta road is reported to be cut away and nearly impassable, nullifying the trouble and expense of the last three or four years. We expected this cold weather to have been able to drive half the distance between this and Ooloberiah, but “L'homme propose et Dieu dispose,” and who can grumble?”

BURDWAN, SEPT. 28.—“All of us here have been for the last two days in much fear, in consequence of the sudden rising of the Damooda. About four o'clock on the evening of the 26th, the flood came down with such force that it swept all before it, and in two hours the water was up the sides of the embankments. Several breaches have occurred, destroying much of the unfortunate villagers' property; in five minutes thousands of unhappy creatures were left without a roof to cover them. Melancholy to relate, the embankment at Edelpore burst opposite to one of the overseers' bungalows, sweeping the edifice before it. The wife of the overseer, with her six children, were in it at the time. The native report is, that one of the children has been swept away, and the property all destroyed.”

A correspondent says:—

“With reference to your remarks of this morning (Saturday), regarding the effects of the late flood of the Damooda, be good enough to insert the following in your next, as it is an abstract of the report just received from the Executive engineer, who writes from the spot.

“At four p.m. on the 26th, the river began to rise at a spot fourteen miles above Burdwan; at six p.m., it had risen twelve feet; at eight p.m., it was eighteen feet high; and at ten o'clock, it reached the unprecedented height of twenty-one and a half feet on the gauge, being one and a half foot higher than the disastrous flood of 1823. It commenced subsiding at five a.m., the next morning; but remained at twenty feet in height till twelve o'clock of the 27th, after which it receded quietly.

“There was no breach at Edelpore, and no overseer's house and family washed away and drowned. The embankments from Siallee to Pullah stood well, through the great exertions of the establishment, as for seven hours the flood was on a level with the crests.

“In the retired line between Culmah and Chinch, where the embankments are at a great distance from the margin, breaches occurred, but they were breaches of self-defence; for the towns of Sclimabad and Jemalpoore are within the line of embankments, and though considerably damaged, would have been submerged altogether, if they had not relieved themselves in the rear.

“The embankment system is about to receive a thorough revision, and I trust success will attend our efforts.”

CUTTACK, SEPT. 19.—I am happy to say we have an appearance of fine weather at last, as it has held up for nearly four days without rain. But until now, with but one or two exceptions, we have had since the end of July, rain every day; in fact, such a rainy season has never been known here. The rain-gauge belonging to the station was, till a few days ago, hors de combat, so we have consequently lost every chance of knowing the quantity of rain that has fallen, but at a very moderate computation, about double the average would not be above the mark. I believe but little damage to crops has been sustained, and if it only holds up now, as it promises, there will be a fine harvest. The salt-works have suffered much—the loss from the floods has been very serious.—Englishman.

SHIPWRECKS.

THE LOSS OF THE “MARANON” AND “ANNE CROPPER.”—A correspondent of the Englishman gives the following particulars of the loss of the above-named ships:—“Owing to the want of a dawk boat at Kedgee yesterday morning (Sept. 20), I was unable to transmit any intelligence to town concerning the loss of the Maranon and Anne Cropper, in the Western Channel; if the present information is of any service please to publish it. I was at anchor at the Reef Heads after sunset, having previously seen two vessels in the Western Channel steering right for me. The gaspar light and a pilot vessel near the middle ground buoy displayed blue lights. About 8 p.m. guns were fired from the vessels which were then in distress; we could render no assistance in the dark, more than keeping a look out, and showing lights for their boats, in case they should pull to us. Day broke, and discovered the pitiable sight of two vessels sunk nearly up to their lower yards in water, and several boats full of people from both wrecks: the first alongside was the Maranon's boat, with a lady and two children in it, besides the crew; the remaining part of the crew with four ayahs were in another boat; and then the Anne Cropper's long boat contained the whole crew. The unfortunate vessels missed the Pilot station, and seeing the blue lights from the gaspar light vessel, took her for the outer light, and so struck on the Reef Heads. The Anne Cropper is now on the trail of the Long Sand, sunk, and the Maranon has drifted over into deep water, close to the northward of the Reef Head breakers. Both crews have arrived in safety, and might have been heard about noon to-day, burling as they left the steamer that brought them up. The only lives lost, I am happy to say, are a cat and a pig.” The passengers per Maranon are Miss Robinson and two children, Cadet Maidman, Capt. Duncan's son and four native ayahs.

LOSS OF THE MACEDON.—The commander of the barque Macedon furnishes the following account of the loss of his vessel to the Englishman, October 3:—“The Macedon on 22nd September, bound for London, discharged the pilot at 1 p.m. At 4 p.m. finding the ship to be making water, tacked to go into port again, the wind blowing strongly from the east, with a heavy sea running. Finding the leak increasing reduced sails to double reefed topsails. At 4 a.m. 23rd September saw the blue light, bearing E.N.E., the ship then lying E.E.  $\frac{1}{2}$  N. on the starboard tack, and driving fast to the westward. Tacked ship to the south, pumps constantly attended to. Noon, increasing gales and sea. Split foretop-sail, unbent it, and bent another, then stowed the courses. Ship making a quantity of water. September 24th: at 8 a.m. weather more moderate, the wind inclined to the south. Out 2nd reef, and tacked to the north-east to try to fetch the channel. At 9 a.m.: wind more easterly, tacked to the south. At 4 30 p.m.: strong gales and heavy sea, close reefed the topsails, and hauled foresail up to keep the ship easy. At 5 30 p.m.: some of the lascars refused to pump. A portion of them and officers of the watch attending the pumps all night. At 4 a.m. on the 25th: wind south, wore ship to the S.E. At 10 a.m.: Juggernath Pagoda bearing N.E. by N., a confused sea and strong current setting to the S.W. At 4 p.m.: the whole of the lascars having refused to pump any longer, they were mustered and separately asked if they would pump the ship, the danger to the vessel, and to all on board, being explained to them, but they one and all refused to pump any longer, complaining ‘they were all pains and would soon die.’ The gale increasing, and the impossibility of saving ship being apparent under such circumstances, I considered I had no other course to adopt in prudence, than to endeavour to save the lives of all on board, as it would soon be dark, and it would be impossible to get away from the ship at night, and a sail being then in sight, I hoisted signals of distress. It proved to be the Swedish ship Gevalia, which at once came towards us; and the captain being informed of our condition, immediately assented to receive all hands on board of his vessel. At 5-30 p.m., got the boats out; the Macedon, then apparently settling down fast by the head, and at 8 p.m., we all got on board the Gevalia with much difficulty,—the two boats being nearly full of water. The captain of the Gevalia, under apprehension that his ship was too near the land, made sail immediately to keep her to windward, the weather having a threatening appearance, with increasing gale during the night and a heavy sea. It is my belief that in anchoring in the Eastern Channel on the morning of the 22nd September, with a strong wind and sea, the Macedon must have injured her stem or cut-water, as it was evident the leak was forward, from the fact of its increasing whenever the ship was forced through the water; hence it was necessary to keep her under as easy sail as possible, expecting the weather to moderate, when the saving of the ship might have been effected if the crew of Lascars had done their duty. (Signed) J. F. TAYLOR, Commander of the barque Macedon." Calcutta, October 2, 1854.

LOSS OF THE "CAMERTONIAN."—The following further particulars regarding the loss of a vessel at the Sand Heads have been kindly placed at our (Hurkaru's) disposal:—"It appears that one survivor from the wreck of the unfortunate Camertonian has turned up. He reached the new Light House at Saugor the morning after the vessel was wrecked. He and two others were in one boat; the other two were washed out of it, and he alone, it is feared, is left to tell the tale. His name is Robert Simpson. He says that the vessel left Liverpool on the 26th May, commanded by Captain Kirkpatrick, who on his arrival at the Sand Heads followed a schooner to the Upper Floating Light Vessel. He asked for a pilot, and was informed that one would be sent if he sent a boat, and was requested to proceed to the southward and anchor. He did not adopt the advice, and the ship foundered shortly afterwards." From this account we are led to hope that the commander of the Ellen made a mistake as to the name of the vessel that went down close to him, and that it was the Camertonian and not the Caledonian as stated by him. We trust this may be the case, as it is said that even one vessel should thus go down causing such a loss of life. Just as we were going to press we received a letter from the Sand Heads, giving some still further details relative to the wreck of the Camertonian. It appears that when the request was made to send a pilot on board, which was answered by a demand to send a boat for one, the commander of the Camertonian replied that he had no boat fit for service, and was then told to stand to the southward until half-flood, and then steer N.W. by N. for Saugor, and anchor in seven fathoms of water. The Camertonian then stood off, but came a second time for a pilot, when a like order was given. Having again gone to the south-east, the ship bore up a third time, at 5-30 P.M., on the day in question, Tuesday last, when the crew hailed the Hope light-vessel, that she had six feet of water in the hold, and was sinking. Immediately after this the Camertonian anchored close to the Hope, and twenty minutes after went down. Two men (W. Daylish, carpenter, and Henry Woodland) reached the Hope by swimming. The following morning at daylight, two men were seen upon the wreck; and on the previous evening lines and buoys were veered out, in hopes that they might lay hold of them; but this expectation was not, we regret to say, fulfilled. During all the time that the wrecked vessel was so near the Hope, it was blowing so strong, and the sea was running so high, that it was quite impracticable to put off a boat, and thus those on board experienced the misery of seeing some twenty of their fellow-creatures perish before their very eyes, without having the means of aiding them.—The following is the list of the persons who have perished:—Kirkpatrick, captain; Robinson, of Orkney Islands, chief mate; Scott Robinson, his brother, ordinary seaman; Thomas Twentyman, of Woking, apprentice; John Henry Reynolds, of Liverpool, apprentice; Joseph Smith, of Holland, steward; William Smith, of Aberdeen, seaman; Abraham Mason, of Exeter, seaman; Peter Bar, of Glasgow, seaman; Charles Mitchell, of Dublin, seaman; John Thomson, of Prussia, seaman; and three Dutchmen. The Camertonian's wreck is no longer visible.—Englishman, Sept. 20.

THE SHIP "HENRY MOORE."—We understand that while the Liverpool ship, Henry Moore, was proceeding down the river with upwards of three hundred emigrants, which she has on board for Demerara, and in tow of the Alligator, the machinery of the latter broke down, and the Henry Moore has consequently been put into, what her commander no doubt considers a fix. She is an iron vessel, of more than twelve hundred tons, and of immense length—nearly three hundred feet long—and in the present state of the tides, she can neither move up nor move down without the aid of steam, and not a tug can be got for love or money. The government steamers, we believe, are also not available, both the Tenasserim and Sesostris being away, and the Fire Queen preparing with all haste for her ensuing trip. The first-named steamer is, however, in the river, and she may be able to afford the long ship the aid which she is unable to procure elsewhere. The Henry Moore was lying somewhere near Budge Budge when we heard of her yesterday.—Hurkaru, Sept. 30.

THE MISSING "ALBATROSS."—Before any thing is known of the fate of those on board the missing Lady Nugent, who will, we fear, never be heard of again, a report reaches us that fears are entertained for the safety of another sailing vessel. The Albatross, with a company of the 43rd M. N. I., left Moukmein on the 17th of July for Labuan, and had not arrived there on the 8th of August, and it has been deemed necessary to send H. M. S. Rapid to look after her. Had a steamer been available for this duty there can be little doubt that she would have reached her destination in safety. Where human life is endangered by the want of steamers, it certainly behoves Government to stretch a point to provide them.—Hurkaru, Sept. 29.

ROORKEE.

It has been often remarked that the natives of India, and especially those of Bengal, notwithstanding any talent they may show in the earlier portion of life, generally become indolent as they advance in years. We ourselves have expressed similar opinions; but as there are exceptions to every rule, so there appear to be exceptions to these preconceived notions, as will be seen from a perusal of the following letter addressed to us by a correspondent at Roorkee, dated the 2nd instant:—

The only news that I have to communicate from this place is that on a representation made by the secretary to the Calcutta committee, for the collection of specimens for transmission to the Paris Exhibition; the honourable the lieutenant-governor of Agra has ordered, that any models of machinery constructed by natives, and which can be spared from the Thomason Civil Engineering College at Roorkee, should be forwarded to the Calcutta committee. In accordance with their orders, the following models have been selected, packed up and forwarded to Mr. Dowleams.

A model of Nasmyth's steam pile driver, constructed by two Mahomedan brothers, one sixteen the other twenty years of age, who have been only two years under European instruction. It is perfectly true to the original, and has been made at the college.

Model of an ordinary pile driver, taken from a French pattern and very successfully employed in the Ganges Canal works.

Model of Hall's brick-making machine, being an exact imitation, on a diminutive scale of the original, brought out to India by Colonel Cautley.

Model of the foundation block of the Solani Aqueduct on the Ganges Canal. It is a master-piece, and will afford an excellent illustration of a species of foundation in sandy soils quite peculiar to Northern India.

Model of the Gokulpoor Bridge and falls on the Eastern Jumna Canal. It is entirely worked by native stone-cutters under European supervision, guided by plans and sections.

Model of one bay, with gates and piers of the Newgong flood escape dam on the Eastern Jumna Canal.

A model of the irrigation channel head, showing one of the plans employed in distributing water to cultivators for the irrigation of their fields.

Model of a native sugar mill, made entirely by a native artisan unaided by European supervision. The original was constructed under the superintendence of Maharnjah Rao of Gwallior, by whom it was presented to the College. It is used in Rohilkund for pressing sugar cane. In addition to the above, the superintendent of the College has sent a number of levelling rods, surveying compasses, plane tables, &c., all of which are handwork of the native workmen employed in the College.

From the above you will see that there is no intention whatever of suppressing native merit when it is displayed, and I am fully convinced that if the aforesaid models are exhibited at Calcutta previous to their transmission to Paris, it will be admitted by the most fastidious connoisseur, that they reflect the utmost credit upon the parties concerned. In addition to the models, the superintendent of the Roorkee College has sent copies of a number of vernacular works, printed at the establishment, so that the talents of the native artisans are fairly represented in every shape.

We are glad to learn that the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces, has directed the transmission of the above models and books, because it will tend to show what the natives of India can do under proper European supervision. It will reflect equal credit upon Government for keeping up an establishment which affords to the natives of the country an opportunity of studying civil engineering, and will even in Europe perpetuate the name of its founder the late Mr. Thomason.—Hurkaru, Sept. 20.

THE LONDON MAIL of August 25th arrived at Calcutta on Oct. 3rd (per Precursor).

THE 12TH LANCERS.—On the arrival of the 12th Lancers at Bangalore, it was found necessary to condemn a great portion of their arms, and some difficulty has been experienced in finding new lances. The officers wished the shafts to be made of bamboo, but a sufficient number were not procurable, and the maker resorted to Trincomalee wood.—U. S. Gazette.

GOLD AND SILVER IN THE HIMALAYAS.—A correspondent of the Central Star affirms that gold and silver are as plentiful in the Himalayas as in Australia. Near the Oontale Dhoon pass, it is said, it is obtainable in nuggets, and there are auriferous sands in Talook Chundnee, in Bijnour. No attempt hitherto made to wash auriferous sands in India has ever produced enough to pay expenses.

THE SCURVY has made its appearance on board the Wellesley, the first ship which has yet arrived with recruits. Out of three hundred men, nearly one-fifth landed with this disorder, though the diet is said to have been excellent, and the lime-juice on board sufficient.

CANTONMENTS.—The Governor-General has decided that no officer living in cantonments can buy a house over the head of another, and turn him out.

GREEN INDIGO.—The Report of the last meeting of the Agricultural Society of India contains a letter from Mr. Fortune. He is still prosecuting inquiries as to the green indigo, specimens of which have been planted in the society's garden. The dye, Mr. Fortune says, is produced from the bark of the plant, and he hopes soon to forward an account of the process by which it is extracted. He forwards also specimens of the "cabbage oil seed," which is valuable, because it can be planted just after the rice is off the ground.

LAND FOR THE RAILWAY.—The Benares Recorder publishes an order, issued by the Government of the North-West Provinces, for taking the land required by the railway. The pith of the order is, that the land is to be taken first, and the amount of compensation settled afterwards.

EXPORT DUTY ON INDIGO.—The Indigo Planters' Association have remonstrated against the retention of the export duty on indigo. It is contended that indigo is an exceptional article. It cannot be grown largely anywhere else, and the planters are therefore in possession of a practical monopoly. The committee reply that it may be grown in other countries, and that the improvements in practical chemistry are daily diminishing its use. They, therefore, consider the trade declining, and deny that it can bear an exceptional taxation.

THE AVERAGE TRAFFIC ACROSS THE JUMNA, by the pontoon bridge at Agra, amounted in July to 100 tons a day.

CUTTACK.—I have very nearly had to report a case of human sacrifice in the heart of this town. The story is this:—One of the tributary Mehal rajahs had some case or other before the superintendent, which he of course wished to gain; and that he should make certain of so doing, he consulted his priests, &c., as to the best means of securing the attainment of his wishes, on which it seems a human sacrifice was deemed the most propitiating measure to appease the wrath of, and curry favour with, the goddess Kali; accordingly, the pundits seemed to have fixed on some low caste boy (a mootchee, I believe), and enticed him into the temple where the deed was to be committed, and began feasting him and plying him with bang; but the young lad (who seems to have been in a great fright, and did not smoke enough to render himself insensible) suddenly bolted, and went to the thanah and reported the circumstances. What has been done I do not know; but I believe, though it is pretty evident what the villainous priests were up to, that there was nothing proved against them. Fancy if a thing of this kind occurs in the midst of a large city, what pranks these priestly gentry must play in their quiet little nooks in the Mofussil! The regiment here, the 42nd M.N.I., is under orders for Jubbulpore, to be relieved by the 8th M.N.I.: a nice long march they have before them. I believe they march through Umgool and Jubbulpore. We are following the leader as far as public libraries go, and are to have one here. Mr. T. Loch, the inspector of jails, has been here since Sunday; he goes to-morrow to Pooree, and then returns to Calcutta. The commissioner having exerted himself to rid us of the post-office grievance, I am happy to say it is at an end. A post-office is to be built (in cantonments, I believe), and in the mean time, a room in the Circuit house (which is near the old site) has been given up for the purpose. We now only want our padre and a little gaiety to make the station of Calcutta complete.—Englishman.

FALSE OPIUM REPORTS.—We perceive from official correspondence published in Calcutta, that the Chamber of Commerce has been unable to detect the origin of the false opium report forwarded to town. Mr. Stewart, the Superintendent of the P. and O. Company, in a very well-written letter, tells the merchants of Calcutta to put their own shoulders to the wheel, and not impose an unprecedented duty upon the captains of the P. and O. steamers. The Chamber smartly replies that if the duty is unprecedented, so is the monopoly which renders it necessary to enforce it.

THE LATE MR. DAVID HARE.—A subscription has been set on foot for printing some copper-plate portraits to perpetuate the memory of the late Mr. David Hare, whose name is familiar to every one interested in Indian education.

CIVIL.—The Mofussilite understands that a considerable change will soon take place in the disposition of the civil list. The following officers will quit the country before next April:—Messrs. Begbie and Morrieson, Sudder Nizamut and Board of Revenue; Mr. Lowther, commissioner of Allahabad; C. Grant, accountant; Messrs. Taylor, Tyler, Becher, Money, Shank, Buller, and E. Thomas, judges; and Messrs. Barns, Pearson, and Cust, collectors.

H. M.'s 27TH REGIMENT.—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle tells a story which seems to indicate some carelessness in the military department. A portion of Her Majesty's 27th regiment just arrived, were ordered to march in full dress, from the ship to Dum-Dum, a distance of eight miles. They started at six in the evening, and arrived at Dum-Dum in a dangerous state of exhaustion. Their feet were unaccustomed to shoes, the weather appeared hot to fresh arrivals, the night was dark, the men tumbled into ditches, and one man died of apoplexy after the march. They might at least have been permitted to wait till morning, or to have a guide.

UNION OF THE DELHI AND AGRA BANKS.—Major Ramsay has addressed through the Calcutta journals a letter to the shareholders of the Delhi bank. He is a large shareholder in that institution, and consequently anxious for its prosperity. He recommends that it should be united with the Agra bank. The Delhi bank has larger funds at its disposal than it knows how to employ. It has no branches, and no means of creating any, except by an entire change of its system of business. The Agra bank has both these advantages, while it would be benefited by a larger amount of capital. The union, therefore, appears advantageous to the shareholders in both institutions.

COAL.—"In the present state of affairs the Government of India thinks it expedient to lay before the public all the information it possesses, relative to coal on the east side of the Bay of Bengal." By the "present state of affairs, we suppose must be understood the exceeding high price of coal, which is seriously interfering with steam navigation all over the world, and threatens to weaken by one steamer monthly, our means of communication with England. We accordingly turned with some eagerness to the information which the Government has laid before the public regarding the coal measures on the eastern side of the Bay of Bengal. It chiefly relates to the coal which occurs on the Great Tennesseerim river, about sixty-seven miles from the Port of Mergui. But the information given is scanty, and so far as it goes not very satisfactory. That coal is procurable in great quantity in the province of Mergui is tolerably certain, but the quality of the fuel as yet obtained thence seems to unfit it for sea-going use, and it is doubtful if there is any better to be had at the same place. It is to the Burdwan and Labuan coal mines that we are disposed to look for abundant supplies of fuel. The capacity of the Burdwan mines for supplying good and cheap coal will soon be tested by the railway. That of the Labuan mines requires, we believe, no testing at all. The coal is of excellent quality, and it lies so near the sea that it can be carried on board ship from the pit mouth.

MOVEMENTS OF THE EUROPEAN TROOPS.—A letter from Simla gives the following, as the contemplated movements of the European troops:—"H.M.'s 96th foot to come down and go home, on being relieved by the 3rd Europeans from Chinsurah. H.M.'s 27th from England to Sealkote. H.M.'s 35th from England to Maulmain. H.M.'s 29th from Maulmain to relieve the 1st fusiliers, which will go to Dinapore and relieve the 3rd fusiliers, which will return to Chinsurah. H.M.'s 24th to Peshawur, to relieve H.M.'s 22nd, who go home by the Indus route."—Englishman, Sept. 26.

INVESTIGATION REGARDING THE CONDUCT OF MRS. BIGNELL.—We have received from Mussoorie two documents relative to the late unpleasant investigation regarding the conduct of Mrs. Bignell, the head mistress of the Protestant girls' school at that station. It appears that both Major Ryley, of the 5th cavalry, and Captain Mill, of the Artillery, never authorized the publication of the statement of the document signed by Mr. C. C. Jackson, of the civil service, and endorsed by them, and which appeared in the Delhi Gazette of the 26th ult.; and it is, moreover, doubtful if Mr. Jackson ever gave authority for its being made public. Added to this, it appears that subsequent explanations have been afforded to the two former gentlemen, which have induced them to change their opinion as to the merits of the case, and to consider many of the statements made in the document alluded to erroneous. The explanation of the members of the local committee of the Protestant girls' school at Mussoorie is temperate in style and to the point, and is signed by gentlemen whose high respectability entitles their assertions to the highest consideration. We shall follow the example of the local committee, and refrain from further comment upon the matter until the decision of the London committee, to which the case has been referred, is known.—Bengal Herkara, Sept. 19.

LIEUTENANT McDUGALL.—We regret to hear that the life of Lieutenant McDougall of the 9th N.I. is despaired of. This is one of the officers wounded at the late attack upon the village of Shah Moosah Kheyli, the other, Lieutenant Brownlow, is reported to be doing well.

THE PUGILISTIC ENCOUNTER in the Chinsurah billiard room between two Subalterns of the 3rd European regiment has been made the subject of a Court of Enquiry, and is likely to result in Court-martial.

INDIA GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—At the meeting of the India general steam navigation company, held Sept. 18, Mr. Grant's suspension and dismissal were confirmed and carried by a large majority of votes, and Captain Stace's appointment as secretary in his room was carried by acclamation.

BRIGADIER WARREN.—The Benares Recorder says that Brigadier Warren will not now assume the command at Benares, but will proceed home with his family round the Cape. This will, we presume, bring Colonel Lane, who is a regimental major of the artillery, and a cadet of 1820, upon the brigade staff, he being the next senior officer in the country to Colonel Nash, who has, it is reported, obtained the last vacancy.—Bengal Hurkaru.

DEATH OF SUPERINTENDING-SURGEON CHARLES B. FRANCIS.—We regret to announce the sudden death of Superintending-Surgeon Charles B. Francis, of the Dacca circle, early yesterday morning. His loss will be deeply felt by the community among whom he laboured with zeal and diligence to the detriment of his health. He arrived here with the intention of returning home for the renovation of his health. His remains will be interred this morning.—Citizen, Sept. 29.

FLOATING BRIDGE OVER THE HOOGHLY.—We have much pleasure in announcing to our fellow-citizens of Calcutta that a want of which so much has been written of late, and which has now, from the railway being at work, grown into an absolute necessity, is about to be met immediately by the Government. We allude to a pontal communication between the right and left banks of the Hooghly, between the city of Calcutta and the city about to rise at Howrah, with its railway station, &c. The Hooghly is to be crossed by a bridge of boats, spanning it between the river-bank near the railway station at Howrah and the opposite bank on the Calcutta side, somewhat near Clive-street ghaut, if our memory of localities serve us rightly. This is not rumour or an expectation. It has been sanctioned by the Government, and the superintending engineer, Colonel Goodwyn, has received orders to commence the work as soon as possible. The estimated cost, passed by the Government, is seven lacs of rupees. This is but a trifling sum for the construction of a bridge which will be little inferior in utility to one built of granite; whilst it will, in our humble opinion, be superior to a work of the latter description as far as ensuring constant and uninterrupted communication goes. The boats of which the Hooghly bridge is to be constructed will be of large size, and built with every attention to durability and strength, and the heaviest laden waggons, or the largest stream of traffic or merchandise may cross it with the same safety as a single foot-passenger. Hereafter it is possible that the Hooghly at Calcutta may be bridged in a more expensive and showy manner; but we doubt the freedom from costly accidents and repairs, and the permanent utility of a more solid work, as compared with that about to be constructed; and, on these grounds, we are glad to see the project we have all along advocated finally selected for preference and accomplishment.—Morning Chronicle, Oct. 2.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.—There are rumours abroad that the Uncovenanted Service is to obtain some relaxation of the present stringent Pension Rules, and also that its members will be allowed a furlough on sick certificate. Now that leave is to be granted to the covenanted servants, both civil and military, to proceed to their native land without losing their appointments, the time is, we think, come for according a like indulgence to uncovenanted servants; the more so as it is absurd to restrict them to the fanciful limits prescribed by the old charters of the Company, when the facilities for proceeding to and returning from Europe are greater than for visiting most of the places within those limits, by a sojourn at which the invalid Englishman is likely to recover the health he has lost by a residence in a tropical climate and application to laborious duties. Shortly after the above was in the hands of the printer, we were given to understand that Mr. Wylie's application for leave of absence had been complied with, and that he had taken his passage on board a vessel which is to sail for England immediately; further, that his furlough pay is to be 900*l.* per annum. We sincerely trust that this is all correct, since it may be regarded as an indication that the uncovenanted servants of the state are not to be debarred from visiting England on sick leave. We do not vouch for the above, but give it as it has reached us, and hope to be able to inform our readers to-morrow how far it is correct.—Hurkaru, Sept. 27.

EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT.—A rumour is abroad, for the authenticity of which we cannot vouch, that Mr. H. V. Bailey, C.S., is to be the minister of education, and Mr. H. Woodrow, the present secretary to the council of education, his clerk. Mr. Bailey having formerly been secretary to the council of education, and consequently familiar with the working of the department, in which he has ever since taken an active interest, is a very fit person to fill the post. Mr. Bailey, our readers may remember, founded the Midnapore Library,—the first Mofussil institution of the kind.

DEATH OF LIEUT. JOHN BROWN, 27TH N.I.—It is with sincere and deep regret that we announce the death at this station of Lieut. John Brown, 27th N.I., officiating brigade-major. He had been ailing for some time, but we believe his illness was not supposed to be dangerous; he sunk under it, however, on Thursday evening last. A more estimable young man, or one more beloved by all who knew him, there was not in the army of India, and his untimely decease is most heartily lamented.—Agra Messenger, Sept. 30.

LIEUT. McDUGAL, of the 9th N.I., lately wounded in the expedition to Michnee, is pronounced quite out of danger; and Lieut. Brownlow will, it is hoped, soon be able to get about again.

MR. HUFFNAGLE is to be raised to the rank of consul-general for the United States.

THE OPENING OF THE RAILWAY.—Calcutta is at last to be convinced of the existence of a railway. The opening to Ranee-gungee, will be inaugurated by a ball and supper at the town-hall, on Wednesday, the 27th December, the invitations for which will be issued almost immediately. The official opening will take place on the previous day, the 26th, when the Governor-General, with the members of Government and others who are directly or indirectly connected with the railway, will proceed up the line to examine it, and return to Calcutta, after partaking of a breakfast or tiffin at Burdwan.—Friend of India, Sept. 28.

NEW TREASURY OFFICES.—Government is said to have purchased the four-storied house in Esplanade-row, now occupied by the Military Club, for Rs. 1,50,000. The offices now accommodated in the Treasury are to be located in it, the present Treasury is to be pulled down and a new one built. The work is to commence as soon as possible after the approaching Dusserah vacation.

THE INDIAN NAVY AND BENGAL MARINE are, it is said, to be amalgamated on terms anything but favourable to the latter. The commanders of which are to be allowed the option of taking appointments as acting masters, or quitting the service with a gratuity of twelvemonths' pay.

THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF AGRA is to leave Nynce Tal about the 1st of November, and after making a tour through some of the north-eastern portions of his government, will proceed through Bundelcund and Sangor, and be at Agra about the middle of February, after a month's stay there he will again go to the hills.

TABLE MONEY.—Uncovenanted civil officers and military and medical officers in civil employ when provided with a passage on board Government vessels are to pay half the table-money if their allowances are under Rs. 600 per mensem, and all if their salaries are above that sum. It has also been taken into consideration whether the present rate of table-money, Rs. 8 per diem, is not excessive.

MR. SHAW, of the civil service, and joint magistrate at Agra, has embraced the Romish faith, and has been baptized in the cathedral at Agra.

A COLLEGE FOR CIVIL ENGINEERS is to be erected in Calcutta.

MR. WYLIE.—We much regret to hear that Mr. Wylie, the first judge of the Small Cause Court, continues in so unsatisfactory a state of health, that his medical advisers deem it absolutely necessary for him to proceed to England, and he has, we are further told, sent in an application for leave of absence,—a piece of information we do not exactly understand, because we are under the impression that Mr. Wylie cannot receive permission to go home retaining his appointment, but must resign, and can then go where he pleases. We shall be glad to find ourselves mistaken, for it is unjust to the individuals themselves, and injurious to the interests of the public and the Government, that men holding such a position as Mr. Wylie does, should not be allowed leave to revisit England without forfeiture of their appointments, when sickness renders a return to their native land necessary for the recovery of their health. In the Queen's colonies, officers holding appointments such as Mr. Wylie holds, and Mr. Hume held, are permitted to proceed home retaining their situations, and the sooner such servants of the East-India Company are placed on the same footing the better, for the measure would be both creditable and advantageous to their employers.

THE STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.—We understand that the Governor-General has approved of the following permanent arrangements proposed by the Hon. Colonel W. J. Butterworth, C.B., the governor of the Straits Settlements, consequent on the demise of Captain Hay Ferrier, the resident councillor of Malacca. The salary of that office while held by Captain Ferrier was Rs. 1,000 per mensem. On the appointment of Mr. William Thomas Lewis to that post it is to be raised to Co.'s Rs. 1,080 per mensem, being the amount he enjoyed as assistant resident of Prince of Wales' Island. The salary of assistant resident at Penang is to be reduced from Co.'s Rs. 1,080 to 833 Rs. 5as. and 4 pie per mensem. Some other arrangements have also been approved of, by which an immediate saving has been made of Co.'s Rs. 400 per month.

MESSRS. TULLOH AND CO.—It is said that the firm of Tulloh, Seal, and Co. is to be dissolved, and that the sons of the late Baboo Mutty Loll Seal intend to establish an agency house.

RAMPORE.—There is a report, which, however, wants confirmation, that the Nuwab of Rampore is dead. All is not apparently right at Rampore, as a wing of the 23rd N.I. has been ordered out from Moradabad.

MR. CUMMING, on reporting himself at Kussowlie, was ordered by Colonel Brooke, commanding the 33rd regt., into close arrest, and a guard was placed over his quarters.

BANK OF BENGAL.—A new form of note is to be issued from the Bank of Bengal to-morrow, the novel feature of which is that ciphers to complete the number of figures to five places are inserted to the left of the actual number of the note, so as to prevent the possibility of adding a figure to it, thus 00250 represents number two hundred and fifty.

LAHORE.—We hear that, in consequence of the continued sickness in the 64th Native Infantry, by which the corps is almost placed hors de combat, without, however, any corresponding mortality, a move to Shadera has been recommended. Now, we cannot conceive any place less likely to benefit the corps than one across the river. Much of the land about there has been flooded, and must be still damp. Dysentery, under such circumstances, follows fever, and frequently becomes fatal, and we have not forgotten the dreadful consequences of moving the 1st Europeans to Shadera in 1850, when some 150 men were sacrificed to the stupidity of the authorities. The high land about Meean Meer would be far preferable, or the groves near Shaleemar. Although the sun is certainly hot during the day, the evenings, and especially the mornings, are becoming perceptibly cooler, and very pleasant. Occasional clouds hover about, but the rains appear to have ceased with us, though not to the eastward, if delays in the post are to be received as a criterion. The Calcutta dak was, a few days ago, rapidly approaching its fine weather rate, but has, all at once, fallen back in speed, and the metropolitan journals of the 14th only came in yesterday at two p.m.—Lahore Chronicle, Sept. 23.

CANDAHAR.—We learn from Candahar that a splendid dress of honour, studded with diamonds, had arrived from the king of Persia as a present for Kohundil Khan, the Candahar chief. The governor of the fort of Ghor, which was lately taken from the Herat chief, has written to Candahar for succour, the Herat chief having stirred up the people of the district against him. Part of the Persian army at Merw has been routed by the Toorkmans, and forced to fly for shelter to Herat. Zaheer-ool-Dowlah was absent, but his mother gave the fugitives a hospitable welcome. Thirty officers and a thousand men have accompanied Sooltan Alee Khan from Persia to Ahmed Shahie, and they are engaged in disciplining the Candahar force. The king of Persia has sent plenty of "bootkees" (Russian ducats) for the pay of these men, and as a subsidy to the Candahar chief. It is said, that another equal force of men and officers will reach Candahar from Persia before the winter, and that the king of Persia has written to the chief of Candahar, that he will immediately send 10,000 troops to Farah, 10,000 to Ghoorgan, and 10,000 to Seestan; all to act under his, Kohundil Khan's orders; adding that his large force can easily be augmented by levies of Seistanees, Hazarahs, and Aimuks. Then, if the ameer of Cabul quietly surrenders possession of Khelat-i-Ghilzie, all will be well; otherwise an irresistible force will compel him to yield. The Persian Elchee at Cabul has made a similar statement to the ameer, adding that if he will yield to the wishes of his majesty in the matter of Khelat-i-Ghilzie, he will be raised to the highest pitch of dignity. However, the style of the shah's recent firmans has not inclined the ameer to attach himself to Persia. He does not like the overbearing tone of the Persian court, which has been so much the subject of conversation, that ill-disposed people say that the ameer has allowed himself to be treated like the mere head of a village. The ameer will not give up Khelat-i-Ghilzie without a fight for it, and he has already sent his peshkana towards that place.—Delhi Gazette.

UNPASSED CIVIL SERVANTS ordered into the Mofussil to study the native languages are to receive travelling allowance.

LUCKNOW.—The following is an extract from a private letter from Lucknow, kindly placed at our disposal:—"After all Col. Sleeman does go. It was supposed that he would return to his duties long since, but those who hoped for this were doomed to be disappointed, for there is now no doubt of his leaving, since the leave to visit the hills north of Dehra for fifteen months, probably means leaving for good. It is fortunate that the Government possesses so able a man as Capt. Hayes, who now officiates for the resident. The appointment of Col. Outram to the Lucknow residency confirms me in the belief that Col. Sleeman will not come back. Capt. Shakespeare officiated for Col. Low for more than a year, and during the resident's temporary absence for however long a period, the first assistant-resident invariably officiated for the whole time. Why should Capt. Hayes be debarred the same privilege? Dr. Fayer has been nominated officiating assistant-resident. This, I believe, an unprecedented example. Do you know anything about what is going to be done with us? They say Oudh is to be annexed, whether we like it or not? Is this true? Col. Sleeman leaves Lucknow about the end of this month. There will be an auction of his effects on the 20th."—Calcutta Englishman, Sept. 27.

MILITARY ON DITS.—The detachment of H.M.'s 27th regiment, arrived in the Subahdar, is to proceed at once to Allahabad by river steamers.—It is uncertain whether H.M.'s 98th regt. will proceed to England this year, and it is not improbable that the corps may stand fast in Fort William, in which case the 10th Foot will not, as it was said, come to Calcutta.—Major Brown, of the 18th N.I., is not now in treaty to sell out, but the regiment is to get two steps by the retirement of Majors Edwards and Davidson.—Major Pillans, of the artillery, retires on the 1st of October, and Colonels Day and Anderson, from the 1st of January next.—The Delhi Gazette states that sickness is on the increase in cantonments of the 17th N.I., some 210 out of about 400 are said to be sick, and the other regiments are no better off.—We hear that a boat containing the whole of the baggage belonging to the officers of the 48th N.I., who arrived this morning from Barrackpore on fort duty, capsized, in consequence of coming athwart the cable of a ship in the moorings near the Mint, the boat floated down to opposite the fort where she sunk with every thing in her. The officers, we hear, have lost the whole of their traps with the exception of those they marched down in. The only life lost was that of a child.—The order is at last out for the departure to England of H.M.'s 22nd and 96th regiments. The usual volunteering will be permitted.—We understand that Major Abbott, late of Hazara, has been selected for the charge of his Highness the Putteealla Rajah on his approaching journey to England.

COURT MARTIAL.

LIEUT. SAMUEL DEWE WHITE, 3RD EUROPEAN REGIMENT.

Head Quarters, Simla, Sept. 29, 1854.—At a general court martial, assembled at Chinsurah, on Friday, Sept. 8, 1854, Lieut. S. D. White, 3rd Eur. reg., was arraigned on the following charges, viz.:—

1st.—For conduct unbecoming an officer, in having, at Chinsurah, on July 27, 1854, addressed a letter to the adjutant of the regiment, in which he importunately solicited the grant of temporary leave to proceed to Calcutta, notwithstanding that he had been three times before on that day distinctly informed, in reply to previous repeated applications, that such leave could not be granted to him.

2nd.—For highly unbecoming conduct, in having, at Chinsurah, on July 29, 1854, addressed to Lieut. W. Carnell, the adjutant of the regiment, a note couched in very provoking language, and caused the same to be delivered to Lieut. Carnell, in public, in an extremely offensive manner.

Finding.—On the first charge Guilty, and on the second charge Guilty, with the exception of the words "highly" and "extremely," of which they acquit him.

Sentence.—To be reprimanded in such manner as his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief may be pleased to direct, and to be placed one step lower in the list of lieutenants of his regiment.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) W. M. GOMM, General,
Commander-in-Chief East Indies,

Head Quarters, Simla, 27th September, 1854.

Remarks by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—The Commander-in-Chief had hoped, when disposing of the former trial of Lieut. White, that the lenity he then experienced would b a sufficient warning to him; and his Excellency is sorry to find that the lesson has proved ineffectual.

On the present occasion Lieut. White had the opportunity offered to him of escaping the peril of arraignment before a general court-martial; but he chose rather to stand a trial, in preference to following the advice of his brother officers of experience, and making a suitable apology for his misbehaviour; and he must now suffer the consequences of his perverseness.

It appears that Lieut. White has not only passed the examination required for interpreters at the College of Fort William, but has also received from the College a certificate of high proficiency in the Hindee language. This is very creditable to him; but the advantages he might have derived in his profession from possessing such attainments, have been completely neutralized by the indifference he has shown in this and other instances to meet with cheerfulness the orders and wishes of his superiors.

The Commander-in-Chief once more appeals to Lieut. White's good sense, and again trusts that this trial will show him the absolute necessity of being more subordinate and less offensive in his conduct and bearing, if he wishes to remain in the service.

Lieut. White's name is to be transposed in the list of lieutenants of the 3rd European regiment, and in future will stand next below that of Lieut. F. J. Stephenson. He is to be released from arrest, and ordered to return to his duty.

COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.—Calcutta, Oct. 4, 1854.—The Piece Goods market is in a depressed state. Holders show considerable firmness. Twists have been in moderate demand at previous rates. Woolens are improving in demand, though we cannot report any advance in prices. In Metals, Copper for all dockyard purposes is still in excellent demand, with a further tendency upwards; other kinds are not so much sought for. Iron is dull of sale though there is no further decline in price. Spelter is quite neglected. Lead is steady. Tin is fair demand but easier. Salt Liverpool has improved to Rs. 95, including dustoorie. Beer no alteration.

MADRAS.

THE LONDON MAIL of September 9th arrived at Madras on Oct. 7th (per Bentinck), en route to Calcutta. The portion for China was transferred to the Malta, which left next day for China.

THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS has just published an intimation of an exhibition of raw materials and manufactured products from the presidency and neighbourhood to take place next year.

DEATH OF MAJOR LOCKHART.—We regret to record the death of Major William Elliot Lockhart, of the 45th regt. N.I., in camp at Pondigal, on the 20th instant, of cholera. This casualty promotes Captain (Brevet-Major) Frank Bryan Lys to major, Lieut. James Miles Townsend Reilly to captain, and Ensign Frank Stephenson to lieutenant.—Athenæum, Sept. 28.

LORD DALHOUSIE'S EXPECTED VISIT TO MADRAS.—There is, we understand, every probability of Lord Dalhousie paying a visit to Madras after the monsoon, and proceeding to the Neigherries to spend there the next hot season. His lordship returns home in February, 1856. We heartily hope that the event will turn out as promised, since the Governor-General's presence here, and personal conference with Lord Harris, might be productive of happy results for the presidency. He would also see with his own eyes some of the many interior sufferings and wants of these provinces. It is most probable, indeed, that Lord Dalhousie would travel about a good deal, and we deem it likely that the Court have expressed a wish to have the benefit of his inspection of this presidency prior to his departure for England.—Spectator, Sept. 29.

PUBLIC WORKS.—The dealers in Indian securities may rest perfectly satisfied that no attempt will be made to reduce the interest of any portion of the public debt during the continuance of the present ministry in office. Something in the nature of a positive pledge has been given that the whole available surplus of the Indian revenue shall in future be devoted to public works, every encouragement in the mean time being given to the schemes of private capitalists. Amongst the latter Mr. John Bright has come forward as the chairman of a company prepared to expend whatever sums are needful to make the Godavery perfectly navigable; and other projects scarcely less important are in contemplation. If one could only count on living long enough, it would seem that there is actually a chance of seeing the benighted presidency ranking one day with the foremost countries of the East; but black heads will, we fear, grow grey, and ardent hopes be chilled in the interim.—Athenæum, Sept. 9.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

GENERAL ANSON.

Fort St. George, Sept. 23, 1854.—The steamer Hindustan, having on board his Excellency Lieut.-General the Hon. George Anson, appointed to the office of Commander-in-Chief at this presidency, anchored in the Madras Roads this morning, and his Excellency landed at half-past 10 A.M., under a salute of seventeen guns. In the afternoon his Excellency proceeded to the Government-house in the fort, where the prescribed oaths of office having been administered, his Excellency took his seat as second member of Council, under the usual salute from the ramparts.

By order,

H. C. MONTGOMERY, Chief Secy.

GENERAL ANSON'S ADDRESS TO THE ARMY.

Head-Quarters, Choultry Plain, Sept. 23, 1854.—His Excellency Lieut.-General the Hon. George Anson, in entering upon his office as Commander-in-Chief of the Madras army, feels called upon to express his sense of the honour conferred on him, in having been intrusted with so distinguished a charge.

It will be Lieut.-General Anson's constant endeavour to maintain the efficiency of that army, and to augment its just renown.

With such objects in view, his Excellency looks with confidence to officers commanding divisions and brigades, strictly to enforce all existing "General Regulations;" and to regimental commanding officers for a careful observance on their part, as well as of those under them, of the "Standing Orders" of their respective services. General and commanding officers may rely upon his Excellency's cordial support in the just exercise of their legitimate authority.

From all ranks Lieutenant-General Anson anticipates cheerful co-operation and individual efficiency.

He will expect proof of that zeal, subordination, and sobriety of conduct in quarters, and of that fidelity and gallantry in the field, which have elicited the approbation of his predecessors, and have obtained for the Madras army its present distinguished position. It will be the Lieutenant-General's duty rigidly to enforce discipline: he will promote individual comfort and interest in every way consistent with the public good; and it will gratify him at all times to be enabled to reward meritorious or distinguished conduct, whether found in the private soldier or the officer.

All reports to be made to his Excellency from this date.

BOMBAY:

THE INDIAN ARMY.

Although General Godwin did not conduct the Burmese war with either brilliancy or celerity, yet he seems to have been very economical in his undertakings. We learn from the Indian budget that the total cost of the war would be under 200,000l. sterling, rather a small sum when we come to consider that the campaign extended over a period of eighteen months. We also learn from the same source that the total number of troops under British control in India amounts to 320,000 men, while in some of the few remaining native states there is a military force of not less than 400,000 men. This fact speaks for itself, and shows the absolute necessity which exists for increasing the number of our troops in the East. There is no doubt that even now an immense sum is expended annually upon the military establishments of India; but it should be borne in mind the extent of the empire which they have to govern, and that almost every year some large territory like Nagpore or Pegue becomes incorporated with our dominions. It is by the prestige of our arms alone that we govern India, and it therefore behoves us to be watchful, as a single reverse would most likely prove fatal to this splendid empire, the possession of which places Britain on a level with the most illustrious nations of either ancient or modern times.

It is becoming more obvious day by day, that with every extension of dominion there should be a proportionate increase to our military establishments. England is at the present moment engaged in what promises to become an arduous and protracted war, and should any emergency arise in the East, she would find it impossible to lend us any military assistance. Turkey requires more assistance in the way of troops than she can well afford, and with the fact staring us in the face, that even within our Eastern empire there is a standing army of 400,000 men, which it is not impossible might some day be arrayed against our 320,000 troops of all arms, we consider that a large increase to the Indian army is no longer a question of expediency but of necessity. The clouds which have been so long gathering over Central Asia seem to be increasing in their density. And it appears highly probable that a very large standing army will have to be kept up at Peshawer for years, or until such time as Russian aggression is effectually crushed. We must not only have additional European infantry regiments but also European Cavalry. Native Sepoys are all very well in their way, but if we have to march an army on Cabul—as there seems every likelihood that we shall be eventually compelled to do—they would be of but little use against the hardy soldiers of the wild kingdoms beyond the Afghan frontiers.

The Delhi Gazette which arrived on Saturday informs us that the Lahore Kohinoor, a paper of great respectability, supposed indeed to be the demi-official native organ of the Lahore Government, states on the authority of the Peshawur Ukbar that the Shahzada of Kokan has arrived at Peshawur to ask the assistance of the British Government against the Russians, who "have forced the king of Bokhara to acknowledge their superiority, and have taken a city belonging to the Khan of Kokan on the refusal of that chief to have anything to do with them." The prince brings letters from his master to the British Government, earnestly soliciting aid. He has come via Buddukshan, having avoided the Cabul route through fear of Dost Mahomed. These are the statements made by the Shahzada of Kokan to the commissioner. Major Edwardes replied, that he was going up to Murree, where he would consult with the chief commissioner, and that if necessary, that officer would send for the Shahzada. It is odd that none of these things have been mentioned to us by any of our Peshawur correspondents, although as the Shahzada was escorted into the station by the assistant commissioner at the head of a troop of cavalry, his arrival can have been no secret. A few days will probably give us further information regarding this curious embassy. The above news is confirmed by the Mooltan Reas-i-neor of the 16th inst.

Grave and calm statements like these cannot be allowed to pass by as idle rumours. They have all the appearance of bare facts, or rather the narrative seems so meagre that there is every appearance of a great many things left unrevealed. At all events, it seems to us clear that the Indian army must be increased. The Rohillas of the Dekkan and the hill tribes of the frontier have again been up in arms against our authority; and should the storm which has been so long gathering beyond the passes of Afghanistan burst at length, all our resources will have to be brought into action. Now is the time, therefore, for preparation. The danger is imminent, and requires to be met with all the energies at our command.—Telegraph and Courier, Oct. 2.

THE LONDON MAIL of Sept. 9th arrived at Bombay on Oct. 6th (per Ajdaha).

CAPT. MONTRIOU, I.N., senior naval officer at Aden, has suffered great loss in his house having been burnt down, and all his effects, including an extensive and valuable library. The cause of the fire is unexplained.

DEATH OF COL. APLIN.—We regret to have to announce the death of Colonel Aplin of her Majesty's 86th regiment. This melancholy event occurred on the evening of the 28th ultimo. He had long been suffering from ill-health, and this induced his moving down to Kurrachee from Hyderabad preparatory to a sea-voyage. He sank under his infirmities with the years that he carried. His funeral took place at six o'clock, on the morning of the 29th September, with all the military honours due to his rank.

MORTALITY.—By the last census the population of Bombay was returned at about half a million, but there is now reason to think that this must be far below the mark. The total number of deaths last month, viz., 1,352, is somewhat startling. August is, we believe, as healthy a month as any other, and therefore, although it is not strictly accurate to take the number of deaths occurring in it as the average of the rest, still it will answer our purpose if we do so. At this rate our annual casualty list would be 16,224, or about 1 in every 30 of our population. There must surely be a great mistake, either in the census returns of our population, or in the reported number of deaths. If both be correct, then it is indeed time that the sanitary condition of this boasted presidency town of Western India be looked into.—Bombay Gazette.

THE ROAD between Nagpore and Bombay is being placed in repair.

MR. W. ACLAND, Honourable Company's solicitor, is permitted to proceed to Europe, on medical certificate, and to be absent from his duties, under the new Absentee Regulations, for a period of fifteen months. Mr. Lawford Acland to act as solicitor for the Company during the absence of Mr. William Acland, or until further orders.

THE AMEERS OF SCINDE are said to have declined the offer, made to them by Government of returning to their country, unless their ancestral property is restored to them.

SIR JAMES BROOKE.—The sittings of the Sarawak commission have closed; Sir James Brooke has been fully and honourably acquitted of all the charges brought against him. His slanderers refused to appear as witnesses, and some of those who subscribed the petition, confessed that they knew nothing as to the truth or falsehood of the statements contained in it! This bottle of smoke will cost the country some 10,000*l.*, or 15,000*l.*

SCINDE.—The weather just at present is anything but agreeable. We are assured that the heat exceeds that of former years for an October month, but the northerly winds having somewhat prematurely set in, we think we may reckon upon the early setting in of the cold season, and right glad too shall we be when we get it. Our cold season will be a welcome guest for us grilling residents of Kurrachee, though it will bring with it the breaking up of the society of our little station for some three or four months. The moves contemplated this year, of our birds of passage, both civil and military, will, we believe, be somewhat similar to those of previous years; the only difference being that the several departments will leave this much earlier than usual. The commissioner and his establishment will leave this during the first week of next month for Jerruck, thence, we believe, to Mahomed Khan's Tanda, to the Thuir and Parkur, where he will meet H. H. the Rao of Cutch, and after the transfer of the districts of the Thurr to H. H. the Rao, a measure not only politic, but one that will no doubt be attended with many beneficial results; the Commissioner will then proceed via the desert to Hyderabad, and thence to Upper Scinde. The department of Lieutenant Colonel Turner, superintending engineer, will start about the 20th proximo. The G. T. Survey go out early in November, and our veteran General about the middle of December.—Sindian, Oct. 7.

POONA.—THE WEATHER.—The rain appears to have now left us for good, and we again have fine open weather. The nights and mornings are cool, but the heat of the day is very oppressive, and there is a good deal of sickness—fever and dysentery prevailing amongst Europeans. The natives, too, complain of much sickness.—Observer, Oct. 11.

THE CASE OF LIEUT. MOYLE.—From Shikarpoor in Sind we learn, that a dispute has occurred there which is likely to result in a court-martial. Capt. Moyle of the 2nd grenadiers has been placed in arrest under the following circumstances. On the 14th of last month, while Capt. Moyle and Lieut. Gleig were in the billiard-room of the regimental mess-house, Lieut. and Adjut. Law entered it, and in an objectionable tone said to Lieut. Gleig, "You have no business to ask Capt. Moyle to play at billiards with you; look at rule No. 8"—pointing to a board with the billiard-rules. Lieut. Gleig sought for an explanation. Lieut. Law replied, "Capt. Moyle is not a subscriber." "I beg your pardon," interposed Lieut. Gleig, "he is." "If he is," then said Lieut. Law, "I was never consulted as to whether he should be allowed to subscribe or not." On hearing this, Capt. Moyle observed, "Mr. Law if you have any remarks to make upon my playing at this table, I beg that you will be good enough not to do so in a public place;" adding, as he put his cue down, "I will not play again until you retract what you have said." Lieut. Law left the billiard-room. Both Capt. Moyle and Lieut. Gleig felt the wanton outrage to propriety and their feelings by the conduct of the adjutant. The billiard-table, we ought to mention, is private property, and Capt. Moyle had paid his share in the purchase of it. To a right understanding of all this, we must first of all state that there is a strong party feeling in the regiment, engendered from a source where good sense would have at least never allowed it; but when these things do occur, it is astonishing how a trifle may be made use of to insult. Such is the instance before us. Mr. Law sides with the commanding officer. Constant communication may bring about similarity of tastes and sympathies, likes and dislikes. Neither Major Grimes nor Lieutenant Law have been on friendly terms with Captain Moyle; and the difference of standing in the service between the major and the captain is but three months. To make a representation under such circumstances against Lieutenant Law to Major Grimes, and to obtain an apology for conduct as gross as we remember was just the very way in all probability not to succeed. Captain Moyle, upon the second occasion that he asked his commanding officer for an apology from Lieut. Law, also urged that the opinion of his brother officers may be taken. He was told as to the latter: "I have decided that point, sir, you were wrong; my opinion is enough, I will not allow the opinions of the officers to be taken.—You are to order Lieut. Gleig to pay you back your subscription.—I shall report the matter to the brigadier, reporting at the same on your general conduct." The upshot has been that the brigadier, who lives in the same house with the commanding officer, finds sufficient cause to call for a Court of Inquiry by reference to division head-quarters; and Captain Moyle has been put under arrest. We have no interest in this affair further than to show that the chief of the Bombay army should extend his inquiries from the capacity of ensigns to the capacity of commanding officers; especially of such who seek to disturb the harmony existing among their juniors.—Telegraph and Courier, Oct. 14.

EXAMINATION OF JUNIOR CIVIL SERVANTS.

The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to publish, for general information, the following rules for the examination of junior civil servants, and to notify, that if approved by the Most Noble the Governor-General of India in Council, they will have effect from this date.

Young civilians already in the country, who have not yet passed an examination in Hindustanee under the old rules, will be allowed six months, from the 15th October next, within which to pass, under the rules now published, an examination either in the Murathee or Guzeratee language, whichever, on application, may be prescribed by government.

Young civilians who have already passed an examination in Hindustanee, but not in any of the languages of record, and who have still six months left of the term (21 months), within which they are at present required to pass in two languages, will be allowed the option of passing in the language they may now be studying, according to the old test, or in Murathee or Guzeratee, whichever may be prescribed by Government, according to the new test.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor in Council,
H. E. GOLDSMID,
Officiating chief secretary to Government.
Bombay Castle, 13th September, 1854.

RULES FOR EXAMINATION OF JUNIOR CIVIL SERVANTS.

Vernacular Languages.

I. Immediately on his arrival in India, every young civil servant shall be subjected to an examination in the oriental languages, for the purpose of testing the progress made by him at Haileybury in that branch of his studies. This preliminary examination shall be conducted by the Oriental Translator to Government for the time being.

II. The young civilian shall then be at once attached to the office of a collector or commissioner, in any part of the presidency where Murathee or Guzeratee is the vernacular.

III. Within six months from the date of his arrival in Bombay, or as soon after that term as a Committee of Vernacular Examination may assemble at the presidency, he shall pass an examination (as hereafter provided) in the vernacular language of the district wherein he has been located. This examination shall embrace such branches, and be regulated by such tests, as the Central Committee for Vernacular Examination (see Rule XIII.), with the sanction of Government, may from time to time define and notify. It is to be altogether of a practical character, and is to be regarded as introductory, and subordinate to the vernacular examination hereafter described in the rules regarding departmental examinations.

IV. In the event of his failing to pass the prescribed examination within the prescribed term, it shall be discretionary with Government to extend his period of study (on the whole or a part of his pay and allowance) to nine months from the date of arrival in the country.

V. Should he not have passed at the end of nine months, exclusive of periods of absence under sick certificate, he shall be suspended from the service, and sent home by the first opportunity.

VI. During the first six months of his residence in India, or during so much of that period as shall precede his passing the examination required in Rule III., the young civilian shall receive a salary of Rs. 200 per mensem, together with Rs. 30 per mensem as pundit allowance, and Rs. 40 per mensem as house rent. Should he succeed in passing the prescribed examination before the expiration of the six months allowed him for preparation, he will be entitled to draw the pundit and house allowances for the entire period, over and above any other salary to which he may become entitled after passing.

VII. While a civil servant is studying for this ordeal, the collector or commissioner to whose office he has been attached, shall be required to furnish, for the information of the Central Committee of Vernacular Examination at the Presidency, monthly reports as to his progress and studies.

VIII. Every civil officer shall hereafter reckon his seniority in the service from the date of his passing in Murathee or Guzeratee. His period of service entitling to pension, &c., shall include only the period subsequent to his having so passed, together with twelve months previous to his passing (i.e., six months in which to reach India from Haileybury, and six months allotted as period for passing), exclusive of absence under sick certificate; provided always, that the said term of twelve months shall not reach back beyond the date of his passing out of Haileybury.

IX. When it is reported that a young civil servant has passed the above examination, his salary shall be increased to Rs. 300 per mensem, and he will be considered available for the ordinary duties of an assistant collector and magistrate.

X. When a civilian who has passed the above examination in Murathee or Guzeratee is moved to a district where another language is vernacular, he shall be required to pass an examination in that language also, within twelve months after his arrival at his new station. If the exigencies of the service necessitate his transfer within the year, immediately succeeding his passing in his first and vernacular language, and which, were he not transferred, would be devoted to preparing for examination in departmental knowledge, according to the lower standard (see Rules XXV. to XXVII.), he shall not, during the first twelve months, be subjected to the deduction provided in Rule XII. The further vernacular examination, for which this rule provides, shall be similar to that indicated in Rule III., but may be passed before a provincial committee.

XI. A further similar examination shall always be required to be passed on transfer to any district where another language is current.

XII. Until the transferred civilian shall have passed the examination, or examination enjoined in the Rules X. and XI., he shall be subject (with the exception specified in the former rule) to a deduction of ten per cent. from the pay of his situation, the amount so deducted being made good, in the event of his passing before the close of a year from the date of transfer.

XIII. With a view to the proper conduct of these examinations (exclusive of those described in Rule I.), there shall be a central committee of vernacular examination at the presidency, which shall consist of a judge of the Sudder Adawlut, who shall be president thereof, the secretary to Government in the revenue department, and the Oriental translator to Government, the last-named of whom shall also act as secretary to the committee, also of one or more other officers to be named on each occasion by the Government.

XIV. Before this central committee shall appear all assistants desirous of passing the examination described in Rule III., and to it shall be transmitted all papers connected with the other vernacular examinations prescribed in the rules, and reports of colloquial examinations in Hindustani.

Departmental Examination.

XV. Half-yearly Examinations of Assistants.—Half-yearly examinations of assistants, liable under the following rules to examination, shall be held at such seasons and stations as may be fixed by Government.

XVI. Two qualifying Standards at the Half-yearly Examinations.—There shall be two standards of qualification, according to the one or the other of which the assistants shall be examined. An assistant must be examined and found qualified according to the first standard before he can be appointed to a third assistant or supernumerary third assistant to a collector or commissioner, or have charge of a district. An assistant, who has been found at some previous examination qualified according to the first standard, must be found qualified according to the second standard before he can be considered by Government capable of holding the office of second or acting second assistant to a collector or commissioner, or assistant or acting assistant judge, or of exercising full magisterial powers.

XVII. Effect of passing by each Standard.—An assistant who has passed according to the first standard of examination, and who has been six months at a station as an assistant, will be appointed third or supernumerary third assistant to a collector or commissioner, with a salary of Rs. 400 per mensem, and, if expedient, with charge of a district. An assistant who has passed according to the second standard, and who shall have been in the situation just described for at least one year, may be at once promoted to a second assistantship to a collector or commissioner, and vested with full magisterial powers; or (on the condition indicated in Rule XXX.) he may be employed as an assistant judge.

XVIII. Promotion of Assistants.—The Government will promote to a second assistantship no assistant who shall not have been examined under these rules, and thereon found qualified according to the second standard. All assistants will be promoted (under ordinary circumstances) in the order of their passing the examination now prescribed, according to the second standard of qualification.

XIX. What Assistants are to be examined.—All assistants who have passed the vernacular examination described in Rule III., but have not passed according to the first standard of qualification fixed by the present rules, shall, when they have been more than six months at their stations as assistants, be subjected to half-yearly examination. All assistants who have passed according to that standard, but not according to the second standard, shall, when they have been more than two years at their stations as assistants, be subjected to half-yearly examination. All other assistants who do not now hold substantive offices of which the salary is Rs. 700 per mensem, and who have not passed according to the second standard of qualification, may be examined at any half-yearly examination, with the special permission of the collector of their district previously obtained. Assistants examined under these rules will draw the usual travelling allowance to and from their respective stations.

XX. Central Examination Committee.—The Government will constitute a committee, to be called the Central Committee of Departmental Examination, by whose instructions the local committees shall be guided, and with whom they shall correspond on all matters connected with the half-yearly examinations. The central examination committee will consist of one judge of the Sudder Court, who shall be president thereof, the secretary to Government in the revenue department, and the Oriental translator to Government, who shall also be secretary; likewise of one European officer of Mofussil experience, and one native officer of rank (to be named by Government).

XXI. Duty of the Central Examination Committee.—It shall be the duty of the Central Committee of Departmental Examination to fix, on every occasion, the half-yearly examination days, which shall, if possible, be the same for every station at which a local committee is to assemble. It shall be the duty of the same committee to prepare beforehand for each examination sets of questions to be put to the assistants under examination, a sufficient number of copies of each of which sets shall be forwarded to each local committee in a sealed packet, not to be opened until the moment of examination. The central committee shall from time to time submit for the approval of Government such rules as may appear to them best for the guidance of the divisional committees, in order to ensure a fair and uniform method of fixing the degree of attainment upon each point of examination which the several assistants examined may reach.

XXII. Divisional Examination Committees.—At each station where a local examination is to be held, a committee of public officers, to be called the Divisional Examination Committee, shall on each occasion be constituted by Government; and of this committee the chief judicial officer of the district, if not absent on leave, shall be a member. The revenue commissioners and commissioner in Scinde shall, whenever practicable, attend the examinations held within their divisions, and shall be ex-officio presidents of the divisional committees on which they may sit. In other cases the Government will name the president.

XXIII. Duty of the Divisional Examination Committee, and Report of the Examinations.—The examinations shall be conducted by the divisional examination committee, who, after due deliberation in respect of each assistant examined, shall record the result, stating their opinion as to whether the standard of qualification has been attained or not (which result, in case of difference of opinion, is to be determined by a majority), and shall deliver the record to the president. The president shall transmit the record of the central examination committee, with his own report, wherein he shall state his agreement or disagreement with the divisional committee in each case. The president will be responsible for the fairness, impartiality, and proper strictness of the examination. The written answers of the assistants, and the other papers written by them, either in the vernacular or in English, shall be forwarded with the record. The central examination committee, after taking all the reports into consideration, and perusing any of the examination papers that it may seem to them proper to peruse, shall report to Government the names of such assistants as, in their opinion, have proved their qualifications according to one or other of the standards in force, noticing especially in the orders of their merit any assistants who, with reference to the length of their residence in India, may have passed with great distinction.

XXIV. Principal Object of the First Standard.—The principal object of the first standard of examination, shall be to test the proficiency, for practical purposes, of the assistant in the vernacular language of his district. For this purpose, at least three papers which he has never seen before, taken from the official records very much at hazard, and written by different persons in a plain running hand, must be read aloud by the assistant correctly, and without great difficulty; and after being read aloud, their contents must be correctly explained by him in English. An English judgment or other official paper, to be furnished by the Central Committee, must be translated by him into the vernacular without assistance. The translation must be substantially correct in meaning, and intelligible to a native; tolerably correct in grammar and spelling, and free from any very bad errors of idiom. He must dictate off-hand with some fluency the translation into the vernacular of an English report or other official paper, also to be furnished by the Central Committee, whereof the translation will be written down exactly as dictated. The dictated paper must, in like manner, be intelligible, and substantially correct. He must then be tested in conversation with two or three natives, in such manner and to such extent as shall suffice to satisfy the committee as to the degree of his power of understanding natives of different classes, and of making himself understood by them; such conversation or colloquial examination to be confined to the ordinary duties and business of a court or cutcherry, and not to embrace abstruse or peculiar subjects. An assistant must pass successfully through every step of this branch of the examination in order to qualify according to the first standard.

XXV. Second Object of the First Standard.—The next object of the first standard of qualification shall be to test the assistant's general acquaintance with the leading principles of the systems of revenue administration and criminal justice, and especially with so much of the laws and rules of procedure as it is necessary for an officer to know in order to exercise properly the ordinary functions of an assistant to a collector and magistrate. For this purpose, a set of questions on revenue, magisterial, and police subjects shall be furnished by the general committee. The questions should be so framed as not to involve points of difficulty or rare occurrences, and to show rather the possession or the want of a general and intelligent acquaintance with the subjects of examination, and the fundamental laws applicable thereto, than a knowledge of any string of details, and dates of orders, which may be soon learned for the occasion, and are generally as soon forgotten again. These questions must be all answered without book. The assistant should also be examined generally as to his knowledge of cutcherry accounts, both the English accounts kept at the Hoozoor and native accounts, talooka and village; also as to the past revenue history of his district, as to be learnt from the records.

XXVI. Third Object of the First Standard.—The next object of the first standard of examination shall be to test the power which the assistant may have acquired to deal with conflicting arguments and evidence in actual cases. For this purpose, two decided cases, with the final proceeding in each withdrawn, which the assistant has never before seen, one from the collector's, and one from the magistrate's office, of the nature of cases coming before assistants exercising the ordinary functions of an assistant to a collector and magistrate, shall be given to the assistant. The papers may be read over to him by a native officer, and the explanation of any difficult word or phrase may be asked for and given in the vernacular, the circumstance being in each case noted. The assistant may now refer to all his books, and may take his notes as the case is read over. At the conclusion of each case, he must write, in English, a brief but precise description of the case, and a decision upon the questions at issue, with a sufficient statement of the grounds on which it is founded.

XXVII. Fourth Object of the First Standard.—The last object of the first standard of examination shall be to ascertain how the assistant has been employed, and how he has done his duty at his station. For this purpose the collector and magistrate under whom he has been employed shall furnish the committee with a report upon these points. It shall be the duty of such officers to make over to their assistants, from time to time, cases for report. The reports shall be written in English, on one side of a sheet of paper; and after the case is decided, the officer who decides it shall note on the other side of the sheet his remarks upon the report. These reports, with the remarks thereon, shall be submitted to the Divisional Examination Committee. Such officers shall also require their assistants to make English minutes of the cases given to them for decision, which minutes also shall be submitted to the same committee; but these reports and minutes need not be sent up to the Central Examination Committee. The opinion formed of them by the Divisional Committee, however, shall be entered in the record submitted to the Central Committee.

XXVIII. Second Standard.—The second standard of examination shall be similar in its nature to the first, but more difficult, in degree. In the vernacular portion of it the reading of a common office running-hand must be tolerably ready; the papers selected as tests should be of a more difficult description of office papers; the translation, dictation, and conversation should be fluent, generally correct, and readily intelligible; and the assistant should be tested in his power of explaining himself clearly and with sufficient propriety in the vernacular in an argument or topic of some difficulty, such as may occur in official business. The questions of law and practice should be selected from the whole field of the duties of a magistrate and collector; but they shall be arranged in two classes, one class comprehending important and leading points, in answering which no books shall be allowed, and the other class comprehending less general and less common points, in answering which the assistance of books shall be allowed. No guides, digests, or summaries, however, shall be permitted to be used, the assistant being confined to the original laws, circular orders, and constructions. The object of this class of questions is to test the assistant's knowledge of where readily to find the law or practice on the less common points that arise in business. In preparing these questions, nice and difficult points should be avoided, the object being not to evoke subtlety or ingenuity, but only to ascertain whether the acquisitions and capacity of the person examined are adequate to enable him to perform fitly the important functions of an Indian magistrate and collector or not. The trial cases should be selected from those possessing enough of complexity to test the assistant's ability to master all ordinary difficulties, and especially to test his power of minute attention to and just appreciation of evidence.

XXIX. Object of the Second Standard.—It shall be the object to make this second standard such that a man who has passed the examinations provided in rules 24 to 27, who is of ordinary understanding and capability, and who fairly applies himself with proper diligence to his business, and makes it his daily object to familiarize himself with the languages of the country, may pass it after two or three years of Mofussil experience.

MISCELLANEOUS.

XXX. Although passing the second departmental examinations will be an indispensable preliminary to employment as an assistant judge, yet it will not supersede the necessity of a special examination to test professional competence, and to regulate promotion in the judicial branch of the service, which, however, will be separately provided for.

XXXI. On occasion of each examination, the civilian will be required to furnish an assurance upon honour that he is not indebted to the extent of more than three months' pay. Failing to give this assurance, his promotion will be stopped by order of Government. It is to be understood that every member of the service may, at any time, be called upon by Government to make this declaration under the same penalty.

XXXII. These rules are to be regarded as superseding those now in force for examination in the regulations and in accounts, as provided by the Government Circular, No. 3,110, dated 1st December, 1831, and No. 2,789, of the 21st April, 1852, respectively.

XXXIII. As it is considered desirable on public grounds that no member of the Civil Service should remain unqualified for employment on general service, no assistant will be appointed to other than the judicial, revenue, and magisterial departments, until he has passed an examination according to the second departmental standard above described.

XXXIV. These rules are not to be regarded as interfering with the one* now applicable to the civil servants desirous of obtaining rewards for distinguished proficiency in any of the vernacular languages, or for eminent knowledge of Arabic or Sanscrit, or in Hindu and Mahomedan Law.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor in Council,
H. E. GOLDSMID,
Offg. Chief Secy.

Bombay Castle, 13th September, 1854.

The committees referred to in Rules III. and XXI. are in the first instance to be guided by the following provisions.

By order of the Right Hon. the Governor in Council,
H. E. GOLDSMID,
Offg. Chief Secy. to Govt.

Bombay Castle, 13th September, 1854.

Vernacular Examinations.

1stly. The Examiner is to be required to read a page of some accounts from a village, talooka, or hoozoor office, written in the vernacular language, and ordinary cursive character.

2ndly. To read off in the vernacular of the district, and explain visd voce in English, a deposition, or other exhibit, selected from a magisterial case.

3rdly. To render back into the vernacular (from an English translation) an ordinary report by a native revenue officer. This must be rendered in a style substantially correct, and sufficiently intelligible to enable a native to read it out as written. It must be free from material errors in grammar and spelling, and the handwriting must be legible.

4thly. To converse with two or three natives, in such manner as to satisfy the committee that he is able to understand, and make himself understood by, natives of various classes, both in ordinary conversation and the common business of a cutcherry.

Departmental Examination.—First Standard.

1. Papers and questions are to be proposed to the Assistant, for the purpose of ascertaining that, as respects conversation, dictation, and writing, his skill in the language of the district is not less than that provided above.

2. A revenue and judicial set of questions being then placed before him, he is to be required to answer them all, without reference to any books, except a set of the Regulations and Acts of the Supreme Government, and interpretations of the same, and copies of the printed Rules for Administrations of Revenue Survey Settlements, &c. These questions are to be so framed as not to involve difficult or rare points, or recollection of forms, dates of orders, &c., but must be sufficient to test the candidate's general conversance with the subjects of examination, and with the laws applicable to the same, especially Regulations XII., XIV., XVI. and XVII. of Bombay, and the Acts supplemental thereto.

3. The Assistant is required to be able to answer ordinary questions, showing a general acquaintance with the principles and system of talooka and village accounts.

4. With a view of testing the power which the Assistant may have acquired of dealing with conflicting arguments and evidence, two decided cases, which he has never before seen (one from the collector's and one from the magistrate's office), of the nature of those which come before Assistants in charge of districts, are to be placed before him, the final proceeding in each being withdrawn. The papers may be read over to the candidate by a native officer, and the explanation of any difficult word or phrase asked for and given in the vernacular, the circumstance being on each occasion noted. The Assistant may make notes as the record is again read over. Finally, he must write in English a brief but precise description of the case, and his decision upon the question or questions at issue, with a sufficient statement of the grounds on which it is based.

5. In order to record how the Assistant has been employed and been progressing, the collector or commissioner under whom any unpassed Assistant is placed, is frequently to make over to him, for report, cases which are beyond his competency to decide. The reports are to be written on one side of a sheet of paper, and after the case is decided, the deciding officer is to note on the other side his remarks on the report. These reports, with the notes, are to be submitted to the District Examination Committee. The collector or commissioner is also to require his assistant to make English minutes of cases given him for decision. These also are to be submitted to the committee, who are to record their judgment of these minutes and reports, for the information of the Central Committee.

Departmental Examination.—Second Standard.

1. The assistant must show an unimpaired acquaintance with the vernacular of the district.

2. The office papers selected as tests are to be of a more difficult description than those in the former examination.

3. The assistant's power of explaining himself clearly in the vernacular is to be tested by an argument of some difficulty, such as may occur in official business.

4. Questions of law and practice are to be selected from the whole range of the duties of a collector and magistrate, and arranged in two classes, one comprehending important and leading points, in answering which no books shall be allowed; and the other comprehending less general and less common points, in answering which the assistance of books shall be allowed. (No guides, digests, or summaries, however, are to be used, but only the original laws, circular orders and interpretations, with rules relative to different departments, printed by authority.) The object of this class of questions is to test the assistant's capacity readily to find the law or practice in the less common points which arise in business. It is not to evoke subtlety or ingenuity, but merely to ascertain whether or not the acquisitions and ability of the person examined are such as to enable him fitly to perform the important functions of an Indian magistrate and collector.

5. Trial cases are to be selected from those possessing enough of complexity to test the assistant's ability to master all ordinary difficulties, and especially to test his power of minute attention to, and just appreciation of evidence, and his knowledge of one or two nice points connected with native custom.

6. The requisite returns and statements being placed before the assistant, he is to be required to prepare from them one or other of the accounts submitted to the presidency authorities; or by some other similar test he is to be made to prove his knowledge of the mode in which the English accounts of a collectorate are framed from the vernacular.

7. He is to be tried with questions relative to revenue administration, from the date of a ryot taking up a field to that of his paying his last instalment; also with questions relative to the terms on which land may be abandoned, and to the ordinary business of a jumabundy settlement.

8. Questions are likewise to be put regarding the principles of a survey settlement, and the rules laid down for the guidance of revenue officers in connection therewith.

9. A thorough knowledge is to be required of Regulations XII., XIV., XVI., XVII., XVIII., and XXI. of 1827, and of the Acts referring to them; and of the principal decisions of Government regarding the enforcement of the more important provisions of the revenue laws.

10. The record (vernacular) connected with a claim to a wursashun, or other allowance from the public treasury, is to be placed before the candidate, who is to be required to draft an English report, showing how the case ought to be decided according to the standing rules which apply to it.

By order of the Right Hon. the Governor in Council,
H. E. GOLDSMID, Offg. Chief Secy. to Govt.
Bombay Castle, Sept. 13, 1854.

* Extract clause 6 of section V. of the "Rules of Examination and Incentives to Study," published under date 10th June, 1850, in the Government Gazette.

6. Pecuniary rewards will be granted for extra proficiency, according to the following scale:—

High proficiency will entitle a student to a certificate, and a prize of Rs. 800. Extraordinary proficiency will entitle a student to a degree of honour, and a donation of Rs. 1,600.

Eminent knowledge of Hindoo and Mahomedan law, Arabic or Sanscrit, and of the Regulations, will entitle the young civilian to a degree of honour, and a medal.

IMPORTS.—Bombay, Oct. 14.—Since the despatch of last Mail, there is no change materially to report. In consequence of an enormous import of British manufacture and anxiety to sell, the same dullness is observed to move off goods unless submitted to a further decline, in the already ruinous price of all kinds of staple, as well as Twists. Metals, remain steady.

RANGOON.

By the Tenasserim we have received the Rangoon Chronicle to the 20th and the Maulmein Advertiser to the 18th of September. From the former paper we learn that by late advices the frontier remains undisturbed, except by an occasional dacoity. A correspondent from Meaday writes that the Mahanuddy would go down to Rangoon in a few days with the Burmese envoys; but the editor does not expect them before the first week of the present month. The 2nd M.N.I. will, it is reported, relieve the 25th, it having been found necessary to reorganise the latter corps, owing to the catastrophe which occurred to its head-quarters in the storm on the Sittoung river some time back. Rangoon is to have a second paper, which is to be started as soon as an establishment can be obtained from Calcutta. There is no news from Maulmein of any moment.

It would appear that after all the Ava ambassador is likely to prove a myth. We have seen letters to a commercial house in Calcutta, dated Sept. 13, Rangoon, which state that up to that time nothing had been seen or heard of the ambassador; and, in short, the people there did not believe that the golden umbrellas were on their way to embark on the Zenobia. We know not how to reconcile this with the expectations of Government, and the preparations which have been made to receive this dignitary. It is perfectly possible, and very probable, that after the series of "sells" which the Burmese played off upon our government during the war, they would repeat the joke—if they dared. But we can see no profit which could arise to them from doing any thing else than endeavouring to propitiate the power which has wrested from them half their dominion. A few days will set the matter at rest; and should the Zenobia return without her deputation cargo, we fear the Hon. Company must put up with a little playful bantering at its expense.

The sale of Government lands will commence immediately after the rains cease, and I fear they will not realize the same prices as at the last sale, on account of the recent resolution of the Government that one moiety of the purchase-money is to be paid within three days of the sale, and the other on the 1st July, 1855. This will deter those who have money out, which they cannot readily realize, from becoming purchasers. At the November sales of last year, good prices were obtained, although Lord Dalhousie and the secretaries were not among the bidders, as hinted by a certain radical print in Calcutta.

Although we cannot expect the same enjoyment of our holidays here as in Calcutta, we shall not be without our amusement. We shall have our boat races, and in spite of the unfavourable weather we are determined to have as much pleasure as we can.

SIAM.

ATTACK UPON THE CITY OF CHIANGTOONG.

We have been favoured with an account (under the royal signet and sign manual of his Most Gracious Majesty the King of Siam) of an unsuccessful attempt by Siamese troops to reduce the city of Chiangtoong. This place, situated in the country of the Laos, was garrisoned, it appeared, by 3,000 regular Burmese troops (no contemptible enemy, according to English accounts of them) and 13,000 irregulars—altogether 16,000 men. Faulty commissariat arrangements, and a distemper among the elephants, appear to have been the main cause of the want of success. A march of 800 miles, however, will have been an immense operation. In a separate communication to our address, his Majesty says,—"We are very sorry that we were disappointed of our way with our enemies. It [the country traversed] is very thick jungle, and most mountainous, and difficult for penetrating by an army of many men."

Information has been received at the city of Bangkok from the Siamese army despatched to the northern parts of the realm to endeavour to take possession of the city of Chiangtoong, belonging to the Burman empire, situated in latitude 22° north. The particulars are subjoined.

The city of Chiangtoong being still unsubdued at the end of the campaign of last year, the army went into quarters for the rainy season at Muang Nand, a Laos great town situated in latitude 18° 20' north. Here they remained some eight months, when the rains being fairly over, on the 15th of January last, his Royal Highness Kroma Hluang Wongsa Dhiraj Snidh, the commander-in-chief, with all his forces, left Muang Nand, and after a twenty days' march arrived at Chiangrai, a town on the extreme northern frontiers of the Siamese territories. Here he remained one month, awaiting the coming of his troops, collecting in the mean time stores of provisions, supplies, &c.

On the 25th of February the army resumed their march, proceeding in two divisions and by different roads; his Excellency Chau Phaya Yomerat with one division advancing by way of Sisapong, and H. R. H. Kroma Hluang Wongsa Dhiraj Snidh by way of Muang Yong, Palas, Chiangrai, and Chiang Kang, fighting with the Chiangtoong defending forces in all these places as they proceeded. Calculating upon receiving supplies of provisions from the towns they were to pass on their route, and failing to do so, their stock fell short, the elephants and bullocks that transported the stores of the army failed too to come up in time to furnish what was required for the daily rations; hence the necessity of delaying in each place sometimes for several days, to wait the coming up of the provisions, and also in making conciliations and arrangements, so as to enable the Lao Lu, or people of Chiangtoong, to convey stores and provisions to Muang Lai, within the boundaries of the province of Chiangtoong, many days and nights were lost. After entering the province of Chiangtoong, they found the Mha Kanan, or chief of Chiangtoong, being aware that a Siamese army was coming to march into and attack his country, had compelled the inhabitants to remove their families from all the villages and towns that lay in the route of the invading army, and burn up all the rice and food of every description in them, leaving only the able-bodied men in the towns to defend them; and then again the roads proved very difficult, there being very many mountains to climb, and very little level ground, it was impossible for baggage-carts to be used; so the only means of transportation were elephants and bullocks; consequently but a small quantity or portion of the mortars, howitzers, field-pieces, shot, shell, and powder, could be taken along with the army. By the time the army had arrived at Muang Gnunn Muang Ping and Muang Samtan, they had fought with, driven back, and put to route, the Chiangtoong troops, so that the van of the Siamese army were enabled to advance quite up to the very walls of Chiangtoong itself by the 26th of April. The main body, however, under H. R. H. Krom Hluang Wongsu Dhiraj Snidh, established themselves at Muang Lek, a village about three miles' distance from the city walls.

The city of Chiangtoong is accessible only by defiles through the mountains that surround it; but at all of these they had built up walls wherever the natural mountain barriers were deficient. An area of about twelve miles in circumference was inclosed by these walls. The town was garrisoned by about 3,000 Burmese troops, besides the soldiers of Chiangtoong itself, who numbered about 7,000 men; Ngiaos people about 6,000 more; making the whole number about 16,000 fighting men.

The Chiangtoong men came out from their city frequently to attack the Siamese forces, when the Siamese would open on them a fire of shells from their mortars, by which very many of the enemy would be killed; upon this the enemy would retreat within their walls, soon to come out again to resume the contest; and thus an incessant conflict was kept up with the Siamese army for twenty-one days. On the side of the Chiangtoong forces many hundreds were slain, on the part of the Siamese about fifty or sixty men. While the Siamese were designing to carry on the war yet more, the rains set in heavily, and the supplies began to grow short, disease too broke out among the soldiers, a dysentery carrying off several hundreds of them; among the elephants also, of which there were with the army over a thousand, a distemper appeared with coming on of the rainy season; in consequence of which, near about 500 of them died. The elephants and bullocks that were conveying the provisions and military stores did not arrive in time; moreover, the division of the army under Chou Phaya Yomerat, which was to have advanced upon Chiangtoong by way of Sisapong, in the Maung-rai country, became greatly destitute of provisions, and was unable to get through, as the route they took abounded with difficult mountain-passes, declivities, precipices, &c.; so that the troops and elephants were obliged to proceed in single file; and besides, a fatal disease broke out among the people and elephants, of which many died. For these reasons it became necessary, by the 17th of May, to withdraw the army from the city of Chiangtoong, and fall back to Chiangsan and Chiangrai.

The army could again, in the succeeding year, return to take satisfaction from the people of Chiangtoong; but since both the troops and their horses, elephants and bullocks were worn out with fatigue, there is now a necessity to cease awhile from hostilities, in order to give the soldiers an opportunity to rest, also to arrange for and lay in abundant stores for the subsistence of the troops. Perhaps at some future time an army will be marched to chastise these Chiangtoong people, and finish up this affair.—Friend of China, Sept. 16.

THE LONDON MAIL of August 9th arrived at Hong-Kong Sept. 19th (per Cadiz), being in the unprecedented period of thirty-nine days only.

MOVEMENT OF BRITISH MEN-OF-WAR.—Admiral Sterling with the Winchester (50), Encounter screw steamer (14), and paddle steamers Styx (6) and Barracouta (6), left Shanghai on the 25th ult. for Japan, en route, it is supposed, for the Bay of Okhotsk, where, on the island of Kodiah, at its entrance, there is a large Russian town, defended by two citadels mounting more than a hundred cannon, and where no doubt will be found a portion of the Russian squadron lately in these seas.—Overland Friend of China, Sept. 27.

HIS EXCELLENCY SIR JOHN BOWRING, accompanying the French minister M. Bourboulon and family, proceeded to Shanghai in H.M. S.S. Rattler on the 16th instant. With every disposition to believe Sir John conscientious in his views, and desirous only of promoting the welfare of his country and China conjointly, as an exponent of what we believe to be public opinion here, we can but say that there is a very general mistrust of his Excellency's intentions—such distrust arising from the extraordinary course pursued in the matter of the Shanghai duty arrears. Mere words, however, which are all that can be given by H. E. to the usurping Manchow rulers, amount to little; and when the people of England are once satisfied of the real facts of China's position, there is no fear for the side they are sure to espouse. The court at Peking is said to be the ultimate destination of the English, French, and American ministers.—Ibid.

THE "AGINCOURT."—We learn that the Agincourt, which left Fuh-Chau in the latter part of last month with a full cargo of tea for Liverpool, had put into Amoy for repairs, having lost her spars and bulwarks in a taiphong.—Overland China Mail.

MR. D. B. ROBERTSON, H.B.M.'s consul for Canton, is charged with the management of the diplomatic department in the south during the plenipotentiary's absence, and for the present will reside in Hongkong.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE PUNJAB.

No. VII.

WE believe that we have noticed every part of the Report on the Punjab, so far as it relates to the Punjab proper, except the financial one. The chief source of receipt is of course there, as everywhere in India, the land, with some small feeders! flowing in a great degree from this chief fund of revenue. The second comprises excise on salt and other articles, the stamp-duties, and canal water-rent. The third, consisting mainly of feudal payments by jaghiredars, scarcely deserves notice. The fourth is the post-office revenue. The fifth, termed miscellaneous, like most divisions under that comprehensive name, is made up of odds and ends, which the classifiers did not know otherwise what to do with. The expenditure is arranged into several departments: the general department, wherein is chronicled the cost of central institutions to be subsequently divided and distributed; the judicial department; the land revenue; the excise and the post-office establishments; the civil engineer's department, which comprehends public buildings, including all military buildings not appertaining to the regular army. All these heads are considered ordinary and permanent, except as regards that last-mentioned, the civil engineer's department, in which the 'portion of expenditure devoted to public improvements,—as to the construction of canals and military roads,—is viewed as extraordinary. It is true that there will probably long be a demand for such works; but each work, as completed, removes from the list the cost of construction, leaving only that of renovation. We were pleased to find that the item of pensions was looked upon as extraordinary and temporary, for it is remarked, that "though it will not suddenly vanish," it "will yet gradually sink, and must finally disappear during the course of one generation." This is a comforting assurance, recollecting that it has been said that pensions in India are immortal. Some other matters, clearly extraordinary and temporary, are noticed; such as the revenue survey, and the regular settlement.

The distribution of receipt and expenditure over a series of years, which must take place in Government accounts, is a matter of much difficulty; and there will never be wanting carpers to allege, that ten crowns set down to one year should properly appear in another. The mode in which the Punjab Commissioners proposed to deal with the subject will be best explained by a quotation.

"In striking the balance between income and expenditure for the past, present, and future, of which one is known and the two others must be estimated, the Board observe that the latter are very much affected by the course of public improvement on which the Government have embarked. Large outlays have been authorized for works in progress, but the precise period of disbursement is uncertain, and may depend upon a host of unforeseen contingencies. Consequently, to throw the whole amount on one year, or to apportion it between particular years, would be a fallacious calculation, and the estimate thus framed would be falsified by the event. The Board have therefore deemed it best to take a cycle of ten years from the commencement of next year, within which term, a broad margin having been allowed for delays, all the works now in hand will probably be completed, and then to distribute the aggregate outlay over the period. Differences will even then be apparent hereafter, but this method will secure the closest approximation practicable.

"The finances of the Punjab, then, will be surveyed from three points of view. Its financial condition will be considered, firstly, for the two first years after annexation; secondly, for the present year (i. e. third year after annexation), and for the ten years following; thirdly, for the future period, commencing from the eleventh year from the present time."

For the first year after annexation, the extraordinary expenditure assumed a formidable appearance, owing to the heavy sums required for the pay and arrears of the Durbar troops. Confiscations and arrears, on the other side, did not raise the extraordinary revenue to anything like an adequate amount to meet the corresponding drain. In some departments, however, the ordinary expenditure was small; and notwithstanding the unpromising appearances above adverted to, the year ended with a surplus of fifty-two lacs, the receipts being a hundred and thirty-four lacs, and the expenditure only eighty-two. In the next year the extraordinary expenditure diminished considerably, the Durbar troops having been nearly all disbanded. This saving, however, was in some degree counteracted by an increase of the charge for pensions, many of the disbanded soldiers receiving such allowances; and in all the civil departments there was some increase. The entire expenditure advanced from eighty-two lacs to eighty-seven; but resumptious aided the land revenue; that from the excise and post-office slightly increased; the collection of arrears and the produce of the sales of confiscated property also contributed to swell the side of receipts; and the result was an excess of revenue over expenditure of sixty-four lacs, the former amounting to a hundred and fifty-one lacs, the latter, as already mentioned, to eighty-seven. There is an increased surplus of twelve lacs over the preceding year; the total surplus for the two years being about 1,160,000*l.* sterling. This, be it remembered, is all hard fact. This firm ground, we are now, however, obliged to quit. What is before us is, and can be, but estimate; estimate framed, as we believe, on very just views. In forming this estimate, the items of receipt and expenditure are gone through, and due allowance made for possible increase or diminution in each. When it is stated that under one head of revenue the report remorselessly cuts off seven lacs, and under another seventeen, the commissioners will not be suspected of any very strong desire to obtain favourable results, no matter by what means. Equal liberality is displayed in treating the expenditure, which it is freely admitted must considerably increase. But not to involve our readers in a dry statement of figures, we may say at once, that the receipts during the period under review, after making all just deductions, are calculated to equal those of the first year after annexation, while the expenditure will be greatly increased; the former being a hundred and thirty-four lacs per annum, the latter a hundred and twelve lacs; the surplus consequently only twenty-two lacs. This for a period of ten years.

Such a prospect, though a good one, is not very brilliant. Looking a little further onward, it is found to brighten. From many causes, some of them inevitable, an increase of receipt and a diminution of expenditure are apparent in the distance, which they tend to cheer and illumine. In ten years, it is expected that the receipts will be not less than a hundred and forty-eight lacs, while the expenditure will have fallen to ninety-seven lacs; thus leaving a surplus—and a very pretty surplus it will be—of fifty lacs, or, to speak in language better understood "on Change," of half a million sterling per annum. Time only can test these calculations; but the moderation which is throughout displayed, attests that they have been framed with discretion and in good faith.

SOLICITOR TO THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.—Henry Smith Lawford, Esq. has been appointed solicitor to the East-India Company vice Edward Lawford, Esq., resigned.

ORIENTAL GAS COMPANY.—The last mail took out the chief engineer of this company, Mr. Dandr , a Frenchman of considerable talent and energy, who has lately completed some difficult works of a similar nature in Stockholm. We understand that the directors have made contracts with eminent manufacturers for the supply of everything requisite to carry out the project, and as they are men of mercantile experience, we trust that the liberality shown by the local Government will be amply repaid by the result of the undertakings. We congratulate the Calcutta community upon the not very distant period when the powerful light of gas will illuminate their "City of Palaces."

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY COMPANY.—The half-yearly meeting of this company was held at the offices, New Broad Street, on the 31st ult., Mr. W. J. Hamilton in the chair. Mr. Nicholson, the superintending director, read the report, of which we give an abstract:—"The report of the directors of this company states that, since the last half-yearly meeting of the company, the second section of the railway has been opened from Tannah to Callian, a distance of twelve miles. This, together with the first section, makes thirty-five miles in operation between Bombay and Callian. In addition to the contract previously reported as having been entered into for the construction of the line from Callian to Shawpoor on the north-east, the directors have contracted for a divergent line on the south-east, from Callian to Narell, proceeding towards Poonah. The works on these two sections were progressing satisfactorily at the date of the latest despatches. With regard to the surveys of the extension lines, these present most favourable results, as far as they had been executed, both in the direction of Calcutta and Madras. The board are not yet in possession of the plans and details; but they are enabled to state that the surveys had been finished in a complete and satisfactory manner, for a distance of 600 miles from Bombay, upon the north-eastern extension, being 450 miles beyond the point in Kandeish where the former surveys were suspended. The works of these surveys are described by the chief resident engineer as of "unexceptionable character, while the curves and gradients are excellent." On the south-eastern extension line, proceeding towards Madras, the surveys were resumed at Poonah, and had been completed as far as Sholapoor; and here also the works are described by the engineer to be of "a very favourable and cheap character." The board of directors have obtained the sanction of the Hon. East-India Company to raise capital by the issue of debenture bonds. The Government of India will be parties with this company in joining subscription to these bonds, for the guarantee both of principal and interest. The capital account shows that 600,203*l.* had been received, including 468,760*l.* in England and 131,443*l.* in Bombay; and 482,452*l.* expended, including 253,010*l.* in England and 229,442*l.* in Bombay, leaving a balance of 117,750*l.* The interest account shows a balance in hand of 656*l.* The following resolution was adopted:—"That this meeting doth hereby authorize the directors, under the provisions of the company's Act of Parliament, 12 & 13 Vict., entitled "An Act to Incorporate the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company, and for other purposes connected therewith," to borrow from time to time any sum or sums of money they may see fit, in accordance with the provisions of the aforesaid Act."

ADVERTISEMENT.

East-India House, 9th August, 1854, and
4th October, 1854.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the annexed code of Regulations for the admission of Candidates at the first Examination, to be held in January next, for the appointment of ASSISTANT-SURGEONS in the service of the East-India Company, has been framed by the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, under the provisions of the Act 16 & 17 Vict. cap. 95, sec. 38.

REGULATIONS FOR THE ADMISSION OF CANDIDATES FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT-SURGEONS IN THE SERVICE OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

All natural-born subjects of her Majesty may be Candidates for admission into the service of the East-India Company as Assistant-Surgeons. They must, however, be between 23 and 28 years of age, and of sound bodily health.

They must subscribe and send in to Dr. Scott, the Physician to the Honourable East-India Company, before the 10th day of December, 1854, a declaration to the following effect:—

"I (Christian and surname at full length), a Candidate for employment as an Assistant-Surgeon in the service of the East-India Company, do hereby declare that I was years of age on the day of last, and that I labour under no constitutional disease or physical disability that can interfere with the due discharge of the duties of a medical officer; and I also attest my readiness to proceed on duty to India within three months of receiving my appointment."

This declaration must be accompanied by the following documents:—

1. Proof of age, either by extract from the register of the parish in which the Candidate was born, or by his own declaration pursuant to the Act 5 & 6 Wm. 4. c. 62.
2. A diploma in surgery, or a degree in medicine, provided an examination in surgery be required for such degree, from some body competent by law to grant or confer such diploma or degree.
3. A certificate of having attended two courses of lectures, of six months each, on the practice of physic, and of having attended for six months the practice and clinical instruction of the physicians at some hospital, containing at least on an average one hundred in-patients; or of having attended one course of lectures of six months, on the practice of physic, and clinical instruction for twelve months.
4. A certificate of having attended for three months the practical instruction given at one of the public asylums for the treatment of the insane.
5. A certificate of having attended for three months one of the institutions, or wards of a hospital, especially devoted to the treatment of ophthalmic disease.
6. A certificate of having attended a course of lectures on midwifery, and of having conducted at least six labours.
7. A certificate of having acquired a practical knowledge of cupping.

Candidates may also, at their option, send in certificates of attendance at any hospitals, or on any courses of lectures, in addition to the above. Attendance on a course of military surgery is recommended.

Candidates producing satisfactory certificates will be admitted to an Examination to be held in January, 1855.

The Examination will include the following subjects:—

1. Surgery in all its departments.
2. Medicine, including the diseases of women and children, therapeutics, pharmacy, and hygiene.
3. Anatomy and physiology, including comparative anatomy.
4. Natural history, including botany and zoology.

The examination will be conducted—

1. By means of written questions and answers.
2. By object examinations and experiments, when the subject admits of such tests.
3. By practical examination at the bedside of the patient, and by dissections and operations on the dead body.
4. By viva-voce examination.

The persons who shall be pronounced by the Examiners to be the best qualified in all respects, shall be appointed to fill the requisite number of appointments as Assistant-Surgeons in the East-India Company's service.

All Assistant-Surgeons are required to subscribe to the Military or Medical, and Medical Retiring Funds, at the Presidencies to which they may be respectively appointed, and to the Military Orphan Society also, if appointed to Bengal.

All Assistant-Surgeons who shall neglect or refuse to proceed to India under the orders of the Court of Directors, within three months from the date of their appointments, will be considered as having forfeited them, unless special circumstances shall justify a departure from this regulation.

Candidates may apply to Dr. Scott, 13, Stratton Street, for further information, if needed.

N.B.—The certificates and notices as to Examination herein contained, apply only to the Examination to be held in January next. Regulations regarding the requirements of Candidates for future Examinations will be issued after the first Examination.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

NOTE, 4TH OCTOBER, 1854.

Candidates who may not have been able to attend the practice of an asylum for the insane, or of an ophthalmic hospital, for three months previous to offering themselves for examination in January, 1855, will not be excluded from examination, but will, if successful in obtaining recommendation for appointments, be required to produce certificates of having attended such practice during the interval between the examination and the time of proceeding to India.

The Board of Examiners of Candidates for the appointments of Assistant-Surgeons in the East-India Company's service, give notice that, on the 8th January, 1855, they will hold Examinations at the East-India House, for the selections of Assistant-Surgeons. The selection will be made according to merit, and it is expected that about thirty appointments will be awarded.

J. D. DICKINSON, Deputy Secretary.

East-India House, 25th October, 1854.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY do hereby give notice,

That a Quarterly General Court of the said Company will be held at their House, in Leadenhall Street, on Wednesday, the 30th December next, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

East-India House, 25th October, 1854.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY do hereby give notice,

That the Transfer Books of the said Company's Stock will be shut on Thursday, the 7th of December next, at 3 o'clock, and opened again on Tuesday, the 16th January, 1855.

That the Warrants for the Dividends on the said Stock, payable on the 6th January, 1855, under the 11th sec. of the Act 3 & 4 Will. 4, cap. 85, will be ready to be delivered on that day.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

East-India House, 15th November, 1854.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY do hereby give notice,

That they have received from their Government at Bombay the under-mentioned Schedules, viz:—

1. Schedule of all Sums of Money, Bonds, and other Securities received by the Administrator-General on account of each Estate remaining under his charge, together with the payments made thereout, and the balances. Prepared up to the 30th June 1854, under Section XI. of Act VII. of 1849, extended to Bombay by Act II. of 1850.

2. Schedule of all Administrations whereof the final balances have been paid to the persons entitled to the same, specifying the amount of such balances, and the persons to whom paid. Prepared from the 1st January to the 30th June, 1854, under Section XI. of Act VII. of 1849, extended to Bombay by Act II. of 1850.

And that the said Schedules are open, at the Secretary's Office at this House, to the inspection of the public.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

CONVEYANCE OF STORES TO INDIA.

East-India House, 15th November, 1854.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY do hereby give notice,

That the Finance and Home Committee will be ready, on Wednesday, the 22nd instant, before 11 o'clock in the forenoon, to receive Tenders for the freight of STORES from England to Madras, in ships of the burthen of 400 tons register and upwards O.M., or 500 tons register and upwards N.M.

The Tenders to be made according to a form which may be had at the Marine Branch of the Secretary's office, in this House, with Conditions annexed. The freight to be payable thus: viz. one-third part in England, and the remaining two-thirds in India, on the delivery of the Stores at Madras, after the rate of exchange of 1s. 11d. per Company's rupee.

N.B.—No Tender will be received unless made and filled in according to the form prescribed.

The Stores consist of about

190 tons of Dead Weight (including a Steam Hammer of 5 tons, and 220 barrels of Stockholm and Coal Tar);

110 tons of Measurable Goods (including Two Portable Steam-engines, the largest of which is 7 ft. 6 in. X 7 ft. X 6 ft. 2 in.).

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

East-India House, 1st November, 1854.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY do hereby give notice,

That the Finance and Home Committee of the said Company will be ready, on Tuesday, the 21st November, to receive written proposals from persons willing to enter into an engagement to serve them, for a period of not less than five years, in the capacity of MASTER BLACKSMITH in the Company's Dockyard at Bombay.

The Proposals must be in the handwriting of the parties themselves applying, and must specify names, ages, past and present employment, and must either inclose certificates of good conduct and qualification, or must give proper reference for such testimonials.

Copies of the terms and conditions of the engagement to be entered into by the party selected, may be had upon application at the Marine Branch of the Secretary's Office in this House.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

Allen's Maps of India, &c.

DRAWN BY JOHN WALKER,

Geographer to the East-India Company.

A New Map of India;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorates, and the Position and Boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

*. The object kept in view in compiling this Map, has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all Stations—Civil and Military—are inserted, as well as those of all Towns and places of note, likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various Districts and Collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The Railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for Reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been shunned.

A General Map of India;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Hon. East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

Map of India;

From the most recent authorities. On two sheets—Size, 2 ft. 10 in. wide 3 ft. 3 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 1s.

Map of the Routes in India;

With Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this Map are given the whole of the Military and Civil Stations, together with the principal Towns, the villages being omitted so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies.

A Map of the Western Provinces of Hindoostan;

The Punjab, Cabool, Sinde, Bhawalpore, &c.; including all the States between Candahar and Allahabad. On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 2 in. high. 30s.; or on cloth, in a case, £2; or on rollers, and varnished, £2. 10s.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

BURMAH figures again in Indian politics in a certain way. The Ava embassy, of which we have heard so much, has arrived at Rangoon. Whether it would ever get any further seems a matter of doubt, or rather a matter of no doubt, if the account received be correct. It is said that the king of Ava refuses to address the Governor-General by any other title than that of Commissioner of Bengal, which of course will not be accepted ; and the members of the embassy, if they and their ruler be stiff, will therefore go back "as wise as they came." An unsatisfactory letter from the king of Ava had been returned for correction, but his majesty had only said he was sorry, but had not made the necessary correction. There appears to be some discussion going on with Calcutta, the result of which will have to be communicated to Ava ; and till that has been done, there will be no move. We expect the game will end in a stale mate. One of the papers contains a rumour of another revolution at Ava, headed by the king's uncle ; but we have had so much of this sort of talk, that we attach no importance to it. It is also reported that Meah Toon has been doing a little treason, and has been beheaded.

The Delhi Gazette, on the authority of its correspondent at Bokhara, reports that some English officers had reached Khiva by way of Persia—with what object was unknown. This piece of information is succeeded by the following, which we extract :—

“ The badshah of Kokan, after collecting a force of 50,000 men, went to meet the Russians, and encountered them at a place called Imam Musjid. He was defeated with great loss, and, what is worse, the Russians are gaining the hearts of the people by giving surgical aid to the wounded, whom, when cured, they dismiss to their homes with presents of small silver coins for their expenses by the way. After his victory, the Russian general addressed letters to the kings of Bokhara and Kokan. He said it was a pity the latter had taken the trouble to come out and attack him, as he had intended to honour his majesty with a visit, either before the cold weather set in or early in the spring. He added that a reinforcement of nine ‘ kumpooos ’ (regiments or brigades) was about to join him from the Russian camp, which is situated seven or eight miles from Khiva. The Russians are provided with strange machines of crystal (billour), and also with pipes, through which they draw water from the Durya-i-Sir (Iaxartes). They are also advancing in the direction of Yarkund. In fact, the whole of Turkistan is in a most unsettled state. The king of Bokhara leans towards the Russians, and is doing all he can to promote their interests in Mawuroolnahur. The Bokhara merchants have written to their agents at Cabul to stop their investments, and the caravans are accordingly returning from Bameean.

are accordingly returning from Bameean. The presence of English officers at Kibiya is not easily reconciled with the presence of a Russian camp in the neighbourhood; but there is no saying where adventurous Saxons will not turn up in these stirring times. At any rate, it is about the last circumstance that an Asiatic would think of inventing. The story about the pines for the conveyance of water is a curious one. Our Cabul correspondent mentioned several months ago, that the advance of the Russians across the desert near Khiva had been aided by these iron pipes. The use of some such portable aqueduct in a friendly country may be easily imagined, but to rely upon it in an enemy's country would be a different matter. It must be remembered, however, that the Russians are said to have negotiated their way through Khiva and Bokhara, not fought it; and we may suppose that they have occasionally made use of hose to supply their camp with water. The crystal machine must explain itself."

The letter of the Cabul correspondent of the Delhi Gazette is not without interest: we have room here only for the following.

"Our Cabul correspondent, in a letter dated the 25th ultimo, fulfils his promise of giving an account of the interview which lately took place between Major Edwardes and the Nazir Khairullah. 'The particulars of this conversation were reported to the Ameer at a secret conference by Mooftee Gholam Hyder, a confidential servant of the Nazir. This person (who appears to have been present at the interview with Major Edwardes) says that the conversation began on the Nazir's part by a statement of his claims on the British Government, but speedily changed to the mention of Afghan politics. The Nazir began to eulogize Dost Mahomed's administration of the affairs of Cabul, and then dwelt on his relations with the neighbouring chiefs of Khorasan and Turkistan, the attention of the Commissioner being evidently awakened by the mention of this subject, all of which was explained to him in a manner becoming the dignity of the Ameer.

"Major Edwardes replied that as to the establishment of relations with Cabul, the British Government would find it difficult to forget the recent conduct of the Ameer in invading the Punjab during the late war.

"The Nazir assured him in reply, that the Ameer never wished to join the Sikhs against the British, who had treated him with such marked favour when he was their prisoner in India. He had indeed made a hostile demonstration during the Punjab war, but it was only to avert his own destruction that he did so, at the instigation of his relatives, whom he dared not then resist. But he was now willing to convince the English of his friendship, and all he asked was that they would not treat him as they had done the Ameer of Sindh, the Sirdars of the Punjab, and the rulers of other native states. The subjugation of these states by the English in the face of all treaties had brought British faith into question throughout Central Asia, all the rulers of which were afraid of suffering the same fate some day.

"The Commissioner replied that the British had not taken Sindh and the Punjab to satisfy their ambition. They had been forced to do so by the internal commotions of these countries, and by the necessity of providing for the security of their own frontier. If the Ameer would continue faithful to a treaty, he need not fear that it would be broken by the English, who have too much territory of their own to covet a poor country like Afghanistan, which would not pay the expenses of an invasion.

"The Nazir then said that if the British wished to secure the Dost as a faithful friend, they should give him pecuniary aid towards opposing the intrigues of Persia and Russia.

"On which the Commissioner said that there would be ample time to do this when the two powers in question made any movement in the direction of Afghanistan.

"But," said the Nazir, 'suppose that in the mean time Persia and Russia offer the Ameer money to join them against you, how can you expect him to refuse, surrounded as he is by his brothers and other chiefs, to all of whom the name of the British is hateful?'

"This puzzled Major Edwardes, who after some hesitation told the Nazir that it was a very important and delicate question, and that it must be referred to the Governor-General. And here ended the conference between Major Edwardes and the Nazir Khairullah, as reported by Mooftee Gholam Hyder to Dost Mahomed and his son Sirdar Mahomed Azem Khan.

"The Ameer listened to all this with great attention, and his son Mahomed Azem, who seems to have a high opinion of the Saheb at Peshawar, seconded the proposal of the Mooftee, that he, the Mooftee, should write a letter to Nazir Khairullah, repeating the assurances of the Dost's evidence to attach himself to the British. This was to accompany Mahomed Azem Khan's letter to Major Edwardes. The Ameer also prepared a letter of ceremony (Moorastah) to be sent to the Governor-General, in accordance with the kind advice of Major Edwardes. The messengers with these letters have left for Peshawar, and you may rely on a speedy understanding between the two high contracting powers.

"But there are still great difficulties in the way. The Ameer exposes his life to danger by allying himself with the English, Sirdar Sooltan Mahomed (ex-governor of Peshawar), Sirdar Peer Mahomed, the sons of the priest Meervaiz, and other influential chiefs, have already prepared to send their families to Candahar. On hearing this, the Ameer sent for Sultan Mahomed, and assured him, in the presence of several other of the malcontents, that he would form no alliance with the British unless he, Sultan Mahomed, was permitted to share all its advantages, and indeed, unless the British pledged themselves to forget all the past, and treat all the people of Afghanistan as friends and the subjects of an ally.

"When the Persian ambassador was here, the Dost used to invite him daily to witness the inspection of troops in the garden. After this had gone on for some days, the Ameer had his marching tent pitched, and informed the ambassador that it was his intention to go to Kelat. He added that the Shah of Persia had no right to interfere in the domestic politics of Afghanistan, and that even were it otherwise, the fort of Kelat was not the possession of his brothers, the Candahar chiefs, in whose favour the king of Persia interested himself so strongly, but was merely a place of shelter to Toorkes and Hootuk robbers, who lived by plundering the caravans. On that account he, the Dost, had seized the fort, and meant to keep it. A letter to the same effect was given to the Persian ambassador, who on his departure received a rich dress of honour, of the value of Rs. 15,000, the cost of which was paid by the sirdars Sooltan Mahomed Khan, Ghoolam Haider Khan, and Mahomed Osman Khan.

"You may remember Sayud Mahomed Khan, whom Sir Alexander Burnes used to call 'Jan Fishan Khan,' and who is now residing at Sirdhana, near Meerut, on a liberal pension, granted him on the supposition that he was obliged to leave Cabul because his life was in danger on account of his services to the British, whereas the real cause of his departure was a family quarrel. Well, some days ago, one or two of Jan Fishan's relations came here from India on a secret visit to their friends, remaining concealed by day in a house in Morad Khane, and only venturing out by night. In spite of this precaution they were recognized when out one night on the Phool-i-kishte, by the servants of one Meer Shekh, an enemy of Jan Fishan's. An encounter took place, in which two men were killed, and a number wounded on both sides. A report of the affair reached the Ameer next morning, with the false story invented by some evil man, that the men had been sent from Meerut by Jan Fishan to murder the Dost. On this Sirdar Sultan Mahomed caused search to be made for the strangers, but they had escaped. The man in whose house they had concealed themselves, was apprehended and blown from a gun."

The Presidencies afford nothing; at all of them a dead calm appears to prevail, except so far as it is broken by a little private quarrelling, as per last.

In the general absence of intelligence, we turn to China for aid; but China is not less stupid than the rest of the Eastern world. The following is about the best bit we can find.

"Ningpo is quiet, but how long the mandarins can ward off the coming blow is very uncertain. An immense number of junks block up the mouths of the river off Chinhae, and also in the river off the city of Nangpo,—partly unable to dispose of their cargoes, but more generally deterred by fear of pirates from venturing out to sea. The whole country is out of joint, and things must become much worse before they are likely to get better. The piratical fleet from the south, which was in the employ of the Taoutae Samqua for conquering the rebels at Shanghai, is now assembled in great force in the Chusan group, attacking and destroying, without mercy or distinction, every craft, whether native or European, which comes within its reach. Great fears are entertained of their being emboldened to attack Ningpo; and in that case the city would be not unlikely to fall into their hands. Apak, the noted pirate chief, is in Ningpo, and openly levies black mail. The English vice-consul has written urgent communications to the senior naval officer in command at Shanghai, representing the danger of the city, and the importance of despatching a vessel of war in search of the pirates. This state of things shows to what straits the Chinese Government is reduced, when it calls to its aid against its own rebellious subjects a band of pirates who one month are the paid mercenaries of his Imperial Majesty, and the next month may become a buccaneering squadron dealing destruction and rapine upon the inoffensive and defenceless population along the coast."

Various controversies, and various fierce ones, have been waged in this country. "Paper against Gold," and "Gold against Paper." At Pekin, both seem to be superseded by another commodity of great and wide-spread utility, but not ordinarily applied (in modern times at least) to the fabrication of coin, or its representative. Let the following, from the North China Herald, speak for itself:—

"Various references are made to iron money, which it appears has been cast at Pekin to relieve the necessities of government."

No one supposed the present state of China to exemplify the golden, or even the silver age. Iron, it appears, is its characteristic. If a man goes to receive a small sum of money, he must take a wheelbarrow to carry it home; if a large one, a waggon. And here we leave the iron age.

BURMAH.

RANGOON.

The following is from our Rangoon correspondent, dated October 9, 1854:—

"The long-expected embassy from the court of Ava has at last arrived. On the evening of Thursday the 5th, the Mahamuddy, with the Sutledge in tow, hove in sight. The Burman flag of truce was flying. The evening was particularly fine; but the embassy, consisting of Moung Pa Tha, or the Dallawoon, the senior envoy, one renegade Armenian dressed as a Burmese, called Kallahwoon, with four others of inferior rank, did not land till next morning. No sooner was it known that the ambassadors were on board, than our commissioner dispatched Captain Sparks, the deputy-collector, with our worthy old citizen Edwards, to congratulate them. At 6 p.m. the steamer parted company with the flat, which neared the wharf.

"On the morning of the 6th, at a quarter to nine, the ambassadors landed. They were preceded by a great display of presents intended for the queen, consisting of about two dozen small boxes, said to contain precious stones, and gold and silver articles; another couple of dozens of a larger size, said to contain curiosities of extensive value. Then followed about three dozen boxes of the meat-safe fashion. These are supposed to contain wonders of Burman art, marble statues, ivory-boxes, and elephant-tusks. There were also ten ponies. On the whole, the presents do not exceed the value of two lacs of rupees.

"A little before the ambassadors landed, the Nemesis fired a salute of thirteen guns, and they were escorted by a guard of honour to the house intended for them. This morning everything was as bad, as it was before good. They were furnished with an old gharry of the sort which you get on hire at Calcutta for two rupees a day, and an old rickety buggy; but these were the best in Rangoon, and perhaps the only ones to be got. The sight was more pitiful than pleasing, setting aside the display of a dozen umbrellas, as the Dallawoon wore a most humiliated aspect. His dress was simple and neat. He wore no jewels except the badge of his rank. He was received courteously by Captain Sparks, but the commissioner refused to see him till the Governor-General's orders were known.

"They have arrived just in the nick of time, as Major Phayre, in order to keep alive the spirit of the community during the holidays, opened out for public show the Burmese collection for the French Exhibition. There are some very beautiful articles, but I will not describe them, as I dare say they will be exhibited in Calcutta also before they are finally sent off. The boat-races, the wrestling-matches, and other amusements will serve to wile away our idle hours. Our guests do not condescend to visit any of our amusements!

"The news of importance which can be gathered regarding the embassy is, that it comes to sue for a treaty, to enter into a bond of friendship with the British, and pray for the restoration of some portion of territory taken during the war! The ambassadors seem to have a great desire to impress on our minds the fact that there is no civil dissension at Ava, and that everything there is quiet; that Meah Toon is in chains with the late governor of Rangoon, for creating a disturbance among the people; and that the King of the White Elephants is peaceably disposed. This may be, but the grand question is, whether we can treat with an usurper? for what more is the present king of Ava? It is true we treat with the representative of the nation, but that nation is divided: one party is for peace, and the other for war; and as soon as the latter prevails over the former, the treaty will be broken. It becomes our Government to consider well the position of those with whom we treat, and how we keep our faith as friends with them, for it is natural for the king to expect, in case of a civil war in his kingdom, our interference to preserve his throne. The amount of our national debt is large enough, and it would be impolitic on the part of our rulers to increase it."—Hurkaru.

THE AVA EMBASSY.

It appears that the Ava embassy is not after all a myth, as we were led to suppose from the conflicting stories that were current in respect to it. We are now able to state, from authentic information, that at the date the last steamer came away, the envoy and retinue were corporeally present in Rangoon, and that the same was disagreeably made known to the Rangoon inhabitants within earshot by the most inharmonious mingling of discordant sounds, which in Ava is called music, and to which it appears the Golden Foot has been accustomed to dance. On the 4th instant the embassy reached Rangoon, and has at its head the old Dulla chief, who, we are told, has met with favourable gales in the court of Ava, and now holds the important posts of Keeper of the Royal Palace and Councillor in Chief to the King. For the present the embassy is not officially recognized by Capt. Phayre, in consequence of some want of etiquette on the part of the envoy in styling the Most Noble the Marquis of Dalhousie, K.T., Governor-General of India, and so forth, as plain "Commissioner of Bengal;" for which breach of decorous formality the embassy is doomed to be made to eat its leak, make the amende honorable in good Burmese, and in such manner and form as Lord Dalhousie himself shall direct, for which a reference has been made to his lordship. In the mean time the embassy and all appertaining thereto has been stowed away in a bamboo hut standing upon stilts, after the fashion of Burmese huts.

The embassy has brought down thirty-one bales, containing, we dare say, costly peace-offerings, besides eight beautiful ponies, which are all intended to be presented to the Governor-General. It has also come provided with a very handsome zone for the Queen. Of course these rich and rare presentations are to be made on the sound quid pro quo principle of Oriental diplomacy; and the return accordingly desired by the Golden Foot, is that the town of Man Yan, situated below Meaday, be given up, and if a small river steamer or so were thrown into the bargain, the Lord of the Golden Umbrellas would be pleased all the better for it.

Our informant adds that Meah Toon has at length met with his deserts, for, not content with playing bandit and patriot by turns, he attempted the dangerous game of treason in the court of Ava, by endeavouring to foment a sedition against the king's person, for which he was beheaded.—Hurkaru.

BENGAL.

HOW OUR RAILWAY PAYS.

Philosophers have doubted whether content be a virtue or a vice. It is alleged on the one hand, that as happiness is the end of life, to be content is to secure that end. It is argued on the other, that as content implies the absence of a wish to advance, to be contented is to be simply idle. The shareholders of the East-Indian Railway accept both definitions. They are very happy, and they are very lazy. Content with their guaranteed dividend they permit their directors to work or sleep at their own good pleasure, in happy unconsciousness that anything remains to be done. This quiescence, while it leaves the directors independent, is not without its evils, and the account we publish below may remove it as completely as a great disaster. The table proves beyond all question that the contentment of the shareholders is misplaced, that their guarantee was scarcely required, and that with a little more energy they may enjoy a double dividend. The line, they will remember, was opened on 15th August to Hooghly, and on the 1st September to Pundooah. It is only 42 miles long, and though it runs through a succession of tenth-rate towns, it has but one terminus. There is, we believe, a place called Pundooah, but it is no bigger than the larger villages scattered over the country, and the nearest town to the northward is Rajmehal, more than a hundred miles away. To English eyes the line appears to begin in a squalid suburb, and to end nowhere. Moreover, the traffic has been conducted under every species of disadvantage. The line for half its length is in direct competition with the river. Owing to some unavoidable delays, some wrecks, and not a little tardiness at home, the appliances at the last moment were found to be defective. The stations were scarcely built, the locomotives were deficient in number, the carriages could not convey half the passengers, and the employés had yet to learn the virtue of a rigid discipline. No goods traffic could be expected, for the bullock carts could not stop at Pundooah, and, according to native ideas, it was as cheap to go loaded as empty to Calcutta. These disadvantages, and many more, mattered nothing to the returns. The swollen passenger traffic, the existence of which has been so often pointed out in these columns, made up for every deficiency, and will yet pay for every expense.

Estimating the cost at 8,000*l.* a mile, and allowing for the Sunday traffic which will commence immediately, we have a return from passenger traffic alone of ten per cent. per annum. The expenses will scarcely be greater than in Bombay; and we have thus at once a net divisible receipt of nearly six per cent. This, we cannot too often repeat, arises entirely from passengers, most of whom are takers of third-class tickets. The list, up to the 23rd September, is,— Passengers.

That is, the railway already, not counting the holiday weeks, carries at the rate of 200,000 third-class passengers a year. These passengers, moreover, are exclusive of the very lowest order of travellers. They are chiefly little shopkeepers, clerks, and the rest of the poor but respectable class who throng in the great cities of the East. When the railway is extended further, when it ceases to feel the competition of the river, when it overcomes the temptation to walk on foot, when it is the sole means of conveyance, and when it has begun to receive the goods-traffic which turns the Grand Trunk Road into a perpetual vista of carts, the guaranteed interest will be considered a bagatelle scarcely worthy the attention of the city. As regards the passenger traffic, our prophecy can be illustrated by what has already occurred. The rail up to Hooghly runs parallel with the river. Between that point and Pundooah, however, there is a distance of twenty miles, which must be crossed on foot. A native, though loath to spend, is sensitive to his personal comfort, and the number of third-class passengers was doubled in a day. It is of course easy to say that much of this traffic is the result of excitement, and that it will decrease as the novelty wears off. We believe the result will prove the fallacy of these anticipations. The numbers who travel simply for the excitement, cannot equal the number who will acquire a habit of travelling simply from the ease with which they can reach the presidency. It is possible that, as the line recedes from Calcutta, the numbers may decrease, but the deficiency will disappear as soon as the line by reaching Rajmehal begins, in American phrase, to "tap" the eastern districts.—Friend of India.

THE REVENUE SURVEY OF BENGAL.

We recently referred to that vastness of conception which sometimes renders the Indian public blind to the progress of the country. Perhaps we can find no better illustration of the disease than the little attention paid to the survey. If a congress of sovereigns agreed to survey Europe from Warsaw to Paris, and from Archangel to Trieste, marking every parish boundary, and defining the limits of every estate, all Europe would resound with the praise of an "enterprise worthy of the nineteenth century." The Government of India, amidst greater difficulties, has undertaken a work of equal magnitude, and no man turns his head to mark its progress. It advances but slowly in Bengal, and it has become a question whether important changes are not required to accelerate and simplify its operations.

The system at present in force was in part elaborated in the north-west. The peculiar tenour of those provinces is based upon the village, and the village or mousah became the basis of the survey. It was conducted on a principle believed, perhaps accurately, to combine all the advantages of local knowledge with all the advantages derivable from scientific accuracy. The first survey was conducted by a revenue officer, who made what was usually called an eye sketch of the village boundaries, and of the sub-divisions of property within them. This eye sketch was practically a map, defining boundaries as the villagers believed them to exist, very rough, but sufficient for the guidance of the subsequent survey. The latter, conducted by scientific officers, made every definition exact, and rendered disputes as to the boundaries of a village simply impossible. Moreover, as villages in the north-west are also estates, it destroyed all ground of dispute as to the division of landed property. The number of affrays immediately diminished, and from that time to this, the survey has been the great safeguard of property, and a most valuable guide to the civil tribunals.

The same system succeeded in Behar, but it broke down in Bengal. The eye sketch, either from the difficulties of the country, the reluctance of the people to co-operate, or the carelessness of the officials concerned, proved a most inaccurate guide. The maps thus produced were worth just nothing at all. It was frequently found necessary to go over the work again, and when at last the survey of entire zillahs was proved to be worthless, the necessity of reform was fully admitted. The reform was completed. The ameens were instructed in the use of the chain and compass, and the eye sketch became at once a quasi scientific survey. In the course of a few months the reform produced a result which certainly had never been expected, and possibly had never been desired. The native employés, with the usual aptitude of natives for all pursuits of formula and routine, became really expert surveyors. Their maps were not only not rough, but absolutely perfect. So clear indeed were they, that though the native inability to understand a map amounts to a national peculiarity, native landholders were eager to purchase them at almost any price. The scientific surveyors who followed them found that over entire districts there was nothing to correct. Thousands of villages were defined as accurately as they themselves were able to accomplish, and the scientific survey, instead of a supplementary work, became a mere check upon the original performance. The only material difference was that the revenue survey defined the estate as well as the village and pergunnah, and the scientific survey left the estate out. In short, the system appears to the surveyor, the statist, and the geographer to be absolutely perfect.

To the eye of the statesman it has, however, some drawbacks, which diminish its excellence in no slight degree. To men who look to a practical result for every effort, it appears possible to buy perfection at somewhat too high a cost both of time and money. Men may admire a palace, but if they want to live in it, they would prefer its completion in less than half a century, and at an expense not greatly beyond their means of payment. Looked at from this very necessary point of view, the survey, it is admitted, appears imperfect. It advances very slowly, and it costs very much. Every additional improvement costs so much additional money, and occupies so much additional time. The expenditure has increased to more than fifty per cent. above the north-west average. The survey consumes already some 35,000*l.* a year, and it will not be finished in the regulation districts for at least another decade. Indeed, if the Saugor territories are to be included, and obstacles continue to increase, the official calculation of seventeen years will most certainly not prove an exaggeration. It has become therefore an important question, whether equal advantages might not be obtained by a swifter and less expensive process. That point has been taken up by Government, and is now the subject of discussion.

The first point on which the reform is considered possible is in the extent of the object to be attained. The two surveys between them define the limits of every zillah, every pergunnah, every estate, and every village. The boundary of the zillah may be important, for it will enable government to limit certain jurisdictions, at present hopelessly confused. The boundaries of the estate certainly are important, first because their definition prevents quarrels, and secures the tenure of landed property; and secondly, because it simplifies the collection of the government revenue. But what is the object of giving boundaries to pergunnahs and villages? In the north-west, a village and an estate, a mousah and a mehal, are almost convertible terms, and there was an obvious utility in defining them. But in Bengal, a village is only a phrase, a geographical definition, and has no more connection with landed property than the parish boundaries have in England. An estate may comprise any number of villages, and one village may contain bits of any number of estates. The demarcation of their boundaries is no benefit to the government, for if the estate is sold, the villages are included in it, or the little bit which covers part of the mousah is sold without reference to the remainder. It does not benefit the people, who care only for the boundaries of property, and not of geographical expressions. As for the pergunnah, it does not exist at all. There was once a revenue division of that name, as in England there once were "hundreds," but at present it is a mere phrase. Thus in Moorshedabad, there is one village, half of which is in one pergunnah, and the other half is made up of bits of twenty-nine other pergunnahs. Geographical fictions of this kind can be of no use for revenue purposes, yet the marking out these boundaries is one great cause of delay. If the mehal only were marked out, the survey might march at double speed, and be completed in four years. Or rather it would march but for another cause of delay. It will have been perceived that all the boundaries, from villages upwards, are surveyed twice over. They are mapped by the revenue survey, and re-mapped by the scientific survey. The only exception is the estate, which is defined only once. We have therefore the anomaly, that in a revenue survey, the revenue division, i.e. the Mehal, is surveyed only once, by the least competent persons; and the geographical division is surveyed twice, and by the most competent persons. Moreover, the two surveys being dependent on each other, they must move together. The revenue officer must not proceed too slowly, or his work will not be ready for the scientific department; and he must not proceed too fast, or the two will soon be disconnected. Practically, the revenue officer gets on as fast as he can, and then wastes his time till his superior catches him up. This causes a great loss of time, not rendered more pleasant by the fact that the scientific surveyor corrects nothing, for the first survey is admitted to be perfect. In view of all these facts, of the expense, and the delay, the clashing of authority, and the inutilty of the result, it appears to the reformers doubtful whether the demarcation by estates would not be sufficient, and whether those Siamese twins, the revenue and topographical surveys, might not be disunited to the advantage of both.

The friends of the present system, who include all the scientific surveyors, demur. They argue in the first place that as regards the agency, the cause is overlooked in the effect. The revenue survey is perfect, but only because the Ameens know that the scientific survey will detect and check any aberrations. The second demarcation may be merely a check, as the second chronometer in a ship may be merely a check, but it is just as often a corrective. To send the Ameens alone, is to give them a license to settle boundaries just as they see fit, and therefore to take any bribes offered for settling them in some method pleasing to the proprietor. As for the village demarcations they are indispensable. There must in a good survey be some minute sub-division, and the mouzah is the best. It is old, it is popular, it is irremovable by changes of tenure, and it is the one adopted in the remainder of India. To adopt square blocks of territory,—the suggested alternative,—is to diminish the minuteness of the survey by as much as the block exceeds the village, and in a topographical survey, minuteness and perfection are synonymous.

To this it is replied, that the boundaries of estates, which the Ameens might be tempted to alter, are not checked at all. The check applies only to the village boundaries, which no one, if he had the power, would exert himself to alter. If it is wanted, it is applied in the wrong place, and as the present system is allowed by the surveyors to be perfect, the presumption is it is not wanted at all. As for the village being necessary as a geographical basis, even if it were so, why should the revenue survey be delayed by a topographical necessity? Thus the question remains. We believe that further information of a practical kind is yet required, and have therefore placed the arguments before the public without an attempt at a decision.—Friend of India.

PUBLIC WORKS.

The last despatch of the Court of Directors on the subject of public works is a strange document, and written obviously rather for the English public than for the Indian Governments. To the uninitiated it must appear very benevolent, but singularly vague; nothing is definitively settled; great works are to be commenced when the reports have been received, when the Government has decided on them, when supervision has been provided, and when estimate, decision, and plan for superintendence have been sanctioned in England. The long delay in undertaking such works is ascribed to a "variety of circumstances." The new-born energy is attributed to a plethora of cash, which has been recognized for some years; the old stock phrases are employed as if they expressed original ideas. We have "works calculated to promote the interests of the Government and the welfare of the people," works "calculated to promote in the largest degree the development of the condition of the people," and works for "the general welfare of the community," all reiterated in the first few paragraphs. In short, we have at every step proofs that the home authorities have adopted a new policy, which they cannot defend without at the same time condemning their previous inertia.

In the midst of these philanthropic truisms, however, there is manifestly a great purpose, and a business-like provision for its attainment. We have something distinct at last. The Government will commence gigantic undertakings to an extent not exceeding seven millions sterling. It will maintain those undertakings when complete out of the general revenue. That is the real meaning of the despatch, and it is a meaning which may be permitted to justify its verbiage, and redeem its vagueness. It shows that the influence of new ideas has at last been acknowledged, and that they are at last to be carried into effective action. Enormous funds are no longer to be locked up in local treasuries, nor is every reformer to be silenced by an allusion to the "state of the finances." The accumulations of past years are to be spent on the improvement of the estate, and the tenantry may well forgive the manner in which the pledge has been conveyed.

We must not, however, in our gratification at this change, be tempted to forget the practical difficulties of the subject. In England, when the funds are forthcoming, the object may be considered accomplished. In India, we have yet to decide on the work to be attempted, and the agency to which its completion is ultimately to be entrusted. The phrase "public works," conveys as yet no very definite idea, and the agency has not only to be chosen but created.

1. As to the works to be performed. We submit that for the present all our resources should be devoted to undertakings, which will be speedily and certainly remunerative. They are sufficiently extensive to demand every rupee, and it is by their aid alone that we can hope to complete the projects which will still remain to be accomplished. The improvement of our cities is an excellent object, but architectural beauty is not remunerative to the builder. The creation of museums, college buildings, and expenses on brick and mortar generally, are worthy of all praise, but the remunerative works demand our first attention, and not until they are completed should we give way either to artists or dilettanti. We would confine the efforts of the department to opening new means of communication, the increase of the revenue by new works of irrigation, and the development of the external commerce by the improvement of our harbours. Railways will pay. The account published in another column proves that they can be made remunerative, that the people of India will travel, and that the low rates are compensated by the number of those who pay them. Common roads, with a little legislative skill, may also be made to pay, and at all events they increase the revenue of the land through which they pass. Works of irrigation have always paid, and the formation of new harbours, even if there is no direct addition to the custom receipts, adds to the wealth of the revenue paying peasantry. And here for the present we would stop. Those who suggest the expenditure of four millions sterling on Calcutta, or of a free gift of water-works to the people of Bombay, appear to us to see only a portion of the question. Those works cannot be productive, and the revenue is not in a condition to bear the expense of unproductive works. Lord Dalhousie has increased the cash balances, has carried us through two great wars without addition to the debt, and has reduced the official rate of interest for money. Not even his skill, however, can control the whole of Asia, or remove at once the effects of the blunders of many of his predecessors. The opium revenue, even if ultimately secure, must for the present undergo some material diminution. A vast increase of production has been checked by a decrease in the demand, and the price may yet fall to a level which will confound the expectations of Sir Charles Wood.

The time for a settlement in the north-west is drawing on, and that settlement, it is admitted, must be accompanied by reductions. The assessment in Madras is about to be lowered, and it may be years before the new cultivation compensates for the reductions on the former area. Meanwhile we have already a deficit, produced entirely by increase in expenditure, the salaries of the native judiciary must be increased, the European agency must be enlarged, and we must submit for the moment to the operation of the silent but irresistible tendency to expense. Let us not be misunderstood. We do not mean that the revenue will not be equal to all demands. We believe not only in its elasticity but in the existence of resources which we have never yet attempted to draw forth. Nor do we mean at all unremunerative improvement should be laid aside. We would foster all such undertakings so long as the revenue is competent to afford them. But we do mean that some of the expectations of the public are irrational, and that great unproductive works, such as the four millions for Calcutta would create, ought to be postponed.

There is one great exception to this rule, but its defence rests upon entirely different grounds. We allude to the creation of roads and bridges in Bengal. They will scarcely pay under the perpetual settlement, but the empire owes to this province a debt, the magnitude of which it might be difficult to exaggerate. It has for years been the most profitable and the most neglected of our provinces. It has borne half the general expenditure, and received scarcely anything in return. Its time has now arrived, and we admit that it is entitled to improvements which can produce but an indirect return.

2. The agency by which these seven millions are to be expended. This has become a question even more pressing than the provision of the funds. The Government needs at once an adviser and an agency. If it is to obtain the value of its outlay, that outlay must be directed by sound engineering skill. A merely practical man would fail in a new country, and with new tools; a mere theorist would disgust the public, and waste its resources on projects which would produce only a reputation for himself. The Government requires a man who shall be what Visconti has been to Napoleon, able to tunnel the Alps, to connect Paris with the sea, or to amuse the saunterers of the capital with a new boulevard. One half the delay, and indecision of the Government on such points has arisen from the want of an adviser in whom it can confide.

The present Governor-General, it is true, is an admirable referee, but he only professes to comprehend plans, not to design them, and would have always to contend with the not unnatural jealousy of "practical engineers." A man is wanted, not only of the highest practical skill, but with a reputation which shall silence cavillers, and we believe this requisite, like everything else, may be purchased for money. It would be cheaper for the Government to pay a Visconti the salary of two members of council, to make his fortune in fact, than to expend seven millions sterling without his aid. For the rest, the opinion of the public has long since been proclaimed. The military engineers do their work well, but the service is overloaded, and cannot be adequately increased. We cannot wait for a crop of native engineers, and if we are to have Europeans, we must have them trained specially to work, of which in England they cannot form even a conception. It is the rock of superintendence which requires to be removed, and if the home authorities will not sanction a service of civil engineers, their philanthropic minute will remain, like the merit fostering order, a magnificent dead letter.—Friend of India.

COLONEL MARKHAM AND SIR W. GOMM.

The topic of the day in the north-west appears to be the conduct of the Adjutant-General of Queen's troops. Stripped of the indignant rhetoric of the narrators, the facts of the case appear to stand thus. Lieut. Cumming, of H. M.'s 32nd, had received permission to sell out, and on his way to Calcutta accepted an invitation to play cricket with the Simlah Club. Colonel Markham is a member of that club, and colonel of the 32nd, and he ordered Lieutenant Cumming off the ground. Mr. Cumming remonstrated, and after an altercation not creditable to the self-control of either disputant, gave his late superior the lie direct. Colonel Markham, according to newspaper accounts, immediately cancelled his papers, sent an express to recall the official permission, ordered Mr. Cumming to join his regiment, and without waiting to see if he obeyed, sent an armed party to compel his obedience. This is the real pith of an affair which, occurring in a dull season, at a dull station, has been repeated by a dozen pens, and has brought upon Colonel Markham the condemnation of almost every journalist in India.

It appears to us that much of this censure has fallen upon the wrong shoulders. If Mr. Cumming were still a soldier, when he called his superior a liar, he committed a gross breach of discipline, not to be excused by any provocation. In that case Colonel Markham behaved most creditably in refusing "satisfaction," and appealing at once to military law. It is on the assumption that his opponent was not a soldier, and on that only, that Colonel Markham can be condemned for anything but a harsh exercise of an undoubted discretion.

But it appears certain that this assumption is correct, that Mr. Cumming had received permission to sell, and that Colonel Markham had no right, by the custom of the army, to cancel that permission. It must be remembered that Colonel Markham never did anything of the kind. He can only have influenced the commander-in-chief to issue such an order, and it is on his superior, and not on himself, that the public censure ought to fall. Colonel Markham may really have believed the act a breach of discipline, and we can forgive a hot-tempered but gallant officer, exasperated by a grave insult, for taking even a perverted view of that military question. The conduct of Sir W. Gomm admits of no such excuse. He had no ground for personal irritation. His duty in such a case was almost judicial, to calm the not unnatural anger of his subordinate, to decide without reference to personal exasperation, and to carry out military law, without reference to Mr. Cumming's previous history. This, if the story is correctly narrated, he has failed to do. The papers could not be cancelled without his consent, or the court-marshal ordered without his signature. The friends of the commander-in-chief have pointed to his kindly internal administration of the army, as an apology for many of his deficiencies. If the case of Lieut. Cumming has been correctly told, even this poor excuse must be abandoned.—Friend of India.

OUDE.

There is one argument against the annexation of Oude which requires to be boldly faced. It is none the less powerful, because it is never proclaimed. It does not appear in state papers, it is not heard from the lips of statesmen, and it could not be produced in Parliament, but it delays the annexation. The anarchy of Oude, it is said, secures the order of India. The misgovernment of that country has been carried to the point where social life ceases to exist. There is no protection for the just, and no punishment for the wicked, no chance of security from the police, and no hope of redress from the tribunals. Men are exposed to every evil of savage life, and deprived of the resources which the savage finds in his absolute freedom from control. Every man, therefore, is half a soldier. The peasant ploughs fully armed, and his weapon is the only instrument of which even oppression cannot deprive him. Constant suspicion gives a taint of ferocity to his mind, but it renders him self-reliant and warlike, and, therefore, fitted for the Company's army. Perhaps one-half of the sepoys of the army of Bengal are drawn from the peasantry of Oude. It is argued, therefore, that if this anarchy is suppressed, the supply of soldiers will decrease. Men will not quit their fields and families when the return for their labour is secure, or quitting them, will be less willing to encounter actual hardship and exposure. The army will be ill recruited, or filled with an inferior class, and the order of Oude will be ultimately purchased by the anarchy of the empire.

We say nothing of the political morality of this argument, advanced though it be by men who hold antiquated parchments inviolable. The same principle would leave Ireland a desert, and Tipperary a landlord preserve, for peasant sportmen; but we will pass that by. We believe we can prove the whole theory unsound. The Oude sepoys, to begin with, are not the best soldiers in the army. They are not one whit better men than the men of Cawnpore, which was once subjected to the same anarchy, and are not so easy to discipline. The habits they acquire in Oude they must unlearn in the ranks. The chronic warfare of Oude is not a succession of battle-fields. The chudladar with the royal troops, lent for the occasion, threatens some great zemindar. The latter, aware that the extortion will be limited only by his means, usually resists, and calls out his peasantry. The guns open fire two miles off, while the matchlock men shoot at each other at a distance which leaves few dead upon the field. At noon, they adjourn to dinner, and this farce is continued till the zemindar has removed his valuables and family, and fled with his followers into the jungle. Then indeed the Oude warrior displays his valour, and the wounded and the sick, the aged and the women, those who are too feeble to move, and those who are too tardy to escape, experience the horrors of a sacked city. Neither the prudence exhibited in the field, nor the brutality displayed after the surrender, are the qualities a British government requires from its soldiery. The farce is followed up by the despatch of a pompous message to the Durbar, in which the victory is ascribed to the fortune of the "Shadow of God;" a few heads, taken from the nearest and weakest cultivators, accompany the letter; pride, cruelty, and avarice are gratified at once, and the anil who has pandered to those passions receives a robe of honour. Such is Oude as a training-school for sepoys.

As for order producing a disinclination to enlist, it has not had that effect in Cawnpore, nor will it have until the feelings and condition of the people are materially changed. The doctrines of Manchester are not yet popular among Asiatics, and to be a soldier is still considered among the most honourable of professions. The sepoy in his own village is equal to the headman. Moreover, his pay is out of all proportion to his grade. An English labourer, even in Dorsetshire, can earn as much as the state can afford to give him as a soldier. The sepoy can hardly earn half. Were the pay offered in England equal to half a crown a day, we should find recruits in thousands, and that is the proportion of a sepoy's pay to ordinary wages. His work in time of peace is not heavy, the most irksome portion of it being probably the use of an European dress. Natives, moreover, are peculiarly susceptible to the prospect of a pension, of a time when they may sit in the shade, do nothing, and yet be fed. Thus avarice and foresight, love of distinction and love of idleness alike, attract soldiers to the Company. Not one of these motives would be diminished by the annexation of Oude. The Cawnpore men fight as bravely as those of Lucknow, and the Sikhs, who dashed into the thicket at Donabew, did not fight the worse because order reigns in the Punjab.

But, say a very few, the sepoy may not approve the arrangement, and general discontent among the sepoys is the bête noir of Indian administration. Had the Government of Oude retained one gleam of common sense amid its vices, this might have been a powerful argument. It might have plundered the peasant and excepted the sepoy. It might in fact indirectly have based its throne upon military strength. It has done nothing of the kind.

If a village is to be burnt, it is burnt, without reference to the retired subadar. If a crime is to be committed, it is perpetrated, though the victim be the relative of a sepoy. More than this, the government, as if smitten by judicial blindness, directly outrages our soldiers. By a special and most righteous provision, every sepoy may make his complaint through the resident, whom he is thus induced to regard as his natural chief. The sepoys avail themselves largely of this permission, but in vain. Hundreds of sepoys' petitions are now in the hands of the minister unread, and the sepoy, injured by his own government, is indignant even with the Company, whose power prevents him from avenging himself.

But one argument remains. It is said that the vices so monstrous in our eyes are not perceptible to an Oriental people. They reason on different principles, and from the deadness of the moral sentiment, palliate every offence. The argument, apparently unanswerable, contains a fallacy. Every man feels oppression, and an Asiatic, like a Frenchman, carries every oppression to the debit of the Sultan of the day. It is true he does not care about the vices of his rulers, but he does care about the publicity of those vices. As De Quincy has said of the Romans, they would bear anything from the Cæsars, except the public soiling of the purple. It is thus that in all Mussulman countries the rottenness below is concealed by the most absolute decorum above. The Sultan may murder anybody he pleases, but he must not walk fast. The King of Oude may impale a courtier a day, but he must not marry two Mehtranees. It is against the sentiment of the people, as well as against their daily experience, against national hate as well as national pride, that the British power maintains the monarchy of Oude.—Friend of India.

CASHMERE.

A friend of ours, who has lately been to Cashmere, has sent us some extracts from his journals, of which the following is the first:—

"A trip to Cashmere is such a common thing now-a-days, that in writing from the happy valley, I can hardly hope to give you any very new or original ideas about the place. The same things, however, often strike different people in different ways, and the description of a journey in an omnibus from the Bank to Charing-cross may be made more interesting than that of a voyage round the world. There is something new to be seen everywhere; there are 'sermons in stones'; and if a dry discourse can be squeezed out of such hard texts, it would be strange if a stroll through some of the finest scenery, and one of the most interesting countries in the world, could not furnish matter for a letter or two that may amuse, if not instruct, your readers. To see what different ideas people get from the same thing, you should go to Murree, and make inquiries about the road from that place to Cashmere. As I had some intention of traversing it, I tried to get some information from those who had made the journey before me. At first I attempted to compare and reconcile the contradictory accounts that were given me, in the vain hope of extracting the truth, or some truth, at any rate, from the mass of conflicting evidence. But I soon gave up this in despair, and instead of asking for information's sake, prosecuted my inquiries for the sake of the amusement afforded by the contradictory nature of the accounts. I heard I do not know how many different descriptions of the road, which scarcely ever, by any chance, coincided in a single particular.

The first man I asked told me the road was good; the second, that it was impassable; the third, that it was passable but dangerous; the fourth, that there was no danger, but great fatigue to be undergone; the fifth, that no lady could possibly go; the sixth, that ladies and children could go easily; the seventh advised me to take my baggage on mules; the eighth assured me that no quadruped, laden or unladen, could get along; the ninth, that I could ride all the way, while the tenth had been so unfortunate as to lose a strong bill pony that had died of sheer fatigue, though his owner walked all the way on his legs; the eleventh complained that he was half starved, while the twelfth rejoiced in the recollection of the good fare he procured during the journey, and so on. I could fill my letter with similar accounts, but it would be to no purpose; the general impression, however, that they made on my mind was, that the road was none of the best.

"Cashmere is reached more easily from Jelum or Peshawur than Murree, though the distance between the valley and the latter place is the shortest by far. The road from Jelum is the best; that from Peshawur through the Hazara country is a very tolerable one, but as yet has not been much frequented: one great objection to the latter is, that a rope bridge has to be crossed half way, a very good one of its kind no doubt, but some people have an instinctive antipathy to rope bridges in any shape. The Murree road will become in time, if it is not now, the most frequented; people who have spent part of the hot weather in Cashmere, generally speaking, like to return to the plains via Murree, and pay a visit to the sanatorium at the end of the season, the pleasantest part of the year, while others who go up there in April or May, generally get tired of it before the season is over, and go across the hill to Cashmere after the rains. The road after all is not so bad as it has been made out, but the annoyances one meets with by the way are very great.

"Coolies act like a moral blister kept perpetually open; there is the greatest difficulty in getting them at all; and if you do get them they often run away; and it is by no means an uncommon occurrence to find your baggage strewed along the road,—tents, classics, bundles reposing gracefully in the shade, and left entirely to their own resources. But, independently of the annoyance caused by having no tent to sleep in, or no dinner to eat, it is really distressing to any one who does not look upon Asiatics in the light of brute beasts, to see the state of abject slavery to which these wretches are reduced.

"At some seasons of the year there is a great deal of traffic along the road; every day at each halting-place, or in the middle of the stage, you meet some traveller returning, or overtake others going the same way as yourself. All the coolies that are to be had are collected out of the neighbouring village, seized by force in the first instance, and kept perpetually on the road; as soon as they reach one place they are handed over to the kardar's or thanadar's people, and kept to go back with the next traveller. It is against their will that they go at all, and, as a matter of course, unless they are well looked after, they take the first opportunity of throwing away their loads and running off. As for the three annas, the regular hire, they do not care the least about that, and very often, after reaching the end of a stage, they run away without waiting to be paid, for fear of being detained. Short-sighted policy—for the moment they return to their homes they are seized again and sent the other way. The only method of making the journey with the least comfort is to get men who are willing to make the trip: this arrangement can be made at Murree, where there are always a number of Cashmerees working on the road or barracks, besides coolies that come in with atta, fruit, &c.; and these men, if you can manage to collect them, are generally willing to return to Cashmere; they carry enormous loads, are well behaved, and give no trouble, but any one who sets out depending on pressed coolies being furnished from stage to stage, will repent of having undertaken the journey unless he is blessed with a superhuman patience, an inexhaustible amount of good temper, and a total want of sympathy for the misfortunes of his fellow creatures. Mules or ponies are very good things to carry one's baggage on, but there are objections to using them, the chief of which is that you cannot get them unless you have a stock of your own: the natives know what the road is, and prefer keeping their cattle to traffic between Murree and Rawul Pindie. The thing that surprised me very much was the incivility and rudeness I met with everywhere along the road. One would have supposed that the natives in the villages at and near the halting-places would have been glad to see so many European officers coming and going, stopping near their houses, and paying four times the value for every article of food they purchased; but the very contrary seems to be the case. I had a 'Purwana,' such as is usually given by the maharaja's vakeel at Rawul Pindie, but it was worse than useless, the thanadars and kardars at the different villages paid no more attention to it than if it had been so much waste paper. If I wanted a fowl they frequently declared there was not such a thing to be had, though there might be half a dozen in the neighbouring compound; a great deal of persuasion would produce a little milk and some eggs, and that often not till the evening; but as for hiring a mule or pony to ride a stage, it was the work of the world to get one.

"Absolute necessities, such as fowls, eggs, and milk, not to mention coolies, were generally forthcoming at last, after threatening to complain to the maharaja of being starved. But though the country seems rich, and everything plentiful, the natives seem to have some objection to giving supplies. Towards Cashmere, I must say there was a little improvement, but a more surly and uncivil set I never met with than the native village authorities for two-thirds of the way between Murree and Cashmere. The people themselves, the labourers and ryots, are, on the contrary, civil and respectful; they come out of their huts, and make a salaam as you go by, give you water, milk, walnuts, or other fruit when in season; but the Sikhs in the service of the maharaja, I found, with very few exceptions, most surly and sulky. The reason I cannot divine: it may be that officers have occasionally behaved badly to them, abused or ill-treated them, but I do not think this has often been the case, for they are not men who would take abuse or ill-treatment without resenting it. Nor do I believe that the objection to furnish travellers with supplies proceeds from any neglect on the part of officers to the rules and regulations of government for travellers in the maharaja's territories: in some cases, no doubt, men have been cheated by officers' servants, &c., but I am persuaded that this very rarely happens.

Nor is it that the country is poor, and cannot afford to furnish so many supplies as are wanted, for there is evidently abundance of everything. I believe the Sikhs have an inveterate hatred and dislike to Europeans, and look upon us as interlopers. In the Hazara country, where the people are not Sikhs under a native rule, but subjects, albeit unwilling ones, of the British government, they will not sell anything to an European officer if they can help it; whether they want the money or not, it is no matter, they think we have no business in their country, and are determined to do nothing which may add to our convenience or comfort. The experience of other travellers may be different from mine, but I believe that the Sikhs of Cashmere, the dominant race at present, expect that they will one day be supplanted by the Company or the British Government, and deprived of the coveted possession of this beautiful and fruitful country, and they hate us accordingly; whereas the 'ryots,' who are civil enough, do not look upon us with any feelings of this kind, because as long as they are oppressed and tyrannized over, it makes but little difference to them who their tyrants and oppressors are; and as long as European officers treat them kindly and pay them properly, they like them well enough."—Englishman.

THE ANNANDALE PICNIC OUTRAGE.

The Commander-in-Chief's decision upon the Annandale picnic outrage, in which several officers of H.M.'s 32nd foot were engaged, and of whom Lieut. King of that corps was the ringleader, has been published. His Excellency's memorandum, which will explain the whole affair, is one of the most extraordinary papers that ever bore the signature of a Commander-in-Chief of the Indian army. Its principal object seems to be to shield the officers and gentlemen (?) who addressed to Capt. Goad what Sir William Gomm has himself characterized as "an obnoxious and offensive communication." It would appear to be the Commander-in-Chief's opinion that the owner of a house, when that house is unjustifiably and forcibly occupied, cannot enter it without subjecting his conduct to be considered, for so doing, as "unguarded and intemperate," and as deserving of "general reprobation and protest." A body of officers apply to another officer for the loan of his house; that application is unfavourably received, and permission to occupy it is not granted; but the officers who made the application are determined to occupy the house, notwithstanding the refusal; and because the owner, Capt. Goad, as soon as he heard of the outrage, at once rode down to his house to protest against the forcible occupation of it by the officers in question, his conduct is characterized as "unguarded and intemperate," and is declared to be deserving of "general reprobation and protest;" while the officers who forcibly entered Capt. Goad's house are declared to occupy "high ground;" by which we presume the Commander-in-Chief meant that their conduct was at least unexceptionable. We are at a loss to understand by what process of reasoning his Excellency could have arrived at such a conclusion.

It is said in the memorandum that Captain Goad tendered all the reparation in his power for his "abrupt intrusion" into his own house; but we have reason to know that he did nothing of the kind, and that it was Captain Moore, of the 32nd regiment, "who mistook his imagination for his memory," that spread that report abroad, and which was contradicted by Captain Goad the moment it was brought to his notice. We have never read a weaker and more pitiable document than this memorandum in our lives, and we are extremely sorry that Sir William Gomm should so far have forgotten what was due to his character as commander-in-chief as to have given it the sanction of his name. The body of officers who in the first place took forcible possession of Captain Goad's house, against his express wish to the contrary, and afterwards addressed to him an "obnoxious and offensive letter," which was insultingly addressed—"Mr. Goad," and then offered to him, as if he were a common huckster, ten rupees, "such being the usual hire of his house at Annandale," when the house had not been hired—the body of officers, who were guilty of such conduct as this, are declared by his Excellency to have occupied, during their proceedings, "high ground," and the result of Captain Goad's appeal to the Commander-in-Chief against such treatment as he has received is, that Sir William Gomm "regrets to find that no attempt at explanation or justification of this injudicious line of conduct is apparent" on the part of the officers who insulted Captain Goad. The Commander-in-Chief does not order those officers to apologise; he only regrets to find that they have not done so, and begs, in order to settle the matter, that that regret "may be communicated to the parties concerned, and to Captain Goad."

In future, therefore, any body of officers who propose to act the part of housebreakers, and afterwards grossly insult the owner of the house into which they have broken, may do so with impunity, so far as the Commander-in-Chief is concerned. The expression of Sir William Gomm's "regret" will be their only punishment. This is an instructive lesson for the officers of the army. But we must not forget that there were three officers of H.M.'s 32nd regiment implicated in these disgraceful proceedings, and that Frederick Markham, the adjutant-general of the Queen's troops in India, is the senior colonel of that regiment.—Hurkaru.

THE LONDON MAIL of Sept. 9 arrived at Calcutta on Oct. 13, (per Bentlnck). The St. Bombay left Suez Nov. 7, with the mails of Oct. 25, en route to Ceylon, Madras, and Bengal. The previous mail of Oct. 9 left Aden Oct. 27 (per Hindustan).

MALAY RECRUITS.—A correspondent of the Englishman states that an officer has been sent from Pegu to obtain Malay recruits from the Straits. This race, one of the bravest in India, has been but too little employed in our armies. In the Archipelago, a Malay is considered a fair match for any other five natives.

RECRUITS BY THE WELLESLEY.—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle states that a Court of Inquiry is to be held at Dum-Dum, to inquire into the conduct of the recruits on board the Wellesley. It is said, that at one part of the voyage a most mutinous disposition was displayed.

NEPAL.—A correspondent of the Citizen states that the government of Nepal is organizing a force with which to chastise the "Governor of Lhasa." We presume the Premier of Thibet, who acts as viceroy of the Grand Llama, is the personage intended. It appears to be understood that the Nepanese are organizing a force for some object, but its destination is not accurately known. One thing may be regarded as certain, it is not intended to invade India.

KOKAN.—The Delhi Gazette states, on the authority of the Peshawar Ukhbar, that the heir apparent of Kokan has arrived in Peshawar. He desires aid against the Russians, who have defeated the King of Bokhara. The statement is repeated by another journal at Mooltan.

STUDY OF ORIENTAL LANGUAGES IN RUSSIA.—The Englishman, in a communicated article, asserts that the Czar has ordered the study of Hindostanee, Persian, and Bengalee, in the college of Moscow. The writer should have given his authority for that very remarkable statement.

A COLLEGE OF CIVIL ENGINEERS will shortly be established in Calcutta. The necessary buildings have already been sanctioned, and the only difficulty is to select a site. Bengal owes this project, we believe, partly to the unceasing exertions of Col. Goodwyn, and partly to the admitted necessity for a supply of indigenous engineers.

POSTAGE ON LETTERS FROM ENGLAND.—Letters brought by the last Mail from England have been charged double inland postage because they bore no postage-stamps; rather a hard case to inflict a penalty for non-compliance with a rule which was unknown to the offender, and could not have been complied with had he known it.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S MOVEMENTS.—"A straw thrown into the air shows which way the wind blows." We propose throwing one up at present, in order that our readers may judge in what direction the political current is setting. Many have been the rumours respecting the movements of the Governor-General during the coming cold weather. Some say that Madras, as we mentioned only the other day, some that the Panjab, is to be favoured with the vice-regal presence. The fact we are about to mention may very possibly have reference to some other matter, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that the military secretary to Government has written to Major Ramsay, requesting that officer to concentrate at Kurnaul, by the 1st of December next, a large number of elephants and other animals of burden, for the carriage of camp-equipage. We have been informed that the order alluded to has been issued with a view to the Governor-General's approaching tour, and that the commissary-general, Major Ramsay, will form one of his lordship's staff upon the occasion. We shall only remark that the report comes from a very credible source, and that it ought to be true, if it be not, which we think it is. Of the fact there can be no doubt whatever.—Hurkaru, Oct. 13.

LIEUT.-COLONEL LUGARD makes so sure of being appointed Adjutant-General of Queen's Troops in India that he has stopped the transit of his baggage to Bombay.

EXAMINATION OF CIVILIANS.—An examination of young civilians was lately held at Burdwan according to the new rules, and some of the highly-educated were spun, and remanded for six months.

DR. CHUCKERBUTTY, Professor of Materia Medica in the Medical College, is about to proceed to England for the purpose of passing the examination required to qualify a medical man for admission into the Covenanted Service.

A TRAGEDY AT BERRHAMPORE.—We are very sorry to understand that something nearly akin to a tragedy has occurred at Berrhampore, which has thrown the whole station into a great state of excitement. Mr. Ouseley, the assistant to the magistrate, has, it appears, stabbed a grass-cutter in the back with a dagger; and when the wound was first inflicted the life of the unfortunate man was despaired of. We understand, however, that there are now some hopes of his surviving. Mr. Carnac will, of course, be compelled to take up the case; and we presume it will, as a matter of necessity, be sent to the Supreme Court. We are glad to hear that there is little doubt among those who are acquainted with Mr. Ouseley that his mind has lately been considerably affected; and it is to be hoped that, in this melancholy occurrence, it will be established that the attack was made by him when labouring under the influence of a derangement of intellect. We are assured that, for many weeks, his conduct has been characterised by great eccentricity, which has been generally observed.—Hurkaru, Oct. 12.

THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.—The Mofussilite informs us that the Court of Directors have refused to sanction an increase of the number of the Legislative Council. It will be remembered that the power of appointing two more members was reserved by the Charter Act to the Governor-General. Mr. Harrington, therefore, will return to the Agra sudder, and the home secretary will be without a seat in the council which he must in any case so greatly influence. The refusal appears to be exceedingly unwise. It saves 5,000*l.* a year, and deprives the north-west of a second and most able representative.—Friend of India.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.—The Englishman mentions that "Messrs. J. R. Burlton Bennett, H. Woodrow, Kissory Chand Mitta, Lokenauth Bose, G. W. Kellner, J. King, R. H. Hollingberry, W. Clark, J. R. B. Ross, Radanauth Sikdar, E. D'Crus, and J. Muller" have formed themselves into a committee to ascertain the views of the uncovenanted service on the question of pension. They will then draft a sketch memorial, which will be submitted to the members of the service in all three presidencies. We recommend the committee to submit their own scheme to Government. If they wait until the service is unanimous, they will not accomplish their task in this generation.

DARJEELING, 1ST OCTOBER.—"A rumour prevails that the troops are to leave for the plains early this season. The visitors have taken the same notion, and are proceeding down in rapid succession, despite the disgraceful state of the road between Titalayah and Purneah. The lieutenant-governor should be asked to visit this portion of dishonourable John's territories in the rains; he would then know what the state of this road really is. The state coffers were never in such an overflowing state as they are now; and instead of adding to it by inviting people to invest in the 3½ per cent loan—which seems to be so liberally kept open, but to no good purpose whatever, for as long as there are other sources for capitalists to derive a larger dividend, if this scheme of the government be patronized, it will only be by the members of the services—consequently to balance the state of affairs and to attend to a matter which is sadly felt by the trading community and others who enrich the state, it would be a noble scheme if the surplus cash in the general treasury for one year only, after reserving the usual dividend for the stockholders in England, were to be disbursed in thoroughly repairing the roads of the various districts of Bengal. An energetic officer of the Bengal army, who for some time has diligently studied the Lepcha language, and has almost become one himself, was determined to outshine the famous Huc and Gabet, the renowned Thibetian travellers. Instead of going to England by the usual route, this enterprising officer, accompanied by his Lepcha attendants, set out on the journey across these mountains to China via Russia into England; but ere he had gone many marches, the rude and inhospitable clans of these mountains fell upon him, and robbed him of all his property. The consequence is a total discomfiture of all his projects for the present, and perhaps his trip will remain in abeyance for some time to come. Another officer's house was robbed of cash to the extent of Rs. 800, besides papers, &c. The bag containing these things was carried away clean."—Englishman, Oct. 11.

MERRET, Oct. 1.—This has been a very hot and a very unhealthy season here. Her Majesty's 81st regiment alone has lost by death upwards of one hundred and forty of its number, including men, women, and children. As many as six and seven have been buried together. The mortality has been excessive. Sickness has not been so prevalent amongst the dragoons and artillery, doubtless because they are fully acclimatised. I hear that three officers have just left the 81st for England, in consequence of some differences between them. I have not heard the particulars, but may inform you of them in a future letter.

THE THIRD EUROPEANS.—The two young officers of the 3rd European regiment, who were lately engaged in a fracas in a billiard-room, have been let off with a reprimand, and an injunction from Sir William Gomm to behave better in future.

MR. FORSYTH, of the Civil service, is now said to have been selected by the Governor-General to accompany the Rajah of Putealah to England.

THE KING OF DELHI is said to be so ill that little hope is entertained of his recovery.

THE OPIUM SALE of Oct. 12 exhibits another large falling off in prices, almost equal to that at the sale in September; the difference between the rates for August and October is Rs. 160 for Behar, and Rs. 206 for Benares, per chest.

CIVIL RETIREMENTS.—Messrs. C. D. Russell, Bury, Bental, Quintin, Travers, Garston, and Forbes, attached to the Bengal division of the Civil service, have sent in applications to retire.

SECRETARY TO THE CIVIL AND ANNUITY FUNDS.—Owing to the intended departure from India of Mr. Adams, the office of secretary to the Civil and Annuity Funds will become vacant. There are four candidates in the field, of whom Mr. W. G. Young appears to be the favourite.

EMBANKMENTS.—The Gazette of last Saturday contains a Governor-General's order, removing the whole of the embankments in Bengal from the control of the superintending engineers of circles, and placing them under a superintendent of embankments, which officer is to be allowed a staff salary of Rs. 800 per month. A long list defines the divisions and districts under each executive charge, with the name and staff salary of the officers. Another order contains the arrangements with reference to the general conduct of business connected with the engineers as a corps of officers. The senior officer of engineers (not being a general officer) serving within the limits of the presidency, is to be commandant of the corps of engineers. The head quarters of the corps are to be established at the head quarters of the sappers and miners. All returns hitherto forwarded to the chief engineer at Fort William are to be transmitted to the commandant of sappers and miners, by whom the ordinary military business of the corps of engineers is to be conducted; and all records, plans, &c. in the office of the chief engineer, except those relating to Fort William, which will be made over to the garrison engineer, are to be transferred to the head quarters of the sappers and miners. We hope these new arrangements will be conducive to the efficiency of the corps, though we fail to perceive the particular advantages expected to result from them.—Hurkaru, Oct. 13.

THE 4TH SIKHS.—A correspondent of the Morning Chronicle, writing from Cuttack under date of the 2nd instant, states, that the 4th Sikhs, now in Pegu, are to be relieved by a regiment from the Madras presidency, and that a Bengal corps is to take the duties at Cuttack. We have long been under the impression that owing to there being so few general service corps in this presidency, it would become necessary to send Madras troops to relieve such of the Bengalees as had completed their tour of service in Pegu. Already the Government has been reduced to this alternative; and when the next relief takes place the measure must be repeated, for it would be highly inexpedient and unjust, to send back again to the new province, even such of the Bengal volunteer regiments as will have been longest away from it. Our contemporary thinks that the civil and military occupation of Cuttack ought to be provided for by the Madras Government. To such an arrangement we have no objection to offer, though we should be sorry to see local corps raised for the military duties of the province. These corps are one of the bane of the Indian armies, more especially that of Bengal, and we should greatly rejoice to see them all by degrees made regiments of the line, and officered as such. We would go further than the Chronicle, however; we would not only allow the Madras army to retain Cuttack, but would give it the military occupation of Pegu, which would at once put an end to all difficulties with regard to the relief of the troops in that province. If this should cause a larger demand upon the Madras troops than they could meet, they might be relieved from the charge of some, or all the stations they now occupy north of the Nerbudda by the Bengal troops, excepting Mhow, which appears naturally to appertain to the Bombay presidency. This station and Aden should be given to the Bombay, and if necessary, Nusserebad might be restored to Bengal.—Hurkaru.

RETIREMENTS.—Captain C. G. Fagan, of the 8th Light Cavalry, has obtained leave preparatory to retiring from the service, and Major T. Brodie, of the 5th N.I., will, it is said, retire from the 1st of January next.

Mr. JAMES BARNES, of the Civil service, is announced to have died at Nynee Tal, on the 5th inst., much and deservedly regretted; he fell a victim to the common error of lingering in India after his health required a change to a milder climate.

THE BENGAL MEDICAL RETIRING FUND wants nursing. The estimated deficiency for 1855 amounts to Rs. 56,970. The managers have refused to submit, for a general vote, Dr. Ranken's proposal for granting of the six annuities not given on the origination of the fund, and still due.

BRIDGING THE HOOGHLY.—Colonel Goodwyn has submitted for the consideration of the Government, a plan and estimate for a pontoon-bridge across the Hooghly at Calcutta to meet the terminus of the railway at Howrah. The pontoons are to be oblong in form, and of a size not hitherto attempted. They are to be constructed of timber, as preferable to iron, in consequence of damage being more easily repaired. The pontoons will have an elevation above the surface of the water sufficient to allow the largest country boats to pass under the bridge; while two large openings, ninety feet each in width, are to be left so as to allow of the passage of larger vessels up and down the river. Vessels passing through these openings will have to pay a small toll towards defraying the expenses of the establishment such an arrangement will require. The cost of the bridge is estimated at seven lacs of rupees. It is said that the Government here have referred the matter for the sanction of the Court of Directors. Under any circumstances a bridge is now an actual necessity.

THE COURT-MARTIAL at Simla on Lieut. Cumming, of H.M.'s 32nd foot, assembled on the 14th. Lieut.-Col. Grant, 9th lancers, presiding; some fifteen officers are placed at the disposal of the major-general commanding the Sirhind division for this duty. Sir William Gomm and Captain Yates are summoned as witnesses, as are many of the uncovenanted service and civilians, who were at the cricket-ground. Speculation is rife as to the upshot of the trial, and doubts entertained of the soundness of the Judge Advocate-General's proceedings; how far sanctioned by military law as opposed to military usage. There is every reason to suppose that ere the trial is well over, her Majesty's confirmation of Mr. Cumming's retirement from the service will be with the Indian military authorities; such a contingency involves a very awkward legal responsibility to more than one.

CENSUS OF THE PUNJAB.—The people are not to go up to be taxed as is the fear of natives, especially Hindoos, whenever any steps are being taken to ascertain the extent of the population, but they are to be numbered on the 31st of December of this year, when the existence of every man, woman, and child, within the precincts of a dwelling, is to be recorded. The wild tribes within our frontier, the grazier in the bar, every one, in fact, who may at that time be considered an inhabitant of the Punjab, and its dependencies on the Sutlej, will be brought within the operation of the order, and the result may be looked forward to with much curiosity, especially as we have the census of the north-western provinces with which to make a comparison.

THE MILITARY BOARD.—The Court of Directors, we hear, have written for an explanation of the irrecoverable balances pertaining to the late military board, amounting to upwards of a crore of rupees, and wish to know what steps have been taken towards their recovery. They might as well ask for last year's rain. The secret of this apparent heavy loss is the absurd system of inefficient balances remaining unadjusted for interminable periods. We have been told that these balances, in the stud department alone, amount to not less than three crores! This arises from credit not having been given for the produce of the studs supplied to regiments.—Englishman, Oct. 10.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—The Commander-in-Chief's route is, we believe, settled now, as far as Peshawur, to which station his Excellency will proceed by the shortest route. It was at one time, as we intimated in a former number, arranged that the whole camp should go into the Derajat.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 14.

MILITARY ON-DITS.—H.M.'s 81st regiment, stationed at Meerut, has lost one hundred and forty men, women, and children, during the last hot season.—H.M.'s 22nd regiment is expected to embark for England, from Kurrachee, in December.—Lieut.-Col. Sage is coming down to Calcutta, for the purpose of applying for sick leave to the Cape.—Mr. Cumming, who is still under close arrest in the dak bungalow, at Kussowlie, is to be tried at Subathoo.—Brigadier Eckford has joined at Barrackpore, and assumed command of the station.—The 53rd N.I. has been ordered to Cuttack to relieve the 42nd M.N.I.—A camp of exercise is to be formed at Umballa during the approaching cold season. H.M.'s 32nd, 52nd, 53rd, and 60th regiments are to form part of the force.—The artillery practice at Meerut this year is to be on an unusually extensive scale. A full siege-train is to be sent from Delhi, and Captain Douglas is to have an extensive trial of his new rockets.—Mountain-train guns are being got ready in the Delhi magazine; but the quarter in which they are intended for service has not transpired.—The 25th N.I. was at Dinapore on the 13th inst., in progress by water to Calcutta and Pegu.—The report that a small army of exercise is to be formed in the north-west during the cold season is repeated by the Englishman.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

PRACTICE OF COURTS-MARTIAL.

Head-Quarters, Simla, Oct. 4, 1854.—The Commander-in-Chief finds it necessary to issue the following standing order, to which proper attention is to be paid:—

At a general court-martial, under peculiar circumstances, an opening address from the prosecutor is occasionally desirable and necessary; but at an inferior court-martial, such procedure is seldom, if ever required. When one is absolutely requisite, it must be confined to a statement of those circumstances which are intended to be established in evidence, and of the proof of which there is some reasonable certainty; other alleged misconduct, not put in issue by the charge, is not to be referred to; and all acrimony in stating the case must be most carefully avoided. No witness, prosecutor or otherwise, should be allowed to offer anything to a court-martial, in the way of explanation, until he is sworn; for it is as necessary that such explanation should be given under the sanction of an oath, as that the facts of the case themselves should be so proved, it being very difficult, when a different course is pursued, to separate that which is received as evidence on oath from that which is contained in a more explanatory statement, made without this formality.

It is also to be distinctly understood, that the rules of evidence preclude a witness, after having been sworn, from reading his evidence in the shape of an opening address.

By order of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.

Head-Quarters, Simla, Oct. 5, 1854.—With the concurrence of the Most Noble the Governor-General, his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to direct the following movements and change of quarters of European corps, to be carried into effect for 1854-55, on the dates and in the order specified:—

H.M.'s 22nd regt., from Peshawur to England, to move in accordance with orders already issued.

H.M.'s 24th regt., from Sealkote to Peshawur, to move Nov. 1.

H.M.'s 27th regt., from the Presidency to Sealkote, on arrival at Fort William, by steamers as far as Allahabad.

H.M.'s 29th regt., from Moulmein to Thayet Mew, under orders from Government.

H.M.'s 35th regt., from England to the Presidency.

H.M.'s 96th regt., from Dinapore to England, when relieved (temporarily) by the 3rd European regt. from Chinsurah, under the orders of Government.

Hon. Co.'s 1st Bengal European Fusiliers, from Pegu to Dinapore, when relieved by H.M.'s 29th regt., under the orders of Government, when the 3rd regt. will return to Chinsurah.

RE-ORGANIZATION OF DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Fort William, Oct. 10, 1854.—The Hon. the Court of Directors, in sanctioning the recent re-organization of the department of Public Works, having authorized such arrangements as might be deemed necessary for the general conduct of business connected with the engineers, as a corps of officers, the Most Noble the Governor-General in Council is pleased to lay down the following rules on the subject:—

2. The senior officer of engineers (not being a general officer) serving within the limits of the Presidency, is to be commandant of the corps of engineers.

3. The head-quarters of the corps of engineers is to be established at the head-quarters of the sappers and miners.

4. The commandant of engineers is not required to reside at head-quarters, but wherever his particular office finds him located.

5. All returns, reports, &c. which have heretofore been forwarded to the chief engineer in Fort William, will be transmitted to the commandant of the sappers and miners.

6. The ordinary military business of the corps of engineers will be conducted by the commandant of the sappers and miners, who is to prepare and forward to the commandant of engineers all returns, reports, &c. which require his signature.

7. All records, plans, &c. in the office of the chief engineer

(with the exception of those relating to Fort William, which will be made over to the garrison engineer), are to be transferred to the head-quarters of the sappers and miners.

8. All engineer officers unemployed are to be considered as attached to the head-quarters of the corps of engineers; and young engineer officers and others ordered to, or required to remain at, the Presidency, are to place themselves under the orders of the commandant of Fort William, in the absence of the officer commanding the corps of engineers.

MAJOR G. L. COOPER.

Fort William, Oct. 10, 1854.—The Most Noble the Governor-General in Council having had before him the proceedings of a court of inquiry which was convened in July last, at Agra, to investigate into certain charges made by native subordinates of the Agra magazine establishment, against Major G. L. Cooper, of artillery, commissary of ordnance, alleging the "systematic embezzlement of stores" from the Agra magazine, with the knowledge and connivance of that officer, it has given his Lordship in Council great satisfaction to observe that the court has declared the charges to be false and malicious, and that his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief entirely concurs in the opinion of the Court.

2. The Governor-General in Council most readily exonerates Major Cooper of all imputation of dishonest conduct and of improper motives; but his Lordship in Council must observe that, in lending to private parties stores, the property of Government, which he is shown to have done without any authority whatever, and without entering those loans in the regular magazine books and periodical returns, Major Cooper has violated the established regulations for magazines, and engaged in clandestine transactions, and, as a necessary consequence, has made false returns of stock to the Military Board.

3. The Governor-General in Council considers it very necessary to check such irregularities, not only because they tend to the probability of inflicting loss upon the Government, but because they are likely to be misapprehended, and to bring reproach on the department, as they have done in the present case. As an example, therefore, in order to deter others from such improprieties, his Lordship in Council is pleased to remove Major Cooper from the 1st to the 2nd class of commissaries of ordnance, and he will rank in the second class next below Major A. Robertson.

THE ANNA POSTAGE.

Fort William, Oct. 16, 1854.—The Most Noble the Governor-General in Council is pleased, under the authority vested in him by Section XXV. of Act No. XVII. of 1854, to direct that the single postage on newspapers, pamphlets, and other printed or engraved papers, shall be one anna.

From and after the 1st November next, the postage on every imported newspaper, pamphlet, or other printed or engraved paper, shall be one anna, if the same shall not exceed six tola in weight; two annas if the same shall exceed six, but shall not exceed twelve tola in weight; and one additional anna shall be charged for every six tola, or a fraction thereof in weight above twelve tola.

The postage on every newspaper, pamphlet, or other printed or engraved paper, not imported, shall be one anna, if the same shall not exceed three-and-a-half tola in weight; two annas if the same shall exceed three-and-a-half tola, and not exceed six tola; and one additional anna shall be charged for every three tola, or a fraction thereof, in weight, above six tola.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Oct. 18, 1854).—Sufficient time has not elapsed since the termination of the holidays to allow an opportunity for judging of the real state of the British Piece Goods Market, though a fair amount of business has been done in some descriptions, especially in Shirtings and Mule Twist. By advices received from Furrackabad sales at that place of British Cotton Piece Goods had been larger than for some time past, in consequence of the cheering prospects of the harvest, and there are many good buyers here who would willingly take large quantities if they could obtain a slight reduction in prices, which would not be easily granted in consequence of the low rates of exchange and already losing prices. Holders are firm, expecting increased demand on the part of dealers. Mule Twist is in excellent demand. Large sales at enhanced prices were effected of the comparatively moderate shipments from the Manchester factories, while the shipments on the way of Piece Goods are very heavy, and more than sufficient for the wants of the country. Mule Twist is 1 pie per morah higher for all numbers from 20s. to 60s.

MADRAS.

TORTURE IN MADRAS.

Extract from the Minutes of Consultation, dated 9 Sept. 1854.

1. The attention of the Right Hon. the Governor in Council has been forcibly arrested by the reports given in the English newspapers of the recent debate in Parliament on Mr. Blackett's motion on the state of the Madras Presidency; and the accompanying abstract, collated from different prints, of what was stated on that occasion by several members of the House of Commons, has been prepared, as containing a prominent reference to a subject which demands a thorough investigation at the hands of Government.

2. From these reports, there can be no doubt that it has been broadly asserted in Parliament, and that that assertion received no positive or authoritative contradiction, that instruments of torture are commonly employed in this presidency for the purpose of extracting an immoderate rent from the people.

3. Whether the rent or tax be immoderate or not, is a point which it is here unnecessary to discuss; but the other portion of the assertion involves a charge of so serious a nature, that it is imperative on the Government to make every exertion to discover by the strictest scrutiny whether there is any and what degree of truth in so grave an imputation.

4. The idea of such a practice is so abhorrent to the principles innate in every Englishman, that the Right Hon. the Governor in Council would not hesitate to repel such an accusation on the part of the Covenanted Service, but he feels that a mere general denial of this nature would not be satisfactory to the officers of the service themselves, but that, on the contrary, they will be as desirous as he is that the fullest inquiry should be made, in order that, if untrue, the charge may at once be openly and clearly rebutted; while if, on the other hand, there should be any grounds for the assertion, every exertion may be made to expose and effectually prevent such highly objectionable practices, and vindicate the character of Government.

5. The use of torture or the infliction of any personal injury or violence by any officer in the revenue and judicial employ of Government, is of course a criminal offence, and punishable under the existing regulations; but in a matter so deeply affecting the honour of the British nation, and so utterly repugnant to its principles of government, it is not sufficient that such acts should be merely entered in the category of crimes, but their asserted general prevalence in spite of such legal prohibition calls for an immediate and sifting investigation, and for eventual measures for their repression, if found to prevail.

6. The Right Hon. the Governor in Council therefore resolves to call on all collectors and sub-collectors to institute at once the most searching inquiries as to the existence of such practices as those under notice, within their respective jurisdictions, and to state whether any complaints of this kind have come under their cognizance within the last (7) seven years, and what punishment has in each case followed conviction. Each officer will also state, so far as he can ascertain or judge, whether the idea is prevalent among the people that such acts are tacitly tolerated by the Government or its European officers.

7. The collectors and sub-collectors will further call on all persons to bring forward any specific instances within their knowledge of instruments of torture being used for the purpose of realizing the revenues of the state, and which they may be prepared to substantiate or give such tangible information about, as may lead to their substantiation. The utmost endeavours of the local authorities will be used to bring such cases to light.

8. They will likewise use their best efforts to obtain information and assistance from any respectable residents, European or native, especially such as may be unconnected with Government.

9. The civil and sub-judges and principal sudder ameen will also supply Government direct with any information they may be able to afford of any cases which may have come within their knowledge during the last seven years, stating also whether in their opinion the practice does exist, and to what extent. The civil engineers and zillah civil and surgeons will likewise supply similar information.

10. The reports above called for will be submitted to the Government direct, and with as little delay as may be consistent with a full and complete inquiry.

11. The Court of Sadder Adawlut and the Board of Revenue will also be requested to furnish Government with any information on this subject which their records may afford, or which has come within their personal knowledge within the time already specified.

12. Separate communications will be addressed direct to parties likely to be able to give correct information, but the collectors are not to consider themselves thereby precluded from seeking information from every reliable source.

13. His Lordship in Council need scarcely add, that a vindication of Government is not his sole object in adopting these measures. Highly important as that object is, it is no less necessary and important that the subjects of the Government should be fully and completely protected from such practices if prevalent. Should this unfortunately be the case, the most decided measures will be called for, for their repression, and the people made to understand that the British Government does not in any shape or degree tolerate such atrocities, and will spare no effort to prevent them, when promptly brought to notice.

14. Ordered, that the foregoing resolution be communicated to the military department, and that the provincial Commander-in-Chief be requested to call on any officers of her Majesty's or of the Honourable Company's services who may be likely to afford information on this subject, to report any specific instances which may have fallen within their cognizance, of torture having been applied to collect the dues of Government within the limits of the Hon. Company's territories.

15. Resolved also, that a similar communication be made to the Commissary-General, who will obtain the like information from the officers of his department.

16. Ordered also, that the following letter be despatched.

(A True Extract.)

H. C. MONTGOMERY, Chief Secretary.

HYDERABAD—DECCAN.

The following is from Hyderabad, dated the 27th September :—
 "Major Mayne, by orders from the Resident, moved against Saloor, in the neighbourhood of which, a party of Rohillas, in the service of one Muckoo Meah, a Mussulman zemindar, were committing depredations. On Major Mayne's arrival at the place, the garrison attempted an escape by night, and were cut up with great slaughter. Four hundred are said to have perished. One hundred Rohillas have been taken prisoners, with the zemindar who employed them. It remains to be seen how the Government will deal with this person. It will depend much upon this, as to whether his injuries, if he had suffered any (I know nothing of the matter), extenuate his hostility towards the Government in any degree, or whether his depredations resulted simply from avarice and the love of such courses, but too common to zemindars. The casualties on the side of Major Mayne were about ten men, put hors de combat, and Captain Abbot wounded. You will obtain a more precise account of this affair than I can give you, from others.

"There has been at Dewny, a place situated between the Oodger and Beder, a brush between the Government troops sent to dispossess the mortgagee and the garrison holding the Gurree for him. Thirteen persons on both sides were killed and wounded. The mortgagee, who held his mortgage under the auspices or rather guarantee, of Omer-bin-aooz, has ceded the place to the Government, as part of an arrangement concluded between the Government and Omer-bin-aooz. The Government has obtained large concessions from Omer-bin-aooz, profitable to it by the reduction of a large body of Arabs, a thousand in number, and by recalling the revenue appropriated for their maintenance, and also a part of those which were assigned to Omer-bin-aooz in payment of his debt. This is all relief to the Government; but as yet, partial relief: entire relief and good organization are yet at a distance.

"When nothing can be commanded, no result can be obtained but by lengthy processes requiring time for their accomplishment. The arrangement is not finally concluded with Omer-bin-aooz; but the basis for it is settled, and gives a fair promise of good result. They report Abdoola Bin Ali, the other Arab chief, as dissatisfied with the amount of the concessions made by Omer-bin-aooz. I hope, when it comes to his turn, that he may have the good sense and the discretion to follow the example set him by his compeer.

"The troops of the contingent, cantoned at Wurungul, are ordered, I understand, to march against the zemindar of Budrachellum, a youth of eighteen years of age, who has recently come into possession by the death of his brother, a remarkably fine young man. I refer by the observation I have made, not only to his personal appearance and manners, both very favourable to him, but to his understanding and his veracity, the last a rare quality here. The talookdar of Budrachellum is strongly opposed to the interest of this family, whose right to the zemindari is maintained by an elaborate minute and satisfactory report made by Captain Bullock, in his capacity of supervisor to a punchayet held to try the question of right between him and his competitor, whom the talookdars favour. I must not omit to say that the umpire in the punchayet, a native zemindar, decided in favour of the opponent. But there can be no comparison between the one and the other judgment. The full force of that making against Captain Bullock's decision consists in the vague assertion, the umpire being a zemindar, that there were usages amongst zemindars which Captain Bullock could not and zemindars could alone understand, an observation but too sufficiently vague when unsupported by illustration, to be kicked out of any Council Board; and in the other case, that of receiving illustration but too sufficiently clear that those usages could have been understood by Captain Bullock and other men." Calcutta Englishman, Oct. 10.

THE MADRAS RAILWAY.

We have frequently laid before our readers a narrative of the progress of the railways in this presidency and Bombay, but have hitherto passed over in silence the works on the Madras side. Though we have overlooked them they have advanced, and the following facts may be relied on as authentic.

Madras was the last presidency which obtained the sanction of Government to the construction of a railway. It was granted only in 1852, and the work was retarded by some special obstacles. There was a great diversity of opinion as to the most advantageous route. Some held that the line should run along the coast towards the north, with the view of ultimately carrying it to Calcutta; others believed that the direct line to Bombay was the only one which would open up a tract of country, large enough to produce a dividend. Ultimately, the plan approved by Lord Dalhousie was sanctioned by the Court of Directors. A line was ordered from Madras through Vellore, Salem, and Coimbatore, straight to the western coast. A branch line was to connect Madras with Bangalore, the key of the great Mysore province, and the Neilgherry sanatoria. It was proposed also to join the sister presidency either by extending the Bangalore branch through Bellary to Bombay, or by making a distinct line through the Cuddapah district with the same object.

The original sanction, and four and a half per cent. guarantee only extended to fifty miles, but a year later the sanction was extended to the complete line to the coast, and its branches. The whole, with the examination of the line via Cuddapah, was entrusted to the Madras Railway Company. The country of course differs greatly from Bengal. Instead of long flat plains of alluvium, we have a territory that in its natural features almost resembles Spain. In spite, however, of deep cuttings and broad rivers, and the difficulty of procuring labour, the railway might have been opened to the public. From Madras to Arcot, including a bridge of fifty-six arches over the river Poincy, it is in full progress; between Arcot and Vaniembady the line is being set out, and in the neighbourhood of Salem the construction is about to be commenced; near Coimbatore it has been already begun, and in the course of two or three weeks it will also be begun at Palghat. Unfortunately, the company has been oppressed by two great difficulties. It has no contractors, and an exceedingly limited supply of engineers. No rails have been sent out, and of course, as the railway company does its own work, has no "maintenance clause" to arouse its energies, and is protected by a guarantee, it is by no means in a hurry to advance. It is useless to push forward without rails, and as no one at home ever does anything in proper time, the work creeps along at the true Indian rate. By the end of the year, however, fifty miles of rails and chairs will be in Madras. The locomotives will follow in March, and then, and not till then, will the Madras public enjoy the first experimental trip.—Friend of India.

RIOT AT NAGPORE.

ACCOUNTS have reached the Presidency of a serious riot that occurred in the city of Nagpore on the 11th instant. There are certain crown jewels there, and other property which have always been possessed by the de facto Government, and the State having been merged into the British dominions, our Government conceived they had a rightful claim to the property in question. The above day was accordingly fixed for removing them from the Toshe Khana in the city to the treasury at the residency. The design does not appear to have been made public, but it oozed out during the previous evening, and early in the morning a great mob assembled round the palace, prepared apparently to resist, as far as they could, the removal of any of the property formerly belonging to the State. Captain Crichton, the assistant commissioner, sent Jumalooddeen the British Naib in advance with twenty-five troopers to the Toshe Khana, intending himself to follow soon afterwards. Jumalooddeen had no sooner reached the Chandnee choke, where the mob seemed largest, than he was dragged out of his palanquin, severely beaten, and also wounded with swords; the palanquin was utterly demolished, and the Naib left almost for dead.

Captain Crichton's passage was also obstructed, but he succeeded in communicating with the commissioner, who ordered the 10th Madras N. I. to proceed forthwith from Seetabuldee to the city to quell the disturbance, and sent an express to the brigadier at Kamptee, who received it at noon the same day. In an hour afterwards, three troops of cavalry, the horse and foot artillery, the 37th M. N. I., and a wing of the 41st M. N. I. were marching on the city. Before they reached the residency, however, they were informed that quiet had been restored, and the cavalry and artillery were sent back to Kamptee, the infantry alone being detained at the residency. In the meanwhile the 10th N. I. were marched into the city and posted round the palace, the rioters disappearing much faster than they had assembled together, and up to seven o'clock that evening, thirteen cart loads of jewels, arms, and other valuables were removed from the palace to the residency, the removal of the remainder having been allowed to proceed in peace up to the 14th instant.

The Commissioner caused a communication to be made to the Rance, pointing out to her the dangerous position in which she placed herself if she encouraged any opposition to the orders of the British Government, when she, in the most emphatic terms, denied all knowledge of the intentions of the rioters, and utterly disavowed all participation in their proceedings. It is supposed that the mob was instigated by Eshwunt Row, one of the late Rajah's principal kharbarees, and he is at present in custody. Our latest advices are up to the 15th, when matters continued to remain quiet; still, however, it was deemed advisable that the 10th regiment should remain in the city and the 37th and 41st at the Residency; the order for the march from Kamptee, on the annual relief of the latter regiment, has for the present been countermanded. We are greatly pained to learn, that in the commotion on the 11th instant, the Rev. Mr. Hislop, of the Free Church Mission, met with treatment which at one time threatened to be followed by the most fatal consequences. Mr. Hislop had been visiting at six o'clock on the 11th, and previous to the riot, some of his Mahatta schools in the city, and while passing from one school to another, he was seen by some of the mob, who mistook him for the Commissioner or one of his assistants.

He was attacked first with mud and then with sticks, when he endeavoured to make his way quietly through them, but the excitement became greater and he was pelted with stones. He endeavoured to escape, but weakened from the loss of blood, he fell to the ground, when the inhuman wretches, notwithstanding they saw him covered with blood, continued to assault him, and would, in all probability, have murdered him, but for the providential interposition of an old scholar, who told them that Mr. Hislop was a missionary, and in no way connected with the Commission. The mob almost immediately desisted, and some even evinced compunction for what they had done, helping to lift Mr. Hislop from the ground. His pupil then conducted him to the house of a Mahatta officer, who sent him in his palanquin under an escort of sepoy to the mission-house, where he arrived so covered with dust and blood that all that could be discovered was, that he was a human being. Timely medical aid was afforded, and we are really glad to learn, that though severely hurt, Mr. Hislop is going on rapidly to recovery in a way no one could have ventured to hope.—Bombay Times, Oct. 20.

H. M.'s 98TH REGIMENT OF FOOT has been ordered to remain in India for another year.

THE MOFUSSIL POLICE.—We hear that a despatch has come out positively directing the attention of Government to the immediate necessity of reforming the Mofussil Police. We have, in a former issue, expressed at large our views of the only means by which this much needed reform can be effected, consistently with a due regard to the conservation of the public revenues. Only let the revenue and police functions of the Mofussil army of Peons be forthwith divorced, and we will undertake that there shall not be a pice of revenue collected next year, under the combined influence of a season of scarcity, the torture investigation, and the remodelling of the police.—Athenæum, October 7.

MALABAR, 28th Sept.—I am glad to have it in my power to say that cholera has entirely disappeared from our cantonment, and I hear equally favourable accounts of the southern districts of Malabar. No rain; weather very clear; Thermometer 80 deg. to 82 deg. in the shade. The rice crops are getting on remarkably well, and the next will be a good harvest, we hope. The price of grain is still high, and the sufferings of the poorer classes great. Major Haly, the commandant of the Malabar police corps, has left Tellichery for Calicut, where he will remain for six months, and will then proceed to Mallipooram. Already the corps numbers seventy men, most of whom are Moplahs, I am told. Why enlist Moplahs? Can they be expected to act against people of their own caste, and is it not more likely that they will side with them, rather than do their duty? The subadar is a Moplah. The Nairs are a warlike people, and best suited for employment in the police corps. The local authorities are busy in preparing for the establishment of the Government provincial school at Calicut, which it is expected will be opened in December next. From Calicut, I learn that Mr. Harris, the civil judge, has suspended a native judge (Moonsiff) for sundry irregularities, bribery, &c. The matter is now undergoing investigation. Trade is flourishing in Malabar. The merchants are busy in purchasing coir, fish oil, &c., and planters are preparing for a good coffee crop. H.M.'s 43rd L.I. is spoken of as the corps to relieve H.M.'s 25th, now stationed here. The 25th goes home in January or February.—Athenæum.

REMOVAL OF MR. CONWAY FROM OFFICE.—With equal surprise and regret, we read the following Minute of Consultation, which appears in the Examiner of this morning. Our contemporary cannot discover the cause of the painful step intimated, and is at a loss to understand "why this public act was not gazetted." We share in his perplexity as to either point:—"The Right Honourable the Governor in Council resolves to remove Mr. Conway from his office as agent to the Governor of Fort St. George at Kurnool. Mr. Daniel, sub-collector of Bellary, will proceed forthwith to Kurnool as officiating agent, and take charge of the district from Mr. Conway, who from the date of his being relieved, will be put on the out of employ allowances. Mr. Pelly will, for the present, place the Honourable D. Arbuthnot in charge of the Bellary sub-collectorate, and will give the head-assistant's charge to Mr. C. R. Pelly."—Ibid.

HYDRABAD MEDICAL SCHOOL.—Thirty students of the Hyderabad Medical School are now scattered through the provinces of that state, practising on their own account. All the pupils are instructed through the medium of the vernacular, and their progress is said to be remarkable. One student recently performed successfully an operation in lithotomy with instruments of pewter, and a common scalpel for a knife. The success of the school is mainly owing to the knowledge and zeal of Dr. Maclean.

TORTURE.—The Government of Madras has appointed a Commission to inquire into the practice of collecting revenue by the use of torture. The members are Mr. Stokes, C. S.; Mr. E. F. Elliott, chief magistrate; and Mr. Bruce Norton. The public of the presidency are apparently inclined to believe that the inquiry is a blind. We perceive no valid reason for such a sneer.

THE LADY NUGENT.—Another search is to be made for the missing Lady Nugent. Instructions have been issued for the Pluto, now at Maulmain, to visit the coasts of the Nicobar, Andaman, and Preparis isles, and institute a strict examination. This is the third effort which has been made to discover the fate of this unhappy vessel, and we fear it will be equally unsuccessful.

MESSRS. BAIN BROTHERS.—The commercial community of Madras has been thrown into a state of excitement by the disappearance from the stage, in a most sudden and unenviable manner, of two gentlemen, Messrs. Bain and Cowan, trading under the name of Bain Brothers, leaving large liabilities. Matters were so secretly transacted, that we are left entirely to surmises.

THE MONSOON has regularly set in; we have had some abundant and heart-cheering showers.

THE REV. MR. KIDD, the secretary to the Military Orphan Society, has been nominated to an assistant chaplaincy at Madras.

NAGPORE.—The Governor-General has approved of the recommendation of Captain Elliott, the officiating commissioner at Nagpore, that three natives should be nominated assistant commissioners, one on a salary not exceeding Rs. 500, and the other two on salaries of Rs. 250 each per mensem.

DR. C. SMITH.—The Governor-General of India, we are informed, has appointed Dr. G. Smith, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology at the Medical College, to the vacant surgeoncy of the Hyderabad Residency. Dr. Smith has, for upwards of three years, been zealously labouring as a teacher of Medicine at the Madras College, and had also distinguished himself as a lecturer in the Mofussil. Till lately, he held the appointment of secretary to the college council, and strenuously exerted himself to obtain for the Madras Medical College the recognition of the Royal College of Surgeons, and other collegiate institutions of Great Britain. He is a very successful teacher, and his approaching departure is sincerely regretted by all who have had the privilege of being his pupils. We wish him every success in his new sphere of labour, and have not the least doubt but that he will be highly appreciated as a teacher in the Bolarum Medical School, of which he becomes the superintendent by virtue of his nomination as Residency Surgeon.—Athenæum, Oct. 21.

BOMBAY:

THE COMMERCE OF BOMBAY.

The total value of the imports to Bombay for 1853-54 amounts to close on eight millions and a half sterling, or Rs. 8,43,83,626; the exports to above nine millions and a half, or Rs. 9,50,71,893; the latter exceeds by nearly three lakhs the largest exportations of any given year in our commercial history. The imports fall short of those of last year by above seven lakhs, but exceed the average of the previous five years by above eighteen lakhs—the exports exceeding the averages by nearly a crore. The principal decrease on our imports have been in those from Aden, amounting to above forty-six lakhs, and China amounting to close on sixty-six. In the exports to China we have a decrease on the year of above a million and quarter, and to the United Kingdom of twenty-eight lakhs. But then the title China is a misleading one, at all events as contradistinguished from Hongkong, whose own consumption must be insignificant. When we find it receiving a crore and a half worth of goods more this season than last, while China receives nearly all this less, it comes to be merely an alteration of the designation of the ports—the actual trade is nearly the same.

At the same time, the decrease on the amount of goods sent to Bombay, on both put together, exceeds eighty lakhs—a substantial fraction of our import trade from China. The largest item which we observe amongst our imports is that of plain cotton, which has been imported to the value of Rs. 1,43,18,257; the manufactured cottons of all descriptions, including thread, having been imported to the value of upwards of two millions sterling. The most valuable of our exports is opium, of which Rs. 2,75,06,527 have quitted our shores in the year. Next to this is the much safer and more satisfactory commodity, cotton-wool, of which we have despatched Rs. 1,77,15,258 worth to England and China. We find a much more consolatory position assigned to books than we were prepared for; nearly two lakhs worth have been imported in the course of the year, or, including pictures and stationery, above four and a half lakhs' worth. For once, the three together beat millinery, which has only a lakh and three-quarters assigned it, although probably its apparent value may be diminished by the sub-divisions of wearing apparel of which we have above a lakh, hosiery of which we have Rs. 77,761 worth, with about half as much in haberdashery. On the whole, the uncomplimentary comparison of the Friend of India of the amount paid for what we put on our heads contrasted with that for what we put in them, would not this season materially affect us. Besides this we find 27,000 rupees worth of printing presses imported, so that we are prepared to manufacture literature as well as cotton thread more extensively than heretofore for ourselves. We find some curiosities amongst the entries; pearls, for example, of which fifteen lakhs worth seem to have been imported, are set down as precious stones, and Samada stone comes under stones in place of under gems or Corundum, where we looked for it. The mistake, if it be one, is insignificant, in either case probably most people will look for them just in the place where they are set down.

The last of these affords a curious illustration of how a misnomer may creep in; its true native name is Corund, which mineralogists have transformed into Corundum; next to the diamond and ruby it is the hardest substance known to us, and is employed for cutting and polishing gems, glass, steel, and various other metals. It so happens, however, that there is a variety of steatite, an exceedingly soft and sectile mineral, except in one single quality, that is also used for polishing, as unlike Corundum as possible. It is called by mineralogists Pagoda lite, by the natives Sammy or Samny stone, from the circumstances of its being employed to supply images for their temples, and the name slightly corrupted, which is perfectly inapplicable to the one though quite characteristic of the other mineral, comes to be applied to both, and Corundum appears in the export list as Samada stone, the name certainly by which it is generally known in these parts.

The shipping has this season been very beautifully classified, and from this it appears that the total amount of square rigged vessels that have arrived have had an aggregate burden of close upon 200,000 tons; the tonnage of the native craft being more than double this. The total tonnage of vessels leaving the port has amounted to 357,298, being nearly equally divided betwixt square rigged and native vessels. American ships to the extent of nearly 5,000 tons have arrived, and of nearly 4,000 have departed. Above 30,000 tons have been sent to China, that is Hong Kong and other ports, and about 29,000 tons received from it; about one-half by the P. and O. C.'s steamers. Ships to the extent of 46,000 tons have been despatched for, and to that of 5,000 tons have arrived from New South Wales; and this, which after the United Kingdom now forms the principal resort of our shipping, coming within 30,000 tons of England itself, forms an entirely new source of trade to us.—Bombay Times.

THE LONDON MAIL of Sept. 28 arrived at Bombay on Oct. 26, (per Auckland). The next mail of Oct. 9 left Aden (per Feroze) Oct. 28, for Bombay.

FREIGHT FROM BOMBAY TO KURRACHEE.—A correspondent of the Sindian animadvertes severely on the charges of the Bombay Steam Navigation Company for freight between Kurrachee and the Presidency. Some parcels recently sent out to Bombay from England cost 2l. 10s. a ton. From thence to Kurrachee, the cost was 3l. 10s. more, or about 43 per cent. in excess of the charge for transport over ten times the distance.

MUSEUM AND ZOOLOGICAL GARDEN.—The Bombay Times states that a Joint Stock Company for creating a museum and a zoological garden will shortly be started. The capital is to be half a lac of rupees, in two thousand shares of twenty-five rupees each. It is calculated that a return of ten per cent. may be easily obtained. A good zoological collection is almost always interesting to natives, but in Bengal, at least, they would scarcely pay to visit the museum. The Times quotes the attendance at the Madras Museum as a proof of the interest felt in such collections. It averages 3,000 a month, and we suspect the visitors do not pay.

LOW CASTE SCHOOLS.—The government of Bombay has given Rs. 5,000 towards a building for the low caste schools at Poona. These schools have been founded and maintained by Mr. Jotee Govind Phoolay, a man whose name deserves not to be forgotten.

VOLUNTEERS FOR SERVICE IN RUSSIA.—The Bombay Telegraph and Courier states that the Governor-General is about to invite volunteers from India for the Turkish army. The officers will be selected with exceeding care, and rise in the Turkish army according to their merit and qualifications. The time for this volunteering is said not to be yet fixed. The statement rests apparently on the authority of an Indian general now at home.

THE LEADING MERCHANTS OF BOMBAY intend to establish a joint-stock native agency in London. The object, we presume, is at once mercantile and political.

COMMAND OF THE BOMBAY ARMY.—Major-General Fane is now spoken of for the command of the Bombay army, and Colonel Markham is said to be likely to obtain the command of a division.

MINISTER OF EDUCATION.—We learn from the Bombay Gazette that Mr. C. J. Erskine of the Civil Service, and at present Civil Auditor, is to be the new Minister of Education in the Presidency of Bombay. The Gazette adds, Mr. Erskine is one of the few gentlemen in India whose peculiar reputation would justify this choice; though no doubt, there are numbers of mute inglorious Miltons, who could fulfil the duties of the new office well. The educational machinery of this Presidency evidently wants remodelling at present.

THE FIRST COMPANY SAPPERS AND MINERS, and a Detail to complete the third company, will march from Poona on the 6th Nov. en route to Aden, to relieve the company of the Madras Sappers and Miners now at that station.

BRIBERY.—We have just heard that a native political officer in Rewa Kanta, has been suspended, for taking bribes from a native prince. This is unfortunate at the present time, the more especially that we find writers in the English journals received by the last mail, speaking of native probity in rather an unfavourable light.

IMPORTS (Bombay, Oct. 28, 1854.)—We cannot report any improvement in the import market. Grey Shirtings.—The sales during the past fortnight have amounted to 38,400 pieces, principally of 40 inch, and at still further reduced prices; 5½ lbs. are quoted at Rs. 3, 6 lbs. at Rs. 3 5 annas, and 7 lbs. at Rs. 4 to Rs. 4 1 anna. The heavier qualities are in slight demand, but some sales have been effected. 45 inch are not easy of sale in the lighter qualities, there is, however, some inquiry for 8½ and 9 lbs. The sales in White Shirtings have been confined almost to the lower qualities.

PROCLAMATION.

John Bowring.—

By his excellency Sir John Bowring, Knight, LL.D., Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the colony of Hong-Kong and its dependencies, and Vice-Admiral of the same, her Majesty's Plenipotentiary and Chief Superintendent of the trade of British subjects in China.

Whereas it has come to the knowledge of her Majesty's Government that the transportation of Chinese Coolies to the Chincha or Guano islands has resulted in the most aggravated form of slavery,—Notice is hereby given, that it is illegal for any British subject to be engaged, directly or indirectly, in such traffic; and her Majesty's Government will exercise the utmost rigour of the laws for the suppression of the slave trade against all persons so engaged in the export of natives of the empire of China.

By his Excellency's Command,
CHARLES ST. GEO. CLEVERLY, for the Colonial Secretary.

God Save the Queen.

Given at Victoria, Hongkong, this 14th day of September, 1854.

PROCLAMATION.

Diplomatic Department.

By his Excellency Sir John Bowring, Knt., her Britannic Majesty's plenipotentiary and chief superintendent of the trade of British subjects in China, &c. &c.

Whereas authentic information has reached her Majesty's Government, of intolerable cruelties and oppressions practised upon Chinese emigrants, who have been conveyed in British ships to the Chincha or Guano Islands, and reduced to a state of slavery,—It is hereby made known to all consignees, owners, and commanders of British vessels in China, that they are absolutely prohibited from accepting charters, or conveying emigrants to the said Islands, and that any disobedience to this prohibition will be visited by the severest penalties of the law. And her Majesty's consular authorities are in their several jurisdictions required to ascertain and report to this superintendency, for the information of her Majesty's Government, any case which may come to their knowledge of such charter or conveyance of the subjects of China to the islands aforesaid, not only as regards the five legal ports of China, but from any other place or places whereat emigrants may be shipped.

God Save the Queen.

JOHN BOWRING,

Given at Victoria, Hongkong,

11th Sept. 1854.—Friend of China, Oct 7.

ARREARS OF DUTIES.—British Consulate, Shanghai, Sept. 11, 1854.—Her Majesty's consul has received instructions under date, August 28, from His Excellency Sir John Bowring, her Majesty's plenipotentiary and chief superintendent of trade, directing that the bonds received for arrears of duties between the "capture of the City of Shanghai and the 9th of February, shall be cancelled." All parties, therefore, having given such bonds to her Majesty's consul within the specified period, are informed that on application at the consulate, the same will be returned to them cancelled. RUTHERFORD ALCOCK, Consul. To the Foreign Mercantile Community, Shanghai.—North-China Herald, September 16.

AN EARTHQUAKE AT VICTORIA.—At about thirteen minutes past eight on the morning of Thursday last, three smart shocks of an earthquake were felt in this island. The indications of the visitation were unmistakable: house-bells rang, clocks stopped, a tremulous motion of the ground was felt, and a dull, rumbling, under-ground noise was heard.

At Canton, which locality it seems to have visited about the same time, the evidences of its presence were, we hear, even more distinctly marked.—Friend of China, Sept. 30.

LOSS OF THE "LANCASTRIAN."—We left Hongkong Thursday, August 10th. Experienced very strong S.W. gales, with the barometer 29 deg. 20 min. and still falling. Being anxious to get to the northward, carried on all consistent sail; the weather still continuing tempestuous. At 11 a.m. on the 13th, made the White Dogs. Used all the necessary measures to procure a pilot. The weather still having a threatening appearance, and no boats of any description in sight, and having the proper bearings as described by the best authorities, and the most recent charts, I deemed it prudent to run for the proper anchorage, still expecting every moment to meet with a pilot. At 12 30, having the bearings as directed with a man in the chains, giving soundings as fast as possible, the ship grounded suddenly on the bar. Furling the sails, as the wind was blowing very strong from the southward, with heavy squalls, and after the sails were furled, the flood tide again carried her afloat. After the vessel was afloat in 3½ fathoms water, three China pilots came on board, one of whom reported himself an outside pilot, to whom I gave charge of the ship, and informed him that the draught of water of the ship was 14½ feet, and that we were in better than three fathoms. His orders were then promptly executed by myself, officers, and crew. The pilot ordered an anchor to be taken out to get the ship's head to the S.E., and sent hands aloft to loose sails; but a heavy squall coming on from the southward, the anchor was of no service, and the ship again grounded in a dangerous position. The ebb tide having now commenced, found all efforts to get her off impossible. Hired a large China boat, and commenced putting on board the stream anchor and cable; carpenter sounded the pump, and found her making no additional water. At 5 p.m., the ship lying upright without any motion, a noise was suddenly heard, as if some large block had fallen from aloft. Not finding anything of the kind to have occurred, proceeded below, and found the iron stanchions bent, and the ship showing evident symptoms of breaking up, viz., the cargo, hold-beams and knees displaced. At 6 p.m., the ship being quite dry from the ebbing of the tide, I went round with the officers and carpenter; found the ship out of all shape and breaking up fast. This we attributed to the strong ebb-tide washing the sand from the two ends, and leaving a hard bank amidsthips; on the return of the flood-tide, from the straining the ship had received, the water flowed in so far as to cover the between decks, since which it has ebbed and flowed with the tide. All hopes of saving the ship being at an end, wrote to Mr. Fincham, of the firm of Reiss and Co., to send me immediate assistance. At 1 p.m., signalled the ship Lord Warriston, from Hong-Kong to Fuh-chow-fu, but unfortunately it was blowing too hard to render any assistance. Mr. Fincham arrived on board at 2 p.m., and has promised to have lorchas to save the opium and treasure; but I regret to say I fear the ship will become a total loss. (Signed) R. T. LANGLEY, Commander, ship Lancastrian. August 14, 1854.—Friend of China, Sept. 20.

ARTICLES FOR THE PARIS EXHIBITION.

At a meeting of the local committee of Singapore for the collection of specimens of art and industry for the Paris Exhibition of 1855, held 2nd October, the secretary reported the safe arrival of some very fine specimens of inlaid furniture from the resident councillor of Pinang, with a parcel containing specimens of the woods used for inlaying, and the work in progress.

Also, from the late resident councillor of Malacca, a collection of stuffed birds, some mats ornamented with handsome edging, and a pillow with gold embroidered ends,—a sumpitan, and some other articles.

From Sarawak, a sacred jar of the Dyaks, called Penaga, believed by them to be of supernatural manufacture, and to be dug from the bowels of the earth. Some of these jars are valued as high as 2,000 reals.—A good specimen of a Baju from the Balow Dyaks, and a very handsome mat, the work of a Lundu Dyak woman, who was engaged six months in its manufacture.

The Hon. T. Church produced several valuable articles, the gift of the king of Siam, consisting of a cup and box, of a composition metal, formed of gold, silver, and copper; also some valuable silks; a very richly gold-embroidered piece of cloth, from the rajah of Tringanu, and some costly specimens of wearing apparel and silks, from the tumungong of Singapore; also a fine model of a double-banked Lanun pirate prahu.

In order to assist the exhibition, Colonel Butterworth placed his splendid collection of Malay and Dyak arms at the disposal of the committee, for transmission to the Paris exhibition.

SCINDE.

THE SCINDE RAILWAY MEETING.

Pursuant to notice, a meeting was held at the Collector's Cutcherry, Kurrachee, on Monday, August 28th, 1854. The meeting was numerously attended by most of the influential members of the community. Amongst those present were Mr. Frere, the Commissioner in Scinde, the General commanding the division, the Brigadier commanding at Kurrachee, and all the heads of departments.

Mr. Frere having taken the chair, said that he was sure the meeting would be very sorry to hear that Mr. Hardy Wells, whom he had hoped to see there to take a prominent part in their proceedings that evening, had been prevented by sudden and severe illness from being present. Mr. Wells had, however, addressed a letter to Major Preedy, from which and from other communications which he had himself received from Mr. Wells, he (the chairman) would as far as possible supply the information which he had hoped Mr. Wells would have been able personally to communicate to them. He would now say a few words as to the object of the meeting. The requisition calling it was addressed to all who were interested in the introduction of railways into the province. It might therefore be taken for granted, that all there present wished to see railways introduced, and that they did not require any argument to convince them of the utility of railways in general. As to the peculiar advantages which railways would confer on this province, much would doubtless be stated incidentally in the course of the evening. He would not, therefore, detain them with any discussion on the subject now, but briefly describe the history of the present undertaking. They were aware that the present scheme contemplated a line of railway to connect Kurrachee with the Indus. After describing the great length of the navigable channel of the Indus and its tributaries, and the difficulties in the navigation of the Delta, Mr. Frere explained that the railway was to connect Kurrachee, the only port on the coast near the mouth of the river, with Jerruck, which had been selected as being the lowest point on the stream where the channel was fixed and invariable, in consequence of the river there flowing over a rocky bed. He then described how Mr. Hardy Wells had, in passing over the districts between Kurrachee and the Indus about two years ago, been struck by the peculiar advantages it offered for the construction of a railway. Mr. Wells reported the results of his observations to parties at home who were interested in the subject, and forwarded detailed surveys, which had been procured for him by Major (now Colonel) Turner, and statistical and other data furnished by the late Mr. Macleod, deputy collector of customs, Kurrachee. In the same season, 1852-53, Lieut. Chapman, employed on a project for connecting the Indus with Kurrachee by a canal, pointed out the superior advantages of a railway in his published report. The project was taken up by Government, and detailed surveys ordered, the prosecution of which was interrupted by Lieut. Chapman's untimely death. In the meantime, the scheme proposed by the parties to whom Mr. Wells had reported in England was making progress. In Mr. Wells's unavoidable absence, he (the chairman) had been authorised to state that the reception which the scheme had met with from the home authorities was as favourable as could be reasonably expected; and the home Government was prepared to consider favourably any propositions on behalf of the railway which might be laid before them, backed by the recommendation of the Government of India. It was not necessary for him (the chairman) to state that he felt confident any scheme possessing such intrinsic merits, as he believed this did, would meet with every reasonable consideration from the Governor-General, who had organised and was now executing a vast scheme of railways for the whole of India, and he felt equally sure of like support from the Government of Bombay. Among the obstacles which had delayed the scheme, one was the want of certainty as to the character of the port. Of course, if the port were closed for four months of every year, it could never become better than the minor ports on the coast of India, and no railway terminating at such a port could be of more than local value. Mr. Wells, in his published pamphlet, and Col. Turner in his report on the bar, had shown that the natural advantages of the port were very great, and that the difficulties which existed were all capable of removal, provided the trade of the port were such as to justify the requisite expense. Last monsoon, Sir H. Leake sent up the Queen, the first large vessel which had ever come there in the monsoon, and the following were the results of last season's experience, as to the possibility of entering and leaving the harbour during the monsoon months:—

1853. June 20th, Queen, 750 tons, drawing 16 feet.
July 5th, Do.
„ 23rd, Do.

August 3rd, Auckland, 800 tons, 15½ feet.

" 5th, Do.

" 6th, Queen.

" 16th, Rubicon, 16 feet.

" 20th, Auckland.

" 27th, Do.

Feb. 8th, Vetura, 478 tons, 15½ feet.

" 11th, Rubicon.

But this experience of one season was of course inconclusive, and here is the result of the present season :—

1854. July 11th, Queen.

" 22nd, Sea Queen, 414 tons, 15 feet 8 inches.

August 2nd, Ann Black, 513 tons, 16 feet 3 inches.

" 7th, Two Dingees from Guadar.

" 13th, Queen.

" 23rd, Auckland.

" 27th, Do.

Now, after these results during two monsoons, there can hardly be said to be any further doubt but that even in its present state the port of Kurrachee is not closed to ships of any burden not drawing more than 16 or 17 feet water. After showing how much this most satisfactory result was due to Capt. Young, of the H.C.S. Queen, and to Lieut. Leeds, I.N. the port officer who had shown so much judgment and intrepidity under most trying circumstances, the Chairman proceeded to refer to Col. Turner for information as to the working surveys of the line, which were still incomplete, and which must of course be executed before any steps could be taken to commence the actual construction of the railway, but which he hoped would be completed before the close of another season. But the great difficulty of all was of course the capital. It had been found necessary to execute all Indian railways under a Government guarantee, and Mr. Wells had assured him, that the promoters of the scheme at home had every reason to hope that terms as favourable as those guaranteed to other lines would be obtained by them, provided they could satisfy the Government of India as to the intrinsic merits of their line. The war had deranged the money market, and there were questions still open as to the exact terms which might be reasonably asked for, but the promoters were sanguine that such questions would receive a satisfactory solution. Capitalists in England would naturally ask what was the local opinion as to the project, and this was a question which the meeting might this evening answer. The meeting would also afford an opportunity for parties so inclined to ask for information, which would as far as possible be afforded.

Colonel Turner then rose, and addressed the meeting as follows :—Gentlemen,—Our Chairman has referred you to me for information on various points, relative to the subject we have here assembled to consider, and I will endeavour to place that information briefly before you. The early history of the proposed railway has been explained to you. My connection with it is set forth in a letter written to the commissioner, on the occasion of my submitting to him the very lucid and able report of my lamented brother officer, the late Lieut. Chapman; that letter having been published by Government has, I doubt not, been read by most of you, but it is desirable that you should know what has been since done in the matter, and how far subsequent experience may have led me to modify the opinions I therein expressed. In that letter I stated the reasons why improved communication from Kurrachee to the Indus was so urgently required; subsequent experience proves more and more the necessity of some work for the attainment of that object; last year the communication from the mouth of the main river to the tidal creeks was cut off, and the river steamers had to pass by a circuitous route—this year the Hujjamee, a very useful channel last year, has been closed to steam vessels, and the pilots on it have been withdrawn; it has been proposed to improve these creeks, but though possible, such improvement can neither be durable nor certain, and will cost a very large sum of money. For the river navigation it is generally believed, that a class of boats larger than any now on the river, will be found the best adapted, but the Indus, one of the vessels now on the river, is already too large to be trusted in the tidal creeks, and thus improvement is checked. In my letter before referred to, I mentioned an instance, showing very palpably the want of improved means of communication from the river to Kurrachee. In travelling through the country after the inundation of 1851, I found at a place called Naree, a few miles above Schwan, stocks of Government grain of three successive years—the excessive inundation of that year had swamped it, and it was utterly spoiled, fit only for manure. At first I imagined the khardar must be to blame, but on inquiry I learned that there had been repeated attempts to sell it by auction, but that no one would buy it, because the cost of conveying it to a market would render it an unprofitable speculation. I also explained how well the Americans understood these matters: in that country it is said, that with much better made roads than anything we can boast of in this province, the cost of conveying wheat by such roads doubles its cost price, if carried a distance of 330 miles, while the same result is produced by carrying cheaper grains only 160 miles, whereas both could be carried, the wheat 330 miles, and the cheaper grain 160, by railway, for less than 10 per cent. on their cost prices. The effect of this, Gentlemen, we all feel at Kurrachee, we see by the prices current in the districts how cheap grain is there, and we know to our cost how much we have to pay to feed our horses here, are we not then individually interested in the object, leaving public spirit wholly out of the question? As an engineering work, further experience confirms me in the opinion I have already expressed, that there is no difficulty of any serious consequence to be contended with, the country I consider peculiarly favourable for railways—the hills may easily be avoided, and to the two principal difficulties, crossing the "Mullear" and the "Bahrán" rivers, I attach very little importance. In my letter before referred to, I stated my belief, that an examination of the "Bahrán" would prove that it might be crossed higher up than the direct line of road, without difficulty: that examination has been made by Mr. Woodhouse, of the Indian navy, and my expectation has been realized, for he has found a point, not out of the way, with rock on both banks, and throughout the bed of the river, at a depth of twelve feet. I have never been sanguine of the success of railways in India, as an investment for private capital, though I fully recognise the advantage they must prove to the country both politically and commercially. I was in Bombay when the Great Indian Peninsular Railway was got up, and did not take shares in it, because I did not believe it would pay as large a rate of interest as other equally safe investments, and notwithstanding the success of the portion of that line opened, I still think it will not pay when the extensions are completed. I do not mean to say it never will pay, but that it will not pay the first subscribers to it. The principal goods traffic expected, cotton, we all know is ready to be sent to a market at one season of the year, it can all be carried to Bombay in a few months, and for the rest of the year a traffic must spring up.—Not so, however, in Scinde: here we have two seasons, and the statistics before us prove that a paying goods traffic all the year round already exists. My objections therefore to invest in railways in general are not applicable to Scinde, and I hope to become a shareholder in the Kurrachee and Indus Railway. The chairman has referred to me on the question of how the preliminary surveys are to be made, I wish I could definitely solve the difficulty; I fully anticipated until very lately that an engineering staff engaged by the Railway Company now forming in England would have been here in the field early in November; in this hope I fear we shall be disappointed. I know that the Government is anxious that the surveys shall be set in hand; means indeed were sanctioned, and I do not doubt that Government would still carry on the work if only efficient men to undertake it could be found; I have been and still am in communication with several, but though I have by no means given up all hope that they may yet be forthcoming, I am sorry to say, I have not succeeded in securing their services up to the present time.

Major-General Sir H. Somerset rose, and said that he had been entrusted with a resolution, which he begged permission to read to the meeting. It ran as follows :—"That this meeting having heard that a Company is forming in England to construct a railway between Kurrachee and the Indus, request the Commissioner to state to Government their sense of the incalculable commercial and political advantages which such a work would confer on the province, and that he will express their hope that the Government of India may be solicited to assist the undertaking by the grant of the same privileges as may be conceded to undertakings of a similar character in other parts of India." The resolution was one in the tenor of which he so fully concurred that he felt much pleasure in being permitted to lay it before the highly influential and numerous meeting assembled on this occasion. He had not been long in the province, but his residence had been of sufficient duration to convince him beyond a doubt that the railroad now proposed was the measure most urgently required, and most immediately called for, to promote the well-being of this and the neighbouring countries. The Commissioner had suggested that he (the General) would demonstrate the advantages to be derived from a railroad in a military point of view. With all deference he would state that the first point for consideration was, whether there would be any return for the outlay. Capitalists must ensure some return before they would venture their capital; he need not tell them that this was an universal law with moneyed men all over the world. And what was there to ensure this? After the perusal of Lieut. Chapman's careful report founded upon facts and figures framed from statements of actual traffic, no one could doubt as to the returns from commercial sources. They had just heard, too, from Mr. Frere further illustrations of Lieut. Chapman's opinion. He would add one important item which had not been taken into calculation at all—and he would beg their attention to the fact that Government had determined to forward all troops and stores for the Punjab and adjacent provinces by this route, which even with its present difficulties is far superior to any other. Here, then, was one source of emolument at once secured. The Government stores, the iron and other materials required for stupendous public works, the large supplies of porter and ale—would form a very considerable item; the recruits arriving, the invalids returning to their homes, the troops relieving and relieved, the numerous officers taking or returning from leave—all these would swell the passenger returns far beyond the numbers for which calculation had been made. He had drawn attention to these military matters only so far as the profits of the Company would be affected, for, as he before observed, it was to a return for the outlay expended that the capitalist would look—and if capitalists would be convinced on this point, it would be better than any speechifying in this or any other place. He could not, however, overlook the advantages in a purely military point of view—the great benefit which the Government would derive from being enabled on emergency to transport large bodies of troops and set them down at their destination a hundred miles from their starting point in a few hours—or from forwarding for active service stores and provisions, or the other munitions of war. These are such palpable considerations, that he may be excused for only briefly touching thereon. But he is assured that they will have no small weight with the authorities in according favourable terms to any company that may contribute to the attainment of such great political and military advantages.

Sir Henry Somerset's motion was carried by acclamation without a dissentient voice.

In reference to Sir Henry Somerset's remarks as to the number of troops and Government stores which would take this route, the Chairman stated that last season 9,105 hogsheads of malt liquor were sent up from Kurrachee to Perozepore for the troops; they had arrived in excellent order, though they were of necessity exposed on the Indus during the whole hot season. They occupied from twenty days to more than a month in getting into Kotree from Kurrachee, a distance which by railway would be traversed in five or six hours. In 1852-3 only 200 tons of Government stores were sent to the Punjab; last season, 1853-4, the quantity was 3,429 tons.

Major Preedy then rose and addressed the meeting. He said that as the proposed railway was to be constructed entirely in his collectorate, he considered it his duty to bear testimony to the great commercial advantages likely to be gained by it, in the transport of large quantities of grain of all descriptions, which are produced in such luxuriance in Upper and Middle Scinde. The quantity of grain which might be exported from Kurrachee was immense. When Sir C. Napier was here, in the year of the Irish famine, he offered to have ready 11,000 tons of grain at Kurrachee for transmission; and such a quantity might and could have been spared without interfering with the consumption of the country. The cost of carriage now was so great as actually to prohibit grain as an export. The price of wheat and grain was at Shikarpore and Hyderabad, just one-half its price in Kurrachee, the navigation of the Indus rendering attempts to bring grain down as an export very hazardous. Maj. Preedy instanced a case where out of seven boats laden with grain which started from Kotree, but one arrived at Kurrachee, the other six being lost; if one or two boats only out of a batch of six or so were lost, it was generally considered a good venture. He looked, therefore, upon the grain transports alone to give a large return,—a return far exceeding what Lieut. Chapman had allowed towards the profits of a railroad in Scinde. Personally unacquainted with railways as he was, he could not speak to the nature of the country as being well adapted or otherwise, but if flat, hard, and level plains were required, he was certain there would be no better country for a railroad than that over which the proposed line was intended to pass. He, in conclusion, begged most cordially to support the proposition of Gen. Somerset.

In reply to a question from Maj. Forster, it was stated that a list of applications for shares was open at the office of Messrs. Leckie and Co. in Bombay.

Capt. Ashburner asked whether the proposed railway was connected with any plan for the improvement of the harbour?

The Chairman replied, that in the absence of Mr. Hardy Wells, who could have spoken more positively on the subject, he could only state that the two schemes would, he believed, be separately considered and decided on by Government as perfectly distinct and independent undertakings.

On the motion of Col. Sinclair, seconded by Sir H. Somerset, thanks were voted to the Chairman for his conduct in the chair, and the meeting separated.

HYDRABAD.—The following items of intelligence have reached us from Shikarpore and Hyderabad during the present week:—

"Shikarpore.—Fever prevails generally over the country, and small-pox is still raging at Shikarpore,—the deaths among the children averaging twenty per diem. It is, however, very satisfactory to state that the Hindoo prejudice against vaccination, in no place greater than in this city, has become so completely overcome, that the chief Mahajuns and the very Fakeers have submitted to it in their families."

"Hydrabad.—Mr. Bellasis, the collector, is still in the Halla districts, making Khurreef settlements. That the crops this season are very fine, and the water is still running in most of the large canals and kurias, even to their very tails. There has been no blight in this district, and the cultivators, we are assured, have hardly anything to complain of, except a few showers and a high wind about a fortnight ago, which did a little damage to some of the crops. The season has been most favourable. The khurreef harvest has just commenced, and will be very abundant. The cultivators have, throughout the Halla districts, and also in other parts of the Collectorate, gladly accepted cash rents, and there will, in consequence, be a considerable increase to the revenue."—Sindian, October 11.

UPPER SCINDE.—In Upper Scinde, the river has fallen below the level of any of the canals. The agricultural operations have not been retarded by unhealthiness, as has been usual at this season of the year, and the land for the spring crop is now being prepared. The Jowarree and cotton crops have suffered severely in some places from blight, but fortunately this is not a general subject of complaint.

From Larkana, it is reported that a fire broke out at Bungul darah, in the Rutta dara Kardarate, destroying property to the value of Rs. 140. The weather is excessively warm, and such a continued hot season as the present has seldom been known. The Ghar and Narr have ceased to flow, and all the other canals are dug. Fever is rather prevalent.

At Mehur the weather continues very warm during the day, the early mornings are beginning to get somewhat cooler; small pox and fever are prevalent. The accounts of the Jowarree and rice crops generally are very good; some of the former has been damaged here, and these by blight; great damage has been done to the New Orleans cotton from the attacks of caterpillars.

The weather at Jacobabad has become much more temperate and the mornings quite cold. The Buttai of the past Peshur crop is still going on. The khurreef are ripening, and, in one or two cases, the owners have commenced cutting them. The American cotton shows no sign of improvement. The river is still filling; in the Biggaree, there is about 2½ feet of water—there is also water in the Sonewah, Meeragawah, Noorwah, Boodwah, and Rajwah, all the remainder are dry. Owing to the plentiful supply of water from the Biggaree, the Zemindars are able to bring a good deal of land at the tail of that canal, under rubber cultivation this season—and "sursoo" is being sown. Small-pox still prevails among the children in Boordica, in the villages near the Indus—but there is no sickness whatever among the grown-up people. Sickness to a great extent exists among cattle, of whom many die daily of the disease called "Sith."—Ibid.

MURDER BY A POLICEMAN.—From Upper Sind we hear that a policeman at Sukkur ran wild, wounded a subedar and another policeman. The subedar died shortly afterwards. The man was captured by Lieutenant Newall, of the 2nd grenadiers, who had out a party of his men with loaded arms, and who advised him to lay down his sword which he did. He has been handed over to the police. The murderer declares that his frantic act was because the subedar refused him two days' leave.—Kossil, Oct. 13.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

WEDNESDAY, November 29, 1854.

HAILEYBURY.

For many years Haileybury College has been the nurse of the Civil Service of India: she has sent forth, year after year, groups of young men destined to fill high stations in our Indian territories, and, it must in fairness be added, for the most part to reflect credit on themselves and their connections. Her fate is now sealed; her doom is pronounced; her functions are drawing to a close—Haileybury is to be abolished.

Until lately, it was understood that the College was to be retained, though the mode of admission was to be changed. There will henceforward be no more admissions; the College must continue to exist until those who have already been nominated thereto, shall have completed their respective courses, and earned their dismissal to the warm regions of the East; but successors—collegiate successors at least—they are to have none. The East-India College had its origin early in the present century; it will date its abolition from about the middle of it.

The College was established because it was felt that the country did not afford an educational institution where a man could be fitted for the duties of public life in India. It is to be abolished, not because such lack of means no longer exists,—for we are not aware that it has been supplied,—but because fashion, who rules the world, has decreed that its time is come. This is not surprising, seeing that Oxford has been spared with difficulty, and has not escaped without some considerable maims and bruises, which may, perhaps, ultimately terminate in paralysis. It would of course be idle to compare the institution of Alfred with that of Charles Grant; but the mode of dealing with the latter, as well as with the former, is strikingly indicative of what is called the "spirit of the age." The short-comings of Haileybury have not insured its downfall: it is more effective than at any former period, while the sins of its pupils against discipline and good order have become matter of history. But it is destined to go; the progress people have so willed, and go it must. "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." Great is the spirit of progress which all the world now worshippeth, no matter, as a distinguished statesman observed, whether it be progress to paradise or progress in another direction. Young Rapid's philosophy—"push on, keep moving"—is that of the day; and move we must, though it be to effect an exchange of a service of silver for one of electrotype.

Competition is the means by which we are to "keep moving." Modest merit is to be ignored, as it ought to be in these dashing days. The young gentlemen who are to enter the lists for the Indian prizes are to get crammed where and how they please. Feeders may easily be found, they will spring up as wanted; Latin and Greek (if such antiquated studies be still required), Arabic and Persian (in which the far-famed Dey of Tunis gave his commands) will be furnished to order, and the examiners, like the judges at a cattle-show, will have to determine which of the human animals have been crammed with the best success. However, it is useless to dwell upon matters which fate has decreed shall come to pass. Those who live to see the effects of the new system, will see, we suspect, some strange specimens of Indian statesmen. We are no worshippers of Haileybury, but we doubt whether better men than it furnished will be found by scouring the highways and commons for candidates who will condescend to accept of Indian office in consideration of its being well paid. We have made our protest, and if India should go, let our words be remembered.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.

THE war with Russia is necessary, and, what is more, it is popular; but it may be doubted whether any portion of those who approve it, have ever sat seriously down to count the cost. We despatched an immense armament into the Baltic,—for what purpose it is difficult to say; but whatever it might be, we may presume that it has not been answered, seeing that the expedition has effected nothing. To the south, where the great battle was obviously to be fought, we despatched a most inadequate force,—inadequate, we mean, in point of numbers; for never was so much heroism, so much self-devotion, such a mass of soldierly qualities, concentrated in living men as animated those (too many of them, alas! fallen) who have so gloriously vindicated the national honour in the Crimea, and have so nobly attested that the blood of Englishmen is still that which flowed in the veins of the heroes of Crecy and Agincourt. But why were the numbers inadequate? It was not unknown that in the material of men the Russian stores were inexhaustible. It was known, moreover, that they were not at all careful of those stores, but valued them no more than so many wooden puppets.

These things being notorious, we certainly may ask, why were such a handful of Englishmen exposed to such terrible odds? Parliament will undoubtedly ask this, and we hope that a good answer may be at hand. Now the Government is bestirring itself; but why not sooner? Why sacrifice a large part of the flower of our army, and then suddenly recollect that we are not strong enough, and must seek additional aid? This error of pretending to do something, while the force allotted was unequal to what was expected from it, has ever been the besetting sin of our rulers. It was thus that the war was unnecessarily protracted in the Peninsula many years since: Wellington could have made much quicker work of it, but the Government at home would not give him the means. Surely it might have been thought that the lessons then taught would not have been forgotten; but this was more than forty years ago, and for at least half that time—perhaps more than half—men had made up their minds that there was never to be any more war. To hear the vile drivel poured forth on this matter, was enough to make the blood of any man of common sense boil within him. No more war!—but war has come, and what do the slavers say now? Why, they say as everybody else, that it has found us in a great degree unprepared—a result which these idiots, or worse, have done all in their power to bring about. So we go to war unprepared for it, and after some months find our position out. At last something is to be done, and part of that something has given rise to this article. We are hunting for troops wherever they can be had, and India, among other places, must contribute her quota. Some of the regiments stationed there will be withdrawn, to take their part in the great struggle which is to determine whether Russia is to domineer over the civilized world (the uncivilized will follow,—but of this we say nothing at present)—whether Russia, we repeat, is to domineer over the civilized world or not. The eyes of mankind are now directed to one point, whereat the destinies, not of ourselves only, but of unborn generations, are to be decided. God be with our armies,—preserve among them the noble spirit which they have hitherto displayed, guide them in the day of battle, and crown them with immortal victory.

A CONFLAGRATION.

WE regret to have to state, on authority worthy of reliance, i.e. the Manchester papers, that our dear friend Mr. John Bright has suffered conflagration—at least his effigy has been subjected to the process of cremation. He incurred this penalty by his memorable pro-Russian letter, which the recollection of his other extravagances could not atone for; and so it was determined that justice should be done vicariously, by burning the image of John Bright instead of John Bright himself. The figure was somewhat more than seven feet high, and sported a hat with an enormous brim. The match was applied and the execution commenced, when the police interfered and snatched away the hero from his martyrdom. The people, however, being Englishmen, would not give up their victim without a fight. The police were in turn attacked, and the person of the criminal rescued, not without the loss, however, of his broad-brimmed hat. Once more the execution began, but was again interrupted by the police, who, however, succeeded only in rescuing from destruction one of the unhappy individual's legs—the rest was consumed. The preservation of the one limb was fortunate, as now no one can say that the agitating Quaker has not a leg to stand upon;—he has one, or at least the police have it for him, and no doubt will restore it on demand. It will probably be as useful for walking, or rather for hopping, seeing there is but one, as the honourable gentleman's brains have ever been for thinking.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the annexed code of Regulations for the admission of Candidates at the first Examination, to be held in January next, for the appointment of ASSISTANT-SURGEONS in the service of the East-India Company, has been framed by the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, under the provisions of the Act 16 & 17 Vict. cap. 95, sec. 38.

REGULATIONS FOR THE ADMISSION OF CANDIDATES FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT-SURGEONS IN THE SERVICE OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

All natural-born subjects of her Majesty may be Candidates for admission into the service of the East-India Company as Assistant-Surgeons. They must, however, be between 22 and 28 years of age, and of sound bodily health.

They must subscribe and send in to Dr. Scott, the Physician to the Honourable East-India Company, before the 10th day of December, 1854, a declaration to the following effect:—

"I (Christian and surname at full length), a Candidate for employment as an Assistant-Surgeon in the service of the East-India Company, do hereby declare that I was years of age on the day of last, and that I labour under no constitutional disease or physical disability that can interfere with the due discharge of the duties of a medical officer; and I also attest my readiness to proceed on duty to India within three months of receiving my appointment."

This declaration must be accompanied by the following documents:—

1. Proof of age, either by extract from the register of the parish in which the Candidate was born, or by his own declaration pursuant to the Act 5 & 6 Wm. 4. c. 62.
2. A diploma in surgery, or a degree in medicine, provided an examination in surgery be required for such degree, from some body competent by law to grant or confer such diploma or degree.
3. A certificate of having attended two courses of lectures, of six months each, on the practice of physic, and of having attended for six months the practice and clinical instruction of the physicians at some hospital, containing at least on an average one hundred in-patients; or of having attended one course of lectures of six months, on the practice of physic, and clinical instruction for twelve months.
4. A certificate of having attended for three months the practical instruction given at one of the public asylums for the treatment of the insane.
5. A certificate of having attended for three months one of the institutions, or wards of a hospital, especially devoted to the treatment of ophthalmic disease.
6. A certificate of having attended a course of lectures on midwifery, and of having conducted at least six labours.
7. A certificate of having acquired a practical knowledge of cupping.

Candidates may also, at their option, send in certificates of attendance at any hospitals, or on any courses of lectures, in addition to the above. Attendance on a course of military surgery is recommended.

Candidates producing satisfactory certificates will be admitted to an Examination to be held in January, 1855.

The Examination will include the following subjects:—

1. Surgery in all its departments.
2. Medicine, including the diseases of women and children, therapeutics, pharmacy, and hygiene.
3. Anatomy and physiology, including comparative anatomy.
4. Natural history, including botany and zoology.

The examination will be conducted—

1. By means of written questions and answers.
2. By object examinations and experiments, when the subject admits of such tests.
3. By practical examination at the bedside of the patient, and by dissections and operations on the dead body.
4. By viva-voce examination.

The persons who shall be pronounced by the Examiners to be the best qualified in all respects, shall be appointed to fill the requisite number of appointments as Assistant-Surgeons in the East-India Company's service.

All Assistant-Surgeons are required to subscribe to the Military or Medical, and Medical Retiring Funds, at the Presidencies to which they may be respectively appointed, and to the Military Orphan Society also, if appointed to Bengal.

All Assistant-Surgeons who shall neglect or refuse to proceed to India under the orders of the Court of Directors, within three months from the date of their appointments, will be considered as having forfeited them, unless special circumstances shall justify a departure from this regulation.

Candidates may apply to Dr. Scott, 13, Stratton Street, for further information, if needed.

N.B.—The certificates and notices as to Examination herein contained, apply only to the Examination to be held in January next. Regulations regarding the requirements of Candidates for future Examinations will be issued after the first Examination.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

NOTE, 4TH OCTOBER, 1854.

Candidates who may not have been able to attend the practice of an asylum for the insane, or of an ophthalmic hospital, for three months previous to offering themselves for examination in January, 1855, will not be excluded from examination, but will, if successful in obtaining recommendation for appointments, be required to produce certificates of having attended such practice during the interval between the examination and the time of proceeding to India.

The Board of Examiners of Candidates for the appointments of Assistant-Surgeons in the East-India Company's service, give notice that, on the 8th January, 1855, they will hold Examinations at the East-India House, for the selections of Assistant-Surgeons. The selection will be made according to merit, and it is expected that about thirty appointments will be awarded.

J. D. DICKINSON, Deputy Secretary.

PROFESSIONAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY,
76, Cheapside.

The Directors of the Professional Life Assurance Company have the pleasure to publish the following Report:—

"To the Chairman and Directors of the Professional Life Assurance Company.

"Gentlemen,—In pursuance of your instructions, conveyed to us in a letter from your Secretary, Mr. Massey, dated the 22nd of June last, of which the following is a copy, we at once commenced a careful and minute investigation into the financial condition of the Professional Life Assurance Company, on or as of the 31st of December, 1853, and a valuation of all its outstanding risks and liabilities at that date.

"PROFESSIONAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY,
Offices, 76, Cheapside, London,
22nd June, 1854.

"Gentlemen,—I have the pleasure to inform you that, in consequence of the resignation of our Actuary, Mr. Baylis, from indisposition, the Directors conceive it of the highest importance, that a prompt and thorough investigation of the Company's position, and valuation of its existing policies, be made, in order that the conditions of their Deed of Settlement, respecting the first septennial declaration of bonus, may be strictly complied with. For this purpose, the Board will be happy to avail themselves of your professional experience, as the Executive in this investigation, convinced that, in your hands, the interests and integrity of the Institution will be amply protected. Should you feel disposed to accept this reference, I shall be prepared to furnish you with all the necessary data for the commencement of operations.

"I remain, Gentlemen,

"Your obedient Servant,

(Signed) "B. MASSEY, Secretary."

"To PETER HARDY, Esq.,
Actuary of the London Assurance Corporation.

"JENKIN JONES, Esq.,

Actuary to the National Mercantile Life Assurance Society.

"G. J. FARRANCE, Esq.,

Actuary of the City of London Life Assurance Society."

"During the progress of our labours, we have received very able and courteous assistance from your Secretary, Mr. Massey, and also from Mr. Winter, your Accountant, and the other Gentlemen connected with your establishment, in getting out the balance-sheet, and classifying the various and numerous risks; and we have now the honour to report the completion of our complicated and laborious duties, which have been rendered the more so, in consequence of the limited time in which we were required to complete the valuation.

"Having, after mature consideration, resolved on the adoption of what we believe to be a fair and equitable, but at the same time liberal plan of valuation, we have rigidly adhered to those principles throughout the entire investigation.

"The results are given in full detail in the balance-sheet annexed.

"From the various financial returns which have been made to us from the Office, we find that, after making an ample reserve to meet the future liabilities of the Company, there appears to be a balance in its favour, amounting to £23,347 3s. 6d., sufficient, in our opinion, to meet all proper expenses of management; and hereafter, together with other sources, and a contemplated reduction in future expenditure, to afford, at the next quinquennial period, a fair profit to the Shareholders, and a fair bonus to the Assured.

"It is not to be expected of any Life Assurance Society, in these days of active competition, that a large divisible surplus could possibly have been created during the first seven years of its existence; and the absence of such divisible surplus should not be looked on as any proof that the Society has been less successful than it ought to have been, more especially when it is also borne in mind that the Company has been affected, within the last few years, by an unusually heavy and accidental mortality.

The real index to the success of the Company, is to be found in the difficulties it has had to surmount with competing institutions.

"Notwithstanding these difficulties, the number of Policies that have been issued, and the sums that have been assured,—indeed, generally, the business that has been transacted during the first seven years of its existence, will bear a most favourable comparison with the amount of business transacted, within the same space of time, by the Equitable, the Scottish Widows' Fund, the Metropolitan, and other equally successful Societies.

"It may be admitted that the expenditure, in order to obtain this amount of business, has been larger than usual; but the expenditure of a Life Assurance Society, during the first few years, may be looked on not improperly in a commercial point of view, and regarded as money expended in the purchase or erection of a building, and in the preparation and establishment of a machinery, which will be thenceforward applied to the production of a future profit; and although the management of the PROFESSIONAL has been liberal, perhaps costly, yet, on mature consideration, we see no reason to regret the large expenditure, directed, as it has been so successfully, to the creation of a large and important business, which must hereafter be worked to a considerable profit, more particularly since the necessity for so large an expenditure has been surmounted.

"It is our opinion, founded on many years' experience, that although on the present occasion it would be highly inexpedient to make any addition to the policies of the Members, or any declaration of a Bonus, the Company has nevertheless unquestionable elements of strength within itself, and is now so firmly established, that if it be worked with prudence and energy during the next ensuing five years, and with the same degree of skill with which it has hitherto been conducted, the Directors will have no cause to regret adopting the advice we now give them, to abstain from entrenching on the present funds, and thus avoid weakening the security of the Shareholders and Members.

"The magnitude of the business which has been transacted, the numerous agencies which have been established, and the large and influential Proprietary, which, almost unexampled in the history of Life Assurance, has been collected together, are sound and solid evidences of the vigour with which the Office has been conducted, and fully justify us in recording our belief, that both the Shareholders and Members ought to be perfectly satisfied with results which so obviously indicate that the Company, with judicious modifications, which upon due examination may be found advisable, together with the intended economy in future expenditure, has before it a future of prosperity, or, indeed, of brilliant success.

"We have the honour to be, Gentlemen,

"Your obedient Servants,

(Signed) "PETER HARDY,

Actuary to the London Assurance.

"JENKIN JONES,

Actuary to the National Mercantile Life.

"GEORGE J. FARRANCE, Actuary to the City of London Life."

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future insurers FOUR-FIFTHS of the PROFITS, with QUINQUENNIAL DIVISION, or a LOW RATE of PREMIUM without participation of profits.

The next division of profits will be declared in June, 1855, when all participating policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1854, will be allowed to share in the profits.

At the several past divisions of profits made by this Company, the reversionary bonuses added to the policies from one-half the profits, amounted, on an average of the different ages, to about one per cent. per annum on the sums insured, and the total bonuses added at the four septennial divisions exceeded 770,000l.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The extra premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to insure their lives at the tabular premiums, may have their lives insured at extra premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50l.

ASSIGNMENTS OF POLICIES.—Written notices of, received and registered.

MEDICAL FEES paid by the Company, and no charge will be made for policy stamps.

Rear-Admiral Thornton.
Brodie McGhie Willcox, Esq., M.P.

The marked success which has attended the operations of this Society justifies the Directors in calling the attention of the public to the superior advantages held out to all classes desirous of affecting Assurances upon their lives.

The subjoined scale of rates is framed with the greatest care, and will be found to be as MODERATE as is CONSISTENT WITH PERFECT SECURITY.

Annual Premium required for the Assurance of £100 on a single Life, with participation in Profits:—

20	£1 18 8	35	£2 14 11	50	£4 5 6
25	2 3 3	40	3 3 0	55	5 5 10
30	2 8 10	45	3 12 2	60	6 13 2

Tables for Policies to be effected in India have been especially prepared from the records of the East-India Company, on the experience of mortality in that country.

During the last thirteen years, the reduction of Premium on Policies entitled to participate in Profits has averaged more than 44 per cent., and in the last four years it has been declared at 45 per cent.

An annual division is made of one-fifth of the ascertained profits of the five preceding years; the other four-fifths being set apart to enter into the average of succeeding years.

Of the sum annually divisible, 75 per cent. is apportioned to Policy-holders who have paid six annual Premiums, either in a Reduction of subsequent Premiums, or as a Bonus added to the Policy. The remainder is apportioned to the Shareholders.

Assets of the Society, upwards of £800,000.—Amount of Policies in force, £2,000,000.—Annual income arising from Premiums, exclusively of interest on the invested capital, exceeds £120,000.

Weekly Board-day, Thursday, at 1 o'clock.

Committees sit every Tuesday, at 12 o'clock, when Policies requiring despatch may be effected.

PURE LITERATURE FOR THE PEOPLE.

RE-ISSUE OF THE

"HOME CIRCLE."

THE most sincere friend of the family is the publication which elevates, instructs, and amuses its members without debasing them; this, by the disinterested testimony of TWO EMINENT JUDGES, the PUBLIC PRESS, and a very large number of PRIVATE INDIVIDUALS, is pronounced to be the peculiar characteristic of the HOME CIRCLE. Its pages, contributed to by the best writers of the day, embrace Histories, including Turkey and Russia, Essays, Tales, Notes and Queries, Needlework and Household Recipes, Original Translations, Chess, Music, etc., enlivened with Wood Engravings. Everything calculated to improve and nothing to offend. Order this work of your Bookseller; No. 1, price 1d.; Part 1, 6d.; and Vol 1, 4s. or 4s. 6d.; to be had of all Booksellers. The HOME CIRCLE being a STANDARD WORK is NEVER OUT OF PRINT; no excuse for its not being supplied to order can be sustained, as it may always be had at the Office.

Allen's Maps of India, &c.

DRAWN BY JOHN WALKER.

Geographer to the East-India Company.

A New Map of India;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorates, and the Position and Boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

*• The object kept in view in compiling this Map, has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all Stations—Civil and Military—are inserted, as well as those of all Towns and places of note, likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various Districts and Collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The Railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for Reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffuseness has been shunned.

A General Map of India;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Hon. East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

Map of India;

From the most recent authorities. On two sheets—Size, 2 ft. 10 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 1s.

Map of the Routes in India;

With Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this Map are given the whole of the Military and Civil Stations, together with the principal Towns, the villages being omitted so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies.

A Map of the Western Provinces of Hindoostan;

The Punjab, Cabool, Sind, Bhawalpore, &c.; including all the States between Candahar and Allahabad. On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 2 in. high. 30s.; or on cloth, in a case, £2; or on rollers, and varnished, £2. 10s.

Map of India and China, Burmah, Siam, the Malay Peninsula, and the Empire of Anam. On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 3 ft. 4 in. high. 10s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

Map showing the Steam Communication and Overland Routes

Between England, India, China, and Australia. Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 4 in. high; on cloth, in a case, 14s., or with rollers, and varnished, 18s.

Map of Arabia;

Compiled from all the most recent authorities, by order of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company.—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high; on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory.

On one sheet, 5s.; or on cloth, in a case, 6s.

Map of Affghanistan and the adjacent Countries;

On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

Map of China,

From the most authentic sources of information. One large sheet—Size, 2 ft. 7 in. wide; 2 ft. 2 in. high. 8s.; or on cloth, in a case, 11s.

Map of the Burman Empire,

Showing the annexed district of Pegu. One sheet, 3s. 6d.; or on cloth, in a case, 5s.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS an astonishing remedy for the CURE of ASTHMA.—Mrs. Newton, of Hyde, states in a letter to Mr. Wilde, Chemist, Hyde, that for many years she had been afflicted with severe attacks of Asthma, great difficulty of breathing, a violent cough, and acute pain in the side; she tried various remedies, and was under the treatment of several surgeons for months together, without obtaining any benefit;
at length she was induced to try Holloway's Pills;—the first dose gave relief, and by continuing them a cure has been effected. Being anxious that others so afflicted should obtain relief, she desires this fact to be publicly known.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THERE is scarcely anything from any part of India ; but as shopkeepers having little variety of stock and little modesty of demeanour, bring out as perfect novelties goods of old patterns, perhaps even previously shown and rejected, so the local journals parade matter with which the public here is quite familiar as something entirely new. The Burmese diplomatists have not yet been forwarded to Calcutta, and it seems somewhat doubtful whether they ever will. They make a great show where they are, and it is said do some mischief by giving out that they are come to purchase back the province of Pegu for seven crores of rupees. Whether his majesty of Ava has so much ready money is very much doubted ; but it is not doubted at all, that if he had he would not part with it. Probably the object of the mission is not a purchase—it is certainly not to pay the purchase-money, if a bargain were concluded. Most likely it is to unsettle that which to all appearance was previously settled, by exciting the feelings of the people against their new rulers. This effect, to some extent, the mission has produced ; for the people, in the true spirit of eastern prudence, or that which passes for prudence, are, it is said, beginning to flatter the men from Ava, by the exhibition of hostile feeling towards the English. There has been a week of holidays in Rangoon, it being the boat-racing time. Wrestling-matches have been mixed up with regattas. Some of the Burmans engaged in these matches, and not without success ; but their wrestling is like their diplomacy, most indirect and evasive.

In Nepal there are movements which have excited the anxiety of the British Government. The increase of the army of that state may be with a view to assailing some other neighbour than the British; but still it may be otherwise. Whatever may be the real object, it is to be hoped that the Governor-General is too wary to receive with implicit belief any Nepaulese assurances of its purpose being harmless as far as we are concerned. To cajole and deceive are regarded by all Orientals as among the first of the arts of life. We believe, however, that the caution of Lord Dalhousie may be trusted. A Nepaulese war at this time would be a very awkward addition to our Indian engagements.

The Caubul correspondent of the Delhi Gazette furnishes the following, which according to our wont we extract verbatim for the information of our readers.

"I have already mentioned to you in my last that on the arrival of Sirdar Mahomed Azum Khan (incorrectly spelt Azeem Khan in the last letter) at Cabul, a private discussion was held with the Dost on the politics of the day. All the official documents relative to Persia, Herat, Candahar, Toorkistan, and Peshawur, as well as those of Raimut Khan Oorukzaiee and the Nazir Khair-ool-lah, were produced, and the question, whether the negotiations with the English should at once be pressed to a result, as there was no time to be lost, was brought up for discussion. The council was composed of the Ameer and the members of his family. Sirdars Mahomed Azum Khan and Gholam Haidur Khan were the first to suggest and to insist upon it that the welfare of the Afghans demanded that they should be on good terms with the British, who have such large armies in our immediate neighbourhood. We therefore must abandon all thoughts of receiving the smallest advantage from a connection with Persia and Russia, at least until those powers have really fixed camps at Candahar and Bulkh. The Ameer joined in the same opinion, and the result of the conference was, as I said before, that a letter was ordered to be prepared to be addressed to the British Government. Nazir Naeem and Mirza Athmut Khan, the favourites of Sirdar Gholam Haidur Khan, were pointed out by the Ameer to go on the mission to Peshawur, but the Sirdar objected to this; whereupon his Highness selected Mirza Mahomed Hoossein Khan, who has left this, and probably before this reaches you, will deliver his credentials as Elchee from the Afghan to the British Government at Peshawur.

"The Ameer had, as I told you, resolved to set out with his army for Kelat, and had appointed Sirdar Mahomed Azum Khan to rule in his absence. The project has now been abandoned entirely, chiefly, I imagine, for want of funds, and on account of the Dost's fear that some of the chiefs, such as Sirdar Sultan Mahomed Khan, should take the opportunity of playing the traitor. However, he openly stated his belief that the abandonment of the expedition to Kelat will embolden the Ahmed Shahee chiefs, but that he will settle their business after he has arranged matters with the English.

"The little disturbances caused by the Momuds, near Peshawur, have induced a few foolish fanatics here to praise Saadut Khan for his obstinate hostility to the British, and to throw taunts at the other Afghans with whom the British alliance is becoming so popular. The people at large, on the other hand, say, that until the British take and hold Jellalabad, they will never be unmolested at Peshawur. This step would at any rate give a guarantee for the policy of the king of Bokhara by keeping him in awe, and it would render it impossible for the Russians to extend their influence from that city towards Cabul. Otherwise, say the people, as soon as the Russians have a firm footing in Kokan and Bokhara, their influence on the neighbouring Oosbeg states will be irresistible, and eventually English influence will be of small account either at Cabul or Peshawur."

As everything relating to Central Asia is at this time interesting, we select another passage from the correspondence of our friend of Delhi.

"Sirdar Mahomed Azum Khan has received from Peshawur what purports to be an abstract of the letter sent by the Khan of Kokan to Major Edwards. Right or wrong, here it is:—

"We have long been friendly towards the British Government, and any Englishman passing through our country has been invariably well treated, as in the case of the late Colonel Arthur Conolly, whose mission was treated by us with every consideration. On the contrary, the king of Bokhara murdered the British officers who visited his court.

"We are attacked by the Russians and have hitherto met them with success, but they are preparing to come again with an overwhelming force,* and it is therefore entreated that the exalted Government of the British will treat our kingdom as its own, and will not only send us large quantities of flint muskets (chik chuk-mak Toofung bisyar). We also pray you to send us a gentleman who is a good mineralogist, as there are a great many mines of gold and silver in the Kokan dominions.

"Sirdar Mahomed Azum Khan refused to meet the Persian agent who lately visited this country. He not only slighted him in a marked manner, but advised the Ameer to write to him at Kelat, where he was detained, and order him to leave the country and go about his business. For this stroke of policy, and also for the friendly negotiations now going on with the British at Peshawur, the party of Nazir Khairullah, headed by Sirdar Gholam Haidur Khan, wish to claim all the credit for themselves. Ruhmut Khan Oorukzaiee and Sirdar Mahomed Azum Khan claim for the latter all the credit of the policy, for the Sirdar has always been most anxious to witness with his own eyes the wonderful civilization of the English, and the improvement of Peshawur and the Punjab in their rule; and he will proceed on a special mission to the Governor-General as soon as the present envoy, Mirza Mahomed Hoossein Khan, brings his negotiations with the Chief Commissioner to a satisfactory conclusion.

"Sirdar Gholam Haidur Khan has received news from Peshawur, that the Chief Commissioner at Murree, finding that the heirs of Ahmud Khan, the late agent of the Nazir Khairullah, have not appeared to defend their cause against the Nazir's claims, has assured the Nazir of the favourable decision of his case.

* And have since done so, if our Bokhara commissioner may be relied on.—Ed. D. G.

"The Ameer has summoned to Cabul all the chiefs of the Khyburees, the Sheoranees (?), Ghilzaes, and the Kohistanes, in order to warn them that he is about to enter into amicable relations with the English, and to invite their concurrence.

"Sooltan Mahomed Khan, the ex-chief of Peshawur, whether with or without the knowledge of the Ameer, has sent Jafur Khan to follow the Persian agent with a few valuables, such as Cashmere shawls and chogas, as presents for the king of Persia. When the Ameer lately paid a visit to the sirdar, he (the sirdar) addressed his highness as follows: 'that he had associated with the British for nearly forty years, since the time when Moorcroft Sahib and others of the nation first passed through Afghanistan. He knows the British to be fully aware of the practice prevalent throughout Central Asia of securing the safety of a caravan, by paying 'Badarka' to one powerful chief, who guarantees its safe passage through the territories of plundering tribes. The British know all this, and are fully aware, that if the services of a powerful Barukzaiee chief like the Ameer were secured by an annual payment, he would not only assure the tranquillity of the British frontier, but provide safe-conducts for British officers throughout Central Asia, and so help to extend British influence to the heart of Persian Khorasan and Mawur-ool Nahur. Indeed he would, if called on, join with his family any expedition undertaken by the British. Yet the British neglect to follow the usual custom, and this looks suspicious. He (the sirdar) consequently believes that they will never come to any terms, unless he and Sirdar Mahomed Osman Khan and some others resume the negotiations with Persia and Russia. For it had not been wise to dismiss the Persian Elchee until friendly relations with the British Government had been finally established.

"The Dost heard all this with calm attention, and then calling upon God, assured the Sirdar and all the other chiefs that he would always provide for their safety, and the stability of their position, and that he has already taken steps to throw himself into the arms of Persia and Russia, provided the English treat his overtures with neglect or do not give him satisfactory terms. Whereupon the members of the ruling family performed a 'Fataha' and departed to their respective homes.

"Mahomed Shah Ghilzaiee, who made himself notorious during the English disasters at Cabul, and who since their departure has refused to acknowledge the authority of the Ameer, has addressed a petition to the Shah of Persia, praying that his Majesty will give every aid to Kohundil Khan and the other Candahar chiefs, but withdraw all confidence from the Ameer of Cabul, who is allying himself with the infidels at Peshawur, and will some day or other attack Musahid under the instigation of the English, and so secure them the possession of Herat, which is the real gate of Persia. This letter was intercepted by the Ameer's people between Ghilzee and Kelat, and the bearer was hanged."

The news from Bombay altogether is of a painful character. The Commander-in-Chief, Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, has yielded to the great destroyer, death. He appears to be universally and deservedly lamented. It was generally understood that he was destined to fill the office of Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in India, but Providence has willed otherwise. The Governor, Lord Elphinstone, was suffering under severe indisposition, produced it is stated by climatic causes. To complete the catalogue of misfortune, Bombay has been ravaged by a tremendous storm, the calamitous effects of which, in regard to the loss, both of life and property, are of the most fearful extent. The Courier closes a description of the melancholy event by saying "we do not think the whole history of storms could furnish a parallel to the cyclone of the 2nd November."

BURMAH.

LIEUT. BLAIR, MADRAS ARTILLERY.—As a temporary measure, Lieut. Blair, of the Madras Artillery, has been employed at Prome on a staff salary of Rs. 150 per month, in removing an ornamental building, the Poongee House, for Barrackpore Park, intended for immediate conveyance to this Presidency.—Englishman, Oct. 16.

RIVER POLICE.—The Commissioner of the Tenasserim and Martaban Provinces lately asked the sanction of the Governor General for the formation of two establishments of River Police, one for Sittang, and another for the rivers between the Salween and Beeling. The Governor General in Council perceived that, owing to the large saving made in the river establishment of Province Amherst, which was maintained in great part for the protection of Moulmein, and which the annexation of Martaban has enabled the commissioner generally to reduce the aggregate cost of the Salween River Police prospectively, and of the two new River Police establishments which the commissioner recommended for the annexed provinces under his jurisdiction, will exceed by more than Rs. 280 a month the cost of the establishment therefore mentioned on the Salween alone. This, in his lordship's opinions was a very satisfactory result, and he accordingly sanctioned the new establishment proposed by the commissioner when the actual constitution of the force was commenced, on the condition mentioned in the commissioner's letter. The formation of a police post half way between Sittang and Shway Gyeen, and of another thirty or forty miles above Shway Gyeen appeared to the Governor General judicious measures, and had his approval.—Englishman, Oct. 18.

BENGAL.

AFGHANISTAN. THE DESTINY OF THE EMPIRE.

Perhaps the most remarkable circumstance in the moral history of the empire, has been the reaction against Russophobia. For nearly four years, the Indian public lived in a state of perpetual alarm. Every movement beyond the frontier, and every half-caught rumour from central Asia, was interpreted as an indication of the policy of St. Petersburg. Men grew familiar with Balkh, and studied Bokhara; bought up Moorcroft's travels, and talked of Khirgiz, steppes, and the Jazartes. The natives shared in the anxiety of the governing class; the Mussulmans looked for a deliverer, who should pour a new army of fanatics through the passes; and Hindoos buried their jewels within sight of Comorin. Then came a violent reaction. It was known that Russian plans had been suspended, and presumed that they had also been abandoned. An unreasoning confidence took the place of an unreasonable fear. Because Russia could never hope to force the passes, she would never try to march from the borders of the Caspian. Because Petrovich had been beaten by the snow, Central Asia was impassable. Because folly, licentiousness, and indecision had cost us a great treasure, and still more valuable lives, the politics of Central Asia were to be totally ignored. Other circumstances aided the reaction. The very name of Afghanistan was hateful to English ears. Wars within the frontier, the conquest of Scinde, and the great danger on the Sutlej, distracted popular attention, and Afghanistan slipped as it were out of the sight of India. The new generation knew and cared nothing about the barbarous politics of the savage races beyond the Suleiman; and when the other day a Russian advance was announced, and its progress delineated week by week in a north-west journal, the statements were received as ridiculous inventions.

The tide has turned at last, and our "credulity" will soon be denominated foresight. We are enabled to confirm absolutely the chief statements of the Cabul correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, and by implication to authenticate the remainder. About a month since, an envoy from Kokan, named Shahzada Sultan Mahomed, Suddozye came into Peshawur on a mission to the chief commissioner. He had been six months on the road, and was full of the Russian approach towards his own province. He was followed by a more important embassy. Dost Mahomed is really frightened, his cause of alarm is really a Russian advance, and he has really despatched an embassy to the British Government. About the 12th October, Meerza Kassim Khan, mohurbur, or keeper of the great seal to Dost Mahomed, arrived in Peshawur as envoy from the Ameer. Major Edwardes was in the hazara, and thither the envoy proceeded with his credentials. Of course his master's views as yet remain a secret; but it is thoroughly understood that the Ameer is anxious for assistance.

We have not the slightest intention of attempting to revive the forgotten panic which we call Russophobia. We know that Kokan is 700 miles from the Khyber, that the path is through an uncultivated desert, that Baber in the same locality twice lost an army in the snow, and that if 20,000 Russian Calmucks did force the passes they would be annihilated in the valley of Peshawur. With every officer of sense in India we regard with dread even the appearance of interference in the politics of Central Asia. It has brought to the empire nothing but disaster, and to our prestige nothing but disgrace. But we cannot conceal from ourselves that the disinclination to meddle with Burmah was at least as great, and that an English officer is commissioner of Pegu. There are contingencies which may force us to accept an alternative as dangerous as undesired. So long as the states of Central Asia remain native states, their affairs are as unimportant to the empire as the quarrels of Feejeans. It is nothing to us whether the savage who occupies Bokhara or the semi-barbarians who quarrel in Candahar, are victorious or defeated. If they remain at peace we know that the caravans will travel undisturbed, and the revenue will profit. If they remain at war, we know that every stroke falls on some one of whom the world is willing to be rid. But the question becomes more serious if we are to believe that these states may be united, that a second empire may be formed beyond the Suleiman range, and that the courage of mountaineers is to be organized by the science of the West. That contingency—with all deference to those who hold an opposite opinion—we do not deem to be absurd. It is believed that the Russians are masters of Kokan. It is certain that the petty states of that region are alarmed to a degree which overcomes their dread of British annexation. It is allowed that Russian officers are not in Kokan to botanize, or even to add a few more thousand miles of steppe to an empire whose boundaries have never yet been traced. Their object may not be India, and even if it is, it may be unattainable. But they have an object, and we protest against the belief that courage means stupidity, and that we are not to watch events however important, or receive assertions however well authenticated.—Friend of India.

THE STABBING CASE AT BERTHAMPORE.

Some excitement has recently been created in Calcutta by a report that a civilian has murdered a native at Berhampore. We should not have alluded to it, but for the disposition which exists in England to magnify every half-comprehended case of "brutality to natives." That disposition is not decreased by the tendency of a class in this country to consider every offence of a civilian as illustrative of the service. The steps of the argument are as well known as they are irrational. A civilian is reported to have killed a native, therefore he has killed him, therefore he killed him out of wantonness, therefore the civil service is in the habit of killing natives for amusement. We beg to be understood that we are in earnest. A correspondent of the Citizen has really drawn all these deductions, with a force which shows that if he does not believe them himself, he intends to create that belief in others.

The facts of the present case are briefly these:—Mr. J. D. Ouseley, one of a family who for generations have been remarkable in India for eccentricity and ability, is assistant to the magistrate of Moorsheadabad. As such he was of course required to pass the examination prescribed by the recent rules, and whether from illness or some other cause, the duty appears to have caused him unusual anxiety. On the last day he became violently excited, and even expressed a fear, evidently genuine, for his own reason. The examination, however, was finished, and Mr. Ouseley started for a factory belonging to a relative in the employ of Messrs. Lyall & Co. The journey lasted the whole day, and it seems that Mr. Ouseley, half-mad with the previous excitement, the fatigue, the heat, and the journey, drank much too freely. A feverish, restless night increased the delirium, and in the morning he would speak to no one. His cousin who was with him, left him for a few moments, and it would appear that he took up an Afghan dagger, went into the garden, and stuck it into the back of a coolie working there, then took off his hat, and walked about in the burning sun. When interrogated by his cousin he at once admitted the deed, but declared that he could assign neither motive or palliation. There was no dispute with the unfortunate native, no complaint, and apparently no word spoken on either side. The presumption, strengthened by his own subsequent statements, is that the sight of the dagger suggested to Mr. Ouseley, the idea of suicide, and the sight of the coolie, the fancy that he would be opposed. Since the act, the health of the accused has not improved, and there can be little doubt that the reason of the unhappy young man has been materially impaired. We have therefore considered it better to state the facts at once, than to suffer the circulation of reports injurious to society generally, and painful to all his relatives.

The wounded man, by the last advices, was doing well.—Friend of India.

PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATION WITH BURMAH.

The embassy deputed by the Court of Ava to the Government of India arrived in Rangoon on the 5th instant. It comprises besides the envoy, five official personages, an under secretary of state, Mr. Macertish, an Armenian, holding the office of kala woon or governor of foreigners, the superintendent of marine, and two individuals of inferior rank. The ambassador selected is the old dalla woon, the only official in Pegu, who displayed at once courage and honesty in his dealings with Commodore Lambert. He is not a man of any attainments, but remarkable at once for caution, and for his thorough comprehension of British power. He now holds an office which we should call steward of the household, and the selection may serve to indicate that the king is really desirous of amicable arrangements. Even this man, however, probably the only officer in the kingdom fitted for such an embassy, displayed at the outset the innate insolence of a true Burmese. He expected the commissioner to meet him, and kept the British officers waiting for two hours. Fortunately, Captain Phayre was not present, and the embassy has not yet been officially acknowledged. It appears, that shortly before the arrival of the envoy, a letter had been received from Ava, containing expressions as distasteful as injurious to the Government. Forms, said Lord Dalhousie, on a former occasion, are things with the Burmese, and in accordance with a wise, though haughty policy, the missive was returned. It must be corrected before the envoy can be received, and even then he may not be permitted to proceed to Calcutta. The Government does not desire his presence except as the bearer of a treaty, and it remains to be seen whether he is empowered to make any concessions whatsoever. The point must be settled in a few days, but until it is decided, the Burmese embassy must remain a political possibility.

Meanwhile, a report is current of a project which may materially influence the views of the Government of India. The King of Ava, with all his pride of pedigree, is not indifferent to pice. He desires Mengdoo as the district from which his title is derived, but he requires Bassein to augment his financial resources. That territory is not only the richest rice-field on the globe, it possesses a port which might compensate for the loss of Rangoon, and the loss of Rangoon has been severely felt. Ava, shut out from the sea by the territories of the Company, has become dependent for its trade upon the will of the Governor-general. Not a pound of powder or a yard of calico can be sold or bought in Umeeraipoora without his consent and assistance. There is no port, and therefore no foreigners, and the king loses at once the pleasure of torturing Europeans, and the profits which his predecessors extorted in the process. He wishes for Bassein, for the deep river, and the fertile district in addition to Mengdoo. His majesty, however, contemplates the possibility of a refusal, and has authorized the Dalla Woon in that case to proceed to England, and plead his cause directly with the British Government. We need scarcely say that so astute a project never emanated from the brain of a Burmese prince or his Burmese advisers. It has been recommended by the Austrian Jesuit, M. Abona, whose diplomatic sophistry once before almost baffled the commissioners. We will not absolutely vouch for this report, but it rests on intelligence as accurate as any the Government is likely to obtain, and may be elucidated by the subsequent proceedings of the Dalla Woon. We cannot consider it expedient that so able a manœuvre should be permitted to succeed. It is true that ten days' residence in England will open the eyes of the envoy, will convince him of the folly of resistance, and will render him, like Jung Bahadoor, "a firm and obedient subject of her Majesty." He may, however, fail to impress those convictions on his master, and English statesmen know little of the importance of Bassein. A few thousand square miles of paddy field will appear as nothing, to men whose heads will be filled with plans for the re-distribution of the balance of power in Europe. They are scarcely aware, either, of the necessity of leaving the Governor-General the final referee, and in the name of a specious moderation may excite the hopes of every prince in treaty with the Government of India. Even the possibility of such a disaster ought to be averted.—Friend of India.

THE LONDON MAIL of September 25th arrived at Ceylon October 26th, Madras October 28th, and Calcutta November 2nd (per Oriental). The Hindustan, with the subsequent mail of October 9th, arrived at Point de Galle November 6th, and had reached Madras from thence.

CHANGES IN THE SECRETARIAT.—The following changes are in contemplation in the secretariat:—Mr. W. Gordon Young, at present under secretary to the Government of Bengal, will go to the Home Office as under-secretary. Mr. Cooper, now under-secretary at the Home Office, to the Foreign Office. Mr. Young's post, at the Bengal Office, will be filled by Mr. Pratt, who will be succeeded in his present position by Mr. Russell.

Lieut. P. Rubie, of the 40th N. I., has been tried by a court martial, on a charge of drunkenness on duty. The court martial acquitted him. The Commander-in-Chief returned the proceedings, but the Court adhered to their finding. Sir W. Gomma confirms without approving, and hopes the severe warning received by the accused may prove of future advantage.

MR. H. F. JAMES, Additional Circuit and Sessions Judge, will it is believed, take his annuity this year.

THE 3RD EUROPEAN REGIMENT, AT DINAPOOR.—The first detachment of the 3rd Europeans has just arrived, and the volunteering of H. M.'s 96th will commence immediately. It is the general impression in the latter regiment, that but few men, comparatively speaking, will volunteer, the calculation being that not more than a hundred and fifty will remain behind; so that the corps will go home very strong, both in men and officers, there being up to the present moment only one exchange amongst the latter. The paucity of volunteers from the ranks is accounted for in two ways: first, the abolition of the old system of volunteering, by which the men got the cash in hand; and secondly, the war in Europe, in which, I believe, the men still expect to take a part. Curious how deeply the fighting principle is implanted in the British soldiers; in my opinion, however, the former is the weightier reason by far, as a soldier always weighs the difference between money ready in hand and money in distant prospective. The 3rd Europeans were longer coming up than was expected, as the current is very strong in the river. The men appear to be very well-conducted, steady, and in good order and discipline.—Calcutta Morning Chronicle.

PROGRESS OF THE LORD BISHOP.—The pinnaces which were engaged for the conveyance of the Lord Bishop to the Upper Provinces, met with an accident on the way up, which has rendered it unsafe for his lordship to prosecute his journey in them. On the 11th inst., a little below Bhagulpore, the steamer which was rowing them took the ground, when the pinnace which was allotted to the Rev. Mr. Bloomfield came in contact with the steamer, and injured her bows so as to spring a leak. Temporary expedients were resorted to to stop the leak, and on the vessels coming to for the day, the injured pinnace was closely examined, with a view to the damage being properly repaired; but this was found impracticable, and it was finally resolved to discharge the boat. As the other pinnace in which the bishop was accommodated was now brought in immediate contiguity with the steamer, and was not the strongest of boats, nor likely to stand the effects of a collision in case the Berkampooler grounded again, the wisest and surest course was followed of sending away all the hired boats, and the whole party embarked on the steamer. This was effected on the 12th, and the visitation journey upwards was resumed with more safety and speed.—Hurkaru, Oct. 21.

MR. A. J. M. MILLS, one of the members of Bengal of the legislative council of India, will retire from the service during the ensuing cold weather. Mr. Mills is one of the ablest members of the civil service, which he entered in the early part of 1826, twenty-nine years ago. During that period he has held some of the best appointments under government, and more especially so since his return from furlough in 1850, he having always had a lucrative substantive appointment as well as an officiating one, as one of the judges of the sudder, the allowances of which he, of course, drew. Notwithstanding that he now fills one of the highest posts that a civilian could attain, yet is it not surprising that, having served more than twenty-five years in India, he should be desirous of passing the remainder of his days in his own country? Who Mr. Mill's successor in Council will be we have not yet heard, nor do we believe it is yet known.—Hurkaru.

CIVIL RETIREMENTS.—The Hurkaru mentions that Messrs. C. D. Russell, Bury, Bentall, Quintin, and Travers, all of the Bengal civil service, have sent in applications for pension.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.—We understand it is now fixed that the Governor-General will go to the Neilgherries about the end of February or the beginning of March next. Mr. Edmonstone will accompany him officially.—Hurkaru.

RETIREMENTS.—Two more officers have obtained leave of absence preparatory to applying for permission to retire from the service:—Major S. R. Bagshawe, of the 7th N.I., to the 15th of January, and Brevet-Major G. W. G. Bristow to the 28th of February, 1855. In the 7th N.I. Brevet-Major McGeorge will obtain his regimental majority, after a service of nearly thirty-one years, and will vacate his appointment of deputy judge advocate-general, consequent on his promotion. Lieutenant G. Swiney will get his company in about twelve, and Ensign R. Travers his lieutenantancy in about three years' service. In the 71st N.I. Lieutenant J. Ross, a cadet of the 9th of March, 1842, and Ensign S. W. Fraser, a cadet of the 16th of February, 1850, will be advanced to the next superior ranks.—Hurkaru.

DR. HATHAWAY.—We regret much to learn that severe indisposition, the result of his most assiduous attention to the duties of his onerous office, compels our inspector of jails, Dr. Hathaway, to apply for furlough on medical certificate. He is the oldest European inhabitant of Lahore, having been appointed civil surgeon soon after the nomination of Sir Henry Lawrence to the residency. The constant and most intelligent attention paid by him to that part of his duty which related to the district prisoners, attracted the well-deserved notice of the authorities, and secured for him the appointment he now holds; and we do not write under correction, when we assert that few men in this country have exerted themselves more zealously and perseveringly for the good of the state than has Dr. Hathaway in his particular vocation.—Lahore Chronicle.

SALT.—THE DESERVING REWARDED.—"That the Governor-General, at the recommendation of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, has sanctioned the grant to Mr. Bond, the assistant salt agent of Balasore, of a gratuity of Rs. 2,500 under circumstances which are highly creditable to that officer. It appears that the Government has gained, in the course of fourteen years, no less a sum than Rs. 13,78,450 from Mr. Bond's excellent and indefatigable superintendence of the export of salt, and of the many details connected with the agency of which he is an assistant. Under the contract system, the wastage on salt was three per cent.; under Mr. Bond's superintendence, it is only one per cent. The loss under the former system was Rs. 13,33 on an export of thirteen and a half lacs; now it is only Rs. 4,900 on an export of forty-two lacs. Moreover, the contractors received for every 100 maunds Rs. 20 and 2 annas; whereas Mr. Bond, during his superintendence, has exported the same quantity for 10 rupees. Upon these facts being brought to the notice of the Governor-General, his Lordship, as might be expected, most readily sanctioned the grant recommended by the Lieutenant-Governor in recognition of the services of so good and faithful an officer."

LIEUT. CUMMING.—Five captains of the Company's Service have been placed upon Lieut. Cumming's court-martial by orders of the Commander-in-Chief. This will have the effect of preventing an outcry that the court was packed; but the number is not sufficient to save the accused if there be a feeling against him, and his case has been prejudged by the Queen's officers on the court. For our own part, we have no apprehension that British officers will so far forget what is due to their character as to allow their prejudices to get the better of their judgments, and we think that Mr. Cumming would have acted more wisely had he waited until the court assembled, and then challenged the officers of the 32nd regiment, and any others who had expressed opinions prejudicial to his case. Another officer is evidently about to be brought to a court-martial in the Sirhind Division, and, judging from the composition of the court, he must be of a higher rank than Mr. Cumming, since of eleven Company's officers placed at the disposal of the general commanding, four are lieutenant-colonels, four more majors, and the remaining three captains.—Hurkaru, Oct. 22.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

APPOINTMENTS TO IRREGULAR FORCES.

Fort William, Oct. 25, 1854.—It having been directed, in Government General Order dated 19th of April, 1853, that officers of artillery attached to the artillery branch of contingents and of irregular forces, shall vacate such appointments on attaining the rank of captain regimentally, the Most Noble the Governor-General in Council is pleased further to direct that, on promotion to captain, officers of artillery shall vacate all military appointments in contingents or irregular forces.

This order is to have effect prospectively only, and is applicable to the three Presidencies.

(Signed) R. J. H. BIRCH, Colonel,
Secy. to the Govt. of India, in the Mil. Dept.

MADRAS.

OOTACAMUND, October 21.—THE WEATHER.—Our S. W. monsoon has passed off, and the N. E. has now fairly set in, since which much rain has fallen; so much so at Jackatella, on the night of the 14th October, that several huts were washed away, and three natives were killed, several herds of cattle drowned, and building materials, such as Teak timber, Chunam, &c., washed away into the deep ravine near that cantonment. The loss in this way is estimated at about 20,000 rupees.—Theatricals are the order of the day, both here and at the barracks. The farce of "Who is the Dupe?" and "Box and Cox," were performed at Ootacamund, a few days since; by Messrs. J. R. Prager, Schmidt, Crawford, Menzes, S. Prager, and W. Prager, which gave very great satisfaction to the large audience assembled there to witness the plays.—Mr. McKennie (who is now amongst us on S. C. from Madras) has sent to the Military Male Asylum, for twelve lads, who are to be apprenticed to a few tradesmen and mechanics on these hills, such as carpenters, shoemakers, shopmen, &c.—A meeting of the "Freemasons' on the Hills" was convened by Mr. McKennie, on the 11th instant, at Dawson's hotel. The object of the meeting was to take into consideration, whether any, and what steps could be taken towards sympathizing with the wives and children of the soldiers and sailors, who may have fallen in the cause of their country, during the present contest with Russia, and also to afford such pecuniary relief as shall be in their power to give, consistent with the honour and character of the craft.—It is rumoured at the barracks (Jackatella), that H. M.'s 74th highlanders, now located there, will soon leave for Cannanore, to relieve H. M.'s 25th regiment, which corps it is said will embark for England on being relieved.

THE WEATHER.—At last, we have had a genuine burst of the Monsoon. The barometer had been gradually sinking from the 17th instant, and the rain commenced to fall in heavy showers during Saturday night; but towards morning it became continuous, and increased in force for several hours after daylight. More may be looked for between the time of our writing this, and that at which it will be put into the hands of our readers; and if the season only continues as propitiously as it has opened, we shall have abundant cause of thankfulness. We are sorry to have to add to the foregoing weather notice, the intelligence that no rain has fallen since Friday, and that neither is there any promise more this morning.—Spectator, Oct. 23.

BANGALORE.—Two salutes of fifteen guns each were fired (Oct. 23) on the arrival in cantonment of the Hon. Barnes Peacock, Esq., member of the Supreme Council of India, and Sir Arthur Buller, puisne judge of Calcutta.—Herald.

COCHIN (Oct. 15).—The keel of a vessel 141 feet long was laid on Wednesday last, in the building-yard of Messrs. Oughterson and Co., of the burthen of 500 tons. She is to be constructed under the superintendence of their shipwright Mr. Andrew Poney Gueizelar. Cochin now, more than formerly, furnishes an excellent harbour for ship-building, in consequence of the punctuality of the ship-builders and European merchants, as well by the facility which exists in procuring workmen and materials, owing to the several backwater communications. By a new paper from Calicut, which came to our hands the other day, designated the Malabar Chronicle, we have learned that a branch university is to be established by Government at that place (Calicut), that a professor from Cambridge has been appointed to the head mastership, on a salary of Rs. 600 per mensem. If this is true, why cannot the Government bestow a similar favour on the children of the inhabitants of this place?—on the children of those who contribute a vast revenue to Government? Such an institution is very much needed.

MILITARY ON DITS.—The detachment of Artillery Veteran Company, and detail of the 1st Madras Fusiliers, ordered to proceed on special service, embarked on board the Hugh Lindsay, Oct. 23.—We regret to record the death of Capt. George Simpson, of the 22nd N.I., at Chinsurah on the 6th Oct. This casualty promotes Lieut. Alexander Cannan to captain, and Ens. Clement Buchanan to lieutenant.—Intelligence has reached us of the likelihood of fresh disturbances in the Goomsur district. The 45th regt. N.I. left Nellore on the 20th Oct., en route to Madras. Their detention here was caused by the difficulty experienced in crossing the Pennaur.—The 35th regt. left the presidency on Oct. 23.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

THE PEGUE AND ARRACAN ROADS.

Fort William, July 7, 1854.—From the Secretary to the Governor-General of India, to the Commissioner and Governor-General's Agent in Pegue, Hule Department.

Sir,—I have received and laid before the Governor-General in Council your despatch, dated 22nd June, 1854, No. 16, forwarding a copy of a letter from Lieut. Forlong, superintending engineer of the Pegue and Arracan roads, &c. reporting that a line of road, 6 to 10 feet broad (at present), with a gradient never exceeding 3 in 100 feet, has been successfully run for upwards of 110 miles in length, 90 over most formidable mountains, upwards of 4,000 feet high, and the western coast of the Bay of Bengal, connected with Prome, on the Irrawaddy.

2. His Lordship in Council desires to record his feeling that this great achievement, accomplished amidst the most novel and harassing difficulties within six months from the time when his lordship, while at Prome, personally learnt Lieut. Forlong's plans, his hopes, and the great difficulties he saw before him, is not only in the highest degree honourable to that officer, but that it confers honour upon that service to which he belongs, and, upon the Government at whose directions he undertook so magnificent a work.

3. The Governor-General in Council desires to offer to Lieut. Forlong, though his work is yet incomplete, the cordial thanks of the Government of India, for the skill, the energy, the tact, and indomitable perseverance with which he has so successfully laboured in the great task entrusted to him. These exertions have been well seconded by the officers under his command on this portion of his line, and I have to request that the thanks of the Governor-General in Council be conveyed, through Lieut. Forlong, to Lieuts. Scott, Ingram, and M'Intosh, for the excellent service they have done in the prosecution of this work.

4. There is so much of public interest to the Government service and mercantile bodies regarding these mountains and adjacent districts in Pegue and Arracan, in Lieut. Forlong's papers, especially his reports of 18th April and 10th May, that his lordship has given directions to have selections from them made and printed, and published in the selections from the records of the Government of India.

5. Paras. 9 and 10, &c. "a tabular statement," &c. of his letter of 10th May, will be sent to the Military Depot, to be acted upon, &c.

I am, &c.
(Signed) G. F. EDMONTON,
Secretary to the Governor of India.

OFF-RECKONINGS.

Fort St. George, Oct. 31, 1854.—In consequence of the demise of Col. Peter Whannell, of the infantry, the following addition to the list of officers entitled to off-reckonings is authorized:—

Col. W. Justice—to half a share from the Off-reckoning Fund, from 29th October, 1854.

THE LATE LORD FREDERICK FITZCLARENCE.

It is with deep regret that we announce the death of his Excellency Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, G.C.H., Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay army. The melancholy event occurred at two o'clock on the morning of the 30th of October, at Poorundhur. The immediate cause of his lordship's death has not been intimated, but it is supposed to have been from an attack of gout, from which he had been suffering during the past week. Minute guns corresponding with the rank of Lord Frederick were fired yesterday afternoon.—Bombay Times, Oct. 31.

The death of Lord Frederick Fitzclarence casts for the present a gloom over our society. His lordship's measures as Commander-in-Chief have of late been severely criticised, and, we believe, very justly censured. But it is not the time to revert to such matters now that he has been so recently and so suddenly withdrawn from amongst us. His lordship was the second son of William IV.; he was born in December, 1799, and was therefore in his fifty-fifth year when he died. He was, in 1821, married to a daughter of the Earl of Glasgow, by whom he had a daughter; both ladies are now in India.

He entered the army as lieutenant in May, 1814, in the thirteenth year of his age, and seems throughout his life to have been devoted to his profession. He was commander of the garrison at Portsmouth at the time of receiving the Bombay appointment, and was considered one of the most intelligent, smart, and active officers in the service. It was here that he devoted himself with such earnestness to the moral and intellectual improvement of the troops, he himself delivering lectures for their instruction, as an example to the officers under him; a system we hoped that he would have carried out in India, where unfortunately the mere mechanical portions of drill and discipline appear to have occupied the whole of his thoughts. He was said to have been a man of much kindness of heart and integrity of purpose, and even to his failings, the words of Goldsmith, slightly altered, might apply—

"If he erred in aught
The love he bore the army was in fault."

The following order has been issued by Government on the melancholy occasion:—

"With sentiments of the deepest regret the Right Honourable the Governor in Council announces to the army the demise of his Excellency Lieut.-General the Right Hon. Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, G.C.H., Commander-in-Chief at this presidency, which event took place at the hill fort of Poorundhur, at half-past 2 o'clock on the morning of the 30th inst.

"On this melancholy occasion, the flag of the castle will be hoisted half-mast high and continue so until sunset, and seventeen minute guns, corresponding with the rank of the late Commander-in-Chief, will be fired at each of the principal military stations under this Government. The Governor in Council further directs that the officers of her Majesty's and the Hon. Company's army will wear mourning for a fortnight from this date."

Lord Fitzclarence was attended in his last hours by the Rev. W. K. Fletcher, of Poona: his body was taken into Poona on Monday afternoon, the 30th October, without pomp or ceremony, and is to be forwarded to England to be there interred in the family vault.—Bombay Times, Nov. 1.

THE FUNERAL CAR.

An extremely elegant car has been constructed at the grand arsenal for the reception of his lordship's remains. It consists of an artillery platform cart, the wheels and frame of which are as little disguised as possible, as it is meant to exhibit its real character; the iron work is bronzed. It is surmounted by a canopy of black velvet decorated with funeral plumes; this is supported on four ornamented pillars rising from a beautifully enriched basement covered with black velvet richly decorated with gold lace and cord. It is meant to resemble a hearse as little as possible, and is to appear as a purely military funeral car. The principal armoury of the grand arsenal where the body will be left for some weeks in state, has been magnificently fitted up for the occasion; the raised platform for the coffin is covered with crimson velvet superbly decorated with gold lace, the armorial bearings and cypher of the deceased being wrought in at intervals. At the head of the coffin are three field guns resting on their muzzles, the name and titles of the deceased being emblazoned in gold on the centre one; behind these are groups of flags and banners, those of England, France, and Turkey being conspicuous. The whole is surrounded first by trophies of reversed arms, such as swords, bayonets, carbines, pistols, &c., and railed in by lines of small pieces of ordnance, mortars, and shells. Daylight will be entirely excluded, and the whole dimly illumined by argand lamps. The greatest praise is due to Colonel Willoughby, principal commissary of ordnance, and Major Whittle his deputy, not only for the fine taste he has shown in designing the whole, but the unwearied exertions he has made to carry his plans into execution.—Bombay Times, Nov. 13.

The remains of his late excellency Lord Frederick Fitzclarence having been brought across from Oolwa, was received at the dock yard pier by the Hon. Sir W. Yardley, the Hon. Sir C. R. M. Jackson, Lord Viscount Melville, the Hon. Mr. Lumsden, Sir Henry Leeke, the judges of the Sudder Adawlut, the secretaries to Government, the private secretary to the Right Hon. the Governor, all the principal civil servants at the presidency, and nearly the whole of the officers belonging to the navy and military branches of the service presently at the presidency, the clergy, bar, and a large number of private gentlemen, European and native, and a vast concourse of people of every rank and colour. All the shipping in the harbour wore their flags half-mast high, and on the Lady Falkland casting off the boat containing the body, the H. C. steam frigate Queen commenced firing minute guns, the boats of the squadron following in procession the pilot boat to the pier head at the dock yard, where the car so chastely and elegantly designed and executed by Colonel Willoughby, C.B., and drawn by six artillery horses with European drivers, was in attendance. The coffin having been removed to the car, minute guns were fired from the saluting battery, and the solemn procession was put in motion, the Governor's band playing "The Dead March." A complete company of the 1st Bombay European regiment fusiliers, which formed a guard of honour in the dock-yard with reversed arms took the lead, the band came next, and this was followed by a troop of lancers, after which was the car containing his late excellency's remains, the whole being brought up by the gentlemen who had assembled to testify their respect to the memory of the late Lord Frederick, —Captain the Hon. L. W. C. A. F. Cary being chief mourner. The whole of the troops in garrison, consisting of the 2nd battalion of artillery, a wing of the 1st fusiliers, the 12th, 13th, and 16th N.I., and the marine battalion, formed a street from the Dockyard to the northern entrance of the Town-hall, through which the procession moved in slow time, the Governor's band continuing to play until it had reached the Castle. All the buildings on both sides of the road, the whole distance, were densely crowded with spectators, a large party of ladies having taken up a position in the verandah of the town-hall. On arrival at the Castle, the coffin was removed into the armoury. The remains of the late Commander-in-Chief will lie in state for some weeks, and then be removed towards their last earthly resting-place in England (via the Cape).—Bombay Times, Nov. 14.

THE HURRICANE.

On the 2nd of November, Bombay was visited by a violent hurricane, which in less than three hours occasioned the destruction of half a million's worth of property, and the sacrifice of three or four hundred lives. On the 30th and 31st of October we had violent thunderstorms, which are almost of unfailling occurrence at this season. These having passed away, a thick and troubled sky, a stormy wind from the south-east, with squalls and showers of rain, and a falling barometer, gave full warning by noon on the 1st that a tempest was upon us; but the warning was unheeded. In the course of the afternoon a signal was made indicating that an ordinary storm was at hand. Several merchantmen consulted their own barometers, made themselves snug, and escaped harm. Our men of war, within half a mile of an unlimited supply of marine stores, lay at their ordinary moorings without lowering a spar, or an officer deeming it necessary to proceed on board of them. The various flagstuffs in public places remained in their fair-weather condition, and that of the Castle was snapped across. It was not even deemed requisite to land 10,000l. of specie on board the Margaret, or to bring the vessel into a place of safety; and she accordingly went to the bottom with her freight! The tempest burst upon us about midnight, from east and by south, veering round southerly, and slackening at south, redoubling its fury from the westward for about an hour at daybreak, and at six o'clock passing suddenly away; beautifully serene weather almost immediately succeeding.

The storm seems to have originated five or six hundred miles to the southward of us, and to have proceeded about 100 northerly. Its diameter was from 120 to 170 miles, and its centre, which travelled at the rate of from twelve to fifteen miles an hour, passed some ten miles to westward of us. A few days afterwards the marine police reported the total loss of five square-rigged vessels, of seven large and small ships of the Indian Navy, and of 142 lesser vessels, mostly native, of various designations. They calculated the loss of native craft alone, all of which might have found refuge at a couple of hours' notice in the numberless creeks and places of shelter that surround the harbour, at a quarter of a million sterling; the loss of shipping altogether on shore at 400,000l. and of property at a million sterling. To us all these estimates appear excessive, many of them more than double the reality: there were not the less certainly above 200 vessels wrecked or severely damaged, and the loss of property on shore is very great indeed; but we should think that 300,000l. should cover the whole.

In the harbour of Bombay the damage done is very great; the Castle signal flagstaff has snapped clear about ten feet above the base; a pretty clear indication of the force of the gale. The H.C. steamer Assaye drifted towards the castle walls and snapped her bowsprit, but fortunately was successful in getting off again into deep water, and is now riding safely in harbour. She will go into dock again immediately for repair, at a probable cost of 1,000 rupees. The H.C. receiving ship Hastings drove from her moorings and sprung a leak; at daylight she exhibited signals of distress, when the H.C. steamer Queen was ordered to proceed to take the Hastings in tow; but in endeavouring to do so, she got foul of the ship Mystery, and remained in that position for several hours, the Hastings having been otherwise relieved, and brought to a mooring in Mazagon, where she is to be sunk in the mud, as it has been found impossible to stop her leak. The survey brig Palinurus got aground some forty or fifty yards off the dockyard breakwater; her mainmasts are clean gone, with all the rigging hanging over the sides: her situation at one time was most perilous, as she was thumping on the rocks; but she floated with the tide, and was warped in by the aid of pilots sent to her, into the Custom-house basin. Most of the merchantmen exhibited signals of distress, and made calls for pilots, the master attendant and his assistants doing all in their power to afford them aid. The Governor's and Sir Henry Leeke's barges, and nearly all the pleasure-yachts, bunder-boats, and country craft usually moored off the Apollo pier, are lost. After daybreak, all their spars, planks, cabin partitions, &c. were found strewn about the shore between the dockyard and the coal depôt at Colaba. The H.C. sloop of war Elphinstone got aground right in front of the Custom House basin, hauled up her cables, and backed astern with the breeze, then set staysail and bore away to the north and west anchorage outside of the shipping. About Boree bunder and along the line of shore there, hundreds of native craft are aground, the state of a great many of the sterns and sides furnishing plain proof of violent collisions. Nearly every vessel in harbour dragged from her original position, and has sustained some damage or another. The ship Eliza drove back before the tremendous wind, and struck the James Turcan, which has been dismasted, breaking her bowsprit and foremast just above the deck, and destroying all the main and mizen rigging, the Eliza having her quarter seriously injured, and the tiller and tiller chain broken. The Imaum of Muscat's ship is dismasted. The steamers George Russell Clerk and Sir Jamssetjee Jejeebhoy are total wrecks off the Castle; the Phlox also drifted on the rocks in the same locality, but hopes are entertained of her safety, although she has doubtless sustained serious damage. Her commander, Captain Ellis, with his wife and a friend, were with difficulty rescued from watery graves. About twenty of the crews of the wrecked steamers were saved at the Castle wharf by the exertions of a non-commissioned officer and a party of Lascars. There is too much reason to fear that Mr. Dawson, midshipman of the Palinurus, and Mr. Brown, of the Margaret, have been drowned. The ship Camillus got within hail of the Apollo pier, struck, but hauled off with the opportune breeze to the west. From the extensive débris of native craft all along the shore, it is impossible to form any estimate of the lives that have been lost: the dead bodies of eleven boatmen have been picked up at the several bunders, but owing to the breeze blowing off the island, and the tide being on the ebb during the height of the tempest, numerous corpses must have been carried away to sea or some part of the mainland. Several lives were saved after daybreak by the noble exertions of private individuals; the P. and O. Co.'s steamers are said to have been instrumental in saving nearly forty persons, principally the survivors of the unfortunate crews of native boats, who were picked up while floating on portions of the wreck.

The ship Forfarshire is reported to be on shore near Carinjah, and serious apprehensions are entertained for the safety of the Puttay Moobaruck from China. The following is, we believe, a correct list of the Hon. Co.'s vessels lost, or disabled:—

The steamer Snake; the brig Palinurus, disabled; the cutters Margaret, Nurbuddah, and the Mandavee, wrecked; the anchor boat Royal Tiger missing, and four pilot boats lost.

On shore many of the houses and large buildings in the fort, especially those in Rampart-row, have been very much damaged. All the temporary bungalows on the Esplanade have been swept away, and most of the largest trees on both sides of the road have been torn up by the roots. The losses in the native town are said to be immense, the roads all over the island are strewn with the branches of trees; in many parts, for several hours, their passage was obstructed by huge coconut-trees, two of which in falling caused fatal accidents, and wounded seven others, who are at present in the Jamssetjee Hospital, some of them seriously injured. The storm was very severe at Bandora, where the English church, we hear, has been stripped of its roof, and several houses levelled with the ground. At Callian, too, it has been quite as rough, houses having been blown down, trees torn up by the root, and great destruction of property. From Panwell and Oolwa we have similar accounts; at the latter place the sea was so rough, that the Falkland steamer would not venture to come across, and the mails were brought over by a boat, and did not reach the post-office until two o'clock in the afternoon; no Calcutta or Madras dawk has been received for the last two days.

The tempest seems to have been much more severely felt in the south-western than in the north-eastern part of the island. We have no doubt that it formed the eastern limb of a hurricane of very great violence which has swept along the Malabar coast, probably from Cochin to Kurrachee, or the mouth of the Persian Gulf. The damage done to the shipping was nearly as great as that of 1837.—Bombay Times.

DESERTION OF EUROPEAN SOLDIERS.—We very much regret to hear of the great extension of late of desertion amongst the soldiers of the European regiment at the presidency. The evil, which used to be confined to the infantry, and to be of a very limited extent even there, has of late got into the artillery, a corps whose just boast has hitherto been the good conduct of its members, their attachment to their officers, and the professional spirit that prevailed amongst them. This is anything surely but a sign of good management at head-quarters. Desertion is such a desperate step in India that it never can be resorted to unless in cases of extremity; where it does prevail there is some mischief at work which neither drill nor discipline, as the latter is usually understood, nor future punishment will cure. It is one besides, which having once begun is sure to extend itself, and no time ought to be lost in narrowly watching the source whence it springs, that it may be cut off at the fountain head at once.—Bombay Times, Oct. 24.

THE LONDON MAIL of October 9th arrived at Bombay November 5th (per Feroze).

THE ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.—We observe a considerable variety of specimens already being collected for the Zoological Gardens; amongst others, a fine panther, several cheetas or hunting leopards, bears without number, a creature very plentiful amongst us. Long-nosed crocodiles from the Indus, and short-nosed ones from the Concan. Adjutants in any quantity, on whom no Commander-in-Chief has ever frowned, and a vast number of other varieties of our larger species of birds. Amongst these we observe several fine families of ostriches at the presidency, and the old birds allow themselves to be driven out to field with their little ones as quietly and peaceably as so many sheep—if they were disposed to show a clean pair of heels to their owners, it would be found not a little difficult to catch them. The great bulk of the animal specimens are expected to be obtained as gifts, and we shall be happy to be made the vehicle of communication betwixt intending donors and the proper authorities.—Bombay Times.

COL. COGHLAN.—We observe that Col. Coghlan, who has been appointed political resident and military commandant at Aden, has arrived at the presidency, and proceeded under the usual salute to the scene of his future labours. This appointment is an eminently praiseworthy one. Col. Coghlan is a man of excellent natural abilities, and has always been distinguished for his tact, good management, and sound common sense, attributes in such a position infinitely more valuable than talent. He has never allowed his energies to go to sleep, and his habits of business, method, and order have constantly impressed themselves on those around him in all the numerous appointments of importance he has held. While we congratulate him on his appointment to an important office, we may felicitate the Government on having such an officer at their disposal when wanted.—Bombay Times.

STEAM COMMUNICATION BETWEEN EUROPE AND KURRACHEE.—Our readers will be glad to learn that a prospect exists of the early establishment of a direct communication between Kurrachee and Aden. The Government is open to proposals, and one from the Bombay Steam Navigation Company is, we hear, under consideration. They offer to place their new boat, the Sindian, and another of the same class, on that line, working the Bombay line with their smaller boats, the Bombay and Victoria.—Lahore Chronicle, Nov. 1.

IMPORTS (Bombay, Nov. 14).—The most important feature in commercial transactions was the storm which prevailed during the night of the 1st and morning of the 2nd instant, and which committed a vast deal of injury, both on shore and afloat; the severity has fallen chiefly on the dealers, exporters, &c. The importation of British manufacture is very enormous, in addition to heavy stocks held over from last season, which clearly explains the cause of the excessive decline in price of piece goods ruling during the present season. No improvement, under any circumstances, can be expected unless importation is checked.

CHINA.

THE LONDON MAIL of August 25th arrived at Hong-Kong October 12th (per Erin). The Malta, with the mail of September 9th, arrived on October 26th. The Chusan left Ceylon on November 7th, with another mail for China.

ORDINATION OF MISSIONARIES.—On Sunday, the 8th of October, an ordination was held in Trinity Church, Shanghai, when the Bishop of Victoria, assisted by the Rev. J. Hobson, chaplain of the foreign community at Shanghai, and the Rev. R. H. Cobbold, M.A. of Ningpo, admitted into the full orders of the ministry the Rev. Henry Reeve, and Rev. John Shaw Burden, missionaries of the Church Missionary Society, who had just completed their twelve months of probation in the mission as deacons.

WRECKED CAPTURE BY PIRATES OF THE SHIP "MARIANNE."—The British barque Marianne, Capt. Francis, which left Whampoa for Amoy on the 1st Oct. was blown down on the west coast in the Cyclone of the 6th-7th, and shared the fate of the Caldero, being plundered of her cargo of a thousand bales of cotton, &c. The master, mate, and four men have arrived at Macao, stripped of everything. Nine of the crew were accidentally drowned.—Friend of China, October 18.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT: EXTRACT FROM SHIP'S LOG.—Saturday, October 7. Having been dismasted in a severe typhoon, the vessel drove on shore on an island about 70 miles west of Macao. Ten of the crew were drowned in attempting to land; the rest of us, including two women, succeeded in getting safely on shore, but were immediately attacked by the Chinamen, and stripped of everything but our shirts and trousers; they also plundered the ship.

MANILA.—There was a slight shock of an earthquake in Manila on Thursday, the 28th of September. The Arrow had put in to repair damages, and would leave shortly; a Dutch brig had put back also for the same purpose. The Clyde (late Bomanjee Hormusjee), Merlin, and Nimrod, hence, had arrived.

THE COMUS'S CREW went on shore in Canton without leave a weeks ago got drunk, and had a fight with the boat people at Sor-kee jetty. One of the men was driven into the water, and forcibly held under until he was dead. His body floated up alongside the Comus yesterday morning. In consequence of the murder of the marine belonging to H.M.'s steamer Comus, a portion of the crew of that vessel landed here (Canton), on the 18th instant, and destroyed two grog-shops near the river's edge, one being cut down with axes, &c. and the other pulled down by means of a hawser lashed around it. The body of the man has been found with a stone tied to the neck. On the same day an American marine was also brutally ill-treated by the Chinese, narrowly escaped being killed, and is not expected to live. Four Chinese have been seized, and are now confined on board the U. S. steamer J. P. Kennedy, but nothing definite regarding them has yet been done on account of the present uncertainty as to the result of the injuries to the wounded man.—Friend of China, Oct. 21.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

MONDAY, December 18, 1854.

THE POST-OFFICE AGAIN!

THE mail which gives rise to our present publication arrived at the Post-Office on Saturday; consequently our paper should have appeared sufficiently early on Monday to allow of its being circulated by the morning mails. It was not, however, the pleasure of their high mightinesses who rule the destinies of the Post that this should take place. Three or four straggling journals reached us on Saturday at different periods of the day. The mass of our papers, which we, at a vast annual expense, endeavour to secure, were detained in the Post-Office, or in the hands of some of its employés, until a late hour on Monday, when they dropped in upon us in driblets. We do not ask how long will those who hold sway in St. Martin's-le-Grand inflict such evils or inconveniences. We do not appeal to them on behalf of the commercial interests of the country, nor on behalf of the many families in the United Kingdom who anxiously wait the arrival of each Mail to ascertain if it bear aught affecting those in India in whom they are interested—in whom perhaps their very souls are bound up. We do not press such points on the Post-Office people, knowing that they would treat them as the heathen ruler of the world is said to treat "lovers' perjuries." But we do ask, how long will the mercantile world submit to have its interests thus played with by Mr. Rowland Hill? That gentleman, before he was gratified with a heavy subscription and a fine appointment, was the very pink of reformers. But a sinecure place having been got up on purpose for him before Colonel Maberly was shelved, and the veteran official having been subsequently turned out to make way for Mr. Hill, his reforming propensities cooled down to zero—or a little below it; for it is not merely that things remain as they were—they are much worse than before. In adverting to the good luck of Mr. Hill, we have not mentioned the manufacture of a snug appointment for his brother, whose claims upon the public were, we believe, utterly unknown to that public, until they saw them so handsomely rewarded at their expense; thus showing the propriety with which the Hills were lately designated by a magazine writer as a "family of jobbers." We abstain from noticing the doings of the schoolmasters at Tottenham, or the lawyer at Birmingham. We have not time for it. Perhaps we may take even them in hand at a future opportunity.

Colonel Maberly was long reputed to be the incubus of the Post-Office. After many years of patient endurance, we have got rid of him, and what are we the better for it? We have a successor who seems to take a pride in out-doing the misdoings of the man who preceded him, and whose retreat was thought to be the signal for improvement. Alas! it is but the signal for retrogression.

We write this before seeing the morning papers. If they, or any of them, should contain intelligence received by the Mail just arrived, the case will be complete—too complete to require a word of comment from ourselves. Negligence and mismanagement in a public department are bad enough, but the display of favouritism, we need not say, is much worse.

RAILWAYS IN INDIA.

THE rate of interest guaranteed by the East-India Company upon the EXTENSION CAPITAL of the respective Railway Companies of India has been increased from 4½ to 5 per cent. upon the following amounts:—

East-India	- - - -	£3,000,000
Madras	- - - -	500,000
Great Indian Peninsula	- - - -	500,000

These amounts, in respect to the first and second of the railways on the list, will embrace the extension shares already issued: with the third, it will cover the issue of new shares.

The privilege conceded is dependent upon one-half of the amount of the extension capital thus favoured being paid up by specified periods. One moiety must be paid by the 15th January, 1855, and another, making with the previous payments fifty per cent. on the shares, must be forthcoming on the 15th February in the same year.

Although no formal decision has been arrived at, we have the best reasons for concluding that similar indulgence will be extended to the Scinde Railway.

SERVICE OF INDIAN OFFICERS AT THE SEAT OF WAR.

AN intimation has been given by the War Department, that a few artillery officers in the Company's service, now on furlough, might find employment in the Turkish army, under General Cannon, and we believe that the names of those officers who are ready to serve their country in the manner indicated, are about to be forwarded to his Grace the Duke of Newcastle.

A RAPID WHISPER WITH INDIA.

A PROPOSAL has been made for establishing a system of communication between the electric telegraphs in India and those in Europe. The plan is perfectly feasible, and we trust that it will receive the encouragement of the authorities both here and in India. If established, a message, after the departure of the mail, may be sent via Trieste or Marseilles, in time to be carried on by steamer from those places to Alexandria. Thence the message could be conveyed in a closed envelope to Bombay by the ordinary mail steamer. On arriving at Bombay, the telegraph office there would secure the message and transmit it to its destination. A saving of six or seven days would thus be effected in communicating between London and Calcutta, and vice versa; viz. two days in Europe, and four or five days in India. Charges, to be prepaid, will be fixed for messages throughout, and arrangements made with the telegraph companies in this country and with the continental authorities. The enterprising continental telegraph agent in London, Monsieur Reuter, is, we understand, prepared to carry into effect a regular and complete communication by the above means.

SUBSTITUTE FOR HAILEYBURY.

In another part of our paper will be found the report of the gentlemen appointed to consider of the best means to supply the want of Haileybury, now doomed to extinction. The report does not, indeed, contemplate this result as finally fixed; but fixed it is: Haileybury has done its work, and is to go to sleep. We may, perhaps, in a future number offer a few remarks on the report. In the mean time, it may be well to remove misapprehensions which we understand have, in some instances prevailed, as to the precise import of the intelligence of the approaching downfall of Haileybury, which we communicated in our last publication. It being expedient to look forward in keeping up the supply of civil servants, so that the demand for them, as it arises, may be met by an adequate supply, provision is necessarily made for a succession of years. Haileybury, therefore, cannot be brought to an end at once, even in these go-ahead days: it must take a little time to effect this; and consequently, all the appointments requisite to keep the machine of government in motion, till the new supply is ready, will take place in the ordinary way—we mean in the way which has heretofore been ordinary. India cannot stand still for want of servants till the patent candidates are forthcoming. Those, therefore, interested in the fortunes of young men who seemed to have a chance of succeeding under the old system, may console themselves. Haileybury is to go, but not until some provision for remedying the effects of its disappearance shall have been completed.

WAR IN THE CRIMEA.

We need not remind our readers that the necessity for adding to our strength in the contest so injudiciously entered upon without adequate means, still presses. The pressure will be felt in every part of the British dominions, and it is not improbable that some of the Queen's regiments in India will be called upon to exchange their duties there for others more onerous, though nearer home.

THE SCINDE RAILWAY.

At length, one of the most promising lines of railway which India affords, is to be taken in hand. It is a line from Kurrachee, the port of Scinde, to a point on the Indus, near Hyderabad. The facilities for its construction are great, the expense will be small, and its advantages will be incalculable. We may refer for particulars to the prospectus which has been published here, to the report of a public meeting held at Kurrachee in August last, at which Mr. Frere presided, and to a letter from that gentleman to the engineer of the projected railway, published and sold in London.

One or two points not mentioned in those documents may properly be referred to here. Scinde has almost boundless means for the production of wheat, and could, without difficulty, and at a moderate price, supply the entire consumption of Great Britain and Ireland. In these days, when the price of the quartern loaf is a serious matter for consideration to all housekeepers, and a terror to the poor, the opening of such a source of supply is like the finding of concealed treasure. At present, the capabilities of production are useless, for want of the means of transport. Those means the railway would supply—we ought not indeed to say would, for the construction of the railway we hold to be as certain as anything future can be; and therefore we will change the form of speech, and say that the railway will supply those means. Wool, moreover, of very fine quality, is largely produced, and is even now exported in considerable quantities, which will be greatly increased by the facilities afforded by the iron road.

But it is not only—it is not chiefly—with a view to the export of the productions of Scinde, or to the supply of its wants, that the proposed railway is important. The port of Kurrachee is the port, not of Scinde only, but of the Punjab and of all Central Asia. Its possible development can scarcely be overestimated. The navigation of the river Indus is in some places beset with difficulty and danger, and the railway will supply the means of transit just where they are wanted. The saving of time and unnecessary extent of travel is not to be overlooked. The distance between the two extreme points by the river is about 235 miles; by the rail it will not much exceed 100; and a saving of 130 miles, added to other advantages, might remove every doubt, if doubt could exist, as to the propriety of the work. That it will be most beneficial to Scinde, to much of British India, and to a vast extent of country where commerce languishes for want of the means of exchanging commodities, is too manifest to be questioned. That it must remunerate those who undertake its construction, is not less clear.

REPORT ON THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

TO THE RIGHT HON. SIR CHARLES WOOD, BART., M.P., &c. &c.

SIR.—We have attentively considered the subject about which you have done us the honour to consult us; and we now venture to submit to you the result of our deliberations.

We do not think that we can more conveniently arrange the suggestions which we wish to offer, than by following the order which is observed in the 39th and 40th clauses of the India Act of 1853.

The first matter concerning which the Board of Control is empowered by the 39th clause to make regulations is, the age of the persons who are to be admitted into the College at Haileybury.

The present rule is, that no person can be admitted under seventeen, and that no person can go out to India after twenty-three. Every student must pass four terms, that is to say, two years, at the College; consequently, none can be admitted after twenty-one.

It seems to us that it would be a great improvement to allow students to be admitted to the College up to the age of twenty-three, and to fix twenty-five as the latest age at which they can go out to India in the Civil Service. It is undoubtedly desirable that the civil servant of the Company should enter on his duties while still young; but it is also desirable that he should have received the best, the most liberal, the most finished education that his native country affords. Such an education has been proved by experience to be the best preparation for every calling which requires the exercise of the higher powers of the mind; nor will it be easy to show that such preparation is less desirable in the case of a civil servant of the East-India Company, than in the case of a professional man who remains in England. Indeed, in the case of the civil servant of the Company, a good general education is even more desirable than in the case of the English professional man; for the duties even of a very young servant of the Company are more important than those which ordinarily fall to the lot of a professional man in England. In England, too, a professional man may, while engaged in active business, continue to improve his mind by means of reading and of conversation. But the servant of the Company is often stationed, during a large part of his life, at a great distance from libraries and from European society, and will therefore find it peculiarly difficult to supply by study in his mature years the deficiencies of his early training.

The change which we propose will have one practical effect, to which we attach much importance. We think it desirable that a considerable number of the civil servants of the Company should be men who have taken the first degree in arts at Oxford or Cambridge. At present the line is drawn as if it had been expressly meant to exclude bachelors of those universities. It will, we believe, be found that the great majority of our academic youth graduate too late by a few months, and only by a few months, for admission into Haileybury.

We propose to fix eighteen as the lowest age at which a candidate can be admitted into the College. We are, indeed, of opinion that, except in very rare and extraordinary cases, it is not desirable that a lad should be admitted so early as eighteen. But we are convinced that, except in very rare and extraordinary cases, no lad of eighteen will have any chance of being admitted. Hitherto the admissions have been given by favour. They are henceforward to be gained by superiority in an intellectual competition. While they were given by favour, they were frequently, indeed generally, given to persons whose age was not much above the minimum. A Director would naturally wish his son or his nephew to be handsomely provided for at nineteen rather than at twenty-three, and to be able to return to England with a competence at forty-four rather than at forty-eight. A majority of the students have, therefore, been admitted before they were nineteen, and have gone out before they were twenty-one. But it is plain that, in any intellectual competition, boys of eighteen must be borne down by men of twenty-one or twenty-two. We may therefore, we believe, safely predict that nine-tenths of those who are admitted to the College under the new system, will be older than nine-tenths of those who quit it under the present system. We hope and believe that among the successful competitors will frequently be young men who have obtained the highest honours of Oxford and Cambridge. To many such young men a fellowship, or a tutorship, which must be held on condition of celibacy, will appear less attractive than a situation which enables the person who holds it to marry at an early age.

The India Act next empowers the Board of Control to determine the qualifications of the candidates for admission to Haileybury. It seems to us to be proper that every person who intends to be a candidate should, at least six weeks before the examination, notify his intention to the Board of Control, and should at the same time transmit a list of the subjects in which he proposes to be examined, in order that there may be time to provide a sufficient number of examiners in each department. He should, at the same time, lay before the Board testimonials certifying that his moral character is good. Whether the testimonials be or be not satisfactory, is a point which we conceive may safely be left to the determination of the Board.

The Board is then authorized by the Act to make regulations prescribing the branches of knowledge in which the candidates for admission to Haileybury shall be examined. Here arises at once a question of the gravest importance. Ought the examination to be confined to those branches of knowledge to which it is desirable that English gentlemen who mean to remain at home should pay some attention?—or ought it to extend to branches of knowledge which are useful to a servant of the East-India Company, but useless, or almost useless, to a person whose life is to be passed in Europe?

Our opinion is, that the examination ought to be confined to those branches of knowledge to which it is desirable that English gentlemen who mean to remain at home should pay some attention.

It is with much diffidence that we venture to predict the effect of the new system; but we think that we can hardly be mistaken in believing that the introduction of that system will be an event scarcely less important to this country than to India. The educated youth of the United Kingdom are henceforth to be invited to engage in a competition in which about forty prizes will, on an average, be gained every year. Every one of these prizes is nothing less than an honourable social position, and a comfortable independence for life. It is difficult to estimate the effect which the prospect of prizes so numerous and so attractive will produce. We are, however, familiar with some facts which may assist our conjectures. At Trinity College, the largest and wealthiest of the colleges of Cambridge, about four fellowships are given annually by competition. These fellowships can be held only on condition of celibacy, and the income derived from them is a very moderate one for a single man. It is notorious that the examinations for Trinity fellowships have, directly and indirectly, done much to give a direction to the studies of Cambridge, and of all the numerous schools which are the feeders of Cambridge. What, then, is likely to be the effect of a competition for prizes which will be ten times as numerous as the Trinity fellowships, and of which each will be more valuable than a Trinity fellowship? We are inclined to think that the examinations for situations in the Civil Service of the East-India Company, will produce an effect which will be felt in every seat of learning throughout the realm,—at Oxford and Cambridge, at the University of London and the University of Durham, at Edinburgh and Glasgow, at Dublin, at Cork, and at Belfast. The number of candidates will doubtless be much greater than the number of vacancies. It will not surprise us if the ordinary number examined should be three or four hundred. The great majority, and among them many young men of excellent abilities and laudable industry, must be unsuccessful. If, therefore, branches of knowledge specially Oriental should be among the subjects of examination, it is probable that a considerable number of the most hopeful youths in the country will be induced to waste much time, at that period of life at which time is most precious, in studies which will never, in any conceivable case, be of the smallest use to them. We think it most desirable that the examination should be of such a nature that no candidate who may fail shall, to whatever calling he may betake himself, have any reason to regret the time and labour which he spent in preparing himself to be examined.

Nor do we think that we should render any service to India by inducing her future rulers to neglect, in their earlier years, European literature and science, for studies specially Indian. We believe that men who have been engaged, up to one or two-and-twenty, in studies which have no immediate connection with the business of any profession, and of which the effect is merely to open, to invigorate, and to enrich the mind, will generally be found, in the business of every profession, superior to men who have, at eighteen or nineteen, devoted themselves to the special studies of their calling. The most illustrious English jurists have been men who have never opened a law-book till after the close of a distinguished academical career; nor is there any reason to believe that they would have been greater lawyers if they had passed in drawing pleas and conveyances the time which they gave to Thucydides, to Cicero, and to Newton. The duties of a civil servant of the East-India Company are of so high a nature that in his case it is peculiarly desirable that an excellent general education, such as may enlarge and strengthen his understanding, should precede the special education which must qualify him to despatch the business of his cutcherry.

It therefore seems to us quite clear that those vernacular Indian languages which are of no value except for the purpose of communicating with natives of India, ought not to be subjects of examination. But we are inclined, though with much distrust of our own judgment, to think that a distinction may properly be made between the vernacular languages, and two languages which may be called the classical languages of India, the Sanscrit and the Arabic. These classical languages are by no means without intrinsic value in the eyes both of philologists and of men of taste. The Sanscrit is the great parent stock from which most of the vernacular languages of India are derived, and stands to them in a relation similar to that in which the Latin stands to the French, the Italian, the Spanish, and the Portuguese. The Arabic has contributed, though not in the same degree with the Sanscrit, to the formation of the vocabularies of India; and it is the source from which all the Mahometan nations draw their religion, their jurisprudence, and their science. These two languages are already studied by a few young men at the great English seats of learning. They can be learned as well here as in the East; and they are not likely to be studied in the East unless some attention has been paid to them here. It will, we apprehend, very seldom happen that a candidate will offer himself for examination in Sanscrit or in Arabic; but, as such instances may occur, we think it expedient to include those languages in the list of subjects.

As to the other subjects we speak with more confidence. Foremost among those subjects we place our own language and literature. One or more themes for English composition ought to be proposed. Two papers of questions ought to be set. One of those papers should be so framed as to enable the candidates to show their knowledge of the history and constitution of our country: the other ought to be so framed as to enable them to show the extent of their knowledge of our poets, wits, and philosophers.

In the two great ancient languages there ought to be an examination not less severe than those examinations by which the highest classical distinctions are awarded at Oxford and Cambridge. At least three passages from Latin writers ought to be set, to be translated into English. Subjects should be proposed for original composition, both in Latin verse and in Latin prose; and passages of English verse and prose should be set, to be turned into Latin. At least six passages from Greek writers should be set, to be translated into English. Of these passages, one should be taken from the Homeric poems, one from some historian of the best age, one from some philosopher of the best age, one from some Attic orator, and at least one from the Attic drama. The candidates ought to have a full opportunity of exhibiting their skill in translating both English prose and English verse into Greek; and there should be a paper of questions which would enable them to show their knowledge of ancient history, both political and literary.

We think that three of the modern languages of the continent, the French, the Italian, and the German, ought to be among the subjects of examination. Several passages in every one of those languages should be set, to be turned into English; passages taken from English writers should be set, to be turned into French, Italian, and German; and papers of questions should be framed which would enable a candidate to show his knowledge of the civil and literary history of France, Italy, and Germany.

The examination in pure and mixed mathematics ought to be of such a nature as to enable the judges to place in proper order all the candidates, from those who have never gone beyond Euclid's Elements and the first part of algebra up to those who possess the highest acquirements. We think it important, however, that not only the acquirements, but also the mental powers and resources of the competitors should be brought to the test. With this view the examination papers should contain a due proportion of original problems, and of questions calculated to ascertain whether the principles of mathematical science are thoroughly understood. The details will probably be best arranged by some of those eminent men who have lately been moderators in the University of Cambridge, and who know by experience how to conduct the examinations of large numbers of persons simultaneously. It must, however, be borne in mind that the extent and direction of mathematical reading, especially in the higher branches, differ greatly at the different universities of the United Kingdom. The mathematical examination for the Indian service must, therefore, in order to do justice to all candidates, embrace a wider range of questions than is usual at Cambridge, Oxford, or Dublin.

Of late years some natural sciences which do not fall under the head of mixed mathematics, and especially chemistry, geology, mineralogy, botany, and zoology, have been introduced as a part of general education into several of our universities and colleges. There may be some practical difficulty in arranging the details of an examination in these sciences; but it is a difficulty which has, we believe, been at some seats of learning already overcome. We have no hesitation in recommending that there should be at least one paper of questions relating to these branches of knowledge.

We propose to include the moral sciences in the scheme of examination. Those sciences are, it is well known, much studied both at Oxford and at the Scottish universities. Whether this study shall have to do with mere words or things, whether it shall degenerate into a formal and scholastic pedantry, or shall train the mind for the highest purposes of active life, will depend, to great extent, on the way in which the examination is conducted. We are of opinion that the examination should be conducted in the freest manner, that mere technicalities should be avoided, and that the candidate should not be confined to any particular system. The subjects which fall under this head are the elements of moral and political philosophy, the history of the ancient and modern schools of moral and political philosophy, the science of logic, and the inductive method, of which the Novum Organum is the great textbook. The object of the examiners should be rather to put to the test the candidate's powers of mind than to ascertain the extent of his metaphysical reading.

The whole examination ought, we think, to be carried on by means of written papers. The candidates ought not to be allowed the help of any book; nor ought they, after once a subject for composition has been proposed to them, or a paper of questions placed before them, to leave the place of examination till they have finished their work.

It is, of course, not to be expected that any man of twenty-two will have made considerable proficiency in all the subjects of examination. An excellent mathematician will often have little Greek, and an excellent Greek scholar will be entirely ignorant of French and Italian. Nothing can be further from our wish than to hold out premiums for knowledge of wide surface and of small depth. We are of opinion that a candidate ought to be allowed no credit at all for taking up a subject in which he is a mere smatterer. Profound and accurate acquaintance with a single language ought to tell more than bad translations and themes in six languages. A single paper which shows that the writer thoroughly understands the principles of the differential calculus ought to tell more than twenty superficial and incorrect answers to questions about chemistry, botany, mineralogy, metaphysics, logic, and English history.

It will be necessary that a certain number of marks should be assigned to each subject, and that the place of a candidate should be determined by the sum total of the marks which he has gained. The marks ought, we conceive, to be distributed among the subjects of examination in such a manner that no part of the kingdom, and no class of schools, shall exclusively furnish servants to the East-India Company. It would be grossly unjust, for example, to the great academical institutions of England, not to allow skill in Greek and Latin versification to have a considerable share in determining the issue of the competition. Skill in Greek and Latin versification has, indeed, no direct tendency to form a judge, a financier, or a diplomatist. But the youth who does best what all the ablest and most ambitious youths about him are trying to do well will generally prove a superior man; nor can we doubt that an accomplishment by which Fox and Canning, Grenville and Wellesley, Mansfield and Tenterden, first distinguished themselves above their fellows, indicates powers of mind which, properly trained and directed, may do great service to the state. On the other hand, we must remember that, in the north of this island the art of metrical composition in the ancient languages is very little cultivated, and that men so eminent as Dugald Stewart, Horner, Jeffrey, and Mackintosh would probably have been quite unable to write a good copy of Latin alcaics, or to translate ten lines of Shakspeare into Greek iambics. We wish to see such a system of examination established as shall not exclude from the service of the East-India Company either a Mackintosh or a Tenterden, either a Canning or a Horner. We have, with an anxious desire to deal fairly by all parts of the United Kingdom, and by all places of liberal education, framed the following scale, which we venture to submit for your consideration:—

English language and literature:—

It seems to us probable, that of the 6,875 marks, which are the maximum, no candidate will ever obtain half. A candidate who is at once a distinguished classical scholar and a distinguished mathematician will be, as he ought to be, certain of success. A classical scholar who is no mathematician, or a mathematician who is no classical scholar, will be certain of success if he is well read in the history and literature of his own country. A young man who has scarcely any knowledge of mathematics, little Latin, and no Greek, may pass such an examination in English, French, Italian, German, geology, and chemistry, that he may stand at the head of the list.

It can scarcely be necessary for us to add, that no expense ought to be grudged which may be necessary to secure the services of the ablest examiners in every branch of learning. Experience justifies us in pronouncing with entire confidence that, if the examiners be well chosen, it is utterly impossible that the delusive show of knowledge which is the effect of the process popularly called cramming can ever be successful against real learning and ability.

Whether the examinations ought to be held half-yearly or annually is a question which cannot, we think, be satisfactorily determined till after the first experiment has been made.

When the result of the examination has been declared, the successful candidates will not yet be civil servants of the East-India Company, but only civil servants elect. It appears from the fortieth clause of the Act to be the intention of the Legislature that, before they proceed to the East, there should be a period of probation and a second examination.

In what studies, then, ought the period of probation to be passed? And what ought to be the nature of the second examination?

It seems to us that, from the moment at which the successful candidates, whom we will now call probationers, have been set apart as persons who will, in all probability, have to bear a part in the government of India, they should give their whole minds to the duties of their new position. They must now be considered as having finished their general education, and as having finished it with honour. Their serious studies must henceforth be such as have a special tendency to fit them for their calling.

Of the special knowledge which a civil servant of the Company ought to possess, much can be acquired only in India, and much may be acquired far more easily in India than in England. It would evidently be a mere waste of time to employ a month here in learning what may be better learned in a week at Calcutta or Madras. But there are some kinds of knowledge which are not considered as essential parts of the liberal education of our youth, but which it is most important that a civil servant of the Company should possess, and which he may acquire in England not less easily, indeed more easily, than in India. We conceive that every probationer ought during the interval between his first and his second examination to apply himself vigorously to the acquiring of these kinds of knowledge.

The subjects of his new studies will, we apprehend, be found to range themselves under four heads.

He should, in the first place, make himself well acquainted with the history of India, in the largest sense of the word history. He should study that history, not merely in the works of Orme, of Wilks, and of Mill, but also in the travels of Bernier, in the odes of Sir William Jones, and in the journals of Heber. He should be well informed about the geography of the country, about its natural productions, about its manufactures, about the physical and moral qualities of the different races which inhabit it, and about the doctrines and rites of those religions which have so powerful an influence on the population. He should trace with peculiar care the progress of the British power. He should understand the constitution of our Government, and the nature of the relations between that Government and its vassals, Mussulman, Mahratas, and Rajpoot. He should consult the most important Parliamentary reports and debates on Indian affairs. All this may be done with very much greater facility in England than in any part of India, except at the three seats of Government, if indeed the three seats of Government ought to be excepted.

Secondly, it seems to us to be desirable that every probationer should bestow some attention on the general principles of jurisprudence. The great majority of the civil servants of the East-India Company are employed in the administration of justice. A large proportion of them are judges; and some of the most important functions of the collectors are strictly judicial. That the general principles of jurisprudence may be studied here with more advantage than in India will be universally acknowledged.

Thirdly, we think that every probationer ought to prepare himself for the discharge of his duties by paying some attention to financial and commercial science. He should understand the mode of keeping and checking accounts, the principles of banking, the laws which regulate the exchanges, the nature of public debts, funded and unfunded, and the effect produced by different systems of taxation on the prosperity of nations. We would by no means require him to subscribe any article of faith touching any controverted point in the science of political economy; but it is not too much to expect that he will make himself acquainted with those treatises on political economy which have become standard works. These studies can undoubtedly be prosecuted with more advantage in England than in India.

Fourthly, we think that the study of the vernacular languages of India may with great advantage be begun in England. It is, indeed, only by intercourse with the native population that an Englishman can acquire the power of talking Bengalee or Telugu with fluency. But familiarity with the Bengalee or Telugu alphabet, skill in tracing the Bengalee or Telugu character, and knowledge of the Bengalee or Telugu grammar, may be acquired as quickly in this country as in the East. Nay, we are inclined to believe that an English student will, at his first introduction to an Indian language, make more rapid progress under good English teachers than under pundits, to whom he is often unable to explain his difficulties. We are therefore of opinion that every probationer should acquire in this country an elementary knowledge of at least one Indian language.

If this recommendation be adopted, it will be desirable that the probationers should, immediately after the first examination, be distributed among the presidencies. It will, indeed, be desirable that the division of the Bengal civil service into two parts, one destined for the upper and the other for the lower provinces, should be made here at the earliest possible moment, instead of being made, as it now is, at Calcutta.

In what manner the distribution of civil servants among the presidencies ought henceforth to be made is a question which, though it has not been referred to us, is yet so closely connected with the questions which have been referred to us, that we have been forced to take it into consideration. We are disposed to think that it might be advisable to allow the probationers, according to the order in which they stand at the first examination, to choose their presidencies. The only objection to this arrangement is, that, as the presidency of Bengal is generally supposed to be the theatre on which the abilities of a civil servant may be most advantageously displayed, all the most distinguished young men would choose Bengal, and would leave Madras and Bombay to those who stood at the bottom of the list. We admit that this would be an evil; but it would be an evil which must, we conceive, speedily cure itself; for as soon as it becomes notorious that the ablest men in the Civil Service are all collected in one part of India, and are there stopping each other's way, a probationer who is free to make his choice will prefer some other part of India, where, though the prizes may be a little less attractive, the competition will be much less formidable. If, however, it should be thought inexpedient to allow the probationers to choose their own presidencies in the manner which we have suggested, it seems to us that the best course would be to make the distribution by lot. We are satisfied that, if the distribution be made arbitrarily, either by the Directors or by her Majesty's Minister for Indian Affairs, it will be viewed with much suspicion, and will excite much murmuring. At present nobody complains of the distribution. A gentleman who has obtained a Bombay writership for his son is delighted and thankful. It may not be quite so acceptable as a Bengal writership would have been; but it is a free gift; it is a most valuable favour; and it would be the most odious ingratitude to repine because it is not more valuable still. Henceforth an appointment to the Civil Service of the Company will not be a matter of favour, but matter of right. He who obtains such an appointment will owe it solely to his own abilities and industry. If, therefore, the Court of Directors or the Board of Control should send him to Bombay when he wishes to be sent to Bengal, and should send to Bengal young men who in the examination stood far below him, he will naturally think himself injured. His family and friends will espouse his quarrel. A cry will be raised, that one man is favoured because he is related to the Chairman, and another because he is befriended by a member of Parliament who votes with the Government. It seems to us, therefore, advisable that the distribution of the civil servants among the presidencies, if it cannot be made the means of rewarding merit, should be left to chance. After the allotment, of course, any two probationers should be at liberty to make an exchange by consent.

But, in whatever manner the distribution may be made, it ought to be made as soon as the issue of the first examination is decided; for, till the distribution is made, it will be impossible for any probationer to know what vernacular language of India it would be most expedient for him to study. The Hindostanee, indeed, will be valuable to him, wherever he may be stationed; but no other living language is spoken over one-third of India. Tamul would be as useless in Bengal, and Bengalee would be as useless at Agra, as Welsh in Portugal.

We should recommend that, every probationer, for whatever presidency he may be destined, should be permitted to choose Hindostanee as the language in which he will pass. A probationer who is to reside in the lower provinces of the Bengal presidency should be allowed to choose either Hindostanee or Bengalee. A probationer who is to go to the upper provinces should be allowed to choose among Hindostanee, Hindee, and Persian. A probationer who is to go to Madras should be allowed to choose among Hindostanee, Telugu, and Tamul. A probationer who is to go to Bombay should be allowed to choose among Hindostanee, Maharattee, and Guzeratee.

It is probable that some probationers who have a peculiar talent for learning languages will study more than one of the dialects among which they are allowed to make their choice. Indeed it is not improbable that some who take an interest in philology will apply themselves voluntarily to the Sanscrit and the Arabic. It will hereafter be seen that, though we require as the indispensable condition of passing only an elementary knowledge of one of the vernacular tongues of India, we propose to give encouragement to those students who aspire to be eminent orientalists.

The four studies, then, to which, in our opinion, the probationers ought to devote themselves during the period of probation, are, first, Indian history; secondly, the science of jurisprudence; thirdly, commercial and financial science; and, fourthly, the oriental tongues.

The time of probation ought not, we think, to be less than one year, nor more than two years.

There should be periodical examinations, at which a probationer of a year's standing may pass, if he can, and at which every probationer of two years' standing must pass, on pain of forfeiting his appointment. This examination should, of course, be in the four branches of knowledge already mentioned as those to which the attention of the probationers ought to be specially directed. Marks should be assigned to the different subjects, as at the first examination; and it seems to us reasonable that an equal number of marks should be assigned to all the four subjects, on the supposition that each probationer is examined in only one of the vernacular languages of India. Sometimes, however, as we have said, a probationer may study more than one of these vernacular languages of India among which he is at liberty to make his choice, or may, in addition to one or more of the vernacular languages of India, learn Sanscrit or Arabic. We think it reasonable that to every language in which he offers himself for examination an equal number of marks should be assigned.

When the marks have been cast up, the probationers who have been examined should be arranged in order of merit. All those who have been two years probationers, and who have, in the opinion of the examiners, used their time well, and made a respectable proficiency, should be declared civil servants of the Company. Every probationer who, having been a probationer only one year, has obtained a higher place than some of the two-year men who have passed, should also be declared a civil servant of the Company. All the civil servants who pass in one year should take rank in the service according to their places in the final examination. Thus a salutary emulation will be kept up to the last moment. It ought to be observed, that the precedence which we propose to give to merit will not be merely honorary, but will be attended by very solid advantages. It is in order of seniority that the members of the Civil Service succeed to those annuities to which they are all looking forward, and it may depend on the manner in which a young man acquits himself at his final examination, whether he shall remain in India till he is past fifty, or shall be able to return to England at forty-seven or forty-eight.

The instances in which persons who have been successful in the first examination will fail in the final examination, will, we hope and believe, be very few. We hope and believe, also, that it will very rarely be necessary to expel any probationer from the service on account of grossly profligate habits, or of any action unbecoming a man of honour. The probationers will be young men superior to their fellows in science and literature; and it is not among young men superior to their fellows in science and literature that scandalous immorality is generally found to prevail. It is notoriously not once in twenty years that a student who has attained high academical distinction is expelled from Oxford or Cambridge. Indeed, early superiority in science and literature generally indicates the existence of some qualities which are securities against vice,—industry, self-denial, a taste for pleasures not sensual, a laudable desire of honourable distinction, a still more laudable desire to obtain the approbation of friends and relations. We therefore believe that the intellectual test which is about to be established, will be found in practice to be also the best moral test that can be devised.

One important question still remains to be considered. Where are the probationers to study? Are they all to study at Haileybury? Is it to be left to themselves to decide whether they will study at Haileybury or elsewhere? Or will the Board of Control reserve to itself the power of determining which of them shall study at Haileybury, and which of them shall be at liberty to study elsewhere?

That the College at Haileybury is to be kept up is clearly implied in the terms of the 37th and 39th clauses of the India Act. That the Board of Control may make regulations which would admit into the Civil Service persons who have not studied at Haileybury, is as clearly implied in the terms of the 40th and 41st clauses. Whether the law ought to be altered is a question on which we do not presume to give any opinion. On the supposition that the law is to remain unaltered, we venture to offer some suggestions which appear to us to be important.

There must be, we apprehend, a complete change in the discipline of the College. Almost all the present students are under twenty; almost all the new students will be above twenty-one. The present students have gone to Haileybury from schools where they have been treated as boys. The new students will generally go thither from Universities, where they have been accustomed to enjoy the liberty of men. It will therefore be absolutely necessary that the regulations of the College should be altered, and that the probationers should be subject to no more severe restraint than is imposed on a bachelor of arts at Cambridge or Oxford.

There must be an extensive change even in the buildings of the College. At present each student has a single small chamber, which is at once his parlour and bedroom. It will be impossible to expect men of two or three-and-twenty, who have long been accustomed to be lodged in a very different manner, to be content with such accommodation.

There must be a great change in the system of study. At present, the students generally go to Haileybury before they have completed their general education. Their general education and their special education, therefore, go on together. Henceforth, the students must be considered as men whose general education has been finished, and finished with great success. Greek, Latin, and mathematics will no longer be parts of the course of study. The whole education will be special, and ought, in some departments, to be of a different kind from that which has hitherto been given.

We are far, indeed, from wishing to detract from the merit of those professors—all of them highly respectable and some of them most eminent—who have taught law and political economy at Haileybury. But it is evident that a course of lectures on law or political economy, given to boys of eighteen, who have been selected merely by favour, must be a very different thing from a course of lectures on law or political economy given to men of twenty-three, who have been selected on account of their superior abilities and attainments. As respects law, indeed, we doubt whether the most skilful instructor will be able, at Haileybury, to impart to his pupils that kind of knowledge which it is most desirable that they should acquire. Some, at least, of the probationers ought, we conceive, not merely to attend lectures, and to read well-chosen books on jurisprudence, but to see the actual working of the machinery by which justice is administered. They ought to hear legal questions, in which great principles are involved, argued by the ablest counsel, and decided by the highest Courts in the realm. They ought to draw up reports of the arguments both of the advocates and of the judges. They ought to attend both civil and criminal trials, and to take notes of the evidence, and of the discussions and decisions respecting the evidence. It might be particularly desirable that they should attend the sittings of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council when important appeals from India are under the consideration of that tribunal. A probationer, while thus employed, should regularly submit his notes of arguments and of evidence to his legal instructor, for correction. Such a training as this would, we are inclined to think, be an excellent preparation for official life in India; and we must leave it to the Board of Control to consider whether any plan can be devised by which such a training can be made compatible with residence at Haileybury.

We have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servants,

T. B. MACAULAY.

PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM-NAVIGATION COMPANY.

At the recent meeting of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam-Navigation Company, Rear-Admiral Thornton presiding, a dividend at the rate of five per cent., free from income-tax, was declared, the report having been unanimously adopted. The whole of the discussion was of a congratulatory nature, and the assistance the company have been able to afford the Government in the war by the use of their vessels was generally alluded to. The alterations in the China and Australian services have been caused by the withdrawal of several of their principal ships to serve as transports; but it is stated that a considerable expense will be saved, especially in the latter case, through a discontinuance of the line. In answer to questions, it was mentioned that the interest paid on the debentures does not average four cent., 117,000*l.* having been taken up at four, and 383,000*l.* at 3*½* per cent. With regard to the future, the directors consider their prospects encouraging. The freight of shipping and the cost of coals at the various stations have been much reduced, while the mines of Labuan and other resources in the East will hereafter, should any fresh scarcity arise, render the company independent of supplies from this country for their more distant stations. Although the withdrawal of so many vessels for the war service deprives the company for the present of the power of carrying out contemplated arrangements, by which the earnings might be increased and the expenses lessened, the postal contract gives a right to indemnity which places the proprietors in an advantageous position. Mr. Willcox has now wholly relinquished his emoluments as one of the managing directors; but still continues his services at the general board. The executive management of the company's affairs is conducted by Mr. Anderson and Mr. Allan, although the former has also voluntarily reduced his allowance from the point at which it was fixed by the deed of settlement. At the conclusion of the proceedings, the shareholders formed a committee to arrange for the presentation of some testimonials to Mr. Willcox and to Mr. Anderson for these pecuniary concessions. Annexed is an abstract of the report:—

“Pursuant to notice, the directors submit their report for the twelve months ending 30th of September, 1854. The accounts exhibit, in abstract, the following state of the company's assets, and result of the year's operations, namely:—

THE CAPITAL ACCOUNT

Shows that the company stood possessed, on the 30th of September last, of stock in ships, hulks, barges, docks, workshops, buildings, freehold and leasehold, in payments made on contracts for vessels in course of construction, stock of coals on hand, and naval and victualing stores, to the value of .....				£2,558,798	3	5

"The proceedings of the directors, with a view to obtain some relief from the Government on account of the enhanced cost of fuel, wages, &c., in the execution of the contract postal service, caused by the war, were stated in the last half-yearly report. Aware that, under the present pressure on the public exchequer, caused by the expenses of the war, to obtain any direct pecuniary compensation on account of the claim in question would be attended with considerable difficulty, while, from the reaction which has recently taken place in the rates of freight and consequent reduction of the cost of transport for fuel, such pecuniary compensation could only be claimed for the period over which the consumption of fuel laid in at the high prices extended, the directors were anxious to devise some other mode of relief which, while it should meet the reasonable claims of the company, would relieve the Government from any pecuniary grant, and involve the least possible detriment to the public postal service. They, therefore, proposed that the company should be permitted to give up one of the semi-monthly lines of postal communication between Bombay and Hongkong, reducing that service to a monthly communication, but extending it to the northernmost and now most important open port of China—Shanghai; an arrangement which is understood to be in accordance with the wishes of the merchants and others connected with the China trade. And as this modification of the service would relieve the company of a considerable expense, the directors offered to accept it in lieu of any pecuniary indemnification. This proposal has been accepted with a reservation as to time, which is considered of little importance. The Government, availing themselves of the powers of the postal contracts, have withdrawn a number of the company's ships for the conveyance of troops, &c., in carrying on the war with Russia. The postal contracts contain a stipulation that, in the event of war or other emergency, the Government may withdraw the vessels from the postal service, and employ them, either by purchase or hire, in the exclusive service of the public. But, in giving this power to the Government, it is also provided that the company shall be indemnified, and that, if the Government and the company cannot agree as to the amount of indemnification, the question shall be referred to arbitration. While the requirements of the Government were limited, as at first, to two or three of the vessels, and, as the directors were led to believe, for a temporary service, they were content to accept for them the same terms of hire which the Government were paying to other parties for similar vessels. The demands of the Government having, however, recently been extended to no less than six of the best and largest of the company's ships, the means of the company for meeting the requirements of their passenger and goods' traffic (whence five-sixths of their income is derived) have been materially crippled, and serious detriment to the proprietors' interests has in consequence ensued. The directors, therefore, have not named any rate of hire for the vessels recently withdrawn, in order to leave the question open for settlement, if necessary, under the indemnity clause. The Himalaya has been sold to the Government for the sum of 130,000*l.*, which was estimated as her fair market value at the time of sale. She had previously cleared about 22,000*l.* in the service of the company, and in that of the Government as a hired transport. With the present means of the company in the Indian seas, the directors have found it impossible to maintain the Australian postal communication and the India and China service at the same time. They have recently pointed out this circumstance to the Government, and proposed that the company should be relieved of the Australian bi-monthly service, making, in consideration thereof, a reduction from the payments under the postal contract of 6*s.* 2*d.* per mile, on the mileage distance now performed on that branch of service, from the time of its discontinuance; the amount so to be deducted being 17,131*l.* per annum. The Government have acceded to this proposal, and the outward service to Australia will cease. The suspension of this line, under the circumstances above stated, will, no doubt, necessitate the consideration and adoption of a system of steam postal communication with Australia, more in accordance with the wants and just demands of these most important colonies than the very inadequate arrangements now and lately in operation; and probably, before this company will be in a position, by the release of their vessels from the war service, to resume the Australian line, a new plan will be formed, better adapted to develop a passenger traffic with Australia, and such as to enable them to undertake the service on terms affording a better prospect of remuneration for it.

The loss of the Douro, and the expediency of replacing the sum deducted from the Guarantee Insurance Fund for the extraordinary damages and expenses incurred by the collision of the Pasha and Erin, preclude any payment being made on account of premiums on underwriting risks. The directors have, however, to announce that a sum has been realized, from a source unconnected with the ordinary operations of the company, from which the deficiency on the insurance account may be compensated. Some time since, the board, in order to secure and liquidate a debt due to the company, were compelled to take from the debtors a large number of the company's shares; these, with a further number of shares, forfeited by parties in India, and otherwise reverting to the company, have been disposed of, from time to time, with advantage. The last of these shares were only recently sold, and the result of the whole of the sales is a profit of 27,716*l.* To this sum it is proposed to add, from the balance of profits of the year 2,284*l.*, making up the sum of 30,000*l.*, which they recommend to be divided among the proprietors as a bonus of 1*l.* per share, and that it be made payable in the course of the ensuing month of January. The proprietors were informed, in the last half-yearly report, that a supplemental charter had been obtained from the Crown, empowering the company to increase its capital by 1,000,000*l.* sterling, by the creation and issue of 20,000 shares of 50*l.* each; such shares to be offered at par, in the first instance, to the holders of existing shares. The time has arrived when a portion of the additional capital may be called up with advantage. They propose to issue the whole of the additional shares, offering them to the holders of the shares who shall be registered in the company's books on the 1st of January, 1853, in the proportion of two new shares to three old shares. The directors regret to have to report the total loss of the Douro on the North Paracels Shoal, in the China Sea, on the 26th of May last, having been previously disabled in a typhoon. On a rigid investigation into the circumstances, no blame could be attached to the commander or officers for the ship getting on the shoal."

EAST-INDIA COMPANY'S MILITARY SEMINARY, ADDISCOMBE.

On Saturday, the 9th December, a public examination of the gentlemen cadets took place at the East-India Company's Military Seminary, at Addiscombe, in the presence of the Chairman (Major Oliphant), the Deputy-Chairman (Elliot Macnaghten, Esq.), Lieut.-col. Sykes, W. Butterworth Bayley, Esq.; with other members of the Court of Directors, and the following distinguished visitors:—His Highness the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, Major-General Lewis, C.B., R.E.; Brigadier general Jones, R.E.; Colonels Hardinge, K.H.; Garstin, J. Campbell, C.B.; H. J. Browne, C.B.; Vivian Handscomb, Justice Hay Coningham; Lieutenant-Colonels Portlock, R.E.; Wilson, R.A.; Sir P. T. Cantley, K.C.B.; Melvill, Matthie, Dick, Pond, Gordon, Corfield, Bygrave, Cotton, Neill, Babington, Adams, Lucas; Majors Bingham, R.A.; Guthrie, Turner, Hay, Stevens, Lavie, Tapp; Captains McKerlie, R.E.; Somerset, R.E.; Fraser, Agar, Turnbull; Lieutenants Mallock, Nicolls; Ensigns Champard, Pemberton; Sir John Login, M.D.; Doctors Monet, Morehead, Arnott; Professor Warren, F.R.S.; Revs. G. Coles, Thomas, Good, Randolph, Byers; Thomas Alcock, Esq. M.P.; P. Melvill, Esq. and many other gentlemen of position.

Upon the arrival of the Chairman of the Company and the guests who attended with him, a salute was fired by the gentlemen cadets, who were immediately mustered upon the parade-ground. Major Donnelly put them through the infantry exercise, sword exercise, and artillery practice, and very great satisfaction was afforded by the precision and grace of the various evolutions. They marched past the Chairman in slow and in quick time, headed by the Governor and Colonel Sir Frederick Abbott, C.B.

Upon the breaking up of parade, the company proceeded to inspect the drawings of the students. Some admirable photographs attracted much attention, especially one in which the whole of the first-class were artistically grouped together.

FORTIFICATION DEPARTMENT.

After the parade, the Chairman repaired to the Sand-modelling Hall, where the following remarkable interesting models were explained:—A front of Chasseloup de Laubat (scale a quarter of an inch to a foot), was explained by Cadet Macdonell; three fourths of Carnot's system for hilly ground (scale one-eighth of an inch to a foot), was explained by Cadet Lucas, and a splendid model of the harbour and forts of Sebastopol (scale one-sixteenth of an inch to a foot, and covering a space of about 2,200 square feet), was explained by Cadets E. Jones and Forbes. During the time thus occupied, Cadets Carnegie, Cairnes, Delafosse, Shuldham, and Wallace, were constructing a bridge head, and properly flanking it by batteries on the reverse side of a river. The usual examination in this department afterwards took place in the hall. The fortification drawings met with great approbation.

At half-past twelve the cadets were played in to dinner. After dinner the public examinations were resumed. Upon the right hand of the chairman sat the Archbishop of Canterbury, and upon the left the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh. The Reverend Jonathan Cape (in the absence of Lieutenant Sir Charles Pasley, G.C.B., through illness) examined the pupils in mathematics; and Lieut. Thomas Cook, R.N., in fortification. The number of cadets of the first-class brought forward consisted of thirty-six. Seven were selected for the engineers, namely:—

It will be observed that the number of young men brought forward for the engineers, was fewer on this occasion than it usually is; but Sir Charles Pasley, the public examiner, reported, that the first six of those brought forward for the artillery, required only a little further training to fit them for the engineers, and recommended that they should be allowed to present themselves again for examination in March next, when it would be finally determined to what class they should be assigned.

After the reports had been read by Mr. Hollyer, of the East-India House, the following prizes were distributed, viz. :—

The Chairman, in presenting Mr. Macdonell with the prize for past good conduct (a splendid artillery sword), said :—"I have great pleasure in presenting you with this sword as a reward for your exemplary conduct during your residence here; and I sincerely hope that the same report may follow you in after life; that you may be distinguished as an officer, and be an ornament to the service to which you belong." (Loud cheering.) The Chairman again rose, and handing Mr. Macdonell the gold Pollock Medal, said :—"In presenting you with the medal which you have acquired by your distinguished attainments in all branches of study which are taught here, it is most satisfactory to me and the Court of Directors to find that the report of the public examiner speaks of you in the highest possible terms, and sincerely do I congratulate you. I trust that this is the commencement of a career of usefulness in the public service. You must remember, however, that the attainments you have made here are but the foundation of knowledge, and that you must go on in the same way, so as to distinguish yourself in that course that you have so well begun." (Renewed cheering.)

The Chairman then addressed the cadets generally, and said it was in the highest degree satisfactory to the Court of Directors to hear the excellent reports of the public examiner that had been made to them that day, as it must be ever gratifying to them to find that the advantages that were opened to the cadets on coming to that institution had by them been turned to account in the acquirement of that knowledge which, in their future career, would at once be useful to themselves and honourable to the place of their education. The report of the Lieutenant Governor was equally favourable as regarded the discipline throughout the whole of the term. This was a point of most material importance, for good discipline was the foundation of a good soldier. He observed with great satisfaction that the public examiner had referred to the services of the professors of the institution for the manner they devoted themselves to their duties, and to the diligence and assiduity with which those duties were performed as meriting the highest praise. He (the Chairman) felt assured that all would agree in this tribute. The institution ranked high in the estimation of the country, and most sincerely did he hope that no one who heard him would in his person afford the means of lowering that character which had hitherto been so well maintained. When he last addressed them, he adverted to the great works that were then going on in India, and amongst others, the great Ganges Canal, 800 miles in length, which was completed under the direction of an artillery officer, Sir R. Cautley, who, he was happy to say, was present that day. To show how the work had been appreciated, he had only to mention that her Majesty had been graciously pleased to confer upon that officer the distinction of a civil Knight Commander of the Bath, an honour well deserved, for by him had been accomplished the most magnificent work in the world. That would prove to them that an artillery officer was as eligible as an engineer for employment in a civil capacity, and that if he attained to eminence he would not be without his reward. They were honoured that day with the presence of the Primate of all England, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and it was no small pleasure to them that his Grace had so honoured them, as it showed the interest he took in the conduct of the establishment, and proved that it was not thought undeserving of his Grace's notice. They were also honoured with the presence of an Indian prince, the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, who had come to this country for the acquisition of knowledge, who was present that day to see for himself what belonged to the education of a military officer for India. Time would not permit his adverting to other distinguished visitors, but he would just remark that, though India was happily now at peace, and young officers would not have the opportunity of displaying their talents and acquirements in the field, yet might they do so in an equally honourable manner by gaining celebrity in civil works for the improvement of the country. He would address a few remarks to those engineer officers who were about to leave them to proceed to Chatham, where they would be under the command of that distinguished officer, General Jones, whom he was happy to see amongst them after his labours at Bommasund. They were about to leave a college where discipline was strict and surveillance constant, and on going to Chatham they would all at once find themselves commissioned officers, and in a great measure their own masters. Let them not forget, under such circumstances, how needful it was to keep a severe watch over themselves, recollecting how easily the character for exemplary conduct, which had cost them so much time and care to establish here, might be destroyed by the unguarded folly of a day. To those who were about to proceed to their duties in India, he would have made a few observations; but any remarks to them would come with far greater weight from the Archbishop of Canterbury, who had kindly consented to give them some parting words of advice, to which he requested their attention.

The Archbishop of Canterbury said, upon being called upon, he could not refuse to fulfil the wish the chairman had had the kindness to express, although he could add little to the excellent remarks that had been addressed to them by that gentleman. He had done him justice in supposing that he took an interest in the institution, and as a neighbour, he could add his testimony to the favourable report of the public examiner as to the conduct of the students. He trusted that it would never be otherwise, for in the report now presented, he fully concurred. He had no personal knowledge as regarded the education and morals of the young men; but as they had advantages of every kind, he should be surprised if their general conduct was good, that their morals should not be so also. The Chairman had said he took an interest in their future career, and he could not forget that they were about to take part in the conduct of a vast portion of Her Majesty's dominions. They were going out from a country where they enjoyed the light of true religion to one where superstition still reigned, and it would be for them, by the exercise of their religion, to show by their conduct the contrast which it presented to that entertained by the majority of the people of the country which they were about to visit. Having the light of the Bible themselves, they would be able to exhibit its effects amid the darkness of that country. By their example, and not by their professions or principles, they would be able to show the excellency of the religion in which they had been nurtured. He had to-day seen the principles of fortifications and gunnery; but however excellent those principles might be in themselves, they would be of no value if their practice and development did not show a corresponding excellence; and there would be little use in professing the true religion unless they showed its value and its power in the practice of it. They saw an example before them, and he hoped that it would not be a single example; that it would be extended wider and wider, to show to the people of India, that while England was a wise and powerful nation, having equal laws for all, its people felt and owns the paramount importance of the knowledge of the true and living Saviour in whom was the only hope of eternal salvation. (Cheers.)

The business of the day here terminated; but was followed by a sumptuous luncheon at the house of the Lieutenant-Governor. The party broke up soon after four o'clock.

EAST-INDIA COLLEGE, HAILEYBURY.

CLOSE OF THE TERM.

Monday last, being the day appointed for closing the second term for the year 1854, a deputation from the Court of Directors of the East-India Company visited the College, for the purpose of receiving the Report of the Principal, and of distributing the medals and prizes awarded to the successful competitors in the various branches of Oriental, classical, and European literature.

A special train left the Shoreditch station of the Eastern Counties Railway at half-past ten o'clock; and on the arrival of the Directors and the Visitors at Haileybury, the distinguished party proceeded to the lodge to pay their respects to the Principal (the Rev. H. Melvill). The Directors then proceeded to the council-room, where they received the following highly satisfactory Report from the Reverend the Principal:—

"The Principal has much pleasure in reporting to the Hon. the Finance and Home Committee that sixteen out of the seventeen students, constituting the Fourth Term, have been found duly qualified for proceeding to India; and that fifteen out of these sixteen have displayed a greater amount of proficiency than is demanded by the statutes.

"The student in the Fourth Term who has not succeeded in keeping the Term, is the only instance of failure throughout the College. All the other students have exhibited the required proficiency; whilst a very large majority have far exceeded the necessary amount.

"The number of prizemen is eighteen; so that, whilst many have carried off various distinctions, there is satisfactory evidence of great and general competition.

"As a further evidence of this, it may be stated that no fewer than seventy-two essays were sent in by competitors for the prize in English composition, and many of considerable excellence. No doubt, the custom of classing all the essays induces many to present exercises of but little pretension; and the Principal will carefully consider whether, in future, the competition may not be so arranged as to exclude what is of insufficient worth, or of dubious origin.

"The Principal trusts that the statements thus made, with those which he has yet to add, on the authority of the Oriental Visitor, will satisfy the committee that the great body of the students have devoted themselves, with a praiseworthy attention, to the studies of the place.

"Professor Wilson observes that the great number of students now in College, and their multiplication in the several departments of Oriental study, have rendered the business of examination more than usually laborious; but that this labour has not been enhanced by the having had to deal with any serious instances of inaptitude or idleness. The students have very generally exhibited proofs of commendable diligence; and there are several examples of very remarkable assiduity and proportionate success.

"The Professor then proceeds to notice the Terms in succession. In the Fourth Term the marks of good proficiency include the greater number of the class in Sanscrit. The Third Term presents a large proportion of more than ordinary merit; and the quantity of work undertaken voluntarily by several of the students, in addition to what is required from them, is something quite extraordinary. Mr. Browne, in Sanscrit, Persian, and Hindustani; and Mr. Sharpe, in Sanscrit and Telugu—especially in the latter—have equalled, if not exceeded, both in extent and merit, the performances of any preceding students in Professor Wilson's recollection. Moreover, Mr. Browne has added to all this a highly respectable acquaintance with Arabic, and Mr. Sharpe with Tamil. In the same Term, also, Mr. Borradaile, who holds a respectable station in Sanscrit and Hindustani, has entered on the study of Marathi, and made sufficient progress to entitle him to reward.

"The Second Term offers also a fair proportion of students distinguished for industry and acquirement. Amongst these, Mr. F. Melvill is entitled to special notice, for the amount of his self-imposed addition to his appointed tasks, in which he holds the foremost place, by extra translations from English into Sanscrit, and by his having engaged in the study of Marathi, his proficiency in which is deserving of distinction.

"With regard to the First Term, the Oriental Visitor observes that it is pervaded by the general attribute of industry, and presents also a fair proportion of more than average ability. It is satisfactory also to find that many students in this Term, who failed at the last Examination, have redeemed their credit, and deserved the mark of great proficiency.

"Passing now from the proficiency to the conduct of the students, the Principal has to report that much disorderly and discreditable behaviour, on the part of several of the body, occurred on the commemoration of the 5th of November. To mark his sense of such improper proceedings, and to prevent, if possible, their repetition, the Principal felt it necessary to pass sentence of rustication on four of the offenders. He is happy, however, to be able to add that, with this single exception, the Term has been passed in great good order, and that the large mass of the students have distinguished themselves by a most praiseworthy observance of the rules and regulations of the College."

The deputation afterwards repaired to the library, where the visitors and a considerable number of the students had already assembled.

The chair was occupied by Major James Oliphant, the Chairman of the Hon. Court of Directors, who, together with the following Directors, formed the deputation:—Elliot Macnaghten, Esq. (Deputy-Chairman); W. B. Bayley, Esq.; Sir H. Willock, K.L.S.; Lieut.-Gen. Sir G. Pollock, G.C.B.; W. J. Eastwick, Esq.; H. T. Prinsep, Esq.

Amongst the visitors were the following:—J. C. Colvin, Esq.; B. Harrison, Esq.; J. Browne, Esq.; W. Jacobm, Esq.; B. D. Colvin, Esq.; Major Turner, Col. Melvill; T. Hankey, Esq.; A. Spens, Esq.; W. Fairlie, Esq.; G. Sparks, Esq.; B. Praed, J. C. Whiteman, Esq.; Dr. Greig; Capt. von Streng, H.P., 15th Hussars; Rev. H. Blane; Rev. E. F. N. Rolfe, &c. &c.

The following civilians on leave of absence were also present:—H. P. Malet, Esq.; M. C. Ommaney, Esq.; A. D. Robertson, Esq.; H. D. Sandeman, Esq.; E. Jenkins, Esq.; L. S. Jackson, Esq.; J. Guthrie, Esq., &c. &c.

The Chairman having taken his seat,

Mr. Hooper read the following list of medals, prizes, and other honourable distinctions obtained by the students:—

Mr. M. Melvill (who was received with cheers by his fellow-students) then read his prize essay, on "The Drama and its Influence on Society." The essay commenced by tracing the origin of the Drama to feelings common to the whole human race, prompting them in all ages to the study of man, as presented to them under the various circumstances of happiness, difficulty, and distress, upon the stage. The rise of the Drama from its first rude form to its comparative perfection amongst the clever democracy of Athens, when it served the purpose of a public censor, till its licentious personality was at length checked, was next traced; and it was shown to be undesirable that the theatre should again perform a function now exercised with more moderation and advantage by the Press. Touching upon the sudden rise of the Drama in the Elizabethan age, the essayist observed that its effect was to attract public attention from those gross and barbarous amusements which had been previously indulged in. Its discouragement by the Puritans was attributed to the abhorrence justly inspired by the indecencies of the dramatists of the time; its subsequent purification, to the influence of honest criticism; and its decline, in our own age, to the fact that the intellectual wants to which it formerly ministered are now supplied by the literature of the day, and that the habits of the people have become more domestic. The essay, which was admirable as a piece of literary composition, and exhibited a discriminating knowledge of the subject, closed with the following reference to the decline of the Drama:—"Such a change and such a prospect we must all regard with mixed feelings of triumph and regret. On the one hand we have to lament the degeneracy of a noble art, which in almost every nation has contributed to polish the manners and improve the morals of society. But when, on the other hand, we consider that its influence has ceased only because it is no longer needed, and that the causes of the change are to be sought for in those inventions of civilization which have brought comfort to every cottage and intellectual advantages to every class, how can we wish it otherwise? Let us weigh fairly what we gain and what we lose, and we shall find far more cause for joy than sorrow. And whatever may be the future fate of the Drama,—whether its glory be for ever departed, or be destined to rise again, like the phoenix, into new splendour and strength,—yet will it have left monuments of genius which can never be destroyed. The magnificent verse of the Athenian dramatist will through all ages be the theme of the student and the admiration of the sage. As long as the English tongue is spoken, the name of Shakspeare will be honoured and revered; and, in the silence of the closet, perhaps even more powerfully than amid the pomp of the theatre, the conceptions of his marvellous genius will excite an almost superstitious wonder, and write themselves indelibly in the hearts of an admiring posterity."

Mr. Boswell, who was received with applause, read a passage from Dow's "Hindustan," translated by himself into Hindustani.

Mr. Mackenzie, who was also received with hearty cheering, read Lord Byron's "Farewell of Napoleon to France," translated by himself into Sanscrit verse.

The Chairman then distributed the prizes awarded to the successful competitors, who were cordially cheered as they came up to receive them.

Mr. Hooper next read the classification of the rank of the students about to depart for India, as follows:—

BENGAL.

1st Class.—Mackenzie, Clifford, Harrison, C. Lane, W. Robertson, and J. C. Colvin.

2nd Class.—Paynter, Smith, Lindsay, and Harvey.

MADRAS.

1st Class.—Thomas, Boswell, and Arbuthnot.

2nd Class.—Horsley.

BOMBAY.

2nd Class.—Crawford and Elphinston.

The Chairman then addressed the assembled students. He said: He had had the great pleasure of receiving from the Principal that day a most satisfactory report on the attainments of the students during the term now closed. The report was satisfactory, not only with reference to the gentlemen of the fourth term, who were about leaving college, but it reflected the highest credit upon the whole body of the students. He need hardly say that, in the sphere upon which they were about to enter, all the attainments of the most industrious and gifted of their number would be required; for they were perfectly aware that the time was not distant when the Civil Service of India would cease to be recruited from the old establishment at Haileybury. Competition was now the order of the day, and the service would be thrown open to men of genius and talent throughout the country, who had not been trained in this place; so that if the gentlemen before him did not make great exertions to fit themselves for the duties which they were destined to perform, they would find themselves thrown in the background by their new competitors. (Loud cries of "No," from the students.) He rejoiced to hear that shout, for it expressed a determination which, coupled with the abilities the present inmates of the college had exhibited, would enable them to compete successfully with the talent and genius which would henceforth be employed in the administration of the government of India. It assured him that the students of this college would not succumb to those who would hereafter be their rivals, but that they would put forth their utmost energies, so as to keep pace with those who might be otherwise selected to fill important posts in the same honourable service. (Cheers.) Having spoken in terms of satisfaction of the attainments of the students, it would have been exceedingly gratifying to him if he could have bestowed the same praise in reference to a matter which was of equal moment—the maintenance of the discipline of the college. There had been, during the term, an infraction of that discipline, which had much grieved him; but he hoped and was inclined to believe that nothing of the kind would occur again. In consequence of what had happened, four of their number had been placed under sentence of rustication; but the Principal, having vindicated the discipline of the place, had intimated to him his intention to allow those four gentlemen to return next term. (Loud cheers.) He hoped that the cheers with which that announcement had been welcomed, might be regarded as indicating a determination on the part of the students to avoid and prevent any disorders in future; and that the good-feeling which must necessarily be excited by the kindness of the Principal, would dispose them to operate with him in maintaining the discipline of the place. (Cheers.) He would now take an affectionate farewell of those gentlemen who were about leaving for India. He was anxious that, in its expiring throes, this college, which had sent out many great, able, and useful men, should send out others equally worthy of the important service for which they were destined, and that those who went out last should not be the least distinguished. They were going to take upon themselves high and onerous employments; and he hoped that they would prove, as many of their predecessors had done, not only equal to the duties which would devolve upon them, but distinguished ornaments of the civil service of India. (Loud cheers.)

Three hearty cheers were then given by the students for Professor Jones, who is about resigning his professorship; and three cheers, equally cordial, for the Rev. the Principal.

The directors, professors, visitors, and students, then left the library, and after perambulating the grounds for a short time, proceeded to the Examination-hall, where an elegant luncheon was provided by Mr. Coleman, the college purveyor. Major James Oliphant presided, supported by the members of the deputation from the Court of Directors, the Rev. the Principal, &c.

At the close of the repast,

The Chairman said—Although the Government had determined on ceasing to recruit from this college for the civil service of India, he thought the Chairman of the East-India Company would ill discharge his duty on an occasion like the present, if he did not bring to notice the highly-valued services of the Principal and professors of the college. (Cheers.) It was unnecessary for him to tell the present company what highly distinguished men had served them in this place, or to suggest how deep a debt of gratitude they owed to those men for the attention they had paid, and the devotion they had invariably exhibited, in directing the studies of the young men educated here. (Cheers.) He might, perhaps, be excused, if upon the present occasion he mentioned by name one gentleman who was about to leave them, after a very lengthened service—he meant Professor Jones. (Cheers.) He had much pleasure in proposing the health of the Rev. the Principal and the Professors.

The Rev. the Principal, who was received with warm and continued cheering, said—Many thanks, Mr. Chairman, from myself and the professors for the obliging terms in which you have been please to propose the accustomed toasts. I could have wished that Professor Jones had been present, in order that he might have given vent to those feelings of gratitude which, I am sure, your remarks would have excited within him. Many thanks to you, also, gentlemen, for the manner in which you have received the toast of myself and the professors. We are deeply indebted to all who have given their attendance here to-day, for the kindly interest which they have taken in our proceedings. We are quite aware that those proceedings are not of a character to interest and engage a casual observer. They are very different, for example, from what may be witnessed at Addiscombe. There you have, if only in miniature, something of the pomp of war—the siege, the assault; and the imagination kindles at the mimic strife, and figures to itself the agony of battle in which our brave fellows are engaged abroad. Here we have nothing suggestive of that which now occupies the public mind—no model of Sebastopol—and nothing, therefore, which is likely to kindle, or sustain, enthusiasm. But, gentlemen, peace has its triumphs as well as war; and I cannot but think that such a document as the Report of the Administration of the Punjab—an administration in which our civilians are prominent actors—is not necessarily less glorious, and not necessarily less thrilling, than those Gazettes which have lately so justly stirred the shouts and also as justly, drawn the tears, of our country. Yes, peace has its triumphs; and we, in our quiet and unobtrusive occupation—training, not the soldier to deeds of chivalry, but the civilian to the administration of law, the protection of property, and the improvement of national character—we are doing something towards effecting a grand consummation, when all tyranny shall be swept from the globe, and every chain knocked off from our race. At this occupation we will cheerfully and earnestly labour, so long as our services can be thought conducive to such ends. I do not forget that the days of the College are numbered. But I do not think that it would become me, on an occasion like the present, to enlarge on this fact, to examine opinions, or exhibit feelings. We have but one course here to pursue,—to bow to the decision of the Government, and to take all possible pains that the last men whom the College sends out shall be so well prepared as to make it difficult for the new system to prove itself the better. This is our duty,—we will labour to perform it. (Cheers.) And I have every confidence in saying, on behalf of myself and the Professors, that the kindness which has now been shown us will be a great stimulus to fresh exertion, as it is a great recompense for past. (Loud cheers.)

The deputation and visitors then retired from the Examination-hall, and almost immediately left for London.

THE EXAMINATION OF THE CANDIDATES for admission into the East-India College next term (which will commence on the 19th of January, 1855) is appointed to be held at the East-India House on the 4th of January; the examiners appointed are the Revs. Thos. Dale, M.A.; Robert Eden, M.A.; and Wm. Stone, M.A.

PROVISIONAL MEMBERS OF COUNCIL.—Mr. Henry Ricketts has been appointed a provisional member of the Council of India, and Mr. Arthur Malet a provisional member of the Council at Madras.

East-India House, 9th August, 1854, and
4th October, 1854.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the annexed code of Regulations for the admission of Candidates at the first Examination, to be held in January next, for the appointment of ASSISTANT-SURGEONS in the service of the East-India Company, has been framed by the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, under the provisions of the Act 16 & 17 Vict. cap. 95, sec. 38.

REGULATIONS FOR THE ADMISSION OF CANDIDATES FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT-SURGEONS IN THE SERVICE OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

All natural-born subjects of her Majesty may be Candidates for admission into the service of the East-India Company as Assistant-Surgeons. They must, however, be between 22 and 28 years of age, and of sound bodily health.

They must subscribe and send in to Dr. Scott, the Physician to the Honourable East-India Company, before the 10th day of December, 1854, a declaration to the following effect:—

"I (Christian and surname at full length), a Candidate for employment as an Assistant-Surgeon in the service of the East-India Company, do hereby declare that I was years of age on the day of last, and that I labour under no constitutional disease or physical disability that can interfere with the due discharge of the duties of a medical officer; and I also attest my readiness to proceed on duty to India within three months of receiving my appointment."

This declaration must be accompanied by the following documents:—

1. Proof of age, either by extract from the register of the parish in which the Candidate was born, or by his own declaration pursuant to the Act 3 & 6 Wm. 4. c. 62.
2. A diploma in surgery, or a degree in medicine, provided an examination in surgery be required for such degree, from some body competent by law to grant or confer such diploma or degree.
3. A certificate of having attended two courses of lectures, of six months each, on the practice of physic, and of having attended for six months the practice and clinical instruction of the physicians at some hospital, containing at least on an average one hundred in-patients; or of having attended one course of lectures of six months, on the practice of physic, and clinical instruction for twelve months.
4. A certificate of having attended for three months the practical instruction given at one of the public asylums for the treatment of the insane.
5. A certificate of having attended for three months one of the institutions, or wards of a hospital, especially devoted to the treatment of ophthalmic disease.
6. A certificate of having attended a course of lectures on midwifery, and of having conducted at least six labours.
7. A certificate of having acquired a practical knowledge of cupping.

Candidates may also, at their option, send in certificates of attendance at any hospitals, or on any courses of lectures, in addition to the above. Attendance on a course of military surgery is recommended.

Candidates producing satisfactory certificates will be admitted to an Examination to be held in January, 1855.

The Examination will include the following subjects:—

1. Surgery in all its departments.
2. Medicine, including the diseases of women and children, therapeutics, pharmacy, and hygiene.
3. Anatomy and physiology, including comparative anatomy.
4. Natural history, including botany and zoology.

The examination will be conducted—

1. By means of written questions and answers.
2. By object examinations and experiments, when the subject admits of such tests.
3. By practical examination at the bedsides of the patient, and by dissections and operations on the dead body.
4. By viva-voce examination.

The persons who shall be pronounced by the Examiners to be the best qualified in all respects, shall be appointed to fill the requisite number of appointments as Assistant-Surgeons in the East-India Company's service.

All Assistant-Surgeons are required to subscribe to the Military or Medical, and Medical Retiring Funds, at the Presidencies to which they may be respectively appointed, and to the Military Orphan Society also, if appointed to Bengal.

All Assistant-Surgeons who shall neglect or refuse to proceed to India under the orders of the Court of Directors, within three months from the date of their appointments, will be considered as having forfeited them, unless special circumstances shall justify a departure from this regulation.

Candidates may apply to Dr. Scott, 13, Stratton Street, for further information, if needed.

N.B.—The certificates and notices as to Examination herein contained, apply only to the Examination to be held in January next. Regulations regarding the requirements of Candidates for future Examinations will be issued after the first Examination.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

NOTE, 4TH OCTOBER, 1854.

Candidates who may not have been able to attend the practice of an asylum or the insane, or of an ophthalmic hospital, for three months previous to offering themselves for examination in January, 1855, will not be excluded from examination, but will, if successful in obtaining recommendation for appointments, be required to produce certificates of having attended such practice during the interval between the examination and the time of proceeding to India.

The Board of Examiners of Candidates for the appointments of Assistant-Surgeons in the East-India Company's service, give notice that, on the 8th January, 1855, they will hold Examinations at the East-India House, for the selections of Assistant-Surgeons. The selection will be made according to merit, and it is expected that about thirty appointments will be awarded.

J. D. DICKINSON, Deputy Secretary.

East-India House, 13th December, 1854.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY do hereby give notice,

That the General Court appointed to be held on Wednesday, the 20th instant, is made Special, for the purpose of confirming the proceedings of the General Court of the 27th September last, altering and repealing sundry By-Laws of the said Company.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

East-India House, 13th December, 1854.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY do hereby give notice,

That a Proprietor of East-India Stock has given notice of his intention to submit the following motions, at the Quarterly General Court of the said Company, appointed to be held at their House in Leadenhall Street, on Wednesday, the 20th instant, viz:—

"That the Court of Directors do distribute among the Proprietors, to each individual, a copy of 'Thornton's Gazetteer of India.'"

"That the Court of Directors do lay upon the Proprietors' table, copy of the despatch from the Madras Government, on which the military authorities of the Home Government confirmed as legal (if they ever did so, as has been stated) the proceedings of the military authorities of Madras, in the case of the court-martial of the 6th Light Cavalry."

Also, "That the Court of Directors do lay upon the Proprietors' table a statement, shewing the present position of all the parties (or their relatives) of the same regiment (in respect of pension or other maintenance), who were punished by award of court-martial, or summarily dismissed without trial. The same statement to show the rank, the length of service, and whether any of the parties had received honorary rewards for distinguished service to the State."

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

East-India House, 13th December, 1854.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY do hereby give notice,

That the Political and Military Committee will be ready, on or before Wednesday, the 17th January, 1855, at 11 o'clock, to receive proposals in writing, sealed up, from such persons as may be willing to supply the Company with

Allen's Maps of India, &c.

DRAWN BY JOHN WALKER,

Geographer to the East-India Company.

A New Map of India;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectories, and the Position and Boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

*.* The object kept in view in compiling this Map, has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all Stations—Civil and Military—are inserted, as well as those of all Towns and places of note, likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various Districts and Collectories, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The Railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for Reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been shunned.

A General Map of India;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Hon. East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £3; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

Map of India;

From the most recent authorities. On two sheets—Size, 3 ft. 10 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 1s.

Map of the Routes in India;

With Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this Map are given the whole of the Military and Civil Stations, together with the principal Towns, the villages being omitted so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies.

A Map of the Western Provinces of Hindoostan;

The Punjab, Cabool, Sinde, Bhawalpore, &c.; including all the States between Candahar and Allahabad. On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 2 in. high. 30s.; or on cloth, in a case, £2; or on rollers, and varnished, £2. 10s.

Map of India and China, Burmah, Siam,

the Malay Peninsula, and the Empire of Anam. On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 3 ft. 4 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

Map showing the Steam Communication and Overland Routes

Between England, India, China, and Australia. Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 4 in. high; on cloth, in a case, 14s., or with rollers, and varnished, 18s.

Map of Arabia;

Compiled from all the most recent authorities, by order of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company.—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high; on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory.

On one sheet, 5s.; or on cloth, in a case, 6s.

Map of Affghanistan and the adjacent Countries;

On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

Map of China,

From the most authentic sources of information. One large sheet—Size, 2 ft. 7 in. wide; 2 ft. 2 in. high. 8s.; or on cloth, in a case, 11s.

Map of the Burman Empire,

Showing the annexed district of Pegu. One sheet, 3s. 6d.; or on cloth, in a case, 5s.

AGENTS IN SCINDE AND BOMBAY.—Messrs. LECKIE & Co.

This Company is established to introduce Railways into the Province of Scinde, commencing at the port of Kurrachee and proceeding to a point on the Indus, in the vicinity of Hyderabad.

The line will be about 110 miles in length, and will place Kurrachee, the only seaport of Scinde, in communication with the Indus, the great commercial artery of the countries on our North-West frontier, at a point where the river becomes free from the intricacies, dangers, and delays of the navigation of the Delta.

The great political and commercial advantages which may be fairly expected from this undertaking are clearly set forth in the Despatches of the Commissioner of Scinde and the Reports of the Engineer Officers in the service of the Honourable East-India Company, who have made a preliminary survey of the line.

The effect of the Contract to be entered into between the Honourable East-India Company and this Company will be, that the East-India Company guarantee a minimum rate of interest on the Capital required at 5 per cent. per annum for 99 years.

The Honourable East-India Company grant a lease of the land necessary for the Railway and Works for 99 years, free of charge. On the opening of the Line, all net profits exceeding the rate of interest guaranteed are to be divided—one half of the surplus is to go to the Shareholders, and the other half to the East-India Company, in liquidation of the interest they have advanced. When this interest is repaid, the entire surplus profit goes to the Shareholders. The East-India Company reserve a right to regulate the trains and fares; and as soon as the dividend exceeds ten per cent. to lower the fares, but not so as to reduce the profit below that rate. The East-India Company also reserve power, after the first twenty-five or fifty years, to purchase the Line at a price equal to the average market value of the Shares for the three preceding years. On the other hand, the Railway Company have the power, at any time after the Line has been three months in work, to require the East-India Company to take it off their hands at six months' notice, and repay them the Capital expended.

Irrespective of the guarantee, this enterprise possesses, in the opinion of those personally acquainted with Scinde and its resources, a highly remunerative character:—

1st. From the country presenting a series of firm and level plains, it is admirably adapted for the construction of a railway.

2nd. From the Line being of moderate length and complete in itself, having an important town at either terminus (Kurrachee, the lower terminus, the present seat of Government, being the only seaport for many hundred miles, and Hyderabad, the upper terminus, the former capital and still the chief entrepôt for the inland trade of the province), and of necessity forming the most important portion of any system of railways which shall follow the course of the Valley of the Indus or its tributaries.

3rd. From the actual existence of a paying goods traffic all the year round, which, in the opinion of the late Deputy Collector of Kurrachee, will have doubled its present value, and of a passenger traffic, which will have increased tenfold before a railway can be in operation.

Kurrachee is the only land-locked harbour on the coast between Bombay and the Red Sea; it is on the seacoast of the Indus valley, and is the nearest safe port to the Persian Gulf.

This port has been shown to be safe and easy of access for large ships during the height of the south-west monsoon. The Honourable East-India Company's Steam Ships "Queen," and "Auckland," of 750 and 800 tons, and drawing 16'0 and 18'6 feet water, as well as many large merchant ships, one of which drew 17'6 and another 18'6 feet, made the harbour with ease, and also left as easily.

From the junction of the Five Rivers at Mitten Kote to Kotree (Port of Hyderabad), a distance of more than 400 miles of permanently open navigation, the steamer best adapted for this portion of the Indus cannot get out and round by sea to Kurrachee, nor thread the narrow channels of the Delta. If the troops and stores could be landed at Kurrachee and conveyed by railway to Kotree, a large saving would, according to the officer in charge of the Indus flotilla, accrue to the State on that service, while steamboats of improved construction could be employed for the inland navigation from Kotree to the Punjab.

At present large quantities of stores, particularly porter, obliged to be sent by country boats, are found to be worthless on reaching the Punjab, the voyage of 600 miles from Kurrachee to Moultan lasting five months. During the last season the cost of transport of Government stores by country boats was about £150,000. By the railway, stores would be delivered in one day at Kotree on board steamers, which in a week might deliver them in the Punjab.

This railway would exert a powerful influence in promoting the development of the trade of the Indus valley. The annual losses are very large, from the accidents which take place in threading the narrow channels of the Delta. Major Freedy, the Collector of Lower Scinde, states, that "if one or two boats only out of a batch of six or so were lost, it is considered a good venture."

In the Port of Kurrachee the average of the shipping is from 70,000 to 80,000 tons yearly, of which about 30,000 tons were, last year, square-rigged vessels.

The return of tonnage of country boats passing the stations on the Indus, gives an average of 1,565,130 maunds, or 86,900 tons, or, below Sukkur, of 1,752,200 maunds, or 82,500 tons.

The number of laden steamers passing Hyderabad and Kotree is 170, with a tonnage of 1,190,000 maunds, or 42,500 tons.

The returns of Camel traffic leaving Kurrachee are not complete; but assuming one-half of the amounts obtained as being intended for the Indus, the total is 112,000 maunds, or 4,000 tons.

The present post-office outlay on the Line is £23,400 per annum.

From the recent orders transmitted to India, that the Government stores for the Punjab and neighbouring territories should be sent from Bombay up the line of the Indus,—instead of, as heretofore, from Calcutta up the Gangetic valley,—a great increase of the above-shown traffic must ensue, and a revenue, at railway rates, derived, which would give a large return on the capital of the Company. The preceding figures convey, however, but a moderate idea of the amount of tonnage which would come on the Railway. The increase of the import and export trade of the Valley of the Indus is progressive; but more especially is this apparent in the exports of the staple products of the Valley.

Every increase in facility and safety of transport will give fresh impulse to all native products—the export of wool and corn is capable of almost indefinite extension.

Besides the European and native troops, European travellers, and native traders will, it is believed, largely avail themselves of the Indus Valley line of transit, when relieved of the obstructions of the Delta.

From the large number of passengers proceeding from the Punjab and Upper India to Europe, and vice versa, there can be little doubt but that a direct steam communication will soon be established between Kurrachee, and Aden and Suez, this route being actually the shortest, while it is the safest from the prevailing direction of the periodical winds.

The pilgrims from the countries on our North-west border en route to Mecca, would at once supply traffic to the railway, and increase the intercourse already established between Kurrachee and the ports of the Persian Gulf.

The Line has been preliminarily examined by that late distinguished officer Lieutenant Chapman, of the Bombay Engineers, who reports it to present the greatest possible facilities for the construction of a railway, with the very best gradients (in fact nearly level), and at a low rate of cost. Colonel Turner, the Superintending Engineer in Scinde, Mr. Frere, the Commissioner of the Province, and Lord Elphinstone, the Governor of Bombay, all concur in recommending the immediate construction of the Line.

The public advantages to be derived from this Company's exertions may be thus recapitulated, viz:—

By the construction of a Railway from Kurrachee to the Indus —

1st. Greatly increased facilities will be afforded for landing and conveyance of troops intended for any part of the Punjab, and neighbouring territories.

2nd. A sum, estimated at £80,000 per annum at least, will be saved to Government in the transport of stores.

3rd. Improvements, to the extent of nearly £10,000 per annum, may be effected in the Indus Flotilla service, without any increased charges on the finances of the province.

4th. A very large sum would be annually saved to the trade of the country in freight alone, besides the saving in loss and damage to goods, which in itself would be a very large item.

5th. Sources of trade would be opened which at present are not in action.

It is believed that, in accomplishing these objects, a very large profit will result to the Company.

The Deposit to be paid on the allotment of Shares will be Two Shillings per Share, being after the rate of ten shillings per cent., the amount prescribed by the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110.

A deed, embodying the provisions required by that Act, and such as the Directors may consider proper for the regulation of the Company, and for carrying out the objects in view will be prepared; and if any Shareholder should fail to execute the same for one month after the publication of a notice in the "Times" newspaper, calling on the Proprietors so to do, his Shares, with the Deposit paid thereon, will become forfeited to the use of the Company.

Application will be made in the present Session for an Act of Parliament limiting the liability of the Shareholders to the amount of their subscriptions, the necessary Notices for which have already been issued.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE news brought by the Mail just arrived is—we might almost say literally—none. We do not mean to cast blame upon our brothers of the press. No doubt they furnish all they can, and if some stirring events could be got up for their employment, would furnish more. We therefore can only commiserate their hard fate as well as our own.

In conformity with a custom which may now be considered established, we commence with Burmah. All we have to say from this quarter is, that the envoy from Ava, and his suite, still remain in the British Burmese territories, affairs not having been smoothed down for the transfer of the distinguished party to Calcutta. To give utterance to our own private feelings, we do not half like this protracted stay in our dominions. Have the strangers no other object but to obtain an audience of the Governor-General? We cannot answer this question categorically, and therefore we commend it to our readers, that in their intervals of leisure, occurring between the rapid and severe successions of beef and turkey, plum-pudding and mince-pies, charades, conundrums, and other Christmas duties, they may turn a portion of their attention to this matter, and endeavour to furnish us with that answer which we are unable to elicit for ourselves.

In the absence of all stirring topics of interest, a nice little private war keeps Bengal from utter stagnation. A quarrel has taken place between the Lieutenant-Governor, Mr. Halliday, and the Governor-General's private secretary, Mr. Courtenay. As in all such cases, there were versions of the story differing from each other as widely as did the reports of Lady Teazle's discovery behind the screen in the "School for Scandal." Mr. Courtenay, however, printed for private circulation, it is said, the correspondence on the subject. By some means not explained (these things are never explained), a copy got into the hands of the Englishman, by whom it was given to the public, and all Calcutta is in a ferment. If we could but have a look behind the scenes on every state transaction, how different would the history of the world read. We leave this matter, without note or comment, to the judgment of our readers, who, after our previous references to their attention, will we fear think that we press upon them heavily.

Escaping to the other side of India, we ~~drop~~ <sup>go</sup> into Delhi, where the Caubul correspondent of the ~~Graphic~~ <sup>Graphic</sup> waits for us with the following letter.

"Major Edwardes's letter to Sirdar Mahomed Azum Khan, of which I sent you a copy, suggested the means by which the Ameer could gain the much-desired renewal of friendship with the British. I have since been informed by a relative of Mirza Mahomed Hossein, the present envoy, that there was another letter from Major Edwardes, requesting that a trustworthy person should be sent to Peshawur to be the channel of communication between the two governments. On this request it was that the above-mentioned Mirza went to Peshawur, from whence he keeps the Ameer informed of the progress of the negotiations. He has reported his departure from Peshawur, accompanied by Arslan Khan, to meet the chief commissioner on the invitation of that officer, and the Ameer is now anxiously awaiting the result of the interview. If things go on smoothly, one of Dost Mahomed's sons will shortly be seen in the Panjab, as representative of the Afghan state, in return for a British officer, who will come to reside at Cabul.

"Should this favourable and much to be desired result be brought about, it will be in a great measure due to the wise management of Sirdar Mahomed Azum Khan. But yet Sirdar Gholam Haider Khan claims all the credit of what has been done. No one who knows the mutual jealousies of the Afghan chiefs will be surprised at this. Afghan blood must boil.

"Sirdar Mahomed Khan professes to be much alarmed at the negotiations with the English, and has loaded his camels to start for Candahar. But the Ameer paid him a visit, accompanied by his son Mahomed Azum Khan, and assured him that the safety of every member of the Barukzaie family would be provided for in any treaty which might be made with the British. A similar assurance was given to the ex-chief of Peshawur, whose complaints had become rather troublesome.

"What I have now to tell you portends great future civil troubles in Cabul. The Ameer has long been solicitous about the succession to the throne, for he is growing very old, and finds it time to think of death. In consultation with the most influential of his advisers, he has resolved that Sirdar Gholam Haider Khan, his favourite, though not his eldest son, shall be invested with the right of succession. The ceremony is to be an imposing one. The Ameer himself will tie the sword of state around his son's waist, the uncle of the heir elect will invest him with the regal turban, and Meezan Haje, the chief priest, will throw the cloak over his shoulders. The Ameer hopes that by thus making early provision for the succession, he may prevent bloodshed after his death. But believe me when I say that these hopes are vain. His numerous brothers and sons will, you may depend upon it, forget all their solemn engagements as soon as the Ameer is dead; and sagacious people say, that the British Government may expect to be worried by numerous solicitations for both pecuniary and military aid from the contending claimants to the throne.

"The Nazir Khairoullah writes from the Murree Hills that he is not only in ill health, but is much alarmed at the conduct of the financial secretary at Cabul, who has forcibly impounded the revenue of his villages without assigning any reason. The Nazir states that the Chief Commissioner, John Lawrence Sahib, had paid him a visit, and expressed a belief that both the objects of his visit to India would be accomplished; namely, the re-establishment of a good understanding between the British and Afghan Governments and the restoration of the money embezzled from him by his agent, the late Ahmud Khan, who absconded to Cashmere. The Chief Commissioner expressed an ardent hope that both the objects of the Nazir would be attained. He presented the Nazir on his arrival with the usual sum of money as Zeeqfat.

"We hear that as the Russians are determined to prosecute the war with the French and English, the latter have resolved to turn out all the inhabitants from the forts of Attock and Shabquadr, and to repair and strengthen them so as to resist all attacks.

"The chiefs of Candahar are both vexed and alarmed at the existing negotiations with the English. Raza Koolee Khan, the Persian Elchee who came to Candahar from Persia with Kohun-dil-Khan's son, and who is superintending the enlistment and disciplining of the infantry regiments which I told you of, has also been doing his best to persuade the Ahmud Shabee chiefs, that if the English ally themselves with the Ameer of Cabul, and encourage him to fight against the chiefs of Candahar, the Shah of Persia will in his turn expel the English ambassador from his court; because the Candahar chiefs have been dependants of Persia since the time when Shah Soojah, aided by the English, took Afghanistan. Any attack on Candahar by the Dost, or by any other ally of the English, would cause a rupture between Persia and Great Britain; and this in the present state of the war in Europe would be very unwelcome to the English. Led by this foolish reasoning, the Candahar chiefs have forwarded to the Shah a long letter relative to the connection which Dost Mahomed is forming with the English, and complaining of the injury which Candahar is likely to sustain through the prevalence of English influence, which influence, as they say, the Shah ought to send both men and money to counteract. The Candahar chiefs have also written to Zaheer-ool-Dowlah, the chief of Herat, to say that the time has come for burying all the differences which have hitherto existed between Herat and Candahar; that both states are dependent on the protection of Persia, and should therefore break off all connection with the Government of Cabul, which, by seeking an alliance with the British, was only opening the way for the return of the infidels to Afghanistan. The chiefs of Candahar have also reminded the ruler of Herat of the enmity which his father, the late Yar Mahomed, bore to the English, of how he had expelled their agent,* and they warned him of the evil consequences which would ensue to Herat if Dost Mahomed should become a tool in the hands of the British. It was true that the Persians were of a different creed from the Afghans, but still they and their king were Moosulmans, and therefore to be preferred in every way to the Feringhees.

"Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan writes from Balkh to his father the Dost, that he has heard from respectable merchants from Mushed and Bokhara, that several Russian officers of high standing have just arrived in Persia, and have represented to the Shah that their master the Czar is determined to secure Khiva, Bokhara, and Kokan as permanent dependencies of his empire, by overawing them with a resistless force, which he means to establish in their neighbourhood. These Russian officers are encouraging the Shah of Persia to send reinforcements to the army at Merw, and thus distract the attention of the Oosbegs in that direction. The Russians have also engaged to send a few thousand troops across the Durya-i-Koolzum (Caspian Sea?) to march thence and co-operate with the Persian force at Merw.

"The king of Bokhara, who has always been sore on the possession of Bulk by the Afghans, has sent a friendly mission to the Russian general near Kokan, a country which, if not now subject to Russia, must sooner or later become its dependant. The Russians have taken a place called Taj Gunga. These statements are not only sent to Dost Mahomed by his son, the ruler of Bulk, but they are confirmed by reports which have since arrived here. The Sirdar (who is very anxious to know the result of the negotiations at Peshawur) further informs his father that 2,000 Persian troops are quartered at Herat, that Zaheer-ool-dowlah does nothing without consulting their commander, and has become a mere creature of Persia. A report, says the Sirdar, has also reached me to the effect that the Meer Walee and certain other Oosbeg ex-chiefs, expelled from the country by Dost Mahomed, have been urging the king of Bokhara to cross the Oxus with his army and turn me out of my government. If the king of Bokhara does not take this step, the Oosbeg chiefs say that they will lay their honour (nung) at the feet of the Russians, and enter into the service of the Russian general at Kokan. The king of Bokhara has asked them in reply to await the report of his mission which he has sent to the Russian general. This is the purport of the Sirdar's last communication to his father the Ameer."

Ceylon and China refuse to contribute to the Summary, and their contumacy must here bring it to an end.

B U R M A H.

A line of road is being surveyed between Calcutta and Arracan, and the engineer employed on this duty has recommended that a railway should be constructed instead of a common road; the cost would be but little more and the advantages so vastly greater as to far more than compensate for the additional outlay. We imagine that there is every probability of this suggestion being adopted.

The 2nd European Bengal Fusiliers, at Prome, are suffering dreadfully from sickness; it went down about a year ago 1,000 strong, and there are not now 300 men fit for duty—it has buried upwards of 150 men, and by the last accounts daily casualties were occurring.

The head quarters, with 350 men of H.M.'s 29th, arrived a few days ago at Rangoon, and were at once transferred to steamers and flats for Theyet-Mew and Meaday. The remainder of the regiment has just arrived in the Seosiris, and will leave in like manner. This is the way to do things. The men look healthy, and do not like leaving the comforts of a place like Maulmain, and their wives and children: it is indeed to be hoped the families will soon be allowed to join the regiment. The 29th are very weak in officers, it is supposed that some on detached employ will be ordered to join while the regiment is on the frontier of Pegu. It is supposed that it has been strongly recommended that Maulmain should not be left without a European regiment, to act as a reserve in case of either of the regiments in Burmah becoming so crippled by sickness as to be inefficient. The 2nd Bengal Fusiliers suffer considerably from fever up the country. The 1st are healthy at Theyet-Mew. Companies of the 84th have gone to relieve the companies of the 29th at Bassem and Sitang. Two companies of the 10th Bengal N.I. come down from Hensadah, and proceed in the Shoay Dong; had the rest of the regiment arrived, they would have gone at the same time.

The roads in cantonment progress rapidly, and Rangoon is fast becoming a very pretty place. If the town roads only got on as well, the merchants would be more pleased.

COURT-MARTIALS.

The tide of public opinion in England has set in against court-martials. Partly from the interest felt in all military details at the moment, and partly from the jealous scrutiny with which the army is watched by a section of English society, a very ordinary case of tyranny has attracted very extraordinary attention. The trial of Lieut. Perry revealed the fact that the members of a court-martial are only ordinary officers, subject to ordinary prejudices, and ordinary littlenesses, and all England stood aghast at the disclosure. The impression was the stronger, because the people are so accustomed to reverence the judges of the land, and so ready to believe them absolutely above all private feeling, and all esprit de corps. They quite forgot that a court-martial is not an assemblage of judges at all, but a military jury selected very nearly at random, and entrusted with the power of deciding on the law as well as the facts. The public were admitted in fact to listen to all the unconnected talk of a jury room, and we do not know that if the practice were extended to civil juries, the result would be one whit more agreeable to the feelings. The president who hinted that Perry's witnesses were non-existent, was not much worse than the jurymen who are ready to condemn, because the prisoner "has a bad look about him," and is a great deal better than the jurymen who says guilty, because it is his dinner hour. We do not defend the conduct of the Court, for it was simply tyrannical, we only object to demanding the gravity, dignity, and fairness of judges from a jury chosen solely out of the prisoner's profession. The impression, however, remains, and even in India it has deepened the existing prejudice against court-martials. In this country the objection is not so much upon the ground of fairness, as of irregularity, and want of judgment. The existence of two services is a great protection against the esprit de corps which is fatal to calm reflection, while it tends rather to increase the carelessness of procedure. No man knows how to conduct his case. Before some Courts, legal advice is a decided advantage; before others, it would be primâ-facie evidence against the accused. The rules of evidence vary with the temper of every deputy judge advocate-general, and the prisoner's defence is confined to legal points, or allowed to embrace every point, at the discretion of the president. The members, though perfectly competent to give an able and honourable judgment on the facts, are confused by sentences out of law-books, and scraps of Jamieson. The Court finally either surrenders itself to the judgment of one able member—the best thing it can do—or compromises the matter by a decision meant to include all opinions.

The accused is found guilty, and only reprimanded, or sentenced, yet recommended to the mercy the Court itself should extend. Hence arise those absurd decisions, which Sir C. Napier was accustomed to castigate, and which really resemble the verdicts of Irish juries more than the matured opinions of a grave tribunal.

The necessity of some reform seems to be admitted, but on its nature and extent the public ideas are not yet fixed. Most journals in England, and one at least in India, hold that the system should be abolished. They consider that ordinary judges can administer military law, and that court-martials are useless as well as tyrannical. We conceive that such an innovation would be productive of most dangerous consequences. An army to be valuable must be perfect in itself. It must have its own law, and its own judges, and both must be infinitely speedier and sharper than the rules to which ordinary society subjects itself. We cannot try a man for neglecting an order in the presence of the enemy by an "independent jury." He must be acquitted or condemned at once, if the army is to be anything but a strong police. On the other hand, stern as the system of necessity must be, it requires a laxity which judges could never acknowledge. If a man steals, it is nothing to the law that he has borne an irreproachable character. He must pay the penalty of that one theft. But if a man throws his cap at his officer, his previous character, and other circumstances also, must influence the decision. If it is the isolated offence of a good soldier, committed under momentary irritation, or even under temporary fever, discipline may be satisfied by a lighter punishment. But if it be one of a series of acts of insubordination, the man has deliberately attacked the constitution of the society to which he belongs, and he must suffer, not for the offence, but to prevent greater evils. The case is aggravated if a habit of cap-throwing has sprung up. Then the sentence must be inflicted, as it was some seven years ago, not according to justice at all, but in obedience to an inevitable military necessity. There is no justice, properly so called, in killing a man for throwing a cap; but the injustice is a lighter evil than military disorganization. All this, which could and must be considered by a court martial, could not and ought not to be considered by a more regular tribunal. We have said nothing of the political danger of making the soldier responsible to anybody but his own officers, or of the futility of all such arrangements in an actual campaign. The first, and perhaps weakest argument, appears to us sufficient to justify our denouncing such proposals as mischievous in the extreme.

But while we hold that the army must punish military offences, we do not argue that a court-martial is a perfect institution. The reform it requires seems to us to be suggested by the very obloquy heaped on its proceedings. Both in England and in India there is a confusion between the talk of individual members (jurymen) about the facts, and the decision of the whole court on legal points. We would separate the functions, reduce the ordinary members to their position as jurymen, and make the president the judge. In every division one officer might be appointed to preside at every court, while in that division, and we should thus obtain the advantage, if not of clear views, at least of ideas consistent for a few hours together. To him we would leave the sentence, subject, as at present, to the approval of the Commander-in-Chief. He would be as responsible as any other judge, and, in fact, far more so than a tribunal composed of men of all degrees of intellect, who deliberate in secret on the sentence. The court, meanwhile, would retain every power they now possess, except the one of which they would rather be relieved. They could still cross-examine, still decide upon the facts, and still recommend the accused to mercy. The members would, in fact, compose a special jury of unusual intelligence, and well acquainted with the bearing of the facts under investigation.—Friend of India.

THE ATTACHMENT OF THE MYSADUL ESTATES.

It is usually difficult to induce Englishmen to sympathize with bailiffs. It is a part of the national inconsistency of character to unite the most profound reverence for the law, with the most profound contempt for its subordinate agency. The masses listen with awe to a chief justice pronouncing sentence of death, and stone Calcraft when he is recognized in a crowd. They refuse to abolish arrest for debt, yet read with pleasure how Richard Martin, of Connemara, defied the bailiffs for ten years; and how Mr. Blank, of Dinagapore, sent a bailiff to Calcutta under arrest as a deserter from the fort. In spite of this prejudice, we intend to give an account of an arrest, in which we expect all the sympathy to be on the bailiff's side. The tale, too, may serve to illustrate the real necessity for an affray law in Bengal.

The great Mysadul estate, ten miles from Tumlook, in Midnapore, has been for some time past in difficulties. The Rajah, a man we believe of somewhat ancient family, but turbulent and extravagant, had fallen into the hands of Calcutta money-lenders. His whole estates were claimed by the sons of Mutty Lall Seal, who at last obtained a decree from the Supreme Court, and proceeded to seize the lands. It was necessary according to the forms of English law to seize the family residence first, a task as will be seen of no small difficulty. The bailiff and his followers proceeded to the scene, and for some days the officers, the darogah, and even the deputy magistrate, appear to have been kept at bay. The stake, however, was too large to permit of hesitation, and the magistrate, Mr. Bright, apprehensive of a serious breach of the peace, went out in person. He first sought out the Rajah, and pointed out the grave responsibility he would incur by any farther resistance. The Rajah, of course, declared that as the magistrate had come in person, all would be well. No resistance would be even attempted. Mr. Bright, perhaps a little doubtful as to these amiable professions, set out himself, ordering three darogahs, twenty-five constables, and fifty of the village watchmen to attend. The enterprise at first seemed to require an army. This model specimen of a peaceful zemindar was in fact master of a building of no slight importance. It is a defensible fortress three or four miles round, and defended like a castle in the middle ages by a broad moat, with two or three narrow bridges thrown across. The chief servants of the Rajah assured the magistrate there was no intention, and in fact no means, of resistance, but refused to open the gates. To force them would have required cannon, and Mr. Bright looked round for some other means of entrance. A little wicket on one side was at last discovered, which the bailiff forced open, and entered accompanied by one or two of his followers. The remainder had been advised by the magistrate to remain outside. The next instant there was a cry for help, all the police except one darogah and one burkundaz bolted, and Mr. Bright entered with only these two men. The sight might have made even a soldier hesitate. A regiment of Nuddees, ruffians from the North West, some two hundred strong and all armed, had been posted to defend the great gates, and massacre if necessary all who entered. These men baffled by the flank entrance, now attacked the bailiff, who but for the magistrate would scarcely have regained the Supreme Court alive. The slightest backward movement would have been followed by the loss of the fort, and probably by a more serious catastrophe. Fortunately, Mr. Bright was equal to his work. He ran forward, the Nuddees recognized him, halted, and at last turned round and fled. The great gates were opened, the police recovered their panic, and the house or fort was in the possession of the bailiff. It was found, we believe, regularly provisioned for a siege, the quantity of weapons collected for service was extraordinary, and but for the nerve and promptitude of the magistrate, the attachment could scarcely have been effected without the assistance of troops.

The occurrence illustrates strongly one main defect of our Police. Our legislators, with the true haughtiness of Englishmen, seem to consider armed resistance impossible, and have made little provision either for preventing or for punishing it. Not one of these armed ruffians will be punished. Such an occurrence would in England be so impossible, that we can discover no analogy. In Ireland, however, the sheriff would have been accompanied by bayonets. In America, he would have been assisted by a posse comitatus, consisting of every man capable of bearing arms, and the defenders would have been shot down as fast as revolvers could be loaded. It is only under the "despotic and oppressive" Government of the Company that a debtor can levy a regiment, provide them with weapons, fortify a house, and prepare for resistance to a legal process by force of arms. Be it remembered, this is no narrative of events in a half-subdued district, or a border territory, it occurred ten miles from Tumlook, within two days' journey of Government House, and under the very shadow of the metropolis.

It is against such occurrences that the affray bill is directed, and against such occurrences that it will be so hopelessly ineffectual. The magistrate might, under that Act, have taken a penal recognizance from an insolvent, but the attachment would not have been complete. There is but one true remedy for these outrages. Had the Rajah been assured that resistance would have been followed, not by the punishment of his men, but by his own transportation for life, not a sword would have been drawn, or a club lifted.

It may not be unnecessary to mention that we have had no communication with Mr. Bright on his own deeds.—Friend of India.

REVENUES OF THE NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.

The annual report of the Sudder Board of Agra is still too late. The latest is dated 2nd May, 1854, yet it brings the statement only down to April, 1853. We can imagine no cause which should produce a delay of more than six months, and we would impress upon the Board that figures, like eggs, to be valuable must be fresh. In the nineteenth century "last year" is a forgotten historical period, and reports of the same date are filed on the same shelf with Rollin and the Harleian Miscellany.

The aggregate revenue of the North-West Provinces amounted in the year 1851-52 to Rs. 4,63,00,000, or about one-sixth of the gross revenue of the empire.

Land revenue .. .. .	Rs. 4,27,69,604
Abkaree .. .. .	20,34,042
Stamps .. .. .	15,54,353

Total .. .. Rs. 4,63,57,999

Of the total more than four-fifths is produced directly from the land. The demand amounted to Rs. 4,31,43,781, and though the year was by no means unusually favourable, the balances amounted to only Rs. 3,74,000, or 3-4ths per cent. on the demand. Even this small amount is very unequally distributed. In the entire division of Agra, which includes five zillahs, and produces a revenue of nearly three quarters of a million, the balances are not equal to the annual salary of a single collector. The fact is important, because the balances offer a fair test of the lightness of taxation. It is not a perfect one, for the Government may still be taking a larger rent than is expedient for the welfare of the tenant, but the absence of any hesitation to pay is a fair proof that it is not oppressive. This belief, moreover, is fostered by the statement that only ninety-three estates were sold for arrears, though opposed by some curious facts which will be found below. The aggregate population according to the census of the same year, was 30,608,381, and the taxation is therefore equal to Rs. 1-5 or two shillings and sevenpence a head. It is objected, that by comparing this amount with the average of England or £1-15 we create an unfair impression of the incidence of Indian taxation. We will therefore submit a different calculation. The census proves that in the North-West as in Europe, five souls constitute a family. Each family then pays to the state Rs. 6-9 a year. It earns on the very lowest average about Rs. 4 a month, and the taxation is equivalent to an income tax of 13½ per cent. per annum. We doubt if there is a landholder in Great Britain who would not gladly consolidate his taxes, direct and indirect, tithes, poor rates, and road cess for the same amount.

The Abkaree and stamp duties present but little of interest, and we turn to other tables containing information of somewhat unusual value.

One of the constant objections urged by Madras patriots to the ryotwari is that it destroys the value of land. Land, they say, actually bears no price; and though that fact really means nothing, except that all the land is let on annual leases by a landlord who never sells, still to men filled with English ideas, it appears to indicate extreme poverty. It is certainly not the case in Bengal, where land in small pieces bears an unnatural value, and in great estates will always fetch a price fairly proportioned to the real rental. In the North-West, however, land is not in evident demand. The following table shows the result of some private sales.

District.	Acres.	Jumma.	Price.	No. of yrs. rent.
Muttra .. ..	1,197	3,074	15,074	5
Agra .. ..	4,206	9,557	22,161	2½
Mynpoorie ..	4,811	6,831	24,074	5
Cawnpore ..	17,363	23,148	86,408	3½
Allahabad ..	9,335	12,020	85,952	7
Goruckpore ..	25,308	13,963	2,45,369	17

The statements are perhaps too small to enable us to deduce from them any real result, but even the apparent result is somewhat curious. The worse the land is cultivated, the less is its rent. The less the rent, the higher the price paid, and it would appear that the price of wild land is actually much higher than that of land in high cultivation. As we have said, the facts are too few for a reliable estimate, but such as they are, they indicate that the rent is too high in proportion to the profits of cultivation.—Friend of India.

SARTOR MILITARIS.

It is not often that we have either space or inclination to enter upon questions of military costume. The necessity of a reform to the efficiency of our army has however been admitted, and the efficiency of the army is at present the most important of political objects. As we are aware of the obstinacy with which martinets decry all reform, as the advice of "intelligent, but theoretical civilians," we have descended to minute details, which would otherwise have been avoided.

The present war in Europe, which has called so large a portion of the British troops into the field of active service, amongst other reforms, has led to a change in the uniform of all branches of the army.

These changes, or something analogous to them, will in all probability be shortly adopted in the Indian service; but as the new arrangements—although manifestly an advance in the right direction—have not given general satisfaction, it would be well to consider carefully what are the principles that should regulate the system of military clothing and equipment in this country, especially with reference to local wants and circumstances, before passing any decision, or blindly following any pattern merely because it has been adopted at home. This is the more advisable, as it appears that the new uniform ordered for the British infantry is in a great measure copied from that worn in the French service, although the latter possesses some notorious disadvantages, and is likely to be modified at an early date, a special commission having been assembled in Paris during the present year to consider and report on the general question of equipment. The clothing of the army is an important matter, as upon it depends much of the physical efficiency, the health, the comfort, and, in some measure, the military pride and spirit of the soldier.

As regards efficiency, in order that the soldier may have the full and free use of his limbs, that he may be enabled to put out all his strength in the moment of emergency, and possess power of rapid and sustained locomotion—that great element of military success—it is essential that his movements should not be cramped and fettered by tight clothing of any description, and that he should be well shod.

In a hygienic point of view it is necessary that the uniform should afford protection against the extremes of climate and the inconveniences of bad weather; that the means of a change of clothes should always be available, and further that the head should be protected from the direct rays of the sun, and the loins be well covered and supported. With reference to economy it is advisable that the materials employed should be of a strong and durable quality, and the patterns of a plain and simple description, admitting of repairs on service by the wearer himself.

And lastly, as to appearance, it is very desirable that, holding the foregoing considerations in view, the ensemble should be rendered as becoming as may be practicable without any redundancy of useless ornament, for the soldier, like all other classes, naturally objects to be made ridiculous by an outré costume, and it is politic to render the badge of his profession one that he may feel proud of in all respects. In private life the sportsman offers the nearest approach to the condition of the soldier on active service, and the costume and equipments adapted by the former to suit his own convenience, might in many respects afford a hint to the equipment of the latter.

Under these circumstances we consider that the uniform coat should be a short loose frock, devoid of all unmeaning ornaments or appendages. Although scarlet is not the best military colour that might be selected, it has been so long associated with a continued career of success, and has become so completely the national military colour as to render any change inadvisable. The coat selected for the infantry of the royal army appears to be suitable to the purpose required; but in India it would be preferable to make it single-breasted, as being lighter. The abolition of all lace upon it would admit of a superior description of cloth being issued, and the appearance might be improved by handsomer buttons being supplied. Epaulettes and wings are useless incumbrances in the ranks, but a light flexible chain shoulder-strap would be at once serviceable and becoming. An important advantage of the frock coat over the jacket or narrow-tailed coat, is that it covers and protects the stomach and loins, the two chief seats of disease amongst soldiers: but the skirts should not be long enough to interfere with the musket in shouldering arms. A regimental or company badge might be worn on the collar, and to improve the appearance the seams might have an edging of the same colour as the facings. Pockets, not too large, would often be found convenient on service. A cloth waistcoat would also be an useful addition for the cold weather in the north of India.

A light neckcloth should be substituted for the stock with Europeans, and would also be an improvement upon the necklace generally worn by the native troops in Bengal.

The sportsman's loose breeches and gaiters would afford the best covering for the lower limbs, especially if so made as to admit of their being easily put on and off. But as some objections might be raised to their adoption, the present pantaloons might be retained, care being taken that they are made sufficiently loose. Dark grey is the best wearing colour; but the cloth employed should be of a much stronger and better description than that at present supplied. A broad stripe down the side does not look well when straps are not worn, and the latter are quite unsuited to infantry. A narrow red edging down the seam is, however, a decided improvement as regards appearance. For the foot, there is nothing so convenient and serviceable as well-made ankle boots, and we believe that they might be introduced into the native, as well as into the European regiments, without difficulty. But if the shoe must be retained for the sepoy, he should also wear short gaiters with them, which might be supplied to him at a small cost; and would add to his comfort and efficiency by keeping the dust out of his shoes on a long march. As a head-dress, there is nothing to equal a light helmet. This might be made of felt for the men, and beaver for the officers, with a handsome broad regimental badge of brass in front, and a neat crest or ornament on the top, serving as a ventilator and as a socket for a plume, to be worn as full dress. It should have peaks to protect the face and the neck, and a chain to pass under the chin. On service a white cover might be worn over it.

The accoutrements ought to consist of a single shoulder-belt to support the pouch, and a waist-belt for the bayonet. If the amount of ammunition to be carried by the soldier was reduced to 50 rounds, the pouch might hold 40, and be much reduced in size and improved in pattern; the remaining 10 rounds being then carried on the right side, in a small expense pouch on the waist-belt. More than that quantity would drag the waist-belt down, and prevent its sitting comfortably.

A long-skirted great coat, though it may possess some advantages, is inconvenient for marching, and might be advantageously replaced by a loose sort of pilot coat, coming nearly down to the knees, which would not impede the action of the lower limbs, and might be worn over the accoutrements, or under them, as found most convenient. But for night duties in very cold or wet weather, the legs also require protection, and this might be afforded by a pair of loose overalls, such as are worn by grooms and stable boys in England, buttoning at the side, to be put on over the ordinary pantaloons.

A fatigue dress is always necessary to admit of a change in camp, and to spare the regular uniform. This might consist of a shell-jacket, made out of the old coat, and light pantaloons, like the summer trousers in the British army, which would be far preferable to the dyed cotton fatigue pantaloons now in general use. To these must be added a light foraging-cap, for which none is preferable to the present Kilmarnock pattern. The abolition of the old heavy knapsack was a great improvement; but it is a question if we have not fallen into another extreme. In this country the regimental baggage is generally well up with the corps, and to overload the soldier with a heavy kit was absurd. But the men should always have a complete change with them, and this cannot be conveniently carried in a haversack, where it is always liable to get wet, which in a great measure does away with its utility. We would suggest a light small oilcloth frock, calculated to hold the fatigue-jacket, trousers, and cap, a shirt, banian, pair of socks, towel, soap, comb, and a hold-all for needle and thread, &c., with a pair of shoes. This would render the soldier independent, and enable him, after a march, to make a complete change, which would add greatly to his health, comfort, and cleanliness. This arrangement is particularly applicable to India, where the warmer clothing of the regular uniform is required in the mornings, the usual time of marching, and on night duties, whilst the lighter equipment is more suitable to the middle of the day. A corresponding uniform might be adapted for the other arms, with the requisite changes in colour and in the accoutrements. In the cavalry, and more especially in the horse artillery, the leather breeches and boots should be restored, which could be the more easily effected now that the pecuniary interests of the colonels are no longer opposed to the efficient equipment of the troops.

The uniform of the officers should be assimilated to that of the men as closely as possible; and all officers should wear a pouch, as the absence of the pouch-belt renders them a mark for the enemy even at a distance. On state occasions the ordinary leather accoutrements might be replaced by handsome embroidered appointments, and a gold sash might be added, such as is worn in the Austrian service. Epaulettes might also be worn in full dress, and epaulettes by field and staff-officers; but on service the equipments could not be too plain, so long as the distinctions of the several grades are clearly distinguishable when moderately near.

An equipment such as that we have suggested would, we think, meet the chief requirements of the service, and tend to improve the sanitary condition, the comfort, and general efficiency of the troops, with but little additional expense to the Government.—Friend of India.

THE ANNUITY AND CIVIL FUNDS.

A question of considerable interest and importance to the civil service, was nearly being decided the other day in the most summary and unsatisfactory manner. It has become necessary, since the publication of the new civil service furlough rules, to decide whether the deductions that were made from the salary of an officer, when upon leave, to the Annuity and Civil Funds, under the rules of May, 1843, should still be effected under those of August, 1854. We are informed that this question was propounded to the directors of the funds, and that it would most probably have been decided by them in the affirmative, had the memorandum not passed into the hands of Mr. Harrington. That gentleman took altogether a different view of the matter from his colleagues, and after having obtained figured statements which fully bore out his opinions, he recorded them in the shape of a note, which was attached to the other papers. Mr. Harrington's note, together with the other documents, was again circulated amongst the directors of the funds, and we believe we are correct in stating, that it has had the effect of altering the opinions of most of them respecting this subject.

It would appear that the deductions to the two funds are not made upon the same principle, those for the Annuity being effected upon the amount of salary actually received by an officer when absent upon leave, and those for the Civil Fund upon the amount which the officer received from his last appointment when present performing its duties in this country. Under the rules of May, 1843, these deductions were not felt, because the larger the salary of an officer in India, the larger were his allowances when he was absent upon leave; but under the new rules the reverse will be the case, so that, in fact, an officer in the receipt of Rs. 52,000 per annum in India might receive less, when at home upon leave, than would an officer, provided he had served more than ten years, who drew in this country only Rs. 24,000 per annum. Mr. Harrington very justly characterized this as an anomaly, and he proposed that it should be corrected, not only because it was manifestly unfair to calculate deductions in accordance with such a principle, but because civil servants, upon their present reduced rates of furlough allowance, could not really sustain such a drag upon their limited resources. This he proved in the most incontestable manner by figures furnished to him, we believe, by the presidency civil auditor. He took as an instance an officer in the receipt of Rs. 52,000 per annum in this country, and showed what his receipt would be under the old and new rules, when absent upon leave.

First, under the old rules,
The salary of such an officer per mensem } would be	Rs. 4,350 0
Deduct per mensem in accordance with the } rules, one-sixth for the first year's absence	Rs. 725 0
		3,625 0
Deduct for Annuity Fund.	Rs. 145 0
„ Civil at 2½ per cent.	Rs. 108 12
„ Additional at 2 per cent.	Rs. 87 0
		340 12

Thus leaving the officer upon leave Rs. 3,284 4 per mensem,—an ample allowance for all purposes. Out of such a salary the deductions to the Funds were hardly felt. It is necessary, however, to remark that the deductions given above are those payable by a married officer. During the second year's absence, the deductions from the salary of an officer being one-fourth instead of one-sixth, and those on account of the Annuity Fund being somewhat less than during the first year, the total amount of such an officer's salary per mensem, when upon leave, was Rs. 2,936 4.

The contrast between the deductions under the old and new rules is somewhat startling. We give those under the new rules below, only premising that the deductions on account of the Funds are, as in the above instance, those payable by a married officer:—

Salary per mensem.....	Rs. 4,350
Deduct per mensem .....	3,516 10 8
		833 5 4
	RS. A. P.
Annuity Fund ....	33 5 4
Civil do. ....	108 12 0
Additional do. ....	87 0 0
		229 1 4

Leaving a balance per mensem of only Rs. 604-0-4 to an officer who, when in India, was in receipt of Rs. 4,350 per mensem.

Now, the question arises, if the deductions on account of the Civil Fund be made on the same principle as are those of the Annuity, how are the Funds to make good the loss that they would suffer in the reduced amount of deductions payable by officers upon leave? Mr. Harrington was of opinion that no loss need be suffered, and that the officers acting for those upon leave should make good the difference between the amount paid by the absentees on their own receipts, and that which they would formerly have had to pay. But this opinion has been considered by some of the directors to be not founded on fact, and it was moreover deemed unjust that an officer acting for an absentee should make good his deductions to the Funds. Under any circumstances, an officer acting for another could only draw 50 per cent. or half of his salary, as a deputation allowance, so that, even if the deductions on account of the Civil Fund were made according to the absentee's actual receipts, and his locum tenens were to make good so much of the remainder as the amount drawn by him as deputation allowance would permit, there would still remain more than one-third of the substantive salary untaxed on account of the fund. For instance, an officer in the receipt of Rs. 4,350 per mensem in India, would now draw when upon leave in England,

	RS.
His locum tenens would draw as deputation allowance 50 per cent. of the amount of the substantive appointment .....	604
	2,175

Leaving a total of Rs. 2,779 only upon which deductions on account of the Civil Fund might be made, even if Mr. Harrington's proposition were approved of; whereas under the old rules of May, 1843, and also under those at present in force, deductions were, and are still made upon Rs. 1,571 more; i.e. upon Rs. 4,350, instead of, as proposed, upon Rs. 2,779.

We have put aside altogether the consideration whether it would be just to make the acting man pay deductions for the absentee, even although he were upon sick leave; but we think we have shown clearly enough that the directors of the Funds will have to provide in some other way than that suggested by Mr. Harrington for the deficiency that would occur if the deductions to the Civil Fund be changed in principle, as we believe, in all fairness, they now should be. The question, however, is still under consideration, and we shall conclude with the expression of our wish that it may receive at the hands of the directors a just and satisfactory solution.—Bengal Hurkaru, Nov. 14.

THE LAW REPORT OF THE PUNJAB FOR 1853.

It has frequently been observed that one great advantage of America is the field it offers for experiments. The vested interests, and the social forms, the distribution of property in masses, and the instinctive conservatism which mark English society, retard, if they do not prevent reform. It is felt that the Legislature can never retrace its steps, and that it must therefore hesitate, either till its way is clear, or till the pressure from behind is irresistible. In the States these hindrances are absent. Local legislatures rendered despotic by popular support, working in a new country, and unfettered by traditions, make experiments which serve for the guidance of the world. Michigan runs the round of philanthropic ideas, and finally decides that society at present requires the punishment of death. Maine endeavours to check the vices of the drunkard by refusing him the materials of drunkenness, and the world doubts if a liquor law be after all impossible. The Western States are working out strange theories on the necessity of legal processes for the recovery of debt, and even doubt whether the waste lands of the commonwealth are not the property of the community. Each step for good or evil is a lesson to older nations, and the steps are frequent because they do not involve the impossibility of retrogression.

The part which America plays towards the world, the non-regulation provinces play towards India. In the Punjab and in Mysore, in Assam and the Tenasserim experiments are made, while the regulation Governments are only contemplating the expediency of a Report. They are as young and as unfettered as the Atlantic states, and, from the irregular character of their administration, can venture on acts which in Bengal or Bombay would be held to trench on vested interests. It is for this reason that we watch with such attention the progress of these provinces, and for this reason also we desire that the reports which comprise their history should be clear and succinct.

We regret that, under this view, we cannot praise Mr. Montgomery's last report. It is overlaid with detail. Nine-tenths even of official men will shrink with a feeling of annoyance from two hundred quarto pages of facts and figures, most of which are merely repetitions. One great table would have contained them all. The general report is impaired by a defect of another kind. It is too meagre. Mr. Montgomery, doubtless, is unwilling to repeat himself, which he must do, if he writes every year a full report. He forgets that in business even repetition is better than ambiguity, and that it is instruction, and not literary success, which ought to be his object. The point begins to require the attention of the Government of India. We receive every week masses of statistics from different Indian provinces, of which one-half are so imperfectly prepared as to be valueless. The best, perhaps, is the North-West Revenue Report, which can be comprehended at a glance; and some such system as the one there adopted should be rendered imperative upon all. Even if it is the official world, and not the public, which is to be instructed, that is no reason why the work should be imperfectly or hurriedly performed.

With this somewhat lengthy preface, which, however, relates to an evil of no slight magnitude, we turn to the criminal report of the Punjab. This remarkable improvement in the habits of the population on which we commented last year continues manifest. Murder in all its forms,—on the river and the highway, for money or for the ornaments of children, has decreased. The number of such cases which in 1852 was 265, was in 1853 only 229. Homicide and dacoity, burglary and arson, theft by violence, and rape, have all declined, the diminution being at the rate of more than ten per cent. Even cattle stealing, always the distinctive foible of mountaineers, has been repressed. On the other hand, the crimes of civilization,—perjury and forgery, adultery, and the issue of base coin, have all considerably increased. The increase of adultery, it must be remarked, does not imply a deterioration of morals. The Sikh, like the Mahomedan, preserved the purity of his harem by the dagger and the cord, and the justice now executed by the law was formerly executed by the husband. The increase of such cases as yet indicates only the increasing tenderness for human life. As for the lesser crimes of larceny and theft, Mr. Montgomery adheres to the stock excuse, that the addition is owing to increased vigilance on the part of the police. We have repeatedly pointed out the questionable character of this deduction. These crimes always increase while our rule is young. The Asiatic, whether Hindoo or Mahomedan, though singularly mild towards offences which betoken shrewdness, is unrelenting towards the baser forms of pillage. The Mussulman hacked off the hand of the thief. The English, though intolerant from their complicated society of coining or forgery, are apt to regard larceny as a crime of poverty, and to judge it with a lenity they refuse to the dacoit. In this country this lenity is misplaced. Orientals, uninfluenced by the personal honour, which in too many cases does duty for principle in Europe, do not look on stealing with contempt. An educated European will do anything but steal. An educated Asiatic avoids stealing whenever there is considerable danger that the theft will be discovered. Moreover, the vigilance of the police appears in some degree to have decreased: for while 32 per cent. of property stolen was recovered in 1852, only 29 per cent. was obtained in 1853.

Again, while the heavier crimes have been struck down with unsparing vigour, the lighter offences have been too often punished by a fine. Thuggee, for instance, once so prevalent in the Punjab, is in a state of permanent abeyance. Not one case was reported during 1853. In truth, the crime was attacked as oriental crimes should be attacked, not by forms and codes, but by an exercise of the summary discipline by which we restrain the crimes of pirates. Within eighteen months, 191 have been transported, and 257 otherwise disposed of! The Musbee Sikhs, a class which exists solely by crime, and from which the Thugs obtain their most formidable recruits, live under a surveillance like that which crushes a forçat in Paris or Marseilles. In every thannah their movements are recorded, and information immediately forwarded of every change of residence. Escape is therefore impossible, and four millions of people are rendered more secure by an "unconstitutional espionage" over a few hundred villains. English parish vestries would be indignant, but the Sikhs who are saved from the cord do not think themselves oppressed.

On the other hand, 10,011 persons were fined, and the commissioner wishes the number were increased. Undoubtedly the offender is thus saved from the contamination of a jail, but the punishment is objectionable. It is unequal in itself, as it must vary in severity with the means of the accused, and it tends to foster the idea—always too prevalent in this country—that the wealthy are above the law. We notice this the more pointedly, because we shall regret to see the tendency to undue lenity, which has relaxed our criminal jurisprudence in Bengal, extend to the Punjab.

Lastly, out of 64,392 witnesses examined in different suits, 54,990, or more than eighty per cent., were dismissed on the same day. Less than five per cent. were detained more than two days, a result which testifies for the Punjab system far more than the diminution of great crimes.—Friend of India.

THE COURTENAY AND HALLIDAY CONTROVERSY.

It is one of the disadvantages of the press in India, that it is so frequently required, by the peculiar character of its constituency, to take up and descend on the private differences of men of eminent station, and thus reduce itself to the level of the petty provincial papers in England, which live chiefly upon local slander. This fact has just received exemplification in regard to a controversy, which has terminated in the dissolution of friendship between Mr. Halliday, the lieutenant-governor of Bengal, and Mr. Courtenay, the private secretary of the Governor-General. All the documents connected with this very unpleasant affair, though printed for private circulation only, have found their way into the Englishman, through the officiousness of some kind friend, doubtless, to both parties. From that journal the correspondence will, of course, be republished in all the papers of India, even though they may have to displace a brilliant article from the Times to make room for it. It would have been more agreeable to our feelings to have been exonerated from noticing the matter at all, but, as a member of the fourth estate, we are expected to contribute our quota of remarks, at the risk of having our motives misunderstood if we should neglect to do so. But we enter upon the duty thus imposed on us with great reluctance.

We cannot make room in our limited space for the correspondence, and must therefore confine ourselves to a synopsis of the most material facts, and upon this text we shall offer a few words of comment.

Mr. Harry Saunders, a young gentleman of the civil service, and a friend of Mr. Courtenay, the private secretary, preferred a request to the Governor-General in April last to be transferred from the district of Jessore, where he was an assistant, to the post of fourth assistant in the general treasury in Calcutta. His Lordship offered no objection to the arrangement, and said he would send for Mr. Allen to settle it. On the following day, after council, Mr. Halliday called on the Governor-General, and on leaving him went into Mr. Courtenay's room, and said that he had been endeavouring to persuade his Lordship to put Mr. Augustus Elliot into the treasury, but without success. Lord Dalhousie determined to appoint neither Mr. Courtenay's friend, Mr. Saunders, nor Mr. Halliday's friend, Mr. Elliot, but determined to give the post to Mr. Harrison. A minute was accordingly circulated proposing this appointment.

That same afternoon Mr. Halliday passed Mr. Courtenay's house in his carriage, and invited him to join him in a drive. In the course of conversation, Mr. Courtenay censured him for having interfered with his project of getting Mr. Harry Saunders to Calcutta. Mr. Halliday, as Mr. Courtenay affirms, said he did not know of such a project, on which Mr. Courtenay asked him whether he had not persuaded the Governor-General to change his intention of putting Mr. Saunders into the treasury, and Mr. Halliday is reported to have denied the imputation, and affirmed that Mr. Saunders's name had not been mentioned to the Governor-General. On the Tuesday following, May the 2d, Mr. Courtenay dined with Mr. Halliday. After dinner, as they were seated together, Mr. Halliday said, in a taunting, but good humoured tone: "Well, have you found out who it was that deterred the Governor-General from appointing Saunders to the treasury? . . . Come, I'll tell you what I did say to Lord Dalhousie: I said, If you take an interest in young Saunders, and wish to do him a service, and please his father, you won't appoint him to the treasury. He is a young man of good ability, and will do well in the Mofussil. But he has talents and accomplishments which make him popular in society, and if he comes to Calcutta, he will probably get into idle and frivolous habits."

This is the first section of the story, and we have to remark that Mr. Halliday's best friends cannot but regret that he did not make the same frank communication to Mr. Courtenay, on the 28th of April, which he did on the 2nd of May. That Mr. Courtenay was misled there can be no doubt, yet we fail to discover any object in misleading him, when a reference to Lord Dalhousie would at once have disproved Mr. Halliday's assertion. We can easily fancy a man in Mr. Halliday's position to have been taken aback by the abruptness of this attempt to obtain a knowledge of the advice he had given the Governor-General, and to have made the answer he did in the embarrassment of the moment, and he is to be commended for having taken the earliest opportunity of spontaneously disabusing Mr. Courtenay. Still, it was an act of official equivocation, which we can account for only by a reference to the circumstance of Mr. Halliday's having breathed too much of the parliamentary and official atmosphere of England during his residence there. Nothing is of more common occurrence than for men in eminent station to return a misleading reply to a question which ought not to have been put to them. The injunction of our Saviour, "Let your communication be yea, yea, and nay, nay," is utterly unknown in Downing-street and in Palace-yard. The comments of the India press in this matter, where they are not malevolent, do no little credit to its character, and serve to show that it is pervaded by a higher tone of morality than is to be found in England, where such a transaction as this would either have passed altogether without notice, or would have been noticed only with the most ample extenuation.

To proceed with Mr. Courtenay's narrative—Mr. Saunders returned to Jessore, crushed by disappointment and despair; diarrhoea turned to chronic dysentery, and some time after he returned to Calcutta for medical advice. His doctor urged him to try and get a healthier station than Jessore, as the only chance of escape from going to sea. He applied for a vacant appointment at Kishnagar, but it was given to another. On the failure of this last hope, he determined to go to England, and he embarked on the Bengal, on the 15th of July, and died on the 23rd, before reaching Gallé. To this statement is appended a certificate from his medical adviser, Dr. Macrae, to the effect that "while attending him, Mr. Saunders repeatedly complained of his disappointment in not being able to leave Jessore, of his dread of going back there, and of his conviction that he should never recover his health if he did so. This idea so preyed on his morbidly sensitive habit as materially to influence the course of his disease, and to undermine his health, rendering of no avail the remedial measures which were adopted, and inducing me to urge his going to England, as essential to his recovery." The inevitable tendency of all these statements, though not the object of them, is to fix on Mr. Halliday the odium of having been instrumental in causing the premature decease of Mr. Saunders. It would be impossible to suppose a more serious imputation on the character of a public man, and it is important that the matter should be distinctly cleared up.

In recommending the Governor-General not to allow Mr. Saunders to be exposed to the temptations of a Calcutta life, Mr. Halliday acted the part of a sincere friend, for which he is entitled to the gratitude of his relatives in England. But that gratitude is more than nullified, if he deliberately persevered in keeping the young man in an unhealthy district, knowing that he was labouring under a disease which could not but be indefinitely aggravated in that locality. It will naturally be inferred from the certificate that Mr. Saunders was given to understand that he would be required to return to Jessore, and that he determined to proceed to England to escape that doom. Such, however, was not the case. Mr. Saunders left Jessore and came to Calcutta for medical advice on the 2nd of June. On the 24th of that month, he applied for a month's leave, and inclosed a certificate from Dr. Macrae, stating that he had been under treatment for dysentery since the 2nd of June, and could proceed by day to Jessore without great risk. The leave was granted. On the 4th of July Mr. Saunders submitted a second medical certificate from Dr. Macrae for a second month's leave. It was a repetition of the first, and simply stated that Mr. Saunders was "still suffering from dysentery." Neither officially nor privately did Mr. Saunders represent to any of the members of the Bengal Government that he was suffering from chronic dysentery. Moreover, when he called on the secretary, he was distinctly informed by him that he might be perfectly easy as to going back to Jessore, and that he assuredly would not be required to return thither on the expiration of his leave, but would be transferred to some other healthier district. This disposes effectually of the assertion that the dread of going back to that pestiferous district preyed on his mind, and influenced the course of his disease, and rendered of no avail the remedial measures which were adopted. Mr. Saunders knew at the time that it was not the intention of Government that he should return to Jessore. It is, therefore, a mere act of justice to the Government of Bengal to state, distinctly, that it is not, in the smallest degree chargeable with the odium of having impeded the recovery of Mr. Saunders, or hastened his dissolution.

Lastly, Mr. Courtenay, after the 2nd of May, when he was informed of the advice which Mr. Halliday had given to Lord Dalhousie, which led to Mr. Saunders's being disappointed of a birth in Calcutta, continued on terms of cordial intimacy with him for three months and a half, and it was not till the 19th of August that he addressed a letter to him renouncing his friendship. The reason given for this procedure, so long after the transaction, was said to be the deep sorrow which he felt at the death of Harry Saunders, which sorrow was sharpened by the recollection of proceedings relative to him in which Mr. Halliday and he were antagonistically concerned. On the 28th of August Mr. Courtenay wrote again to Mr. Halliday, to say that he acknowledged the "ethical laxity" with which he had permitted himself to continue to associate with him on friendly and familiar terms after the revelation; and that he was conscious he ought not to have done so. He further stated that the step he had taken in renouncing Mr. Halliday's friendship was not occasioned by the feelings excited by his friend's death, but arose from the consciousness of his having acted wrong in continuing that friendship so long.

As Mr. Halliday's friends will regret the official equivocation in which these transactions originated, so Mr. Courtenay's friends will equally regret that he should have been so inconsistent as to continue on terms of familiar friendship with an individual of whom he entertains the opinion expressed in his letter, and that he should finally have assigned a reason for discontinuing that intercourse, which he soon after voluntarily acknowledged not to have been the real one. It is greatly to be regretted that this correspondence, which can serve only to gratify the morbid feelings of the malicious portion of the community, should ever have appeared in print. The only excuse which we can discover for its publication is to be found in the fact, that when the papers were placed in the hands of our contemporary, the word "Private" had been erased by a stroke of the pen.—Friend of India.

THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

At the meeting of the Legislative Council on Saturday last, we understand it was decided that the public should be admitted to its debates. This resolution, which is timely and judicious, ought to have been a standing order from the first creation of the Council. There is no doubt that the nature of this institution is parliamentary, and that its present form is but the germ of an enlarged legislature, which will some day or other grow out of these small beginnings. The idea of legislation in secret, by a consultative body can only be paralleled by the Council of the Three at Venice; and to continue to legislate in secret would be to inherit precisely the same estimation in public consideration. Addison tells us that the Venetian senate carried its resolutions so privately that they were seldom known until they discovered themselves in the execution. We do not think the example one worthy of imitation, and we are glad that at so reasonable a moment the Council has decided to make its discussions public property. Why they should have been otherwise, even for six months' time, the world will be inclined to wonder; and perhaps some will add that men only love darkness and secrecy when they are ashamed of their deeds. But this cannot justly be said; for, while the discussion of legislative measures has remained unreported, the results are regularly gazetted, and we have the bills before us in their various stages. We must at once allow that we do not think the present quality of the Legislative Council is likely to be very attractive to the public. People will not sit for hours in the Council House lobbies to hear the deputy for Bengal or Madras rise into sublimity in discussing the propriety of increasing the powers of the Assam Company, or deciding how a murderous Mopla shall be punished.

Whether reporters are to be admitted we have not heard; but we fail to see how they could be excluded; and if they can find matter to interest the public in relating the wise saws and modern instances quoted by a dozen gentlemen seated round a table, by all means should the public be permitted to read, as well as to listen to such innocent enjoyment. We have not any present anticipation that Calcutta's impatient auditory will emulate the example of those worthy citizens who cram the lobbies of St. Stephen's from two o'clock in the day whenever a great debate is coming on. This, however, is not the consideration. The establishment of the principle that legislative discussions ought to be open to public hearing, and to be canvassed out of doors is the thing which concerns us, and the decision arrived at by the Council is peculiarly opportune, for no doubt when the Affray Bill is called on for consideration the "Speaker's Gallery" will be crowded by the privileged few, and the public gallery with Indigo deputations, and their sympathizers or allies. This is as it ought to be, and the best compliment that can be arrived at, to pay the Legislative Council on the occasion, is that its resolution is remarkably timely and judicious, and it has shewn its discretion in moving a little ahead of public opinion.—Harkara.

INFANTICIDE IN THE PUNJAB.

The interest created last year by the great infanticide meeting at Umritsar, is no doubt within the memory of most of our readers. It was a noble undertaking to call in the people themselves to meet in solemn assembly, and point out to them, by reasoning and persuasion, the iniquity of the cruel custom to which so many of them had subjected themselves, and the means by which the cause of so much crime, as was known to exist, might be removed without the immediate intervention of laws which might punish, but would probably not prevent, the horrors of child-murder.

It was, no doubt, only by an oversight, certainly a singular one, that the authorities did not bring forward, as they might have done, to the assembled Sikhs, the strong injunctions of one of their own spiritual and first martial leaders, the distinguished Govind, to hold up to just execration "those slaves of a perverse custom, who impiously take the lives of their infant daughters"—an injunction which he strengthens by forbidding all intercourse even with Kooreemars or slayers of children.

The Umritsar meeting, and its healthy proceedings, created a sensation throughout the Punjab, and even beyond its limits. It awakened the attention of the people even before they were officially called upon, in their own several divisions and districts, to meet in public assembly, and individually ratify, as a vast proportion of them have done, agreements to reduce marriage expenses, and so remove the great incentive to child-murder. We have now to notice a further instalment of Infanticide papers in No. IX. of the Selections from the Records of the Punjab Administration. They are in continuation of those interesting records which furnished a complete narrative of the proceedings at Umritsur. They detail the several results of the meetings held at Mooltan, in the Jelum division, at Goojranwalla, and at Bureal, near Sealkote. They all breathe the same spirit, and are animated by the same zeal which prevailed at Umritsur; they all exhibit the desire of the officials to follow up the movement with the ardour which originated it, and a healthy determination to co-operate on the part of the people, which must lead to the most beneficial results. Some of these have already become apparent; and we feel assured that, if the agitation be kept up by frequent inquiries, by supervision, by encouragement to those who abide by their agreements, and the punishment of those who may be convicted of female child-murder, the crime will be wholly exterminated in the course of three or four years, if not sooner. The infamous custom will naturally fall into desuetude, and the people will learn that the British rule has other objects than the mere collection of revenue, and the introduction of rules and regulations.

The meeting at Bureal was particularly interesting on account of the presence of Meean Runbeer Sing, the son and heir-apparent of Maharaja Goolab Sing, who promised to use his whole influence in prevailing on the higher classes of the hill possessions of his father to forego the excessive expenses of marriage, and so remove all inducement to the committal of a crime which is as demoralizing as it will now be senseless.

We are happy to learn that female infanticide is already unknown in some families, where it used to be practised habitually, and hope soon to be in a position to assert that it has wholly ceased throughout the length and breadth of the Punjab.—Lahore Chronicle, Nov. 15.

THE CHARGE OF TORTURE.

As we anticipated, Mr. Theobald's informant stated what was false regarding the connivance of Mr. Fergusson at the employment of torture by his subordinates, such connivance having to be inferred from the fact that a Darogah said to him publicly, "I will get him to confess," and then took the defendant away, and brought him back in a short time prepared to make a clean breast of it; induced by a threat (not pretended to have been heard by the magistrate), that he would otherwise have to pass a night with the Darogah. It now turns out, first, that the man confessed to Mr. Buckland, the registrar of the Sudder, as much as he ever did confess, before the police came to the Sudder court. Secondly, that the person said to have been called a budzat by Mr. Fergusson in the room at the Sudder, was never brought before him at all in the Sudder court. Thirdly, and consequently, that the Darogah never used the words he was said to have done; and, in short, that the whole story from beginning to end is a falsehood. We will not insult Mr. Fergusson by congratulating him; but we congratulate Mr. Theobald on the veracity of his informant, whose name we are not to know, save that we should like to do ourselves the pleasure of making the acquaintance of a gentleman of such inventive faculties. We should also like to ask Mr. Theobald what he would say had Government treated him in the same way as he has treated Mr. Fergusson. Suppose, for instance, some person had informed Mr. Grey that ryots were very often confined in factory godowns, and subjected to the tortures of thirst and hunger to make them sow indigo, and that the planters connived at these practices,—especially did Mr. A., of B. factory. Suppose, in the next place, that Mr. Grey were to have written to Mr. Theobald, as secretary, telling him what he had heard, and ending by saying, "a copy of this letter will be sent to Sir James Weir Hogg," without any reference to any defence that might be made to the accusation.

What virtuous indignation would have been excited in the bosoms of the members of the association! What torrents of invective would have been lavished on the heads of all the parties concerned! What a string of long adjectives, commencing with "un," and "dis," would have been made to agree with the word "conduct!"

We trust that this little affair will operate as a warning to Mr. Theobald in future, not to believe too readily evil reports against the members of a profession, as honourable as the one to which it is his pride to belong. With reference to the remarks in the Englishman, on Mr. Fergusson's letter, we have a few words to say. It is true the charge did not originate with Mr. Theobald, but it was repeated by him, and evidently believed by him, so that, to all intents and purposes, the charge is his. The case might have been different, had he mentioned that he thought his informant might have been mistaken; but not a word of the kind is to be found, not a suspicion is thrown upon the correctness of the story. The responsibility cannot, now that the falsehood has been brought to light, be shifted to the shoulders of an anonymous informant. We have also to remark, that the instance was related, not as proving the employment of torture by the police, but as showing the connivance of the civil authorities at the practice; and we deny most strongly, that hundreds of such cases of connivance can be supplied, on the authority of any judges or magistrates whatever.

As the torture question is in vogue, the following information will no doubt be peculiarly interesting to the Englishman, and to any one else [if there be one such person in India] who agrees with our contemporary in laying to the charge of magistrates and judges, the infliction of torture upon the people of this country. It will not be interesting to them as proving that such magistrates and judges are participes criminis; but it will be so to the rational public in general, who are well aware that torture is perpetually inflicted, but in such a manner that the European officers of government are as ignorant of it, and as guiltless of it, as the public generally.

On Thursday or Friday in last week, Mr. Vans Agnew was proceeding up country, and had crossed the ferry at Pultah Ghaut; on landing on the bank of the river he heard screams from some place in the immediate neighbourhood, and instantly proceeded to seek into the cause. On entering a thannah he found a man tied up by the arms to a bamboo, and four burkundazes in the act of beating him with shoes, under the direction of the darogah, who was giving them orders in the infliction of the punishment. Immediately Mr. Vans Agnew entered the thannah the darogah and burkundazes fled, so that it is impossible for him to identify the men. Having liberated the victim, Mr. Vans Agnew took him along with him to Hooghly and delivered him over to the magistrate. It then turned out that the man was a chowkeedar who had been in the employ of Captain Ross, and the darogah was attempting to extort from him a confession that he had stolen Captain Ross's watch, which by an advertisement in the papers the public may be aware is at present missing. As the discovery of this infliction of torture was made within the jurisdiction of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, the magistrate of Hooghly was compelled to send the case down to Allypore to Mr. Fergusson, by whose promptness and activity in proceeding at once to the spot and apprehending and examining the accused men before it was possible for them to concoct a defence, it is to be hoped the case will be clearly established. On being confronted with the darogah and his subordinates the chowkeedar at once identified them.

The darogah denied all knowledge of the charge; but the burkundazes have confessed to it, and state that they were acting under the orders and direction of the darogah. Having taken down all the evidence, Mr. Fergusson has, we understand, made over the case to the sessions. It is due to him to say that he has displayed the greatest vigilance in investigating this case; and it is to be hoped that it will be made an example of, as a warning to the people. We have no doubt that if it is established and the crime clearly proved, the judge will visit the offence with the utmost severity which the law permits.

These are facts which all the world is welcome to know if it wishes. They have given rise to the committal of five men on a distinct charge of torture, in order to extort a confession. But is this a ground for charging the civil service, its magistrates and judges with conniving at, and indirectly countenancing the commission of this crime? It is neither Englishmen, nor Hogg, Melvill, and Co. (as our contemporary delights to describe the East-India Company), who have introduced this system into India. It is indigenous; it belongs to the people, and is, we believe, perpetually perpetrated by the inferior native servants of Government both in the revenue and judicial departments. We quite allow that the East-India Company, and particularly Sir James Hogg, made an egregious blunder in opposing the proposed commission to inquire into the infliction of torture in India. To appear to deny it, and to consider that an inquiry into the subject was uncalled for, always seemed to us very impolitic. It would have been wiser to acknowledge the evil, and requested the commission to suggest a remedy, as well as inquire into the subject itself. Had some such course been pursued, those railing insinuations could not have been levelled at the East-India Company and its servants to which they are now subjected, whereby men, who are fully aware of the unfairness of their language, endeavour to attribute to the Company the crimes which belong to the customs of the people they govern.—Hurkaru.

THE LONDON MAIL of October 9th arrived at Calcutta on November 13th (per Hindustan). The subsequent mails of Oct. 25th and Nov. 9th had arrived, the former at Point de Galle (Nov. 26th), the latter at Aden (Nov. 29), per Bombay and Bengal steamers, en route to Madras and Calcutta.

MEDICAL ANNUITIES.—The following surgeons have obtained the six annuities for the season:—"Superintending surgeon G. Angus; senior surgeon H. Clark; retired surgeon A. A. Macanally; surgeon P. F. H. Baddeley; surgeon H. Falconer, A.M., and surgeon A. M. Minto."

LIST OF CIVILIANS.—According to the Englishman, the officiating under secretary to the Government of Bengal has requested of the civil auditor to furnish a list of civil servants of the presidency, and those attached to the North-West Provinces and the Punjab, who are present or absent on furlough, with the date on which each officer availed himself of his furlough.

IMPROVEMENTS IN FORT WILLIAM.—Great improvements are to be immediately commenced in the interior of Fort William. The barracks are to be made open so as to allow of ventilation with spacious verandahs on either side, a new one is to be erected for the conductors, and sub-conductors, and the officers' quarters are to be improved. It is believed that the fort, instead of being the perpetual home of fever, will become a sanatorium. The expense will be six lakhs of rupees.

THE OPIUM sold Nov. 9, at the following rates: Behar 669; Benares 687, which is an improvement of Rs. 41 on the Behar, and Rs. 71 on the Benares Opium. The drug is evidently recovering its value, which began to fall about the time when the Government of India determined to slaughter the Five per Cents. We mention this only as a chronological coincidence, and not with the view of establishing anything like a relationship of cause and effect between the two events.

PIRACY IN THE STRAITS.—The Straits Times informs us that the increase of piracy is seriously endangering the trade of Singapore. Labuan is in danger, and the coast of Borneo has been ravaged, while the Chinese pirates, and the pirates of Balinini are clearing the sea of native traders from Hong Kong to the Straits. The writer, a strong advocate of Sir James Brooke, speaks from personal experience of the transactions on the coasts of Borneo.

THE AFFRAY BILL.—A deputation, consisting of about fifty planters, headed by Mr. W. F. Fergusson, waited on the Governor-General, Nov. 9, with a petition from the Indigo Planters Association, relative to the Affray Bill. Mr. Deverenne and Mr. Fergusson spoke in support of the petition. His Lordship heard both gentlemen with marked attention, said it was his wish to ascertain facts, and that the statements put before him by so large and influential a section of the community, would have his close and respectful attention; and that in the discussions in council, he would consider the provisions to which the memorialists objected with all the care that he owed to the country with whose government he was charged. The gentlemen of the deputation retired from the interview highly gratified with his Lordship's kindness and urbanity.

PORTRAIT OF DR. GOODEVE.—The Council of the Medical College have, by a factious majority of one, resolved to refuse a place on the walls of the college to the portrait of the late Dr. Goodeve, painted by public subscription. There were, however, but five members, out of the ten composing the council, present when this resolution was come to, so that but three out of the ten voted for the exclusion of the picture. It is hoped that the Council of Education will interfere.

THE NEPAULESE are going to war with the Grand Llama of Thibet, and a force of about 23,000 men, encamped not far from Darjeeling, has obtained the permission of the Governor-General to pass through a portion of the territory lately taken from the Rajah of Sikkim. Unless it be the object of Jung Bahadoor to get rid of an army which he dreads, the force in question will only come to the plains during the present cold weather, and not attempt to march over the passes into Thibet until the next spring shall have set in.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—We learn from a Simla letter to the Delhi Gazette, that the Commander-in-Chief left the hills on the 27th ultimo, the Head Quarters Camp is not to go beyond Sealkote, such being the request of the Governor-General. If the Commander-in-Chief wishes to visit Peshawur he may do so by dāk. We think this is a very sensible request on the part of Lord Dalhousie, and we hope the principle will be carried a little further next year, for we really do not see any reason why Sir William Gomm should not make his whole tour by dāk. It is only in India that the head of the army moves about at a vast expense to the State, with a host of followers eating up everything for miles around the track he follows, and there is nothing gained by these tours of inspection of sufficient importance to compensate for the cost they impose, and the annoyances they inflict upon thousands.—Hurkaru.

CIVIL ANNUITIES.—The following are the successful applicants for the civil service annuities of the 1st May next:—1. D. B. Morrison; 2. R. Walker; 3. C. Bury; 4. A. J. M. Mills; 5. C. Garstin; 6. E. Bentall; 7. H. F. James; 8. E. F. Tyler; 9. W. M. Dirom; 10. W. Travers.

THE RAJAH OF BURDWAN has given Rs. 500 to the school of Art-Industry—an example well worthy of imitation.

MR. KING, the chief clerk of the Court of Small Causes, and Mr. Roberts, assistant to the chief magistrate, are spoken of for the judgeship about to be vacated by Mr. Brietzke, but the appointment of the former is considered nearly certain.

MR. SMOULT has been appointed taxing officer of the Supreme Court.

MR. E. GREY has received a certificate of high proficiency in the Vernacular languages, and a reward of Rs. 800.

SIR HENRY LAWRENCE is engaged upon a statistical work relating to all the independent states of the Bengal presidency. All the information in the possession of government has been very properly placed at his disposal.

THE Royal George, from England to Calcutta with troops, arrived at Madras with the scurvy prevailing to a sad extent among those on board.

THE INDIAN NAVY.—According to the Bombay Times, the head-quarters of the Indian navy are to be transferred to Calcutta, and Rangoon and Maulmain will probably become the great ship building ports of India.

LIEUT.-COLONEL RAINIER.—The London correspondent of the Mofussilite states, that Lieut.-Col. Rainier was not removed from the command of the 98th regt. for neglecting to report the irregularities which prevailed in the corps when under the command of Lieut.-Col. Roberts, but for the very opposite cause. If such be the case, then we can only say that the matter is worse than we supposed it to have been. "This is at least quite certain," says the writer, "that Colonel Roberts in no small degree imputed his misfortunes to the machinations of his second in command (Rainier) whom he moreover denounced in strong terms at the Horse Guards, on that very account." We thought so, and our opinion is not changed that Colonel Roberts was very lucky in obtaining permission to sell out; and it is rather too bad that a man who went home under such circumstances should be allowed to speak ill of another at the Horse Guards. The proper course for Lord Hardinge to have followed would have been to have sent Colonel Roberts out to India again to stand his court-martial, when he ventured to talk of his misfortunes, also to have brought Lieut.-Col. Rainier to trial, so that he might have cleared himself of so odious a charge as having plotted for the ruin of his immediate superior, with a view to secure his own advantage. If we are to believe only half we have heard of the doings in H.M.'s 98th when in the Hills, there was no necessity for any machinations to get rid of Colonel Roberts, nor do we for a moment believe that any were made use of. The misfortunes that have befallen Colonel Roberts, have, we fear, resulted from his indiscretions, and we regret to see him endeavouring to cast blame upon another, when by so doing he can in no way excuse himself.—Hurkaru, Nov. 8.

SICKNESS IN THE 17TH REGIMENT N.I.—The Englishman states, on the authority of a letter from Delhi, that sickness is much on the increase in the 17th N.I.; also, that the regiment will not commence its march for Lucknow before the end of March, owing to the proposed detention of the 70th N.I. at Umballah, to form part of the army of exercise to be assembled at that station. As it is twenty-eight marches from Delhi to Lucknow, the 17th N.I. will be under canvas till the end of April. If such is to be the effect of our Bengal Chobham, the project had in our opinion better be given up, for the advantages to be derived from it are not sufficient to justify the infliction of such cruelty as keeping men on the march during the hot winds. True it is only a native regiment, and the men can be easily replaced on the corps reaching Lucknow, and the loss of a dozen or two will cost the Government nothing; therefore we cannot expect that the same care will be taken of them as of Europeans, who are valuable, and can only be replaced after a considerable lapse of time, and at a great expense. Lord Dalhousie is said to have sanctioned the assembly of the army of exercise at Umballah, on the understanding that it was to entail no expense upon the state; it would have been well had he added, or on the officers of the regiments composing it. We hope that the Governor-General may not think it beside the point to inquire what delay will be caused in the completion of the relief by this playing at soldiers, for we feel sure he would not approve of men being kept with only a few folds of canvas between them and an April sun on the burning dusty plains of the Doab. If Sir Wm. Gomm and his staff were only once to try a hot weather march in Upper India, they would thereafter be careful to make arrangements to have every soldier housed before the hot winds set in. We do not believe that any man would knowingly inflict such suffering upon others as appears to be in store for the officers and men of the 17th N.I., and therefore impute the mistake to the ignorance of Sir Wm. Gomm, and the fact of Major-General Fane being a griff. We hope that Lieut.-Colonels Tucker and Becher will look to this matter, if the circumstances really be as represented by our contemporary's correspondent.—Hurkaru, Nov. 14.

THE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL OF ART.—We are glad to hear that the family of the late Mutty Loll Seal have offered the building, formerly known as the Seal College, rent free to the Industrial School of Art, which offer has been thankfully accepted by the committee. Although some money had been expended upon the building hitherto occupied by the Industrial School, the new locality, and the capability which the building affords for extended utility, render it highly desirable that it should be occupied at once. The pupils at the school are now to commence studying from models the five orders of architecture, in order to obtain an accurate knowledge of the various styles of building, not only in the details of decoration, but also in the larger principles of construction. In a short time it is hoped that a professional engraver will arrive from England in order to teach the pupils the art of wood engraving; and when this is effected, we have no doubt the school will begin to prove really useful, and we trust remunerative. The great object is, or ought to be, to make it hereafter as much as possible a self-supporting institution. With this end in view, we have been informed that the committee have directed the studies of the pupils at present to the construction of mouldings in plaster of Paris, such as may be used for cornices, doorways, and similar domestic purposes. This attempt to render the school a paying concern is most laudable; but we cannot help saying that we think at the present moment, while it is labouring under those first difficulties which always attend the creation of such institutions, more interest and support might be given to it by the public than has yet been shown. It is most desirable to have regular monthly subscriptions by which the Treasurer may know upon what he has to depend. Such subscriptions we would solicit the public to give more particularly at present, and we have no doubt that they will hereafter see ample return for money so expended.—Hurkaru.

PENSIONS TO UNCOVENANTED SERVANTS.—We are informed that the Government of Bengal, with reference to the rules granting superannuation pensions to uncovenanted servants, has lately solicited the instructions of the Government of India upon two points, which were brought to the notice of the Lieutenant-Governor by the Board of Revenue as doubtful, and upon which it was deemed desirable that an explicit construction should be placed. When they were submitted to the consideration of the Governor-General, his Lordship remarked in regard to the first point, which related to a difference in the mode prescribed for calculating the pension to which an applicant was entitled according as he might have been in the receipt of a fixed salary, or been partly paid by commission fees, that it had already been ruled in a letter addressed to the Government of Bengal, that the amount of pension should be determined by the average amount of official allowances received during the past five years of service, whether the applicant might have been paid by salary alone, or partly by salary and partly by commission, and that the Honourable the Court of Directors had approved of that decision. In regard to the second point, which involved the question, whether a medical certificate was necessary in a case where the ground of disqualification for further service was a general incapacity and inefficiency by reason of old age, the Governor-General observed, that it had hitherto always been the practice to insist on the production of a medical certificate, but that it did not appear to him that such a form was absolutely necessary, according to the literal bearing of the rules. His Lordship expressed a doubt, we understand, whether a medical man was, as a matter of course, the best judge of the time when an officer should be declared too old for further labour; and thought it probable that the head of an office in which such a servant was employed would be enabled to give a much better opinion upon the question. The Governor-General, therefore, ruled, that in cases similar to the one alluded to above, it should not be considered essential to insist upon the production of a medical certificate.—Hurkaru.

THE 3RD BENGAL EUROPEAN REGIMENT.—The services of Major A. H. Duncan, of the 3rd European regiment, have been placed at the disposal of the foreign department, for what purpose is not yet apparent; but it ought to be for some very important work for which he is peculiarly qualified, and for which no other well qualified officer can be found to justify his withdrawal from his regiment for employment on the staff. Previous to the taking away of Major Duncan from the regiment, there were six captains absent on staff employ, which is the full number allowed by the regulations; and besides this there were two more captains officiating in staff appointments, and five subalterns permanently employed upon the staff, so that Major Duncan makes the fourteenth officer withdrawn. The circumstances must be peculiar to justify this departure from the rules of the service, for there is no regiment in the army that requires so many officers as the 3rd Europeans, owing to its having been but recently embodied; and there were few worse off in that respect even before the withdrawal of Major Duncan. The complement of officers now present for duty with the 3rd Europeans is twenty, consisting of one lieutenant-colonel, commanding the corps, two captains, eleven lieutenants, of whom two are regimental staff, and six ensigns. Thus there are seventeen officers for the duties of ten companies of European soldiers, to each of which there ought to be a captain and two subalterns; indeed the flank companies should have three subalterns each. Complaints, most unjust complaints in our opinion, have been made regarding the internal economy of the 3rd European regiment. Considering the means and materials at his disposal, we think that Lieutenant-Colonel Gray has done wonders, and is entitled to high praise for having brought his regiment into its present state of efficiency.—Hurkaru, Nov. 16.

MILITARY ON DUTY.—The Englishman hears that the 42nd B.N.I. is ordered to march from Benares to Nagpore.—The 2nd grenadiers, en route to Barrackpore by water, arrived at Rajghat on the 30th Oct., and left it again on the 1st Nov.—It is now said that the army of exercise is to assemble near Lahore, instead of at Umballah, where the insufficiency of water renders the collection of a large force unadvisable.—Major-gen. Lloyd left Cawnpore on the 1st Nov., to assume the command of the Dinapore division, to which he will succeed on the 10th. Sir John Cheape was expected at Cawnpore on the 3rd Nov.—A fearful fracas is said to have occurred in a royal regiment, which bears on its banners the name of Chhillinwalla; a complaint has gone up to the Commander-in-Chief, which is likely to bring two captains to a court-martial.—There is a report at army head-quarters that General Anson will probably succeed to the command of the Bengal army on the retirement of Sir William Gomm.—A detachment for H.M.'s 29th regiment embarked yesterday on board the Tenasserim steamer, which is to tow down the Tubal Cain, with the 25th N.I. on board, to Rangoon.—Lieut. Quintin Battye, of the 56th N.I., is to succeed Captain Miles as A.D.C. to the Lieutenant-Governor of the north-western provinces, Lieutenant-Colonel Grant making room for the latter officer as military secretary. Lieutenant-Colonel Grant is believed to be about to retire from the service.—The head-quarters of the sappers and miners will, it is said, be hereafter located at Roorkee.—The announcement that Major Hill, of H.M.'s 96th regiment, is about to retire, appears to have been premature, if not devoid of authenticity.—The 60th N.I. was to leave Banda, en route to Umballah, on the 15th Nov. They expect to be at Cawnpore about the 23rd Nov.; Allypore, the 11th December; and Delhi, the 20th. The following officers march with the 60th: Lieutenant-Colonel W. Riddell, commanding; Captains Stansbury and Coare; Lieutenants Birch, Brabazon, and Shebbeare; Ensigns Taylor and Hill; and Surgeon Ransford.

ADDITIONAL SURGEONS.

Fort William Foreign Department, Oct. 27, 1854.—With reference to G. G. O. 16th May, 1854, No. 116, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to notify that the Hon. the Court of Directors has authorized the addition of two surgeons to the establishment—to have effect from the 29th Oct., 1854.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

TOUR OF THE LIEUT.-GOVERNOR.

Nov. 16, 1854.—The Lieut.-governor being about to visit the districts in the province of Behar, the following general directions are notified for the guidance of those authorities who correspond directly with the government:—

All communications to be sent, as usual, to the government-office in Calcutta, except from stations so situated that the letters from them would obviously reach the Lieut.-governor direct earlier than they would reach him through the government-office in Calcutta.

All letters sent direct to the Lieut.-governor should give very fully the substance of any previous orders and correspondences referred to, so as to obviate, if possible, the necessity of sending to Calcutta for the former papers on the subject.

The Lieut.-governor will proceed by water to Patna, arriving at Bhaurigpore and Monghyr on or about the 27th instant and the 1st proximo respectively, and at Patna about the 4th or 5th proximo.

The Lieut.-governor's camp will be formed at Patna, and will move from that place on the 14th of December.

The following is the order in which the Lieut.-governor intends to visit the several stations, with the probable dates of arrival and departure annexed:—

	Arrival.	Departure
Patna, .. .. .	December 19th, ..	December 14th.
Mozufferpore, ..	28th, ..	23rd.
Moteharee, ..	January 6th, ..	January 1st.
Chuprah, ..	11th, ..	10th.
Arrah, ..	19th, ..	15th.
Sasseram, ..	7th, ..	22nd.
Gyah, ..	February 7th.

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. WILLIAM CUMMING, H.M.'s 32ND FOOT.

Head Quarters, Camp Rayah, Nov. 11.—At a general court-martial, assembled at Simla, on Monday, Oct. 16, 1854, Lieut. W. Cumming, of H.M.'s 32nd foot, was arraigned on the following charges:—

First Charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances:—

1st.—In having, at Kussowlie, on Aug. 16, 1854, made use of highly disrespectful and threatening language regarding Col. F. Markham, C.B., A.D.C. to the Queen, sen. lieut.-col. of the 32nd regt., and adj.-gen. of Her Majesty's forces in India, by saying to Lieut. E. de L. Jolly, of the same regt., "It is my intention to proceed to Simla, and there publicly horsewhip Col. Markham, and when he falls under my bullet, the shade of O'Grady will rise up before him;" or words to that effect, he, Lieut. Cumming, at the time of avowing that intention, being in arrest on account of having used disrespectful language regarding Col. Markham, at the mess of H.M.'s 52nd regt. L.I., at Subathoo, on Aug. 14, 1854; to escape the consequence of which misconduct, he, Lieut. Cumming, afterwards voluntarily applied for permission to retire from the service by the sale of his commission; and such threatening language used on Aug. 16, 1854, being repitentiary of a similar threat used on the 14th of the same month.

2nd.—In having at Annandale, near Simla, on Aug. 31, 1854, in the presence and hearing of many officers and other gentlemen, made use of highly insulting language direct to Col. F. Markham, C.B., by saying to him, "You are a liar and no gentleman," or words to that effect.

Second charge.—For having disobeyed the lawful command of his superior officer his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief in India, by remaining in Simla until Sept. 6, 1854, although ordered, on Aug. 31, 1854, by a letter bearing that day's date and written by the Adj. Gen. H.M.'s forces in India, by direction of the C.-in-C. to return immediately to Kussowlie.

Third charge.—For having broken the arrest in which he had been placed on Aug. 31, 1854, by appearing on the public road, or mall of Simla, on Sept. 2, 1854, before being set at liberty by proper authority, or having had his arrest enlarged.

Finding.—Guilty of the 1st instance of the 1st charge; guilty of the 2nd instance of the 1st charge; guilty of the preamble to the 1st charge; guilty of the 2nd charge; guilty of the 3rd charge.

Sentence.—To be cashiered.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) W. M. GOMM, General, C.-in-C., East Indies.

Head-Quarters, camp Kurtapoor, Nov. 9, 1854.

Remarks and Recommendation by the Court.—The Court have found the prisoner guilty of the 1st charge, but feel called on to remark with regard to the 1st instance of the charge, that the language was used at a late hour, in the unguarded freedom and privacy of his bed-room, and to the brother officer with whom he lived, and that no attempt was afterwards made to carry out the intention expressed in the language so used.

With regard to the 2nd instance of the charge the Court consider that the prisoner received great provocation, and was in some measure betrayed into using the language he did, by the manner in which he was addressed on the cricket ground.

The Court under all the circumstances of the case beg to recommend the prisoner to the favourable consideration of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

Remarks by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—The Commander-in-Chief concurs with the Court in opinion, that while the cause of military discipline and the respectability of the service have been substantially vindicated by its verdict in this instance, a reasonable ground is afforded in the body of evidence adduced upon the trial, for justifying the Court in recommending a mitigation of its sentence so passed upon the prisoner.

It is therefore his Excellency's intention, when forwarding the proceedings for submission to her Majesty, respectfully to solicit an exercise of the royal clemency in the case, to the extent of allowing Lieutenant Cumming to receive the regulated value of his commission.

The officer commanding the 32nd foot, will report to the adjutant-general of her Majesty's forces and to the military secretary in India, the date on which the foregoing sentence was read to Lieutenant Cumming, from which date he is to be struck off the returns of that regiment.

By order of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,
FRED. MARKHAM, Colonel,
Adj. Gen. of H.M.'s Forces in India.

FREIGHTS.

To London and Liverpool, 3l. 10s. to 5l.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Nov. 18th, 1854).—The demand for most descriptions of British Cotton Goods continues good, without, however, causing any alteration in prices; and considering that native holidays have again interfered with the progress of business, transactions have been to a fair extent.

Metals.—Iron.—Notwithstanding the arrivals, and supplies of Bar and Sheet on the way are heavy, prices have maintained their late advance, shipments to Madras continuing; other sorts being in moderate supply, prices are firm.

Lead.—Pig and Sheet are both looking down.

Tin Plates.—Block is in good request with small stocks; it is quoted as worth Rs. 48 to 50 per md. Plates are fully Rs. 1 higher, and still improving. Supplies on the way are very moderate.

VISIT OF LORD HARRIS TO THE FREE CHURCH MISSION INSTITUTION, MADRAS.

On Friday, October 27th, his Excellency the Governor visited our Central Institution in Black Town. He was accompanied by Capt. Hay, his military secretary. On his arrival, Lord Harris was conducted to one of the large rooms of the mission, where Mrs. Anderson and the female converts, married and unmarried, had previously assembled. His lordship had thus an opportunity of seeing some of the mission families,—for the Christian mothers were accompanied by some of their little children. The boarding-school girls were to be examined afterwards, and all that was done at this time was the repetition of some hymns by the children of the native missionaries, and the singing of a hymn by all who were present. His lordship thus, at the very outset, saw some of the most precious fruits of the mission, and especially of the female day and boarding-schools, where those who are now wives and mothers were daily taught and received those impressions of Divine things on their souls which led them from heathenism to Christ.

Lord Harris then entered the hall of the Institution, where all the senior scholars were assembled. The proceedings were commenced by a detailed examination of the college department. The Rev. Messrs. Blyth and Campbell briefly examined the theological students in Hebrew and Greek. The Rev. A. Venkataramiah then called up his class to be examined on Calvin's "Institutes of Theology." He took the ordinary lesson for the day; and, notwithstanding its difficulty (the subject being the doctrine of the Trinity), they handled it in such a clear and discriminating way, as fully to show that they had mastered the arguments of the great divine.

Mathematics was the next subject of examination. The Rev. P. Rajahgopal examined the highest class, and after a thorough questioning by the teacher on general principles, a proposition specified by Lord Harris was demonstrated in a way which called forth his lordship's warm approbation.

The monitorial class, which consists of all the students and teachers in the school, was next examined in the Scriptures. The portions selected by Mr. Anderson were the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians. The Rev. P. Rajahgopal, who, along with Mr. Anderson, conducts this class, opened the examination by a few vigorous questions. Thereafter the students were directed by Mr. Anderson mutually to question on any portion of these two Epistles. There was comparatively little excitement, but the contact of mind with mind was very successful in eliciting many striking and instructive thoughts on the apostle's great themes.

All the classes in the senior department were then examined in succession, his lordship occasionally putting a question as the work went on. Their acquaintance with the Scriptures, their attainments in history, ancient and modern, geography, and various other branches, including the vernacular languages, were all tested one after another.

Before leaving this department, his lordship kindly, and in a most discriminating manner, remarked on what he had already witnessed. He dwelt on the benefits derived from education in general, and showed how much more important and lasting those were which sprang from such an education as was here conferred. He heartily rejoiced to see so many natives of India give themselves to what he could but regard as the noblest work to which any man could devote himself, viz., the work of making known the truth of God, and bringing men from the darkness of superstition to the light of God. Having given themselves to the work of teaching others, he was glad to find they were able to reason on the great truths of Scripture; for while many received the Gospel into their hearts simply because it was God's word, and came with his authority, yet in a land like this they would meet with many opponents to the truth, who might be men of great intellectual power, capable of ably objecting to the Scriptures, and requiring from its public teacher a reason for the faith which was in him. On the same ground, he was glad to see that they were acquainted with the original languages in which the Scriptures were written. In all controversies the final appeal must be to the original, and the man who cannot accept this challenge is but ill able to carry on the conflict which must be waged between truth and error. After giving some most affectionate and discriminating counsels, his lordship concluded, by wishing all present much success in the work in which they were engaged among this people.

Lord Harris then descended to the lower school which he slowly passed through, Mr. Anderson here and there examining a little fellow who read and answered with great spirit, not a little proud that he was honoured to read to the governor.

The female school was the last which was visited; but though last in order, not least in importance in the eyes of the missionaries, and we were glad to see, in the eyes of Lord Harris. Upwards of 200 girls were present, and his lordship seemed to take a very lively interest in their welfare. He saw them all, and heard some Christian hymns, chaunted by the little girls in Hindustanee, Telugu, and Tamil. The whole was wound up by a very interesting examination of the Convert girls by Mr. Anderson. This examination was based on the beautiful hymn, sung in the morning,

"There is a fountain filled with blood, Drawn from Emmanuel's veins."

but it embraced much of what is scattered over the pages of the word of God. They answered in a way which showed that they felt what they said. The singing of the hymn

"Hark my soul, it is the Lord," closed the examination.

His lordship left, after having been in the institution nearly seven hours.

The Governor's visit made a deep impression on all connected with the institution. The interest which he took in every department of the work, and the patience with which he went over it all, greatly cheered the hearts of the labourers in this field. We rejoice for poor India's sake when we see her governors interested in those measures which are fitted to raise her from the dust of death, and make her live before God. Many many such be raised up for this land. May God in mercy give us men who know and feel that the best policy and highest expediency is to dare to do good,—men who believe with Daniel that it is God who "removeth kings and setteth up kings: he giveth wisdom to the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding."—Madras Native Herald.

THE DEATH OF COL. WHANNEL, who had been sixty years in the service, during which time he had never been out of the presidency or enjoyed six months' leave of absence, is recorded. What a stupid life!

THE 1ST MADRAS EUROPEAN FUSILIERS are to return from Rangoon, and will probably be relieved by H.M.'s 43rd light infantry.

THE 32ND N.I. were to move from Jubbulpore for Saugor on the 15th November.

THE 23RD REGIMENT.—A correspondent writing from Saugor on the 30th Oct., states, that the 23rd regiment, six companies, and the head-quarters under Lieut.-Colonel Allardyce, were to march from that station towards Kemptec on the following morning, the 1st November.

A GENERAL COURT-MARTIAL.—An European General Court-Martial, of which Lieut.-Colonel Skipwith, of H.M.'s 43rd regt., is president, will assemble in the court-martial room over the main guard at 11 o'clock to-morrow forenoon, for the trial of Lieutenant A. J. Knox, of the 45th regt. N.I.—Athenaeum, Nov. 14.

TORTURE.—A very valuable letter from Mr. Fischer to Sir Henry Montgomery, on the torture question, has been published. His testimony is important as being that of a man of independent position and long experience, and, if we remember aright, not always favourably inclined towards the Government. He states that torture is used by the native officers of revenue and police, but that he does not believe the European servants of the state are cognizant of these violent and cruel practices. He also alludes to the "energetic attempts of Government and the European judicial authorities to put it down. But as I have said of the practice in revenue, so in judicial matters, torture is much less frequent now-a-days, and probably never of the atrocious character it often used to be under former rulers; this good at least has resulted from the many efforts of Government to put an end to the practice."

NAGPORE.—We understand that the Governor-General has been pleased on the recommendation of Captain Elliot, the officiating commissioner of Nagpore, to sanction a salary of Rs. 500 per mensem to Jumna Doss, and one of Rs. 400 per mensem to Gobind Rao Yodas, extra assistants in that newly incorporated province. We are also given to understand that his lordship has authorized a change in the establishment of extra assistants as recommended by Captain Elliot. In future there will be two extra assistants upon salaries of Rs. 500 per mensem; three upon Rs. 400 each; one upon Rs. 300; and three upon salaries of Rs. 250 per mensem, making a total of Rs. 3,250 per mensem, which is Rs. 250 in excess of what Government had previously authorized. We mentioned some time ago that the Soobahs of districts in the province were to be appointed extra assistants, and we now hear that their salaries will be Rs. 500 per mensem for one, and Rs. 400 for each of the others. They have not yet been appointed, but will be so almost immediately.

BOMBAY:

The LONDON MAIL of Oct. 25 arrived at Bombay Nov. 23 (per Semiramis).

THE LAUNCH OF THE "PUNJAUB."—This ceremony was most successfully performed at twenty minutes past eleven o'clock on the 21st inst., in the presence of a large concourse of spectators. The usual preparations were duly made, the Punjab being gaily dressed in colours, as were also all the Company's ships in the harbour, ready to welcome their new sister. The governor's and commodore's bands were in attendance, and enlivened the scene by discoursing sweet music. Many a fair lady present was, doubtless, almost tempted to respond by a trip on the light fantastic toe; but the time of day and other circumstances were not propitious, and they were obliged to content themselves with simply looking on in admiration at the magnificent vessel ready to be launched. The vessel was designed by Mr. Oliver Lang, of Woolwich, whose plans, there can be no doubt, were, punctually and correctly carried out by the dockyard authorities. At the appointed hour, the supports having been removed, Miss E. Willoughby gracefully performed the operation of breaking the bottle, and wishing success to the Punjab. Loud cheers from the spectators, "Rule Britannia" from the bands, and the booming of artillery from the saluting battery and the flagship in the harbour, welcomed the vessel into her future element, into which she glided most majestically. She will, in the course of a few days, be hauled into dock, and no time be lost in fitting her with machinery, rigging, &c. Her dimensions are as follows:—

SIR HENRY SOMERSET arrived at Bombay on Thursday, the 16th Nov., and immediately assumed command of the army; he has since then gone to Poona on duty.

THE SHERIFF'S OFFICE AMENDMENT ACT.—Some severe comments have of late been made on the delay that has occurred in the Legislative Council passing the Sheriff's Office Amendment Act. The sheriffship of the three Presidencies, which are pure sinecures, conferred on those in favour in high places, without the most remote regard to respectability, merit, or claims on the state, have, within the past half-century, cost about 300,000*l*. In 1845, the judges of the Supreme Court, Calcutta, recommended that the sheriffship and sheriff-deputeship should be combined in one, and the judges of Madras and Bombay concurred in the recommendation. In April, 1852, a draft Act was introduced into the Legislative Council, and published in the Gazette, with a view of carrying this recommendation into effect, assigning to the new office the duties of coroner and jail-inspector, making it conditional that its occupant should be a barrister or an attorney, but that he should cease, from the time of his appointment, to exercise his profession. By this means, it was expected that a saving of 2,500*l*. a year would be effected, and a jail inspector be secured for nothing. From the time of the recommendation of the judges being promulgated, 25,000*l*. have been thrown away, and no further step seems to be taking in the matter.—Bombay Times.

ABOLITION OF SUTTEE IN CUTCH.—It is with the highest satisfaction we record that the Rao of Cutch has abolished the practice of suttee throughout his territories. In August, 1852, he issued a proclamation to the effect that the Hindoo religion did not forbid the performance of suttee by a widow on the death of her husband, but that the custom prevalent in Cutch of performing suttee by women not widows, and by males, was at direct variance with the Hindoo creed. Hence the various local functionaries were ordered, whenever they heard that any person not a widow was about to perform an act of self-immolation, to expostulate with him or her on a design so contrary to religion. If these endeavours proved ineffectual, "owing to the devil getting into the imagination of the party," the functionary was to warn the relatives, and to take measures for preventing the sacrifice. But on the 17th of September last, the Rao issued a more stringent proclamation, absolutely abolishing suttee throughout his territories, and ordering those who assisted at these acts to be heavily fined, and subject to ten years' imprisonment. It would appear, from the preamble of this notification, that the practice is by no means uncommon; but it is hoped that this prohibition, combined with the vigilant scrutiny of the Resident, will entirely eradicate it.

ADEN, Nov. 12.—The local news is, that a wing of H.M.'s 86th foot is expected, on the 16th inst., to relieve the wing of the fusiliers, which proceeds across to Kurrachee. A company of Bombay sappers is expected early next month, to relieve the Madras sappers and miners; and rumour has it, that the rest of the Madras troops will soon follow, leaving Aden entirely a Bombay station.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH is now so nearly completed, that messages have of late repeatedly been conveyed to Agra, a distance of 800 miles, without repetition, and so on to Calcutta, at an interval of a few hours.

AN ACTION has been lately decided before the Supreme Court in Bombay, to the effect that the shop-and-stall tax, which yields from 5,000*l*. to 6,000*l*. a year to the municipal fund, is illegal.

THE REMAINS OF THE LATE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—The Ajdaha, which is to convey the English embassy to Persia, left Bombay on Tuesday, the 24th Nov., with the remains of Lord Frederick FitzClarence on board. Lady FitzClarence and her daughter went by the same opportunity. There was no pomp or ceremony attending the embarkation. Sir Henry Leake accompanied the mourners on board, and after seeing that all the arrangements which he had ordered for their comfort and accommodation had been carried into effect, he returned on shore, when the vessel immediately got under weigh.

IRRIGATION.—Dr. Buist's irrigation scheme is gradually realizing itself in good substantial Company's rupees, and so successful has it been in its operation during the last few months, that another company has been organized, the agents of which are Messrs. Leckie and Company. The worthy secretary of the original company, Dr. George Buist, in conjunction with his talented native coadjutor Dr. Bhow Dajee, is sparing no pains to render the project successful; and, with such assistance, there can be little doubt of success.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR, we are glad to learn, has quite recovered from his indisposition, and is now able to attend to public business. During his lordship's sickness, the editor of the Bombay Gazette endeavoured to get up a howl about his "weakness," but the attempt was met with the scorn which it merited. The fact is, Lord Elphinstone is one of the most popular governors we ever had in this presidency.—Telegraph and Courier.

MR. FRERE.—We hear that Mr. W. E. Frere, Chief Judge of the Sudder Adawlut, in consequence of ill-health, will go home on the 28th inst. It is probable that Mr. W. H. Harrison, Judge of Surat, will succeed him temporarily. In that case, Mr. Hebbert, now acting senior magistrate of police, will be appointed to act for Mr. Harrison.—Telegraph and Courier.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

MAJOR-GENERAL SOMERSET'S ORDER ON ASSUMING COMMAND OF THE FORCES.

Head-Quarters, Kurrachee, Nov. 6, 1854.—Major-General Sir H. Somerset has the painful duty to announce to the Bombay army the death of the Right Hon. Lord Frederick FitzClarence, G.C.H., the Commander-in-Chief, who expired at Poornidhur on the 30th ultimo. The army is aware of the unceasing and untiring anxiety of the late Commander-in-Chief for the welfare and discipline of the army he commanded; his lordship's whole time and thoughts were devoted to its interests.

The Major-General has not words to express his deep sense of the loss the army has sustained in the death of its late noble and gallant Commander-in-Chief, and his deep grief at his loss.

In assuming the command of the forces, to which, by G.G.O., under date 30th ultimo, the Major-General has been appointed, he desires to call on the heads of all departments, and the officers commanding regiments, to give him assistance in carrying on the duties of the army and in supporting discipline, assuring them of his cordial support for the advantage of the public service in all its branches.

The excellent discipline of the Bombay army is notorious, and the experience of the two years which the Major-General has had the honour to serve in that army, has convinced him that nothing can exceed the excellent conduct and state of efficiency of the several divisions of the army.

The judicious and valuable rules laid down by the late Commander-in-Chief are to be carried out in every respect, the division commanders and the brigadiers and officers commanding regiments will carry out these orders in their fullest extent. The Major-General holds the commanding officers of regiments entirely responsible for the discipline of their respective corps, feeling assured that they will in no way deviate from that excellent system of discipline for which the Bombay army has been so eminently and justly distinguished:

By order of the Commander of the Forces,
(Signed) H. HANCOCK, Colonel,
Adjutant-General of the Army.

CULTIVATION OF COTTON IN SCINDE.

Report by Mr. T. G. Prince, Superintendent of Cotton Experiments, of his proceedings during the past year, dated Kurrachee, 17 June, 1854, and submitted to the Government through H. B. E. Frere, Esq., Commissioner in Scinde.

I have the honour to submit a report of my proceedings during my recent journey through the province of Scinde, and of what has been done in the cultivation of foreign cotton since the date of my last report.

2. On my return from the districts in April last year, I planted in that and the following month in the Government Garden, and in an enclosed field in the neighbourhood, about ten and a half acres of land with New Orleans and Egyptian seed, partly imported and partly naturalized.

3. The acclimatized seed grew well and produced a fair stand of plants, but three successive days of hot winds, when they were in the third leaf, and again three more days of similar weather when the plants were about three weeks' old, so effectually stunted them that they never recovered, and produced in consequence only about one and a half maunds of inferior cotton.

4. The New Orleans imported seed, of which I planted about five acres, did not come up at all. This seed I had tried in November, 1852, previous to its distribution, and found it good; but in the interval of six months that ensued before it was planted it had greatly deteriorated, though kept in a dry and airy place. Evidence of this I subsequently found in all parts of the country, in many places it had not grown at all, in others only partially.

5. In September last 6,000 lbs. of Sea Island seed were received from Bombay, which on trying I found to be good, nearly every seed germinating. Of this seed I sent in November 4,800 lbs. to the deputy-collector of Shah Bunder and Ghorabarree, and about 250 lbs. to the political agent at Cutch. In December 14,000 lbs. of New Orleans seed were received from the Deccan and the Southern Mahratta country, and in January 2,000 lbs. of this seed were sent to the chief commissioner of the Punjab, 5,000 lbs. to Shikarpoor, 5,000 lbs. to Hyderabad, and 2,000 lbs. for the Kurrachee collectorate. This seed was fresh and good, the produce of the last harvest, and has grown well wherever it has been planted, as I learn by late advices from different parts of the country.

6. On my proceeding to the districts, I found that in the Ghorabaree district, a number of small patches of land, of a few rods each, had been planted late in the season with New Orleans and Egyptian seed; much of this seed had failed to come up, and where it had grown, from the lateness of the planting, and from carelessness and neglect, little or no cotton had been produced.

7. In the Sacra Kardarate I found some ten or twelve of these patches on the banks of the Bagra. They had been planted in August with New Orleans seed, and though small, the plants were looking healthy and well, and were tolerably well loaded with bolls. Little damage had been done by insects or dews, though the plants were overrun with weeds. The Egyptian seed that had been sown had all failed to grow.

8. In the Tatta Kardarate, about an equal extent of land had been planted in August, in still smaller patches. The plants, though small, cropped by cattle and every way neglected, bore a reasonable quantity of fair-sized bolls. No damage had been done by insects or otherwise.

9. In the Durruk Kardarate, several patches had been planted in Dubbiar in the beginning of August, the plants here, as in the other Kardarates, had been neglected, and were in several patches damaged by cattle; they were, however, healthy and green, and, though scarcely eighteen inches high, were bearing an abundance of as large bolls as ever I saw—in fact, the bolls could not be finer. Some slight damage has been done among the plants by the grub at the root. Much of the seed sown in this, as well as in the Patto Kardarate, had not grown. Mr. Cole, the deputy collector, has planted about half an acre in a field near his premises in July; these plants were large, and had been properly treated. Mr. Cole has since informed me that he picked an abundant crop from this field of plants.

10. In the Ghorabaree Kardarate nothing was produced, the report says the principal part of the seed sown was flooded.

11. The canals in this district, and throughout the province, filled unusually late, and the seed was planted late in consequence.

12. I found most of the cultivators of this district entirely averse to plant the American cotton this season. They plead poverty, from losses by flood and bad harvests the two past seasons, as the reason for their unwillingness. Only the cultivators of the Sacra Kardarate engaged to plant fifty-three begahs of land with sea-island seed, on the bank of the Bagra, in the beginning of April, on the terms proposed by government.

13. The large landholders in this district, though engaging to make the trials themselves, have in almost every instance given the seed to their "harris," or sub-tenants, to plant. These are generally small holders, of from ten to fifty begahs, who can only plant in small patches. I have this season stipulated in the written agreements, that the seed be planted throughout the province, in fields of not less than an acre of land, in a few instances of not less than a begah.

14. A belief exists among some of the zemindars and others, that the heavy dews that fall in the Delta are injurious to cotton, and they allege this as one reason why more native cotton is not grown there. I have as yet, however, only seen one instance where they have done any damage to the foreign cotton, and, in that one, the plants were surrounded on three sides by tall sugarcane crops and trees, so that neither the sun nor air had free access to the plants, and, as a necessary consequence, the cotton in a few of the opening bolls was discoloured, and otherwise injured.

15. Where the foreign cotton is planted in open situations, freely exposed to the action of the wind and sun, I am of opinion that little or no damage will be done by the heaviest dews. The only effect produced by these dews would be one similar to that produced by a light rain or Scotch-mist; in general, they are no doubt beneficial, and the only time at which they could be injurious to the cotton would be when the bolls are opening, and the crop is being harvested, and as that season the sky is mostly unclouded, and the sun bright and powerful, I am persuaded that little need be feared from the dews, and that this (as regards foreign cotton) is a prejudice which a few good crops will soon dissipate.

16. In the Sehwan districts only a small quantity of New Orleans cotton had been produced. Much of the seed distributed, the Kardars' reports say, had failed to grow, and some was destroyed by inundation. Some fine plants had been produced from New Orleans seed in Beed, Oanerapoor, and the neighbouring villages. These were in small patches of ground planted in August, and the plants remarkably healthy and flourishing and well laden with large bolls. On one plant, about two and a half feet high, I counted thirty-three large bolls, six of which had been pierced by the boll-worm, the rest had not been injured by insects, though foul with grass and weeds. Some Egyptian plants of the previous season had been pruned, and grown well, but produced nothing. About a begah of New Orleans plants also of the year before had been pruned and were looking healthy, though they had been neglected, and were choked with weeds, they were well laden with bolls, but smaller than those on the annual plants.

17. The largest and most respectable cultivators of this district have engaged to plant eighty-five begahs of land with New Orleans seed this season, fifty begahs to be planted on well-lands in February and March, and the rest whenever the water is available.

18. In the Mehur districts no cotton had been produced, except by Mr. Wright, the apothecary there, who had sown a begah and half in March, April, and May, which had yielded five maunds, sixteen seers of "phootie," or seed cotton, and one maund and twenty-five seers of clean cotton. These plants were of average size, and had been properly dealt with in most respects. No damage had been done by insects or blights. Mr. Wright informs me that he had these plants pruned in February, that they have grown up stout and healthy, and are now full of flowers and bolls, and promising a good crop this season.

19. Much of the seed (New Orleans) sown in the district did not come up; several patches are reported by the Kardars as having been eaten by the grub at the root. In the Tiger Kardarate the plants were blighted by the hot winds. The principal Zemindars of this district have agreed to plant fifty-seven begahs this season with New Orleans seed, as soon as the water in the canals is available.

20. In the Larkannah districts about four maunds of seed cotton had been produced from New Orleans seed planted in April. This cotton was good, but picked in a slovenly way, and mixed with trash of all sorts. Much of the seed planted did not grow; some few plants had been destroyed by the grub, and some withered by the hot winds, particularly in the Kumbur Kardarate. A small quantity of Egyptian seed had been planted in the Nusseerabad Kardarate, contrary to my directions, and have yielded nothing.

21. The principal zemindars of this district signed an agreement to plant 123 begahs with New Orleans seed this season; of these fifty-seven to be planted on well-lands in February and March, and sixty-six when the canals fill.

22. In the Shikarpoor and Boordeka districts some twelve maunds of New Orleans cotton had been produced, of good quality mostly; but it had been harvested in the native manner, and was very dirty. Much of the seed planted had failed to grow, and white ants had done damage among the plants in the Nowshera, Abra, and Meerpoor Kardarates. Little damage had been done by the boll-worm, and some few patches of plants had been withered by the hot winds.

23. In the Baordeka district, from Dhad northwards, the river has encroached much; what was formerly a fine cotton country was last year flooded entirely, and above 800 begahs of native cotton destroyed. The zemindars say they have abandoned sowing cotton entirely; the foreign cotton planted here was all destroyed by the floods.

24. I found most of the zemindars of these districts altogether unwilling to plant the foreign seed this season. Several with whom I spoke on this subject answered me with complaints and grievances that their assessment was too heavy; that they were not paid properly for clearing the canals; that they had to plant and water trees by the roadside, &c. This especially in the Shikarpoor Kardarate.

25. The proclamation issued by the collector of Shikarpoor (unlike those published in the other collectorates) was indefinite in its terms, and promised only partial indemnification in case of failure of the crops from providential causes. The unwillingness of the cultivators to plant may perhaps be attributed in some degree to this, as well as the foregoing cause.

26. I regret to say that in consequence, I succeeded in getting only fifty-five begahs of land signed for, of these thirty-six begahs to be planted on well-lands in February and March, and the rest when the water in the canals serves.

27. In the districts of Sukkur and the left bank about forty-five maunds of New Orleans seed cotton had been produced, chiefly in the Gotekee and Koriee Kardarates. This cotton was good and had been carefully harvested, but it was a good deal discoloured. Most of this seed had been planted early in the season, and the plants had been fairly treated. From the partial failure of the seed it is difficult to compute the yield—about 350lbs. of seed cotton per acre is an approximation for the fields that produced the cotton.

28. Some of the best samples I proposed to purchase, but the growers were unwilling to part with any, as they intended to have it all manufactured for their own use.

29. Some little damage had been done by the boll-worm in a few of the fields. Most of the plants, however, had escaped without injury, the grub at the root had also destroyed a few plants here and there. The Aboura Kardar's report says that the hot winds had withered many of the plants there. A good deal of the seed planted all over the districts had failed to come up.

30. The principal cultivators of these districts have engaged to plant fifty begahs of land this season, in February and March, with the imported New Orleans seed, about twenty-seven maunds of the seed raised last year in the districts; Mr. Cowper, the deputy-collector, informs me he is sanguine of having all planted. This quantity of seed is enough for 200 begahs of land.

31. In the Sahitee districts only about two maunds of cotton had been produced. The kardar's reports says they had only a small quantity of seed supplied to them, much of which did not grow, and that the grub at the root had destroyed many of the plants; at Tarovsha, in Mr. Jameson, the deputy-collector's garden, about half a begah of fine New Orleans plant had produced a plentiful crop of good cottons; these plants had not suffered in any way.

32. The principal cultivators of this district agreed to plant 250 begahs of land this season with the New Orleans seed, 150 begahs on well-lands in February and March, and 100 begahs as soon as the water in the canals is available.

33. In the Hallsa deputy-collectorate only a few seers of New Orleans cotton had been raised. The cultivators told me that the canals filled late in the season, and that the water remained only for a short time, and that their trials failed in consequence, as the plants had perished for want of water. There are very few wells used for cultivation in this district.

34. The principal cultivators agreed to plant 116 begahs of land this season with the New Orleans seed. 110 begahs as soon as the water is available in the canals, and six begahs on well-lands in the beginning of March.

35. In the Doaba about a maund and a half of New Orleans cotton had been sown. This cotton was good, but much discoloured and dirty; it had been picked in a slovenly manner, some of the seed sown had failed to grow, and some little damage had been done by the boll-worm. The principal cultivators of this district agreed to plant fifty begahs with New Orleans seed this season; twenty begahs in March, and thirty when the canals fill.

36. In the Meerpoor and Mahomed Khan's Tanda district no foreign cotton had been produced, from the great scarcity of water. This was an universal complaint. The cultivators informed me that the water was very scant in the canals, and remained only about two months, in some places even less time, and in consequence that not only the foreign seed had failed but the native cotton also. This Mr. Lambert, the deputy collector, assured me was the case in his districts. On this account only twenty begahs of land were engaged to be planted with New Orleans seed in both these districts; the cultivators asserting that it would be useless to plant the seed, as from the defective state of the water-courses the supply of water was insufficient for their crops.

37. In the Shah Bunder districts no foreign cotton was produced. About ten begahs planted in May on the banks of the Puizaree were totally destroyed by the hot winds. In other parts of the district the trials failed chiefly from the floods.

38. The principal cultivators of this district have engaged to plant 187 begahs with foreign seed this season. Twelve begahs with New Orleans, and 150 begahs with Sea Island seed, as soon as the water is available and 25 begahs with Sea Island seed on good "Selabee" in the latter end of October.

39. I have been led to give this experiment of planting on Selabee a trial partly from the representations of several intelligent Zemindars who assure me that it will do well, and because I consider that the foreign plant will stand as much draught as the native, and that the moisture of both soil and climate in the Delta will be sufficient to raise good sized though not perhaps large plants. Should this method of culture succeed it will be a great advantage, as it is attended with little expense and no risk from the floods, for the crops will be harvested before the inundation sets in. If only middling crops be got, I have no doubt that a good deal of cotton will be produced this way.

40. Written agreements have been made with the principal Zemindars to plant this season 1046 begahs of land with the foreign seed on terms proposed by the Government. These, together with land planted with the seed sown in Upper Sindh last year, will make in all about 650 statute acres planted this year throughout the province. About one hundred and twenty acres in the Delta with Sea-Island seed from America, and the rest with New Orleans seed naturalized in India.

41. The experiments hitherto can hardly be said to have been voluntarily made. The cultivators generally have undertaken to plant small patches more because Government wished it than from any interest they themselves took in the cultivation, and have regarded the endeavours used to induce them to plant rather in the light of commands than persuasion; so that if the planting was not compulsory it was seldom taken in hand with a good-will and desire to succeed. This has been the case especially in Lower Scinde; the planters here in most instances did as little as they could towards the culture consistently with showing that anything at all had been done, and the experiments generally have been neglected in most respects.

42. From all that I have hitherto seen the foreign plant is not obnoxious to mere disasters, nor are there greater permanent obstacles to its well-doing in Scinde than in other countries. The chief of these that have shown themselves up to the present time are hot winds and insects, the boll-worm, the grub at the root, and the white ants.

43. Written instructions for planting have been furnished to each deputy-collector by me, and translated copies supplied to all the Kardars and Tuppedars with directions to give them all the publicity in their power among the cultivators. Four hundred and fifty lithographed copies have also been given out among the principal zemindars of the province.

44. All the cultivators who have engaged to plant the foreign seed this year have done so voluntarily. I took care to impress on them that nothing like compulsion was intended, and that they were free to accept or refuse the terms offered by the government. I also ascertained that they perfectly understood the terms on which they engaged to plant before they signed the agreements.

45. From this season's operations, therefore, I look forward for satisfactory results in Upper Scinde and Middle Scinde, particularly where the cultivators have taken most pains, and consequently succeeded best; and in spite of bad seasons and bad seed, are evidently taking an interest in the New Orleans cotton, and are fully aware of its superiority to their own, both in yield and quality, though they are cautious of expressing themselves too much in its favour as yet.

46. The cultivators of the Delta are not so tractable as those of the upper province, the Delta they say never was a cotton country, and it is very difficult to persuade them that it may become one. Their prejudices are strong against it. I trust, however, that they will do justice to the experiments this season, and that the results will tend to convince them that the American cotton will, if fairly dealt with, yield them good returns, and prove a profitable crop.

RESOLUTION BY GOVERNMENT.

Government requests that Mr. Frere will immediately institute inquiries as to the truth of the complaints stated by Mr. Prince in his 24th para. to have been preferred by the zemindars; the result of the inquiries, as well as the measures he may take to prevent the recurrence of any abuses he may find to have had existence, to be reported by the Commissioner to Government.

2. In para. 5 of Government Resolution of 4th August, 1853, No. 4,489, Mr. Frere was informed—"Government is of opinion that favourable localities for cultivating the New Orleans and Egyptian cotton may best be ascertained, and the people be able to arrive at correct conclusions as to the advantages of producing one or both of these species, by Mr. Prince taking contracts on such terms as will insure the cultivation being carried on in the manner indicated at close of para. 24 of Mr. Prince's report, and at the same time throw the loss on Government should the experiments fail through no fault of the grower."

3. Government desire to know whether they are to understand by para. 25 of Mr. Prince's letter, that these instructions were interpreted differently in the Shikarpoor collectorate, from the manner in which they were read and acted in Lower Scinde.

4. The complaints mentioned by Mr. Prince in para. 36, as having been made of the state of the water-courses in Meerpoor and Mahomed Khan's Tanda districts, appear to require notice by the commissioner.

5. Government notice with dissatisfaction that the cultivation of foreign cotton in Scinde was not voluntary; they trust Mr. Prince is correct (para. 44), in thinking that the agreements now obtained have been entered into by the people of their own free will.—Bombay Times, November 17.

CAPTURE OF THE CALDERA BY PIRATES.

The following account of the capture by pirates of this vessel has been furnished by Captain Rooney:—"On Thursday the 5th, at 5 a.m., the Caldera left Hong-Kong, bound to San Francisco, with a crew of seventeen officers and men, and one French lady and two Chinamen passengers. At 4 p.m. the barometer falling, and weather threatening, I shortened sail and prepared for a gale; at midnight, it was blowing very hard, and before daylight in the morning of the 6th, we were under a close-reefed maintopmast, with a very heavy cross sea. Throughout the whole of the day the wind blew very hard; we lost our maintopmast, and mizenmast close to the deck, and the ship commenced to leak very badly. This state of things continued until 4 p.m. on Saturday, when we made the land about two miles off, the wind then at S.S.W. the land north from us. I considered that the best thing I could do would be to run into a bay which I saw under my lee, and there repair damages and rest my crew, who were quite exhausted. I succeeded in getting the ship into this bay, and anchored at about 6 p.m.; set men to pump her. About 10 p.m., while the men were employed at the pumps, three junks came alongside, threw their stinkpots on deck, and boarded the vessel on both sides, making prisoners of all the men that were on deck at the time; they then took me and those that were in bed and made our hands fast behind our backs. They asked us if the ship was English, and when answered in the negative, said it was well for us that she was not, for if she had been, they would have murdered all hands. At daylight on the morning of the 7th, they made us get the vessel under weigh, and take her, by their directions, into another bay, where we anchored in three fathoms of water; there they plundered her of her cargo; but on the morning of the 9th, a large fleet of junks hove in sight, and the first lot left. This fleet numbered thirty-five; they took all they wanted, and were succeeded by some more of a smaller class, who in turn gave place to others, until everything was out of the ship, and they commenced to take the copper off. One of the junks, on Wednesday last, took the lady passenger away and one of the Chinamen. In the afternoon of the same day I got one of the pirate boats that was alongside to take me and the carpenter to Macao, where I landed on Thursday afternoon, and there reported the affair to the captain of the port and governor; but they said that I could not get any assistance at that place, so I left immediately for Hongkong, at which place I arrived at midnight on Friday last."

As soon as Capt. Rooney arrived, he hurried to his agents, Messrs. Williams, Anthon, and Co., and reported the circumstance to Mr. Haskell, one of the partners, who acts as vice-consul for France at Hongkong. Mr. Haskell instantly proceeded on board H.M.S. Spartan, and after an interview with Sir William Hoste, who promised the assistance of a body of men, next roused Mr. Walker, of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, and chartered the Lady Mary Wood to proceed to the rescue of the crew of the Caldera. He also called upon the Lieut.-Governor, who directed Mr. Caldwell to accompany the expedition, having under his charge as prisoners two of the boatmen who had brought Capt. Rooney to Macao, and who accompanied him to Hongkong for payment of 50 dollars, which he had promised them.—China Mail, Oct. 19.

The steamer Ann returned yesterday morning from the wreck of the Caldera, having succeeded in saving the French lady and Chinese passenger, and a portion of the cargo of the vessel, and also destroyed a number of houses.—Friend of China, Oct. 21.

The Ann was only nine hours doing the distance to Tylo (some seventy-five miles); the fighting party, under Lieutenant Palliser, remaining on board until next morning. Just after the boats had left the steamer, chase was given to a junk seen making for the shore; but before the Spartan could get alongside, the craft was at anchor, and deserted by her crew. Madame Loviot and the Chinese were on board this junk, and their delight at being so unexpectedly released can easily be imagined. Sending the now happy couple back to the steamer, the crew promptly reduced the junk to ashes. Shortly afterwards two other junks were seen—chased, and speedily driven on shore, where, after a ransack of ducks, pigs, geese, rice, &c., they were blown up with a large quantity of powder found on board. These vessels were part of a piratical squadron doubtless. Some round shot sent amongst the crew, seen escaping up the hill, took good effect.

The boats then proceeded towards the village, where much of the Caldera's plunder was found stored on the previous visit, and having filled the boats, the crews went to work to burn the village and another close by,—a work soon completed. Upwards of fourteen hundred families, at the rate of two families in each dwelling, were seen rendered houseless,—a proceeding the good policy of which we cannot altogether see, because it has not been ascertained how far the whole of the inhabitants of these villages were culpable in giving shelter to the pirates—a shelter, most likely, obtained by force. Better is it that a dozen guilty escape than one innocent individual suffer. However, as a warning to the inhabitants on the coast not to abet piracy and the storage of plunder, the destruction may have its desired effect. The villages well in a blaze, the Spartans then proceeded to storm a battery of nine guns, and to burn another village some three or four miles from the beach. In this service Lieut. Palliser and Capt. Rooney (of the Caldera) appear to have narrowly escaped with their lives, and several of the men received severe contusions from stones thrown down the hills under which they passed. The musket and bayonet, however, made terrible havoc among the assailants; four out of the nine guns were spiked; five were dragged over the hills to the boats.

This completed the first day's work.

The next morning the boats again proceeded towards a village called Kulan, found to be a perfect pirates' stronghold, requiring, it is said, five times the force under Lieut. Palliser to effectually destroy it. Some heavy guns were discharged at the Spartan whilst reconnoitring, fortunately without effect. Lieut. Palliser seeing the imprudence of exposing his handful of men to such a force, returned to the Ann, and that useful little vessel then got up anchor and made her way back slowly to Hong-Kong, where she arrived about 10 a.m. Saturday, having been absent three days and two hours.

"Nothing could exceed the indefatigable zeal of the men, and the bravery of the British officers it is needless for me to speak; but I cannot close this communication without giving expression to my admiration of the cool determination and able tactics of Lieut. Palliser, to whose prudence the success of the expedition is mainly owing. Lieut. Morrell in the pinnace was always near his commander. Lieut. Stokes gallantly led on his marines, and at the storming of the battery all these gentlemen and Mr. Smart distinguished themselves with a fearlessness that cannot be too highly honoured."—China Mail, Oct. 19.

RECORDS OF THE WAR.

We (Friend of China) are indebted to an esteemed friend for the following interesting communication regarding Canton and its neighbourhood. A later date informs us that the distant boom of cannon was very distinctly heard on the 21st, and that a considerable amount of fighting was taking place near to the city walls on that day:—

"Canton, 20th October, 1854.

"As I promised to give you, from time to time, some account of the state of things in Canton and neighbourhood, I have dotted down a few facts that I think can be depended on for their accuracy. You must excuse me from giving anything like a full or regular detail. For some time past we have ceased to hear the report of guns at the back of the city, and the telescope does not now exhibit to our view bodies of men passing backwards and forwards on the ridges of the hills, or clusters of soldiers firing, and waving flags on certain prominent points, as formerly. The encampments remain, and in them, and in the stone and mud forts, are some 10,000 men, drafted chiefly from Sun-on, Chew-chow, and Tung-koon, kept together without much apparent order or discipline. The egress and ingress through the gates of the city is still far from easy; only four gates are kept constantly open through the day, and none are permitted to pass, either men or women, without undergoing some examination; respectably-dressed people are not very narrowly inspected. Seizures and decapitations within the city are fearfully frequent. Many persons belonging to the Triad Society have lately been taken up and beheaded. This is doubtless done to strike terror into the thousands that have joined this treasonable body, and so prevent its increase.

"A voluntary subscription towards the expenses of the war has not been confined only to the wealthy; tradesmen have surrendered a percentage of their yearly profits for the public weal—grudgingly, perhaps, has this been done by some; but by most cheerfully and in a patriotic spirit. The only coercive tax that has come to my knowledge as yet was the exaction of a sum equal to one month's rent from every house in Canton. The free offerings of the people are placed in the hands of civilians, Howqua being the president. The total sum collected is said to be more than equal to the sum which the present necessities of the city call for. The fighting at the back of the city has been witnessed by a few foreign gentlemen, and by them pronounced puerile in the extreme, according to our notions of war. But it has been effectual, nevertheless, in destroying and repulsing the thousands that at one time threatened the city with destruction. These bands have been dispersed, and those that remain to be overcome in the immediate neighbourhood of Canton, are the few villages beyond Same-une-le, who are still in arms against the government, or rather, perhaps, standing on their own defence. The soldiery attack them from time to time, and sharp fighting has been carried on—little of a hand-to-hand combat, but close enough fighting to inflict wounds and cause death to many on both sides. On the rebel side there are, it is said, about 6,000, including women and young boys, who assist the men to load and fire the guns. Their arms are common long-barrelled guns, spears, spikes made from the bamboo, rattan shields, arrows projected by rockets, and swords about eighteen inches long, sharp and pointed. The balls used are of all sizes, mostly ranging from the size of a small to that of a large orange. Their bullets vary in size from a pea to a large nut; are made of iron and lead; rough and irregular in shape. The imperial troops are better clad, and have a larger supply of cannon and ammunition than their opponents. Judging from their own reports, they are anxious to fight, and do not fear death, and are only restrained from getting to close quarters with the enemy, cutting them off root and branch, by their superior officers, who are afraid they may be taken in ambush, or fall into the numerous pits and stakes known to exist near the rebel villages. When fighting first commenced, both parties kept at a respectful distance from each other, and not much injury or loss was sustained on either side. But latterly, whatever cause it may be ascribed to, the casualties have not been small. Many have been killed, and still more have been seriously wounded. For three months past wounded soldiers and villagers have been brought to the hospital in the Western suburbs, under Dr. Hobson's care; but the cases have been far more numerous and serious within the last three weeks than formerly. Two or three have been admitted daily. A week ago twenty cases of gun-shot wounds through the head, chest, and extremities, were brought into the hospital,—all within thirty hours. Incised or punctured wounds have not yet appeared, showing that up to this time the imperial troops and militia do not—or dare not—come to close quarters. Many cases of spear or sword-cuts have occurred among the villagers and coolies, received while defending their masters' property or their own from the depredation of robbers."

INTERVIEWS BETWEEN ADMIRAL STERLING AND THE JAPANESE AUTHORITIES.

From Mr. Otoketch, Interpreter to Admiral Sterling on his Excellency's recent visit to Nagasaki, we (Overland Friend of China) have gleaned several interesting items of intelligence regarding the interviews between Sir James and the Japanese Governor; and, although very diplomatic and careful not to communicate particulars of state matters, it is evident from what he says that the British nation, beyond all others, is thought of with high favour by the officials of Japan. The Russians were spoken of in terms of perfect reprobation. So irritated it appears was the Governor of Nagasaki at the bearing of Admiral Putiatin towards him, that he refused to hold any intercourse, and sent to Jeddo for a special commissioner to listen to the Muscovite's requests, none of which were granted or promised. The Russians have been three times at Nagasaki since the Pallas arrived in these waters last year. One stay was over two months in duration. They finally left Japan about the end of the Chinese fourth month, which would be in the last half of our April, and have not since been seen or heard of.

On first sending in Sir James Sterling's card to the Governor, several of the high officials were anxious to know if it was not Sir John Bowring who had arrived; whilst others asked if Mr. Morrison was coming, being ignorant, they said, of his death. They had heard much of that great philosopher, as he was termed; though whether it was the father or the eldest son they alluded to did not appear. Mr. Otoketch speaks of the urbanity of the Governor of Nagasaki as something remarkable for so high an official. On going into his presence he was preparing to follow the practice of his countrymen in prostrating himself, when his Excellency condescendingly pointed to a seat, and at once treated him as a friend of the same class. The idiom of the language of that part of Japan to which Mr. Otoketch belongs is different from the Court dialect, and interpretation had to be made through a second party. On several occasions, however, the Governor addressed Mr. Otoketch directly, and asked him if he understood what he said.

Mr. Otoketch is of opinion that now the Japanese Government have entered into official communication with foreign powers, and finds that they are not so troublesome as was expected, the day is not far distant when trade will be permitted freely; though ports as far off as Nagasaki from the capital are the most likely, he thinks, to enjoy a fuller and more unrestrained intercourse. Mr. Otoketch tells of having endeavoured to get up a little conversation on his own account about the Americans, but found those with whom he conversed very unwilling to say anything about them. That they had been sent away quietly was all he could learn. The Roman Catholic religion was spoken of as something not to be thought of. To Protestantism, of which religion Mr. Otoketch professed himself, no repugnance was expressed. The name of the emperor is Kae-hee, the same as that of his predecessor, who reigned so much to the satisfaction of the nation for a period of six years, that the people at his decease determined, as Mr. Otoketch expresses it, on "splicing his reign"—the first year of the present Kae-hee being called his seventh, the next the eighth, and so it will continue. All the officers spoke confidentially of the present emperor as being a "broad-hearted" or, as we should term it, a large-souled man, and they look forward to a long reign of prosperity and peace.

THE AMBASSADORS TO THE COURT OF CHINA.—On Tuesday (says the North China Herald, Oct. 14), their Excellencies Sir John Bowring and Robert M. McLane, the ministers plenipotentiary of Great Britain and the United States to the emperor of China, left this port in H.M.'s steamer Rattler and U.S. steamer Powhatan, to proceed to the Peiho, with the intention, it is understood, of laying before the emperor the present interruptions to foreign trade in China, and devising a remedy for the same, and obtaining greater privileges of trade in the interior. Their excellencies were accompanied by their respective suites, viz., the Hon. C. B. Hillier, W. H. Medhurst, Esq., Chinese secretary, Dr. P. Parker, and Mr. Craig. The Count Kleskowski accompanied the expedition on the part of France.

CONVENTION WITH THE JAPANESE GOVERNMENT.—We (Friend of China) have authentic information to the effect that his Exc. Sir James Stirling succeeded in concluding a convention with the Governor of Nagasaki, by which British subjects are understood to enjoy the privilege of participating in any advantages already, or at any time hereafter, to be granted by the Japanese government to the people of other countries. Nagasaki, however, is the port to which the Japanese wish us to confine our attention for the present. This convention is to be ratified by the respective ministers of foreign affairs within a year.—Friend of China, Nov. 1.

ONE OF THE ARCTIC SHIPS AT HONG KONG.—H.M.S. Enterprise, Capt. Collinson, which left Hong Kong on the 2nd April, 1851, again arrived there on the morning of Nov. 8th, after an absence of upwards of three years and a half. The Enterprise, it will be remembered, sailed from England in the early part of 1850, in company with H.M.S. Investigator, Capt. McClure, bound in search of Sir John Franklin and the North-West Passage.

THE GREAT GILT-PAPER QUESTION.—The army of India does not respect its chief. It considers him better qualified to shine as an English country gentleman, than to organize the internal administration of so vast a force. A story has been in circulation which we believe to be accurate, and which is calculated to weaken, if not destroy, this erroneous impression. It proves that the firmness necessary to a commander-in-chief is, in Sir William Gomm, supported by a logic as simple as it is conclusive. It is in little things that the true character is displayed, and in little things his Excellency is incomparable. The Commander-in-Chief, in right of his position, personal and official, maintains a correspondence with many English magnates. We have all read Horace Walpole, and appreciated Lady Wortley Montague, and we know, therefore, how important are such letters in a historical point of view. Sir Wm. Gomm, profoundly penetrated with a sense of the harmony of social observances, considers it right to use for this correspondence gilt-edged paper. Benjamin Franklin, the most prosaic of men, once wrote a song on paper, and an essay might be written on the peculiar virtues of the description with gilt edges. It is the porcelain of the stationery clay. This, however, is not our present topic. We have to illustrate the logic of the Commander-in-Chief. Any one less military would conceive that his Excellency might have brought his paper from England, or, while enjoying 17,000*l.* sterling a year, might have purchased it in Calcutta. His Excellency is far more logical. The Government is bound to provide him with stationery. Gilt-edged paper is stationery. Ergo the Government is bound to provide him with gilt-edged paper. The demonstration was as perfect as that of the pons asinorum, and the stationery office received an official indent. There was no gilt-edged paper in the office, and the superintendent, half-smiling, and half-tremulous, communicated that fact to his Excellency. The Commander-in-Chief exhibited his usual moral courage. He would not buy the paper. As every clergyman remarks in every question of tithes, the matter itself is nothing, but why should he sacrifice the rights of his successors? The military logic was again called forth. The Commander-in-Chief had a right to gilt-edged paper. The superintendent of stationery would not give him any. The obvious course was, in India, to appeal; and the appellate authority legally provided to meet all such cases was the Governor-General in Council. True, Lord Dalhousie had the cares of an empire on his hands, a disturbed province to pacify, two administrations to organize, and 160 draft acts to ponder on in his hours of relaxation. What was that to the purpose? Military law is based upon due subordination, and the legal expounder of that law appealed to the legal superior of the offending superintendent. The Governor-General in Council has established a university. Nevertheless he was not mindful of the injury to history and to literature, which might result from the suppression of the Annals of Simlah, and he declined to order a supply of gilt-edged paper. We say nothing of the justice of such a negative. We leave his Lordship to posterity; but we think we have cleared the Commander-in-Chief from the charge of want of perseverance and of deficient logic.—Friend of India.

THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

No. I.

In our last we presented our readers with the Report on the Indian Civil Service. Five gentlemen, as our readers are aware, have been sitting in judgment on the important question, "How are we to get civil servants? Influenced by that curious and very subtle essence, known, or rather talked of, as 'the spirit of the age,' they propose to do so by a new system. This was to be expected; but it is somewhat remarkable, that, after judgment has been recorded against Haileybury, and sentence of extinction is about to be passed, the Commissioners should continue to speak of that establishment as something "alive, and likely to live." We fear that some concealed and indefinable operation of ante-diluvianism lurks, perhaps unknown to the reporters, beneath the splendid professions of liberality and progress which overlay their production, and tinge it with the golden hues which only "march-of-the-mind men" can spread, and perhaps only they appreciate.

The Commissioners, or reporters,—we hardly know what they are,—proceed to their business mechanically, at least like workmen; they begin at the beginning. A biographer naturally commences at the birth of his hero; thence he proceeds to his "life, character, and behaviour," or so much of it as it suits his purpose to disclose. So the Indian civil service, expository critics begin at the commencement of the student's college life, for they will have it that all are to go to Haileybury. The present rules enact that no person can enter Haileybury under seventeen, nor after twenty-one, and that none can go out to India after twenty-three. With this the gentlemen who have undertaken the task of constructing a spick-and-span new plan for the civil service are dissatisfied; they consider the age of twenty-three too young for the extreme limit, and would greatly prefer twenty-five. It is desirable, they admit, that the Company's civil servants should proceed to India young, but then they are not to be too young. The rule seems to be something like that laid down in Miss Austin's "Emma" for preparing Mr. Woodhouse's gruel: it was to be thin, but not too thin." Reasons might readily be assigned, especially with regard to the effect of the climate upon the physical constitution, which would recommend an early age for commencing an Indian career; but in these days such considerations are too low to be taken into account; they all vanish before such flashy sentences as the following:—that "it is also desirable that he [the Indian servant] should have received the best, the most liberal, the most finished education that his native country affords. Such an education has been proved by experience to be the best preparation for every calling which requires the exercise of the higher powers of the mind; nor will it be easy to show that such preparation is less desirable in the case of a civil servant of the East-India Company than in the case of a professional man who remains in England." To be sure, it is not easy to show this, nor would any man attempt to show it; but many will have the hardihood to maintain that the age, twenty-three, at which men in England may be admitted to the responsibilities of holy orders, is not too young for undertaking the duties of a junior civil servant, which duties are often of a routine character, and always discharged under supervision. But perhaps we may give offence by associating a parcel of heavy, lumbering deacons with the sparkling specimens to be produced under the new Indian system of men embodying in themselves all politeness and all severe learning, so that it will be impossible to tell which preponderates. So we restrain ourselves; and seeing that at this season of the year few persons will perhaps peruse our lucubrations, if they extend much farther, we also restrain ourselves from proceeding farther at present. We shall, however, return to the subject on a future occasion.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE HOOGLY.

We understand that the Court of Directors have determined to adopt measures for the construction of a bridge across the Hooghly at Calcutta. Such a measure, always desirable, has become almost necessary, now that the terminus of a railway, which in a few years will extend to above a thousand miles in length, stands on the opposite bank of the river to the city. Surveyors are about to proceed to Calcutta to make the preliminary examinations to enable the best site to be fixed upon. A suspension-bridge had been suggested; but having consulted Mr. James Rendel upon the subject, the Court have given their preference to one upon the tubular-bridge principle. We doubt not that whatever is undertaken will be worthy of the "City of Palaces," and we congratulate the inhabitants upon the prospect of a safe and spacious roadway to link them to the railway. The elevation of the piers and the width of the spans will be sufficient to admit of the easy passage of vessels, so that no obstruction will be offered to the shipping of the river.

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of the East-India Company was held on Wednesday the 20th of December at their house in Leadenhall-street.

Elliot Macnaghten, Esq., the Deputy Chairman, in the chair.

The titles of the papers laid before Parliament since the last Court having been read,

The Chairman announced that the warrants for the payment of the half-yearly dividends would be ready for delivery on the 6th of January next.

BY-LAWS.

The Chairman said: I beg to acquaint the Court that this Court has been made special for the purpose of having the proceedings of the last General Court, altering and repealing sundry by-laws of the Court, confirmed.

Mr. Lewis objected to special business taking precedence of the usual business of the General Quarterly Court.

The Chairman.—The Court is only made special for the purpose of confirming the alterations made in the by-laws of the last Court.

Mr. Lewis did not understand why that should override an Act of Parliament which made the General Quarterly Court open to all motions.

The Chairman.—It will be competent to the honourable proprietor to bring on his motions after the business of the Special Court has been disposed of.

The alterations made in the by-laws, and repeal of certain of them, approved by the last General Quarterly Court, were then confirmed.

GAZETTEER OF INDIA.
Mr. Lewin then submitted the motion, "That the Court of Directors be requested to distribute among the proprietors a sufficient number of copies of Thornton's Gazetteer of India to allow one to each." The only objection which he apprehended could be taken to the motion was, if agreed to, it would involve considerable expense. But he considered that the expense, whatever it may be, would be amply repaid by the information which the book would convey of India to the members of this Court. It was a work which forms a most complete history of India. The great advantage of it was, that any subject that might be wished to be referred to, and all the information that could be required, might be found there, without being in any degree tainted by political bias. Whether the subject of inquiry related to territory, revenue, or commerce, you have only to turn to that book, and you obtain an exposition of the subject, without any bias whatever. That cannot be said of the history written by Mr. Mill, as that is a work wholly written with a bias. He thought, therefore, that it was not asking too much to call upon the Court of Directors to incur the expense of distributing copies of the work among the proprietors. The honourable proprietor concluded by moving, that the Directors do distribute among the proprietors, to each individual, a copy of Thornton's Gazetteer of India.

Captain Shea seconded the motion.

The Chairman.—I quite concur with the hon. proprietor in all he has said with respect to the merits of the publication to which he has referred, but I hope the hon. proprietor will not press his motion. It is one which cannot be agreed to by the Court of Directors. Supposing every proprietor should be supplied with a copy of the work, it would involve an expenditure of something like 8,000*l.*, a charge which I am sure the hon. proprietor would not wish to incur in a matter of this kind. Very few proprietors are sufficiently interested in the subject to make it necessary to incur so large an expense, and those who do feel an interest in the matter I am sure will not object to an expenditure of two or three pounds on their own account, by which they may obtain a copy of the work in question.

Mr. Weeding objected to the motion on the ground of expense.

Mr. Grant took the like view.

Mr. Lewin said—Supposing an outlay of 8,000*l.* were incurred, that amount might be well saved from various sources of expenditure now existing. At any rate, the diffusion of the work would do great service.

The motion was put and negatived.

THE 6TH REGIMENT MADRAS LIGHT CAVALRY.

Mr. Lewin said the question which he had now to bring before the Court was one which relates to the 6th regiment of Madras light cavalry. The hon. chairman would probably furnish the papers required, and in that case he need not trouble the Court with any speech.

The Chairman.—I certainly am not prepared to furnish the papers mentioned in the hon. proprietor's notice of motion.

Mr. Lewin then proceeded to move:—

"That the Court of Directors do lay upon the Proprietors' table, copy of the despatch from the Madras Government, on which the military authorities of the Home Government confirmed as legal (if they ever did so, as has been stated) the proceedings of the military authorities of Madras, in the case of the court-martial of the 6th Light Cavalry."

The facts had on several former occasions been brought before the Court, but until redress were afforded he should feel it his duty to repeat his applications. The court-martial to which his motion referred arose out of the following circumstances. It originated in an order of the Government of Madras to withhold from the sepoys their accustomed stipends. This order, it was alleged, originated in a mistake. No one, however, had been called to account for a mistake so utterly indefensible. It was a breach of faith towards the regiment on the part of the Government. That it was so was placed beyond a doubt by the admission of Colonel Alexander, the adjutant-general, who, in answer to a question put to him by Lord Ashburton, in the committee of the House of Lords, said that faith was broken with the 6th light cavalry; and, according to the determination established by Sir Thomas Munro of what constitutes foreign service, it was also broken with the 47th native infantry. The result of this breach of faith was that the regiment was unable to march; the men had no money to go on with, or to send to their families at home. They therefore went to their commanding officer, who, instead of listening to their complaints, turned a deaf ear to them, and they thereupon refused to mount their horses; a state of things which continued for four days, when, on the arrival of the divisional officer, General Watson, the complaints of the men having been listened to, and their pay restored, the men returned to their duty. Now this which was called a mutiny could scarcely be said to be any such thing. In the first instance, the Government enters into a contract with these sepoys,—this contract is broken by the Government withholding the pay which they have agreed to give the men. Well, as soon as it had been discovered that there had been a breach of faith on the part of the Government, an order for the payment of the men was issued, and order was restored. The Commander-in-Chief immediately thereupon wrote, through his deputy adjutant-general, to Major Litchfield (the commander of the regiment) as follows: "The Commander-in-Chief is happy to understand from these communications that the men of the 6th light cavalry have returned to their duty, and that they appear to be sensible of their late misconduct. But, as his lordship cannot allow the regiment, under the reproach of such unworthy and unsoldier-like behaviour, to continue at a station where it might be required for employment on actual service, he has ordered it to be sent into cantonment at Arcot." The result of this charge of mutiny was, that seventeen soldiers were placed on their trial, of whom two were shot, one acquitted, thirteen banished for life, and one pardoned. With the exception of the two men who were put to death, not a single sentence was fully carried out. The Government could not restore the lives of the two men, and thereby correct the error that had been committed; but in the case of all the others, their sentences have been remitted, in whole or in part; the men who were transported were recalled, and, in point of fact, the whole of the sentences would have been remitted if it had been possible. That these two men were shot illegally is not to be disputed. For, first, they were tried before an illegally constituted court-martial. The law required that no sentence of death should be given against any offender by any general court-martial of less than thirteen members, nor unless nine members should concur therein; whereas the court before which these men were tried was composed of no more than seven members. But the very act of putting these men on their trial at all was illegal. After order had been restored, the regiment was marched to Arcot, and it was not until nine months after what was called the mutiny had occurred that proceedings were taken against them. During those nine months these men regularly performed their duty, and it was a remarkable fact, showing that they did so, the very court that condemned them recommended a mitigation of punishment on this ground. Lord Gough, the commander-in-chief of the army of India, in the case of the ringleaders amongst the disaffected in the 7th light cavalry and 34th native infantry, said he would have pursued the same course as was adopted in dealing with the corps at Ferozepoor had circumstances permitted; but as in those two regiments the guilty parties had for a considerable time retained their arms, and performed their duties without any steps being taken to mark them as offenders, it would have been illegal to have tried them by court-martial. But a Special Court was held at Arcot preliminary to the court-martial, the proceedings of which vitiated the whole case for the prosecution. The evidence obtained by the means resorted to would not have been received in any Court of Justice. The principal witness at the Special Court, and subsequently on the court-martial, was, within a year of the trial, dismissed from his rank as a commissioned officer (to which he had been promoted for his services on the trial) for falsehood, and he has subsequently undergone the sentence of a court-martial for a similar offence. As the evidence which came before the special commission did not readily support the prejudgment of the Commander-in-Chief, who had declared that the entire regiment was guilty, it became necessary to resort to measures of intimidation to obtain it. Accordingly, six native commissioned officers of the regiment were dismissed without trial, for not affording such evidence as was required of them. No man would venture to say that any inquiry after that was or could be consistent with justice, because every man who appeared as a witness appeared under terror of dismissal from the service, unless he gave evidence against the men. It was impossible to deny that the Articles of War were infringed by the nature of the court-martial itself; and, after all that took place before the special commission and the court-martial, it is not surprising that the Commander-in-Chief should be afraid to produce a copy of the proceedings. The relations of the men had requested to be supplied with copies, but they were refused. Now, by the 17th Article of the Mutiny Act, "any party tried by a general court-martial is entitled to a copy of the original proceedings, on paying reasonably for the same." Well, copies were applied for, but, without any reason being assigned, they were refused; and what other reason for that refusal could there be, except that they were ashamed to produce them? Here it was worth while to observe the different treatment received by an officer of the regiment (Capt. Byng), whose trial followed that of the sepoys, the charge not involving an issue of life or death. The court-martial in the case of that officer was composed of thirteen members; the president, not a junior major, as in the case of the sepoys, but a distinguished Peninsular general, who at the time commanded a division of the army. Of the thirteen men who had been banished, two were dead; the others have been recalled, and the object of his (Mr. Lewin's) motion was to know what has become of them. On a former occasion the chairman stated that pensions had been assigned to some of them. He wished the proceedings to be placed before the Court, in order that it might be seen whether justice had been done, and what means were taken for repairing the wrong committed against those men.

Mr. Lewin concluded by proposing his motion: Mr. Jones seconded it.

The Chairman.—In respect to the subject-matter of the present motion, I need hardly remind the Court that it has been already several times before them, and the Court has frequently expressed its opinion upon it; I therefore feel, that the best way of meeting the motion on this occasion is by moving that it be negatived.

The motion was then put, and negatived.

Mr. Lewin then moved:—

"That the Court of Directors do lay upon the Proprietors' table a statement, showing the present position of all the parties (or their relatives) of the same regiment (in respect of pension or other maintenance), who were punished by award of court-martial, or summarily dismissed without trial. The same statement to show the rank, the length of service, and whether any of the parties had received honorary rewards for distinguished service to the State."

Mr. Jones seconded the motion, which was negatived without a division.

Major Oliphant here entered the Court, and took possession of the chair, which was vacated by Mr. Macnaghten.

PROMOTIONS IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

Capt. Macgregor said, in passing his eye over the columns of the Times paper to-day, he saw in the Gazette that certain officers of artillery, and of the corps of royal engineers, who have for some time retired upon full pay, had received a step of brevet rank under her Majesty's royal warrant of the 6th of Oct. 1854, in order to place them in as favourable a position as those of their rank who may hereafter obtain retirement under the same warrant. The first question which he had to ask was, whether it was the intention of the Home and Indian authorities to confer on officers retiring from the Indian army on full pay a step of brevet rank, and to permit the application retrospectively of the same principle to the cases of officers already on the retired list, as under the royal warrant of the 6th of Oct. 1854, had been accorded to officers of the royal army similarly circumstanced? The retiring on full pay in the royal army was a means devised for improving the circumstances of officers of long service, who, notwithstanding their long service, not being rich men, have not gained promotion. To be allowed to retire when their age is beginning to fail, would be much more acceptable than any chance of promotion. The object of the warrant was very laudable, and he thought the warrant had worked very well in the royal army. The principle in respect to the Indian army had been similar, and had been even carried to a greater extent. It had been usual, and he trusted the same course will be pursued on this occasion as in others, that where a boon has been conferred on the officers of the royal army, a similar boon had been conferred on the officers of the Indian army. He did not know whether it was the pleasure of the chairman to answer this first question separately, or reply to them all at once.

The Chairman.—It may be satisfactory to the hon. and gallant proprietor to know that the subject of the application of the royal warrant, which her Majesty has issued for the promotion of officers in the royal army, to the officers serving in the Indian army, has not been overlooked by the proper authorities here, although I cannot say, at the present moment, that the rules, corresponding with her Majesty's warrant, will be promulgated either to-day or to-morrow. Yet the hon. and gallant proprietor may rest assured that the rules of promotion in the two services will proceed pari passu, and that, as far as possible, the same regulations will be applied to the Indian army as are applied to the royal army.

Captain Macgregor said the answer he had received was so far satisfactory, and he would proceed to ask his other questions. The first was, is it the intention to protect the interests of the Indian army in cases of supersession involved in the provisions of the royal warrant, whereby the rank of full colonel is given to lieutenant-colonels who have served as such for three years.

The Chairman.—That forms part of the royal warrant.

Captain Macgregor said his third question was as to the supersession involved in cases of promotion similar to that lately conferred on Major-General Frederic Markham, C.B.

The Chairman.—The hon. and gallant proprietor will perceive that the same rule applies in this case which makes the promotion of Major-General Markham a part of the royal warrant, and that there is consequently no supersession in his case.

Captain Macgregor said he seemed to understand the answer, and he should like himself to be understood. He understood from the answer, that whereas in the royal army an officer who has served as lieutenant-colonel of his regiment for three years was eligible for promotion to the rank of full colonel; that it was intended that this new principle of promotion which had been propounded by royal authority in the warrant of the 6th of October, 1854, should as far as possible be applied to the Indian army. With regard to General Markham, he submitted that his was not a promotion according to that rule, but that it was a promotion upon quite a new principle, which had only existed for a very short time. It was a promotion upon the principle that upon the death of three officers, the Horse Guards might have the power of promoting any man without reference to seniority.

The Chairman.—The hon. and gallant proprietor is in error. If he will look to the Army List, he will see that General Markham is a senior colonel.

Captain Macgregor said he had the Army List, and he found that Colonel Markham had his colonelcy in 1850; his promotion, therefore, superseded all the colonels in his own army of the years 1847, 1848, and 1849; he did not, however, object to the promotion of Colonel Markham. As royal officers have been protected from any chance of being superseded by Indian officers, he thought that whatever the justice of that principle might be, the same ought to be extended to protect Indian officers from being superseded by royal officers who may go to serve in India.

THE EAST-INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

Mr. Brown said he wished to put a question to the chairman. It might be remembered that in March last he brought before the Court the claims of the East-India Steam Company. Upon that occasion, instead of moving the resolution, he, in deference to a suggestion of the chair, altered his motion, and this Court passed a vote recommending the claim to the favourable consideration of the Court of Directors. He hoped that it was not inconsistent or incompatible with the duty of the chair now to inform him whether that Court has taken a favourable view of the question.

The Chairman.—I am sure I cannot give the hon. gentleman an answer; no previous notice having been given of his intention to put the question.

Mr. Brown said, under these circumstances, he gave notice of a motion for the Court in March next, at which time he should be in the possession of several memorials in regard to this claim. He should then move that the important services rendered by the East-India Steam Navigation Company to the East-India Company in 1842 be compensated by the payment of the sum of £10,000.

THE LATE SIR CHARLES NAPIER.

Mr. Lewin begged to ask whether the Court would lay before the proprietors copies of the report relating to the proceedings of the late Sir Charles Napier in Scinde. The Court of Directors were ever ready to produce papers that are unfavourable to Sir Charles Napier, but they appear unwilling to produce anything which was favourable to that eminent man.

The Chairman.—We shall be happy to lay on the table of the court as many copies as may be desired.

Capt. Sheppard said,—I beg to protest against the motive assigned by the hon. proprietor, when he says that we distribute books that are unfavourable to Sir Charles Napier, but are reluctant to produce them when they are favourable to that gallant general.

HAILEYBURY COLLEGE.

Mr. Jones said he had seen it stated in the newspapers that Haileybury College was to be done away with; he wished to ask whether that statement were correct?

The Chairman.—I believe I may answer the hon. proprietor's question in the affirmative. In the course of a few days a plan will be submitted to the House of Commons as to what will be the qualifications and the steps necessary to be taken for the admission of persons into the civil service in India.

Mr. Jones asked a question as to an addition recently made to the salary of the secretary.

The Chairman.—I do not know that the hon. gentleman is perfectly in order in asking this question. I presume he is quite aware that it is within the proper duty of the Court of Directors to pay their servants in what way they think proper. No doubt the increase was made by the Court, considering that it was fully merited by the services of the gentleman in question.

The Court then adjourned.

ADVERTISEMENT.

East-India House, 9th August, 1854, and
4th October, 1854.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the annexed code of Regulations for the admission of Candidates at the first Examination, to be held in January next, for the appointment of ASSISTANT-SURGEONS in the service of the East-India Company, has been framed by the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, under the provisions of the Act 16 & 17 Vict. cap. 95, sec. 38.

REGULATIONS FOR THE ADMISSION OF CANDIDATES FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT-SURGEONS IN THE SERVICE OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

All natural-born subjects of her Majesty may be Candidates for admission into the service of the East-India Company as Assistant-Surgeons. They must, however, be between 22 and 28 years of age, and of sound bodily health.

They must subscribe and send in to Dr. Scott, the Physician to the Honourable East-India Company, before the 10th day of December, 1854, a declaration to the following effect:—

"I (Christian and surname at full length), a Candidate for employment as an Assistant-Surgeon in the service of the East-India Company, do hereby declare that I was years of age on the day of last, and that I labour under no constitutional disease or physical disability that can interfere with the due discharge of the duties of a medical officer; and I also attest my readiness to proceed on duty to India within three months of receiving my appointment."

This declaration must be accompanied by the following documents:—

1. Proof of age, either by extract from the register of the parish in which the Candidate was born, or by his own declaration pursuant to the Act 5 & 6 Wm. 4. c. 62.
2. A diploma in surgery, or a degree in medicine, provided an examination in surgery be required for such degree, from some body competent by law to grant or confer such diploma or degree.
3. A certificate of having attended two courses of lectures, of six months each, on the practice of physic, and of having attended for six months the practice and clinical instruction of the physicians at some hospital, containing at least on an average one hundred in-patients; or of having attended one course of lectures of six months, on the practice of physic, and clinical instruction for twelve months.
4. A certificate of having attended for three months the practical instruction given at one of the public asylums for the treatment of the insane.
5. A certificate of having attended for three months one of the institutions, or wards of a hospital, especially devoted to the treatment of ophthalmic disease.
6. A certificate of having attended a course of lectures on midwifery, and of having conducted at least six labours.
7. A certificate of having acquired a practical knowledge of cupping.

Candidates may also, at their option, send in certificates of attendance at any hospitals, or on any courses of lectures, in addition to the above. Attendance on a course of military surgery is recommended.

Candidates producing satisfactory certificates will be admitted to an Examination to be held in January, 1855.

The Examination will include the following subjects:—

1. Surgery in all its departments.
2. Medicine, including the diseases of women and children, therapeutics, pharmacy, and hygiene.
3. Anatomy and physiology, including comparative anatomy.
4. Natural history, including botany and zoology.

The examination will be conducted—

1. By means of written questions and answers.
2. By object examinations and experiments, when the subject admits of such tests.
3. By practical examination at the bedside of the patient, and by dissections and operations on the dead body.
4. By viva-voce examination.

The persons who shall be pronounced by the Examiners to be the best qualified in all respects, shall be appointed to fill the requisite number of appointments as Assistant-Surgeons in the East-India Company's service.

All Assistant-Surgeons are required to subscribe to the Military or Medical, and Medical Retiring Funds, at the Presidencies to which they may be respectively appointed, and to the Military Orphan Society also, if appointed to Bengal.

All Assistant-Surgeons who shall neglect or refuse to proceed to India under the orders of the Court of Directors, within three months from the date of their appointments, will be considered as having forfeited them, unless special circumstances shall justify a departure from this regulation.

Candidates may apply to Dr. Scott, 13, Stratton Street, for further information, if needed.

N.B.—The certificates and notices as to Examination herein contained, apply only to the Examination to be held in January next. Regulations regarding the requirements of Candidates for future Examinations will be issued after the first Examination.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

NOTE, 4TH OCTOBER, 1854.

Candidates who may not have been able to attend the practice of an asylum or the insane, or of an ophthalmic hospital, for three months previous to offering themselves for examination in January, 1855, will not be excluded from examination, but will, if successful in obtaining recommendation for appointments, be required to produce certificates of having attended such practice during the interval between the examination and the time of proceeding to India.

The Board of Examiners of Candidates for the appointments of Assistant-Surgeons in the East-India Company's service, give notice that, on the 5th January, 1855, they will hold Examinations at the East-India House, for the selections of Assistant-Surgeons. The selection will be made according to merit, and it is expected that about thirty appointments will be awarded.

J. D. DICKINSON, Deputy Secretary.

UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,
No. 1, KING WILLIAM STREET, CITY, LONDON.

Established 1834.

Empowered by Special Act of Parliament, 6 Will. 4, cap. 54.

DIRECTORS.

SIR HENRY WILLOCK, K.L.S., Chairman.

JOHN STEWART, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

John Bagshaw, Esq., M.P.
Augustus Bosanquet, Esq.
Charles Dashwood Bruce, Esq.
Ellis Watkin Cunniffe, Esq.
William Kilburn, Esq.
Francis Macnaghten, Esq.

Charles Otway Mayne, Esq.
Major John Arthur Moore.
William Rothery, Esq.
Robert Saunders, Esq.
Rear-Admiral Thornton.
Brodie McGhie Wilcox, Esq., M.P.

The marked success which has attended the operations of this Society justifies the Directors in calling the attention of the public to the superior advantages held out to all classes desirous of affecting Assurances upon their lives.

The subjoined scale of rates is framed with the greatest care, and will be found to be as MODERATE as IS CONSISTENT WITH PERFECT SECURITY.

Annual Premium required for the Assurance of £100 on a single Life, with participation in Profits:—

20	£1 18 8	35	£3 14 11	50	£4 5 6
25	2 3 3	40	3 3 0	55	5 5 10
30	2 8 10	45	3 15 2	60	6 13 2

Tables for Policies to be effected in India have been especially prepared from the records of the East-India Company, on the experience of mortality in that country.

During the last thirteen years, the reduction of Premium on Policies entitled to participate in Profits has averaged more than 44 per cent., and in the last four years it has been declared at 45 per cent.

An annual division is made of one-fifth of the ascertained profits of the five preceding years; the other four-fifths being set apart to enter into the average of succeeding years.

Of the sum annually divisible, 75 per cent. is apportioned to Policy-holders who have paid six annual Premiums, either in a Reduction of subsequent Premiums, or as a Bonus added to the Policy. The remainder is apportioned to the Shareholders.

Assets of the Society, upwards of £800,000.—Amount of Policies in force, £2,000,000.—Annual income arising from Premiums, exclusively of interest on the invested capital, exceeds £120,000.

Weekly Board-day, Thursday, at 1 o'clock.

Committees sit every Tuesday, at 12 o'clock, when Policies requiring despatch may be effected.

AGENTS IN INDIA:—

MILITARY ENCYCLOPEDIA;

A TECHNICAL, BIOGRAPHICAL AND HISTORICAL

DICTIONARY,

REFERRING EXCLUSIVELY TO THE MILITARY SCIENCES, THE MEMOIRS OF DISTINGUISHED SOLDIERS, AND NARRATIVES OF REMARKABLE BATTLES.

By J. H. STOCQUELER, Esq.

"This useful publication is a technical, biographical, and historical dictionary, devoted exclusively to the military sciences, the memoirs of distinguished soldiers, and the narratives of remarkable battles. The author, who is not unknown in the literary world, has produced a work very much needed at the present moment, and which it is, therefore, probable will obtain a very wide circulation. It comprehends the essence of many excellent books, and, whilst it discards much of what is old, it embodies in its pages all that is new upon the subject treated. To military men, this work will be indispensable; by the ordinary reader, it will be found an important aid to his historical and general studies. Under these circumstances, it can be cordially recommended to the attention of both classes of the community."—Observer, Feb. 19, 1855.

"This is a useful and intelligent book. In a small compass, it contains a large mass of facts and dates, and the results of copious professional learning. The combination of the biography and history of the professional, with an explanation of the technical terms of the profession, is a useful and fortunate device. It increases the interest and it enlarges the application of the volume. The articles are written with spirit and precision—the arrangement and typographical appearance of the volume are good—and the number of topics embraced and terms explained is very considerable. Mr. Stocqueler readily admits that he is largely indebted to preceding writers and compilers; at the same time, it is due to himself to say, that he has executed his task so well and carefully, as to render his book almost an original work."—Athenaeum, March 26, 1855.

A LIST of CHARTS for the Navigation of the Eastern Seas.

Allen's Maps of India, &c.

DRAWN BY JOHN WALKER,

Geographer to the East-India Company.

A New Map of India;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectories, and the Position and Boundary of each Native State, chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

*. The object kept in view in compiling this Map, has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all Stations—Civil and Military—are inserted, as well as those of all Towns and places of note, likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various Districts and Collectories, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The Railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for Reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffuseness has been shunned.

A General Map of India;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Hon. East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

Map of India;

From the most recent authorities. On two sheets—Size, 2 ft. 10 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 1s.

Map of the Routes in India;

With Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this Map are given the whole of the Military and Civil Stations, together with the principal Towns, the villages being omitted so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies.

A Map of the Western Provinces of Hindoostan;

The Punjab, Cabool, Sindh, Bhawalpore, &c.; including all the States between Candahar and Allahabad. On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 2 in. high. 30s.; or on cloth, in a case, £2; or on rollers, and varnished, £2. 10s.

Map of India and China, Burmah, Siam, the Malay Peninsula, and the Empire of Anam. On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 3 ft. 4 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

Map showing the Steam Communication and Overland Routes

Between England, India, China, and Australia. Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 4 in. high; on cloth, in a case, 14s., or with rollers, and varnished, 18s.

Map of Arabia;

Compiled from all the most recent authorities, by order of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company.—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high; on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory.

On one sheet, 5s.; or on cloth, in a case, 6s.

Map of Afghanistan and the adjacent Countries;

On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 8s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

Map of China,

From the most authentic sources of information. One large sheet—Size, 2 ft. 7 in. wide; 2 ft. 2 in. high. 8s.; or on cloth, in a case, 11s.

Map of the Burman Empire,

Showing the annexed district of Pegu. One sheet, 3s. 6d.; or on cloth, in a case, 5s.

LONDON:—WILLIAM H. ALLEN & CO.,
7, LEADENHALL STREET.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE
MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 8d. and upwards, which may be had of GROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 91, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co. Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

PAYNE and SONS' INDIAN CURRY POWDER.
UNRIVALLED for its delicious FLAVOUR and stimulating QUALITIES, in 1 lb. Bottles, 2s. 6d.; ½ lb., 2s. 3d.; or 7 lbs. for 15s.
CURRY and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE, 1 lb. jars, 3s. 6d.; ½ lb., 2s. 3d.; CURRY SAUCE, Delhi and Oselle Chutneys, 1s. 6d. per bottle.
Pickled MANGOES, HUMPS, TAP SAUCE, and every description of Indian Delicacies, may be had, at greatly reduced prices, from
PAYNE and SONS' FOREIGN WAREHOUSE, 328, REGENT STREET, LONDON.—A List forwarded on application.

CURRIES.—THE GENUINE INDIAN CURRY
or MULLIGATAWNEY MIXTURE and CURRY POWDERS, PREPARED BY A LADY (long resident in India), who was instructed in the preparation by the celebrated Fysoo Kanumiah, of Calcutta.

This superior Curry Mixture, so highly approved, particularly by those who have resided in India, requires only a trial to prove it superior to all other preparations.—It makes the REAL INDIAN CURRY.

To be had of T. SMITH, Grocer, 17, Cambridge Street, Oxford Square; at J. B. RICKARD'S Italian Warehouse, 5, Motcomb Street, Belgrave Square; and (wholesale) by letter addressed to Messrs. EDWARDS and Co., 24, Pall Mall Street, Brompton.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.—The most appropriate offerings for this season of festivity, are those which tend to the promotion of health and personal attraction: none can be more acceptable than ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for imparting a transcendent lustre to the hair, and sustaining it in decorative charm. ROWLAND'S KALYDOB imparts a radiant bloom to the cheek, and a delicacy and softness to the hands, arms, and neck; and ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, bestows on the teeth a pearl-like whiteness, and renders the breath sweet and pure.

The patronage of Royalty throughout Europe, their general use by rank and fashion, and the universally-known efficacy of these articles give them a celebrity unparalleled.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS CURED

A FEARFUL BAD KNEE.—Extract of a letter from Mr. Joseph Rogers, of the Pottery-Fields, Hunslet, near Leeds, dated Sept. 15, 1854:—"To Professor Holloway, Sir: I suffered for months with a very bad knee, and tried every remedy likely to benefit me without success. The joint was quite stiff and so swollen that I became seriously alarmed as to whether I should ever regain the use of it. However, by the use of your Ointment and Pills, the swelling was soon considerably reduced, and in two weeks was completely cured, which enabled me to resume my work."

Sold by all vendors of medicine, and at PROSSER'S HOLLOWAY'S Establishments, 244, Strand, London, and 80, Maiden Lane, New York; and by all European and native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.
